It was but too easy to perceive that in its turn the Gelsberg had become the scene of a new conflict. It stands a mere breastwork on the summit of a hill between two and three hundred feet high, with a rather steep but not remarkably difficult slope. With an adequate force, of course, it might have been easily held, but the exigencies of the day had only left it guarded by a few hundred men. These had been pitted for over an hour by the fire of the artillery, and had suffered a loss by no means insignificant when the actual assault commenced. The whole of the Voigt-Rhetz brigade, with little interruption beyond a musketry fire and that of one light fieldpiece from the breastwork, supported by Von Standart's division of the fifth corps, had moved across the river. They swarmed up the height on the side farthest from the town. The little force upon the summit sought to multiply themselves by activity. They fired. Some advanced madly outside the breastwork, as if thereby they could more effectually hinder the foe. The one mitrailleuse, which, with a fieldpiece, constituted the whole artillery left in the redoubt, did some execution upon the advancing enemy, though its effect was trivial compared with the great results expected from it. But the resistance was only as as a weak dam to a rushing tide. The mere onset of the mass overbore opposition, and the defenders were, as it might be, flooded out of the redoubt.

As Brigadier Le Blanc turned out of the Bitsche road to the military path leading up to the Gelsberg, hurrying on his men at frantic speed, he was torn by an agony of anxiety lest he might arrive too late. As he reached the foot of the hill he had the mortification of seeing the German standard hoist upon the height, while the little garrison, sorely attenuated, was making its way towards Lim.

The stern face of the Brigadier grew black. "Too late," he muttered, "always too late."

Already the fire of the victors from the crest began to make itself felt.

A captain approached him.

"Your orders, brigadier."

"Orders? You have them."

"What, are we to attack that hill with this force, and ten thousand men on the top? Discretion, I fancy, M. le Brigadier, would suggest retreat until we have sufficient forces."

"Retreat!" thundered the old warrior, "before Germans? Away, sir, to your post."

The young captain, a pale, handsome fellow, a frequenter of the salons, an intimate of the beaux esprits, the descendant of a haughty legitimist family, whose scruples towards the cause had been overcome by his desire to be a soldier of France, bowed low, and, shrugging his shoulders, muttered back to his post. It was the vanguard.

"Come, my men," said he waving his sword, "the thieves have stolen into our house in our absence; it is our duty to drive them out."

Following his lead with a cheer his company sprang after him. They rushed up the hill with an impulse as if led by a madman. Michel, who had been ear-witness of the conversation, watched with more than ordinary interest their progress. It was like that of a withered branch against the wind. At every step it seemed as if a man fell. They parted some sixty or seventy strong; scarce twenty reached the summit. Foremost springing on the breastwork was the captain, his sword lay upon it, he seemed to meet in his body as, borne faintly on the wind, his last cheer, "Vive la France!" came down to his comrades.

And then were advancing en masse. Rate in war it is to see such efforts as were made to redeem the loss of that fatal moment. Up the steep, withered by musketry fire, hurled back by sheer weight of numbers, charged time after time the French. They were driven back, but each retreat was a repulse they felt defeat more certain. Michel, who had been watching them, knew it was in vain. With each repulse they felt defeat more certain. "Sonnez la charge pour ralliement," cried he; I could only reach the top and die there like that handsome fop that led the attack, my mind would be easy." But he seemed almost to be under a compulsion. Exposing himself with the most reckless determination, the bullets seemed to glance past him harmlessly.

"For one last effort, my men!" he cried, as the troops were driven back after a third attempt, the mad subtlety of which had actually startled even the enemy. But, for the first time, there was no answering cheer. Most of those whom he addressed had been on their feet from early morning, their only refreshment a breakfast. A large portion had been in action the greater part of the day—had followed the changing fortunes, had been aware of its growing adverse tendency, had seen comrades captured or slain by their side, and had come to view them the numbing sense of fatigue, hunger and despair.

"What," cried the old man, with a disgusted air, "are Frenchmen daunted by these wretched Germans?" "Conscript!" he exclaimed, directing his sword to Michel Voss, who stood among the sullen mess, "you are unwounded, who crossed the hill to-day; have you voice enough left to raise a shout in the ears of these Frenchmen?"

Michel started at hearing himself thus addressed. Without a moment's hesitation, however, he raised a voice which had been accustomed among mountains to making itself heard from hill to hill. "En avant, camarades! let it never be said that French courage could be daunted by any foe or by any difficulty."

It was unaccountable, but the accents of the rank seemed to lend new spirit to the soldiers. Once again it was roumed that awful charge up the hill. The tired men seemed to fling aside their lassitude, the hungry ones to forget their weakness. At those too, had seen death everywhere around them treated it as toys do the blows of grass in a soldiing match. Forward they pushed, the grim old Brigadier in the front. Thick and fast rain the bullets around them. In some cases the steps of the men totter from weariness as if they, too, had been struck by the shot which had just laid their comrade low. Yet on they passed with a frantic ardor. They are within fifty yards of the summit when a blaze of fire ranges across a long line of the enemy.

The Brigadier staggers, withered in his men with stentorian shout. Suddenly his voice failed. Only those who were near saw amid the smoke that his tall form was laid low. An officer raised him, and called for two men from the ranks to lift him up. The blood rushed freely from a wound in the shoulder, while internally it seemed to choke his voice and rendher him unable to speak. The sword had fallen from his right hand, but with his left he was making desperate efforts to grasp it. The officer called to some of the nearest to him, and said, "there, two or three of you, keep guard over the Brigadier, as we move down; we must retreat."

An almost whispered command from the officer sufficed to indicate the direction which the despairing movement should take. Michel, having followed close by the Brigadier who had called on him to appeal to the soldiery, was among the small party designated to guard his body as the little group moved down the hill.

The old man was restless in the arms of the bearers, but more weakness compelled him to be comparatively submissive.

Michel half wished that there should be some attack, that he might have the glory of defending the body of an old soldier who had so distinguished him by surmounting him to speak from the ranks. As he peered through the fog which the battle had left lying sullenly upon the hill, he fancied now and then he could see the form of German soldiers pressing after him, and he held his rifle with light but firm touch. But no enemy came forward. The very rashness of the attack had baffled the Germans, and, with all their superiority of number, they shrank from leaving the protection of the redoubt and plunging into the uncertain atmosphere of smoke before them, fearful lest it might bring forth something more dangerous than a handful of beaten and dispirited, if still brave men. Undisturbed, therefore, the little procession made its way down the descent. The Brigadier still strug gled now to obtain his sword, now to find his voice amid the ever-flowing tide of blood which was threatening to choke him. At last he succeeded in clearing his throat a little.

Bending low the bearers fancied they could distinguish the sound "conscript!"

Witnesses of the scene of a few moments before, they understood that he wished to speak to the young man whom he had urged to appeal to the soldiers. They called Michel to the side of the wounded officer.

As Michel approached him, the eye of the old Brigadier lighted up. He motioned with his head to Michel to stoop. He did so.

"God follow you!" he whispered.

Michel made a thankful reverence, and was withdrawing, but the Brigadier shook his head and beckoned him to approach again.

Once more Michel bent, and caught the faintly uttered accents.

"You are a conscript!" he said.

"Yes, Monsieur."

"I am a Brigadier."

"Doubtless officier."

"Conscript, I would give my rank to be in your place."

As he spoke a fresh gush of blood came to his lips, the bearers laid him on the ground with the tenderness of men who had themselves undergone the pangs, and became indifferent to him, for peace had at last come to the stormy, rugged soul of the old soldier.

CHAPTER VII.

THE CAVE.

General dead, Brigadier gone, ranks broken, ammunition exhausted in many cases, comrades fallen, wounded or prisoners, the enemy multiplying as if his force sprang up from the ground, the horrible conviction forced itself through the mind of the soldiery that there were, indeed, beaten. Slowly, but surely, the movement was backward. The Germans were well-informed of their strength, they knew their superiority in enormously superior force, they held the town and part of the heights of the Gelsberg, and yet they scarcely seemed to be able to feel assured of victory. They were almost as much astonished at their triumph as the French themselves had been, and still apprehended a reverse. Had their cavalry pushed on at once the defeat of the French division might have been made annihilation; but they regarded the foe, beaten as he was, as warily as hunters in a wounded lion. They were now eight to one, but the one was still the soldier or France. Where the cavalry might with most destructive effect have assailed the retiring companies, the Germans pursued them with safe caution for themselves of cannon. And though these weapons flewed heavy gaps enough in the downcast and retreating ranks, yet the latter were saved the worst disorder which might have befallen them had an efficient cavalry pursuit followed up the German victory.

A small party, harrassed, fatigued and war-worn, climbed up a steep hill which lay to the southwest of the Gelsberg on the Climbach road. Near the summit was a cave from out of which there could be seen peering heads covered with the turbans of a band of Turcos.

"Rest there there at last," exclaimed Sergeant Beaunez.

"Not for long, I fancy," replied Michel Voss, who was in his company.

"A infinite's repose now would be worth ah hour."

In humor to show gaiety, while the indifference of use the rattling of the missiles round them, often not turning the head as the five shell flew close by or a fragment seemed to cross their faces.

Entering the cave they received no welcome. Even the Frenchmen were in no humor to show gaiety, while the half savage allies exhibited only a sullen ferocity. Some small stock of provisions was, however shared with the new comers with tolerable grace.

The cave was open-mouthed, but retreated to a considerable depth, and was large enough to hold easily the five hundred men who had taken refuge in it.

"This is delightful," said Sergeant Beaunez, flinging himself with an air of perfect luxury on the bare rock that formed the bottom of the grotto, "but it is only those infernal Mahometans that could have chosen such a place for anything but the most temporary shelter. Why, we shall be caught like rats in a trap if these damned Germans have the pluck to do anything more than fire their long bowls at us."

As he spoke a shell struck at the mouth of the cavern, its deadly fragments flying in among the crowd.

"Is there no issue from the rear?" asked Michel.

"If there be these fellows would not take the trouble to look for it."

Michel, whose habits had made him familiar with the features of the mountains, groped his way to the back of the cave. His quick ear detected the sound of water, but not of a heavy kind. "There is," hethought "a way out for the water. May it not suffice for the man?"

Guided by the sound, he reached a part of the rock where, as far as the gloom would permit him to guess, there seemed as it were a cave within a cave. Its roof was lower, and in the natural archway, at the bottom of which he could hear the babble of the running water. Advancing cautiously he got to the bottom of the slope, upon which he sat, and by the slow insertion of his foot ascertained that was not possible for him to stand upright, he moved along bent almost doubly, feeling his way at every step. The water had no depth. Though it was the water increased, but slowly, and never reached above mid-leg. Thoroughly understanding the treacherous nature of cavernous streams, he still trusted to his thoroughly accustomed ear and steady nerve, and waded on through the stream. Was it fancy, or did he at last see light? Though the excitement in his breast was considerable—the excitement of discovery to a practiced explorer being intensified by the desire to find a means of exit from the perilous cul-de sac in which they found themselves —he did not lose his coolness, but addressed with the same gravity and precaution. His observation had not deceived him. The light, so faint that it might well have been only fancy, now grew upon the wall of the natural tunnel, then it shone upon projections of the rock and cast a shadow. Fuller and fuller it became, until it grew unmistakable. It would to him an orifice of escape, and the other side was shining. Whether it were the sun or the moon he could not tell, but the noise of the water murmuring over stones changed into the tumult of cataract, and he found himself by the obvious nature of the danger, he approached the issue of the stream Close by the edge was a sharp projection of rock, on clinging which by one hand he could easily lower himself to the ground below. Thus he was enabled to perceive that the stream, having left the tunnel and a far steeper and sharp descent, and after a leaped over a precipitous rock below, into what depths he could only conjecture. Without communicating his discovery to the others—indigrous, but sad and artful—he cast down on the spirits side, and by the help of the projection of the rock, he lowered himself to the ground. He then made his way back to the cave, and announced that he had found a means of escape.

"Where?" cried the old man, with a disgusted air, "are Frenchmen daunted by these wretched Germans?" "Conscript!" he exclaimed, directing his sword to Michel Voss, who stood among the sullen mess, "you are unwounded, who crossed the hill to-day; have you voice enough left to raise a shout in the ears of these Frenchmen?"

Michel started at hearing himself thus addressed. Without a moment's hesitation, however, he raised a voice which had been accustomed among mountains to making itself heard from hill to hill. "En avant, camarades! let it never be said that French courage could be daunted by any foe or by any difficulty."

It was unaccountable, but the accents of the ranks seemed to lend new spirit to the soldiers. Once again it was roumed that awful charge up the hill. The tired men seemed to fling aside their lassitude, the hungry ones to forget their weakness. At those too, had seen death everywhere around them treated it as toys do the blows of grass in a soldiing match. Forward they pushed, the grim old Brigadier in the front. Thick and fast rain the bullets around them. In some cases the steps of the men totter from weariness as if they, too, had been struck by the shot which had just laid their comrade low. Yet on they passed with a frantic ardor. They are within fifty yards of the summit when a blaze of fire ranges across a long line of the enemy.

The Brigadier staggers, withered in his men with stentorian shout. Suddenly his voice failed. Only those who were near saw amid the smoke that his tall form was laid low. An officer raised him, and called for two men from the ranks to lift him up. The blood rushed freely from a wound in the shoulder, while internally it seemed to choke his voice and ren-

(To be Continued.)

St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh.

The plan of the Cathedral is cruciform, comprises a nave and chancel or choir, with aisles to both north and south transepts, and two western towers. The south transept is at present screened off as a provisional sacristy, but it is intended to erect suitable and ample sacristies and chapter house as a future time. The dimensions in clear of the walls are, total length, 210 feet; width across nave and aisles, 72; across transepts, 112; height from floor to ridge, 91 feet. Each tower and spire is 140 feet high of 210 feet. The nave is separated on each side from aisles by six bays of clustered shafts with moulded capitals and bases, and deeply moulded arches. The chancel is separated from the nave by two clustered shafts and arches; over these arches are the triforia, consisting of marble shafts with moulded bases and carved capitals, and elaborate and deeply-moulded arches. Over the triforia are the clere-story, containing each bay three light, traceried windows. The principal entrance to the Cathedral is by a finely-wrought and richly moulded doorway in the west end of the nave, and by smaller doors of a similar character in the towers. Another door, in keeping with the principal door of nave is a series of moulded and canopied niches, to be hereafter filled with figures of saints; under these niches is a string course, on which the following inscription is carved: "Sill low."

Rising above the niches is an elaborate seven-light traceried window, and the west gable terminates in a floreated cross. The towers rise in successive stages until they terminate in the bell stage, containing on double-light mullioned and traceried openings on each face. From these stages rise the graceful broach spires, with tiers of lucarns on alternate faces, each lucarn terminated with a gilt cross; all the entire is terminated with beautifully wrought iron gilt crosses. The windows of aisles are filled with lights of two lights each, and elaborate tracery. The east window is seven light, and formed moulded on lines and rich varied tracery. The north and south windows of transepts are five-light and traceried. The High Altar is placed in an advance position in the choir, and behind it is sited the chapel and altar of the Blessed Virgin, and at the end of each choir aisle is chapel and altar. The Primatial throne and stalls are placed in the central position in advance of the High Altar. The stalls are ranged against the eastern piers of nave on the spirale side, and the Primatial pew is placed within a magnificent oriel window towards the west in the north aisle.

The style of architecture adopted is that known as "Second Gothic." The Cathedral was originally designed about the year 1241 (during the Primacy of the late Most Rev. Dr. Crolly), by the late Thomas Bull, of Newry, architect, and was by him carried as far as the top of the main walls, and of the between nave and aisles.

The cost of the Cathedral was £60,000, or $300,000, but if the building were to be erected now, even in Ireland it would cost at least double that sum, or in America four times that sum, or about $1,200,000. The Cathedral stands on a gentle eminence, North of the city, and commands a fine commanding position.

The Cathedral was consecrated August 24th, in presence of an immense concourse of spectators. Archbishop Manning and Archbishop Cullen were the preachers at the consecration. There were present "lords of pilgrims," at Adria and Bologna, and more. There was no resistance. The consecration was grand.

And here is a third: "Yesterday a regiment of Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry started from Parigia for Assisi, execute the order of the pilgrims. The pilgrims were to make pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Francis."

We observed that the gallant soldiers of the "pilgrimage" succeeded in getting a saintly pilgrim at Narni, and that at Assisi the pilgrims crowded the streets to see the pious gendarmes. Italy is gaining fame. If millions' skins are in mourning for the slaughter of her soldiers, and widows and children, who are armed only with "Ave Marias" and rosary beads, Italy is Brave fellows! Worthy compatriots of a cassin of Brasi and the ruinagates of Lima. We would say

To those lords of hair-empires,
Who dye their whiskers and lie,
A sweet inspiration offers
Such conscious rascals to try.

That very probably they will find in coward pain one of those days (earlier or later) the necessity of a visit to the "Celestial" school. What a stampede will be in this army of the "King of Hens!" Ambitious generals will be attracted by the dread millions (francs) but Europe is not ready for the slaughter of her sons. Shall? He has plenty and to spare! then he is not a revolutionist. Besides, he will be soldiers of the Army of the "old women." The new Italian Premier Minister has had the bad taste to forbid Jesuit fathers, and functionaries of the chief of the Government, and to take possession of the Minerva, which had been stolen from the Dominicans. Cardinal Antonelli, answering a letter addressed to him by the Italian Episcopate, called Catholic clergy in America, says: "Your Holiness is deeply affected by the evident demonstrations of sympathy he received from distant children of Peter."—Boston Traveller, August 16.

The Italian Army.

Italy is establishing for herself quite a military prestige. The "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and the "Decline of the Peninsula have not been remarkable warriors. But they are changing all that.

At the present moment they are considering whether they can live best long. An invasion of the army of pilgrims! That is not inventing, but such telegrams as following witness:

"Warsaw,—The cavalry will drive the pilgrims from Poland. The Italian army shall receive from Chiogy a reinforcement of troops of the line."

"Rome, August 12.—The military question has succeeded perfectly. On the 8th and 9th the Italian troops repulsed the bands of pilgrims; at Adria and Bologna, more. There was no resistance. The consecration was grand.

Guided by the sound, he reached a part of the rock where, as far as the gloom would permit him to guess, there seemed as it were a cave within a cave. Its roof was lower, and in the natural archway, at the bottom of which he could hear the babble of the running water. Advancing cautiously he got to the bottom of the slope, upon which he sat, and by the slow insertion of his foot ascertained that was not possible for him to stand upright, he moved along bent almost doubly, feeling his way at every step. The water had no depth. Though it was the water increased, but slowly, and never reached above mid-leg. Thoroughly understanding the treacherous nature of cavernous streams, he still trusted to his thoroughly accustomed ear and steady nerve, and waded on through the stream. Was it fancy, or did he at last see light? Though the excitement in his breast was considerable—the excitement of discovery to a practiced explorer being intensified by the desire to find a means of exit from the perilous cul-de sac in which they found themselves —he did not lose his coolness, but addressed with the same gravity and precaution. His observation had not deceived him. The light, so faint that it might well have been only fancy, now grew upon the wall of the natural tunnel, then it shone upon projections of the rock and cast a shadow. Fuller and fuller it became, until it grew unmistakable. It would to him an orifice of escape, and the other side was shining, whether it were the sun or the moon he could not tell, but the noise of the water murmuring over stones changed into the tumult of cataract, and he found himself by the obvious nature of the danger, he approached the issue of the stream Close by the edge was a sharp projection of rock, on clinging which by one hand he could easily lower himself to the ground below. Thus he was enabled to perceive that the stream, having left the tunnel and a far steeper and sharp descent, and after a leaped over a precipitous rock below, into what depths he could only conjecture. Without communicating his discovery to the others—indigrous, but sad and artful—he cast down on the spirits side, and by the help of the projection of the rock, he lowered himself to the ground. He then made his way back to the cave, and announced that he had found a means of escape.

A REMEMBRANCE.

'Tis strange that this design to say, hearts should be offered!
By the light winds wandering gay,
Veil a passing strain, or a whispered word,
Gift the lightest, meanest,
And eager hopes and golden dreams,
Are vague and as undefined
As the subtle flash of the lightning gleams,
A wail in the midnight wind.
While crushed 'neath its burden of sorrow and pain
Softer hearts have been floating [illegible].
This A la fine, a garret, a cottage [illegible]
In the heart of our being dwells.

Why do I lean on the window sill
Raining my thoughts to you,
While the world around is hushed and still,
And the midnight hours so few?
Why do I think of my wayward life,
And sigh for the far off years,
And why do I feel my heart ache or sigh,
As memory's chords was sustained with tears?
When [illegible] the bridge that the tireless flower
That seemed on the parting earth
Would bear mellowness [illegible] in latest hour,
The fragrances and blooms of its birth.

WHY? For the little hope of [illegible]
His hushed on a tender string,
Whose echoing notes to the inmost shrine
Of my softened spirit ring.
Others may laugh, that a simple gift
Of [illegible] cause such fervent control—
That a little song should have power to lift
The down from a human soul;
But, ah! they know not the [illegible] heart—
They know not the [illegible] impart
Whose lightest thoughts to it gift impart
A value as wonderous fair.

Sinking on the West Coast of Ireland.

Under the above heading, a writer in last month's Cornhill gives a very instructive and eminently readable account of a trip to the West of Ireland, including a capture of a Sunfish or "Basking Shark," off Achill Island. In compliance with an invitation from a friend named Brown, a yachting man, the writer joined the party assembled at Westport, county Mayo, in June, some years ago. He then embarked on a hooker for Inishkea, and having Westport behind with fine weather, soon found himself across all empty and deserted, and its grass-grown houses a monument of departed trade, he was soon on his way down Clew Bay and passing through the gap between the mainland and the wild West. About six in the evening, Inishkea Island was reached and the hooker dropped anchor within a cable length of the "Atlantic," our friend Brown's well-appointed twenty-ton cutter.

The sunfish, the writer explains, is not the sunfish proper, but a basking shark, resembling from twenty to fifty feet in length. They appear on the coast about May and remain to the end of July, when they migrate in small shoals sometimes to the south west. Quite free of them are killed, as the islanders could not tow them ashore even if they killed them, their boats being too light. Their dorsal fin can be seen for miles in calm weather, as, when basking, it is about three feet above the water. The fish has an enormous liver, all of which boils down to oil; so much as a hundred gallons having been extracted from the liver of one fish. The yacht put in to obtain a supply of this oil, and to get her men living on this occasion supplemented by the addition of the island. All were eager to see the fish caught, and the glass of whisky being offered as a stimulant for the men

WHO SHOULD FIRST SIGHT A FISH.

In a short time one of the crew, who was leisurely lying along the gaff bulkhead on the jack bulldarde, gave a shriek of delight and clambered into his glass of whisky. Instantly all was confusion, each member of the crew rushing about to take the lead, the cook, who had been standing in the galley, was off with a rush, the rope whistling through the hands of the men, and in a few minutes the first rush was at stopped till over a hundred fathoms had flown through the hands of the men, when the chase began in earnest.

YELLING STORIES IN IRISH

That evoked hearty laughter from the listeners; as for the writer, finding it could not understand the stories, I was mesmerically exhausted by the crew as completely as the fish. Tom Moriarty was evidently the hero of the party, his sallies were always received with delight, and a quick intelligence was displayed by all, and I remarked that he was the only one to exercise the physical labor. At length, in relating some adventure which seemed full of interest to the hearers, he incontinently sat on the rope as it lay over the thwart in a momentary lull of the struggle; just at the moment the fish made a rush, away went the rope, and in some mysterious manner away went a large piece of the seat of Tom Moriarty's flannel trowsers, while he jumped up with about a foot pale and the inevitable attendant feeling, that sent the crew doubled into convulsions of laughter. He performed the same evolution of that day's work no more; he had an objection, he said, to sitting at least a length of time.

The harpoon was a peculiar shape, quite different from the ordinary whaling instrument. It was made of a thin five feet long, of five eighth inch round Swedish iron to the end of the which was riveted, at its centre, a long flat piece of the same iron to it the form of a bunnan scull; the point of this flat piece was sharpened like a heart—They know not the noble impulse
Whose lightest thoughts to it gift impart
A value so wondrous fair.

The harpoon was a peculiar shape, quite different from the ordinary whaling instrument. It was made of a thin five feet long, of five eighth inch round Swedish iron to the end of the which was riveted, at its centre, a long flat piece of the same iron to it the form of a bunnan scull; the point of this flat piece was sharpened like a heart and was, of course, a double barb. The line was coiled in the bow of the boat, and then we played about, about eight or nine feet, I saw the back mass slowly sinking.

SUCH A MONSTER!

More than double the size of the boat, had never seen such a living thing of half the magnitude, and the first sensation was one of unmixed hat startling. As we passed over the fish, a shadow fell momentarily upon us from the crew. However we got the boat round at once, and had the happiness of seeing our quarry rise to the surface, about a hundred yards ahead. At him we went again like mad, and I had recovered my equanimity, and was determined to do my part carefully. As we came within six or seven yards of him, I perceived the harpoon-bearer streak of which he was had spoken. They were quite close to the fish, and I got a glimpse of the terribly earnest face of the sheet-man, and thought of the bitter disgrace of failure. Nearer and nearer came the boat; I stood in the bow with the second harpoon poised, and when the image fish again broke the surface, I plunged it down with all my might, until the iron was completely buried.

LIKE A FLASH OF LIGHTING

And he darted, seemingly as fresh as at first. As coil after coil flew over the side, I looked at each other in blank despair. Fifty men would not have held the monster, and our hopes sank to zero. Suddenly the speed slackened, and every man eagerly closed his grasp upon the rope. The fish had stopped. Cheerily we hauled; as we did done before many hundred fathoms that day. Again the harpoon bandied changed from the starboard to the port bow; took a half hitch round the mast; four men got out their oars to keep her stern to the wind, and the struggle was being fought. Soon as all was ready we were hauled alongside the monster, and were amazingly struck with his blood; while the water was deeply tinged with his blood; while the water was deeply tinged with his blood; while the water was deeply tinged

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING SEPT. 14, September—Fifteenth Sunday after Pentecost. Ex-Exaltation of the Holy Cross.
15—Monday—Octave of the Nativity. St. Nicomedes, Martyr.
16—Tuesday—Saints Cornelius, Pope, and Cyprian, Bishop, Martyrs.
17—Wednesday—The Stigmata of Saint Francis of Assisi. Ember Day.
18—Thursday—Joseph of Cupertino, Confessor.
19—Friday—Januarius and his Companions, Martyrs.
20—Saturday—St. Eustachius and Companions, Martyrs. Ember Day. Vigil.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....SEPTEMBER 13, 1873.

WEDDING DISCOURAGEMENT.

Three times in the course of as many years an element of discharm has been introduced into the Catholic community of this diocese by the visit of a priest engaged in the work of collecting funds for some ecclesiastical building in Ireland. These visits have the advantage of not rewarding Archbishop Bede not at naught by individuals who, on many accounts, should have listened to them with respect and obeyed them with docility. This is, undoubtedly, a thing very much to be deplored by all sincere Catholics who wish peace and good order to prevail within the Church.

If this be sufficiently to assert, no praise in the United States more generous in the spirit of Catholic charity, or more willing to acknowledge the just claims of any portion of the faithful upon their brethren in the world, than the Most Rev. Dr. ALEMANY; but he has a certain duty to perform towards the flock entrusted to him which he cannot allow personal sympathies to overlook. And if there be any children of the faith to whom more than to others he is desirous of exhibiting kindly feelings, and of extending aid when required, most assuredly are those who are yet dwelt on the land trodden by St. PATRICK. It is, however, no more than the simple truth to declare that during the three years of which we speak no claim has been laid before the people of San Francisco which deserved preference over the requirements of this diocese.

Beyond question it is a good thing to have a magnificent cathedral in Queenstown; to have another in the city of Cork, a few miles away; and to have a splendid and costly church in the little town of Kells; but these are all, if we may be permitted to believe, ecclesiastical luxuries which could be very well done without. And no charity, human or divine, commands us to help other people to procure luxuries when ourselves are not yet supplied with the commonest necessaries. The diocese of San Francisco is an extensive one, its population is rapidly increasing, its churches are few and poor, and its priests are miserably overworked. Why the few churches are too few, churches are too few, and these latter few are almost all encumbered with debt.

Every intelligent man can see these things for himself, and does not require to be told of them. Now, this being the case, we would ask, how is any person, lay or cleric, justified in coming hither and seeking subscriptions for religious edifices in which scarcely any Catholics dwell, and which are not one half as urgent? And, again, we would ask, how can the Archbishop consecientiously grant a foreign priest permission to collect money for such purposes? The priest who comes hither with this begging hand that he will not be allowed to seek subscriptions; yet, he invariably goes through the form of demanding authorization—demanding that very dignity reasonable deliberate itself. When the authorization is refused, then recourse is had to the expedient of jesting.

Has any priest any more a right to lecture? is not any stranger at liberty to sell an intellectual treat to those who care to purchase it? how is the right of ecclesiastical authority infringed upon by such a course? are quarters indecisionary urged by the thoughtless or malicious men who abet and encourage the contumacious visitor. The questions involve sophistries that are easily blown to pieces. A priest, if he wishes to conduct himself as a priest ought, or to show proper respect towards his superiors—if he is anxious to avoid giving scandal or create dissensions among the body of the faithful—will not consider himself at liberty even to lecture for the benefit of any foreign diocese, because that is only an indirect way of soliciting subscriptions. Whether the dollar or fifty cents be given in a private house on demand, or deposited in the ticket office of a public hall at a lecture, the result intended and achieved is precisely the same in the both cases.

The regulations referring to this matter, which were adopted at the Council of Baltimore, clearly contemplate every attempt to directly or indirectly take money for ecclesiastical purposes out of any diocese without the expressed consent of the bishop thereof. It belongs to the bishop to give or withhold his consent, just as he pleases, and he is called upon to render account of his conduct to no party. He acts just as circumstances seem to him to demand, and his judgments is final. Therefore, it is highly improper, to say the least, for any individual, especially any priest, to institute invidious comparisons between the course adopted by one prelate and that adopted by another. Every honest Catholic will freely admit that both act conscientiously and though the best possible motives. This drawing of comparisons is in most cases meant to harm; it is intended to warp the sympathies of Catholics, weak - minded enough to be led astray by insidious appeals to "patriotism," and to estrange them from those who have spiritual jurisdiction over them.

It succeeds sometimes, too. A few impulsive and unthinking men may cease to perform their religious duties, and may practically abandon the Church, because they are made to feel irritation against the bishop or some of the clergy; but every person with faith in his heart must shudder at the awful responsibility incurred by whoever leads them into that frame of mind. Scarcely by less serious is the responsibility incurred by those who abet the disturber, and encourage him in his defiance of the ecclesiastical authorities. Such people should reflect deeply and bethink themselves whether they advance their eternal welfare more by taking sides with every stranger who comes among them, than by following the advice given by their bishop and proclaimed by the clergy. The stranger, having got all he can, goes off and thinks no more of San Francisco, with the console tion, if he choose to consider it so, that he has done some injury to religion, sapped the attachment of some unfortunates to faith, and engendered an amount of ill-feeling that frequently endures for a long time. But the Archbishop and the pastors remain, and it is to them that the faithful must look for the consolations of religion whenever they most require them.

We believe that all who weigh these matters carefully will come to the conclusion that it is the duty of good Catholics not only to refrain from giving the slightest encouragement to any priest that comes here and deliberately sets the authority of the Archbishop at defiance, but also, as far as in them lies, to dissuade others who may be under the faith from identifying themselves with him. There has been altogether too much of this sort of mendicancy, and it is high time to put a stop to it. Irishmen who feel pride in their country should be specially hostile to this begging system, for it cannot be other wise than humiliating to them to find their native land perpetually represented as mendicant and eternally imploring alms. Ireland is not a land of paupers, and she can afford to build and pay for all the religious edifices she requires. What is more, in consequence of the large flow of emigration from her shores it is, unhappily, only too probable that she will need less church accommodation before she needs more.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

The education question is again coming prominently before the public. It is being discussed in the leading columns of the most influential newspapers, and is calling forth a large amount of correspondence from theorists of various schools. The increased agitation is all owing to the wonderful exertion made by the Catholic hierarchy throughout the United States to provide sound religious instruction for the children of their flocks. The advocates of godless education, by means of its legislation, are alarmed, and they would much prefer to see the Catholic schools broken up, amusing to read some of the comments indulged in by non Catholic writers, inasmuch as they show a ludicrous predetermination to misrepresent every action adopted by our pastors.

From the manner in which they speak of the opening of a new Catholic school one would be led to imagine the proceeding was illegal and a violation of the Constitution. Instead of withdrawing their children from the public schools, so that they may receive their education in an institution presided over by teachers belonging to their own faith, these newspaper writers actually become indignant and declare in the strongest terms against the transfer. Singular to remark, too, they treat the matter exactly as if it were an unprovoked and unjustifiable interference with the sacred privileges of liberty They seem to be under the impression that they have a right to keep Catholic children in their schools, and that any one who attempts to withdraw them commits an unwarrantable act of tyranny. Consequently, the sun and substance of all their angry denunciations is assertion that the bishops and priests want to destroy their education system and deprive them of its advantages.

So, when it was telegraphed all over the country that the Catholic clergy of New York city were making an attempt to "break down the public schools" by taking away the Catholic children, hundreds of fierce editorials were penned in condemnation of their proceedings. They were described as bigoted, superstitious, enemies of republicanism, foes of enlightenment—all because they choose to exercise a right of which they would not be deprived in any really free country! Now it is the easiest thing in the world to expose such absurd fallacies which underlie this method of discussing the education question. Neither the clergy nor any other body of men within the Catholic Church, of whose existence we are aware, want to destroy the public schools, or in any way wish to prevent those who admire such institutions from maintaining them as long as they please for their own use and benefit. But these public schools do not suit us Catholics; we know with absolute certainty that the training received in them is injurious to the faith of our children; we believe that their influence is highly detrimental to the morals of the pupils; so that the clergy, acting in our behalf, using the money which we most cheerfully give them for the purpose, establish Catholic schools in which alone we can have any confidence.

There is nothing aggressive in this; there is nothing in it either unfair or unfriendly towards any religious denomination. We cannot conscientiously approve of an educational system, no matter how perfect in its details, which is not based upon religion; but we cherish no hostility towards those who differ from us in opinion and are content with secularism. Our entire honesty of purpose and our perfect freedom from the least taint of illiberality are recognized by all intelligent and honorable Protestants, many of whom contribute most generously towards the establishment of our schools. We complain that we are compelled by the State to contribute to the support of institutions which we do not want or admire. Time was entertained doubtly for the education of our children—one for the public schools and once for our own schools; and the injustice inflicted upon us is not the less grievous because the latter tax is altogether voluntary. Manifestly the State, to treat us fairly, should exempt us from any taxation for education; or else it ought to give us our due proportion of the fund and let us use it in our own way—we giving in return all possible guarantees that the children in Catholic schools shall receive as good and thorough an instruction in the purely secular branches of learning as the pupils receive in the so-called "non-sectarian" establishments. One or other of these causes must be adopted if even the pretence of impartiality be seen to between the different communities of Christians is to be maintained in these States.

But any allusion to the latter of these expedients is quite sufficient to drive all the bigots and fanatics in the whole country into an uncontrollable rage. "What!" they exclaim in a breath, "shall any part of the revenues of this republic be set aside for the promotion of Popish ends? Never! Never!" "The Government shall never be permitted to foster sectarianism." "Our Protestant money must never be handed over to popish priests." These are a few samples of the arguments which are used by secularists against the support of denominational schools. These narrow-minded individuals ought to remember the fact that the Government in the United States simply carries out the wishes of the people as their servant, and that whatever a majority of citizens desire will inevitably become the law of the land. We Catholics have no doubt whatever that in the process of time, by legal and constitutional means, our claims, by appealing to the intelligence and honor of the American masses, we shall convince them of the justice and propriety of acceding to what we demand. Moreover—but this is almost beside the question—we feel sure that, before many years pass away, Americans in general, without distinction of creed or party, will have discovered for themselves the mischievous effect of "non-sectarian," that is irreligious, education, and become so thoroughly disgusted with it as to demand, by a peaceful revolution, they will sweep it out of the country.

Thus we shall win our way by appealing to the rational judgment and sense of honor of our fellow-citizens. We shall, by means of peaceful agitation, by trusting to reason, not by creating social discord, not by violating the principles of Christian charity, not by sophistries psychudices and cressling hazard, not by spreading the tares of religious dissension among the children of their flocks. The advocates of godless education, by means of its legislation, are alarmed, and they would much prefer to see the Catholic schools broken up, amusing to read some of the comments indulged in by non Catholic writers, inasmuch as they show a ludicrous predetermination to misrepresent every action adopted by our prelates.

Sound Words on the Educational Question.

It gives us sincere pleasure to find a Protestant religious newspaper entertain such right views on the vexed question of public education as are expressed in the article published below, which is taken from the Northern Christian Advocate of August 2d. It is encouraging also to find that there are Protestant journals religious enough and manly enough to resist the senseless and immoral cry that the public schools are "the bulwark" of this Republic!

WHAT IS THE OBJECT OF NO SCHOOL?

At this period of the year many of our sons and daughters are asking the question, "Where shall I go to school?" and parents are anxious as to where they shall send them. It is an important question and a critical period in the life of the youth, when sent away from home for a education; it is the turning point of life, and in all probability will are the bias for all future time; hence the subject should be carefully canvassed. The general discipline of the school, its moral and religious states, the character of the teachers, intellectually and religiously, and the surrounding associations must all be considered, and will be by the judicious parent. A safe and salutary discipline, in which the honor only of the student, is made the standard of conduct, and the sincere seeker after knowledge are given or restraints enforced; where intellectual culture is made the only object for attainment, and the moral nature is left to the brutes and thorns; where the Bible is excluded from the school by the exact in their recitation-room, with but little or no interest in their pupils outside of the school in which to place our sons and daughters; and Christian communities are bound to see that their children under such influences.

It matters not what the pecuniary inducements are, if the morals and religion are in the hazard is to great to take, the danger is to be shunned. It is deeply pained, and when our public schools become of this character, in which direction the current of influence sets, this site for the location of the city of Methodism must be abandoned or we shall become a nation of infidels. It is a matter of sincere regret that many of our religious papers are advancing measures in favor of these schools which must lead to this result. It is not supposed that they so understand it or intend it, yet, when we read the Hon. Mr. Hoar's address before Christian Science are excluded from our public schools, it is evident that they are fast become schools of religious indifference and practical skepticism. It is the duty, and must be a pleasure to Christian parents, to send their children to Christian schools, and the Christian pastor to see that they do so, in favor of those most Christian. In this connection we ever maintain the distinction between Christian schools and sectarian schools.

In denomination schools we have no objections, and where there are such, other things being equal, they should be preferred by Christian parents. The principle to which they belong; but Christian schools, where Christ and Christianity are remembered in the daily instruction, and where morality and a religious life are taught, are the schools in which to place our sons and children, if we would have a foundation laid for Christian character, and usefulness and happiness in this life, and the foundation of this character for the young is far cheaper than the bought in after years. The hundreds and thousands of dollars, than to have them educated improperly. Better a thousand times that our children be poor of God; and the testator bequeathed all the means of his property to the Right Hev. Bishop Langlois, the first parish of the parish, offsetting. Besides many friends of the deceased, a large number of the pupils of the Presentation Convent were present.

Sensible Charge to a Grand Jury.

A Grand Jury was recently empaneled in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Court of Sessions, when Judge Moore charged them upon their duties. After speaking of the prevalence of crime, he said:

"We all know that recently defalcations have been charged against public officers in this city, and the people of the county and of the city treasury has been robbed of a large amount of money by some persons. It is not for me to say that the guilt or innocence of any persons; it will be time enough for me to do that when they come before me for sentence, if they are found guilty. It appears to me that it is getting to be a reproach to a man to say that a man who pays $50 is sent to the State Prison, while those who steal $50,000 are allowed to go free. I hope the experience of our sister city will be ours. Whoever has been tampering with the public funds, whatever office he has been guilty of misusing the public money, or of embezzlement, ought to be punished. I recommend you to make a careful examination of cases that may be brought before you. It is a serious thing for a man to be charged with a crime, but where he has committed an offense like that I have alluded to, no sympathy, no personal or political, must deter you from you doing your duty."

A Spunky Letter.

The Crescent organ having published a list of the Catholics employed in the different departments of our city Government, with a view to their proscription, and enlisting the name of William N. McNamara, his wife wrote to the Defamer the following "spunky" note:

SIXTH DISTRICT DEFAMER.—Sir: In looking over a copy of your paper, giving a list of Roman Catholic teachers, I find you have omitted my name—Mrs. Dorothea Farrell. I send it to you—William N. McNamara, Principal Grammar and Primary Public School. I also am a Roman Catholic convert. Respectfully, MRS. DOROTHEA FARRELL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 1, 1873.

The Vasquez bandlitt were overtaken in San Bernardino county, on their way towards Mexico. A sharp skirmish between them and the officers took place at Rock Creek Cañon, resulting in the capture of one of the robbers, named Andon Leiva.

Choice wheat brings $1 30 per cental in Stockton.

The Next Legislature.

Here is a full list of the members elect of the next Legislature:

Republicans are in Roman, Democrats in Italic, Independents in SMALL CAPS, and bold over Senators designated by a *.

SENATE.

First District: San Bernardino and San Diego—*James McCoy.

Second District: Los Angeles—C. W. Byers.

Third District: San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Ventura—W. J. Graves.

Fourth District: Fresno, Kern and Tulare—TIPTON LINDSLEY.

Fifth District: Mariposa, Merced and Stanislaus—*T. J. Kyle.

Sixth District: Monterey and Santa Cruz—*Thomas Birch.

Seventh District: Santa Clara—T. H. LAZINE.

Eighth District: San Francisco and San Mateo—S. J. Pinney, George Oulton,* W. T. Garratt.* A. S. HALLEY, P. A. Booth.

Ninth District: Alameda—Blizard Gibbons.

Tenth District: Contra Costa and Marin—David Goodall.*

Fifth District: Mariposa, Merced and Stanislaus—*T. J. Kyle.

Eleventh District: San Joaquin—George S. Evans.*

Twelfth District: Inyo, Mono and Tuolumne—Joseph Winters. C. Andrus,* W. Adams.

Thirteenth District: Calaveras—Barlow Byrne,* R. Hodges.

Fourteenth District: Alpine and Amador—James T. Farley.

Fifteenth District: Placer—J. H. Neff,* N. Martin.

Twenty-first District: Nevada—Charles Kenyon,* Wm. Rector.

Twenty-second District: Sierra—H. K. Turner.*

Twenty-third District: Sutter and Yuba—L. T. Crane,* S. Spencer.

Twenty-fourth District: Butte, Lassen and Plumas—George C. Perkins, W. C. Hendricks.

Twenty-fifth Distric : Colusa and Tehama—*John Boggs.

Twenty-sixth District: Shasta and Trinity—*John McMurray.

Twenty-seventh District: Del Norte, Humboldt and Klamath—J. J. Dellaven.

Twenty-eighth District: Siskiyou—*Whitterton Steele.

Republicans 18, Democrats 15, Independents 7.

ASSEMBLYMEN.

Alameda—I. A. Amerman, W. J. Gurnett.

Alpine and Amador—L. Miller, H. W. Storrs.

Butte—J. C. Gray,* B. Orvis.

Calaveras—J. F. Peck, George Gilman, L. Gibson.

Colusa and Tehama—W. H. Brown.

Contra Costa—A. W. HAMMITT.

Del Norte and Klamath—J. J. Ayres.

El Dorado—T. Gibbs, W. E. Spencer and two Democrats.

Fresno—T. Ferguson.

Humboldt—W. T. Hewsin.

Kern and Tulare—W. CARFIELD.

Lake and Mendocino—J. Peck, George Gilman.

Los Angeles—A. Higbee, J. W. Fenelle.

Marin—T. J. ABLES.

Mariposa—J. SNYDER.

Mendocino—L. W. MCCULLUM.

Monterey and San Benito—Thomas Bonner.

Napa—J. Hudson, Wm. Hudson.

Nevada—A. J. Pelham, B. C. Nottlup, Wm. Ellis.

Placer—J. H. Neff, WILLIAM KOUNCH, W. C. NORTON.

Plumas and Lassen—J. D. Byers.

Sacramento—J. Bowman, J. Cousins, R. KERCHEVAL, W. E. BRYAN, J. N. BARRY.

San Bernardino—Byron Waters.

San Diego—W. W. BYERS.

San Joaquin—Daniel Merry, W. A. ALDRICH, JAMES PATTERSON, R. Howe, G. C. Wright, DANIEL ROGERS, JOHN MCCARTHY, T. Gibbs, W. E. Spencer and two Democrats.

San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara and Ventura—W. J. Graves.

San Mateo—James Byrnes.

Santa Clara—Charles Lyman, F. C. Frank, ALEX. HAY.

Santa Cruz—CHARLES L. THOMAS.

Shasta—Rudolph Klotz.

Sierra—S. Winchell, W. R. Morgan.

Siskiyou—W. T. GEMMELER, J. W. McBride.

Solano—J. L. HEALD.

Sonoma—W. S. M. Wright, James Dixon, W. H. Nortimell.

Stanislaus—A. Chandler.

Trinity—W. J. Tinnin.

Tuolumne, Mono and Inyo—Joseph Winters, J. H. Purdy, A. J. Long.

Yolo—F. S. Freeman.

Yuba—J. C. Bradley, J. C. Clark, Martin Kook.

Republicans 25, Democrats 26, Independents 9. Joint ballot, Republicans 43, Democrats, 41, Independents 37. Some 12 of the Independents are not for Bosh for Senator, while some of the 12 of the Republicans are.

Cost of the War to France.—The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says:

"It is said to be a common saying here that France was rich enough to pay for her glory, and in those days she little thought of the cost of adversity. Now the situation of the country is drawn to the following items, which show what a costly game war sometimes is: There is the war indemnity, 5,000,000 francs; the annual rent on the same for two years, 3,000,000,000 francs; the loss to the German troops, 273,637,000 francs; value of property lost without requisition, 254,681,000 francs; war contributions levied on Paris, 200,000,000 francs; and so on till the account's forms a total of 6,673,811,030 francs. But this enormous sum does not include the expenses of the army, the damage done to material, nor the expenses of a population that has to start again. The average value of a day's work in France is one franc and a quarter, so it is easy to calculate the amount of labor which will be required to repair the folly of a few months of violence and bloodshed."

Catholic Meeting in Munich.—A great Catholic meeting was recently held in Munich, Bavaria, in the grand hall of the New Casino. Herr Von Loe, the President, said: "We are not assembled here to obtain a predominance of Catholic power, but to take some measures and precautions against the encroachments of our common enemy. We have before us the Masonic power, which is terribly great and well organized. But with God's help we will conquer." Another member spoke at considerable length on the proposed interference of Prince Bismarck in the coming Papal election, and said that "it must be prevented in every possible way."

LATEST IRISH NEWS.

From the Cork Herald, August 16.

The Lord Lieutenant has consequented to the commencement of the new graving dock at Waterford. It has been undertaken by the Harbor Commissioners, who have accepted large sums in constructing new quays, and in completing a straight cut of a mile in length, thus obliterating an old and dangerous portion route of one mile and a half for steamers.

The Royal Agricultural Society's show at Waterford was visited yesterday by an immense crowd. The money received at the door for the three days exceeded £2,000. Last night a grand ball was given, at which the Lord Lieutenant and Countess Spencer, with a number of the nobility and gentry of the county, were present.

A large Home Rule demonstration was held yesterday near Kinlekillen, and resolutions were passed pledging those present to use every legitimate means in favor of an Irish Parliament. Green and white flags were displayed by the Home Rulers, while Orange and blue flags floated from the Protestant Churches.

From the Cork Herald, August 18.

A meeting of the County Dublin Tenant-Farmers' Defence Association, on Friday, a report was read from Mr. Butt, in which he promised next session to re-introduce the Limited Land Act, which he pronounced to be calculated to hasten, though somewhat the extermination of the Irish people from their own shores.

With deep regret we have to announce the death of the Very Rev. Edmond Mullaly, P. P., V. F., Donoughmore, which took place at his sister's residence at Ballycurreen, on Monday.

A telegram from Castlebar says that a fearful murder occurred on Saturday at a small village in Mayo. Some white cutting turf in a bog between Ballina and a woman, name not given, was found on the bog, with a spade, killing her; and a man named Noone is in custody, charged with the murder.

From the Cork Herald, August 19.

A great Irish national demonstration recently took place in Glasgow. On the motion of a Catholic clergyman, a resolution was passed expressing regret that many of our religious papers are advancing measures in favor of those schools which must lead to the result. It is not supposed that they so understand it or intend it, yet, when we read the Hon. Mr. Hoar's address before Christian Science are excluded from our public schools, it is evident that they are fast become schools of religious indifference and practical skepticism. It is the duty, and must be a pleasure to Christian parents, to send their children to Christian schools, and the Christian pastor to see that they do so, in favor of those most Christian. In this connection we ever maintain the distinction between Christian schools and sectarian schools.

In denomination schools we have no objections, and where there are such, other things being equal, they should be preferred by Christian parents. The principle to which they belong; but Christian schools, where Christ and Christianity are remembered in the daily instruction, and where morality and a religious life are taught, are the schools in which to place our sons and children, if we would have a foundation laid for Christian character, and usefulness and happiness in this life, and the foundation of this character for the young is far cheaper than the bought in after years. The hundreds and thousands of dollars, than to have them educated improperly. Better a thousand times that our children be poor of God; and the testator bequeathed all the means of his property to the Right Hev. Bishop Langlois, the first parish of the parish, offsetting. Besides many friends of the deceased, a large number of the pupils of the Presentation Convent were present.

Sensible Charge to a Grand Jury.

A Grand Jury was recently empaneled in the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Court of Sessions, when Judge Moore charged them upon their duties. After speaking of the prevalence of crime, he said:

"We all know that recently defalcations have been charged against public officers in this city, and the people of the county and of the city treasury has been robbed of a large amount of money by some persons. It is not for me to say that the guilt or innocence of any persons; it will be time enough for me to do that when they come before me for sentence, if they are found guilty. It appears to me that it is getting to be a reproach to a man to say that a man who pays $50 is sent to the State Prison, while those who steal $50,000 are allowed to go free. I hope the experience of our sister city will be ours. Whoever has been tampering with the public funds, whatever office he has been guilty of misusing the public money, or of embezzlement, ought to be punished. I recommend you to make a careful examination of cases that may be brought before you. It is a serious thing for a man to be charged with a crime, but where he has committed an offense like that I have alluded to, no sympathy, no personal or political, must deter you from you doing your duty."

A Spunky Letter.

The Crescent organ having published a list of the Catholics employed in the different departments of our city Government, with a view to their proscription, and enlisting the name of William N. McNamara, his wife wrote to the Defamer the following "spunky" note:

SIXTH DISTRICT DEFAMER.—Sir: In looking over a copy of your paper, giving a list of Roman Catholic teachers, I find you have omitted my name—Mrs. Dorothea Farrell. I send it to you—William N. McNamara, Principal Grammar and Primary Public School. I also am a Roman Catholic convert. Respectfully, MRS. DOROTHEA FARRELL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 1, 1873.

The Vasquez bandlitt were overtaken in San Bernardino county, on their way towards Mexico. A sharp skirmish between them and the officers took place at Rock Creek Cañon, resulting in the capture of one of the robbers, named Andon Leiva.

Choice wheat brings $1 30 per cental in Stockton.

LETTER FROM ROME.

[Correspondence of Catholic Opinion.]

ROME, August 7, 1873.

THE HOLY FATHER.

The Pope celebrated Mass in the Pauline Chapel of the Vatican on the occasion of the Portiuncula, or Pardon of Assisi, August 2d, and received a number of persons, both Romans and strangers, afterwards. His Holiness appeared in excellent health and spirits.

THE RADICALS AT NAPLES.

The victory of the extreme Liberal party in the administrative elections in Naples is another proof of the instability of the Italian monarchy. The Republican demonstration in the Villa Reale was a very serious one, and the cries of "Viva Garibaldi!" "A basso i Gesuite!" "Morte al Vaticano!" "Morte alla Francia!" were incessant. The Syndic Murdtel is an ex-Garibaldian soldier, one of the "Mille di Marsala," and a rabid Republican, and he was loudly applauded by the mob on his appearance on the balcony of the Prefecture.

ROMANCE AND ITALY.

The utter uncertainty of the torn events may take from day to day in Spain, and the certainty that France will make no fresh concessions to Italy, is forcing Victor Emmanuel, much against his own judgment, into complete alliance with Germany. Although there is not a word in Marshal MacMahon's message which could raise suspicion in the most sensitive mind, the country being reserved in the most courteous terms, Italy inexplicably feels that her tenure of the Pontifical States hangs on a thread, and that she has made an enemy of France, whom nothing save the Italian alliance will appease. The Prussian alliance is, therefore, the only thing left to Germany although she will play the part of the cat, and draw the chestnuts from the fire, she is forced to go on in the path she has entered into. M. Bismarck evidently intends to take back all the provinces of Austria provocation to France, and promises her the dismemberment of Italy, and the annexation of Corsica and the Italian Tyrol, the cession of Savoy and Dalmatia, and a part of the indemnity of the militards he is already contemplating the cession of a second war with France.

M. Bismarck, however, evidently reckons without his host. He forgets, in his insolent pride, that Bavaria, from the sovereign to the poorest peasant, is intensely Catholic and desires nothing better than to free herself, from Prussian supremacy; that Saxony Hanover and all the smaller States feel no inclination to lend themselves once more to the projects of German centralization and the extinction of their civil liberties. Wurtemburg, though Protestant, is profoundly jealous of the Prussian encroachments, and there on exist no doubt that Prussia will be only single-handed in any further attacks on France. In the meantime, we shall probably not have long to wait for the pebble which will fall into the few months since, and which will overthrow the Colossus.

STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

It is impossible, however, to consider the religious and social state of Italy without feeling that a great declension has taken place and necessary to break through the intense worldliness and materialism which have become her besetting sin. Many nominally Catholics, especially in the provinces of the north and centre, will, in spite of all ecclesiastical censures, read and subscribe to the vilest journals, and allow their sons to be officers in official labor, and take their daughters to theatres. The liberty of worship is almost unlimited, and the spirit of almsgiving and of charity for a great part extinct. Public hostility is almost entirely confined to the clergy, especially

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Visitation at Mallow.

The Right Rev. Dr. Keane, Bishop of Cloyne, held a visitation at Mallow on Sunday, immediately after last Mass. The clergymen present were the Rev. Canon McCarthy, Mallow; the Rev. P. Aherne, Mallow; Rev. Jn. Ellworth, Inniscarle; Rev. Dr. Rice, Charleville; Rev. Canon Barton, Castletownroche. Rev. Dr. Rice, after the first Gospel, preached a most eloquent and impressive sermon from the following text: "From the rising of the sun even to the going down, My name is great among the Gentiles, and on every place there is sacrifice, and there is offered to My name a clean oblation." The Bishop, having ascended the altar, said the pastoral. Many of the boys were favored with two of the best schools that could be chosen for the education of their children—namely, the schools of the Christian Brothers and of the good Nuns of the Order of Mercy. He exhorted fathers and mothers not to neglect to send their children regularly to school, and to take care that the rising generation were instructed in the true faith. His Lordship next referred to the past history of Ireland, and observed that the Irish people seemed to have been favored with a special mission to spread the true faith in foreign lands. At the late great Council of Bishops the Irish Bishops were more numerous than those of any other country in the world. There are more Irish Catholics in America to-day than in Ireland itself. He was lately speaking to a Catholic priest, who returned from Scotland, and who was on the Scotch mission. He asked him were there many Irish Catholics in Glasgow? how many Scotch? He said three hundred. There was a glorious mission. In not Ireland filling in some measure to-day as in past years? Yes, there is life in Ireland still, with God's blessing. He saw emigrants from all parts of Ireland going to America, and as a rule every single one of those emigrants prepared for the Sacraments before they left Ireland. Those emigrants were going as lay missionaries to America, there to propagate the Catholic faith. His Lordship said he was glad to be informed from the parish priest that there were no cases of public scandal in the parish since his last visitation. He thanked the parishioners for the generous manner in which they contributed toward the erection of the Queenstown Cathedral. About £20,000 was collected in Queenstown, and £11,000 in the parishes throughout the diocese. His Lordship, in conclusion, requested the congregation not to have drink at wakes and funerals.—Catholic Opinion, August 16.

Mr. O'Neill Daunt's Report on Irish Finances.

We copy from the London Examiner the following notice of the above subject, recently issued by the Home Government Association: "The report of the committee appointed by the Home Government Association to examine the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland, on the pressure of taxation on Irish resources, deals with an eminently 'practical' phase of the Irish question. If there be one thing that Union Ireland has been most unfairly treated in the matter of taxation, being compelled to contribute nearly one-fifth of the imperial expenditure, while her share of the general wealth of the empire does not enable persons to pay for her own subjugation, and that the money thus levied for purposes, has been discussed and settled in the Landed Estates Court. On the occasion of the sale of the Marquis of Waterford's property, Mr. Thompson obtained from the Board of Works a sum of £2,350 to enable him to buy the fee simple of his holding, and the purchase was effected. He was ascertained afterward that Mr. Thompson was to pay but part of the sum due time he procured the loan, and the Board of Works applied to the Landed Estates Court for the payment of the £2,350 at once, on the ground that not having had the whole of the land in his possession for the term of only hope, dearly beloved, is in God; and it is only by the united prayers of the faithful that we can hope to obtain it. Let us be addressed to the throne of the Most High, that present storm-gan be dissipated, and peace restored to Ireland, to Italy and to the world."—Catholic Opinion, August 16.

Important Land Case.

A question which has caused no incon siderable amount of attention wi h respect to the Ulster tenant right may be considered settled by the decision of the Master of the Landed Estates Court. On the occasion of the sale of the Marquis of Waterford's property, Mr. Thompson obtained from the Board of Works a sum of £2,350 to enable him to buy the fee simple of his holding, and the purchase was effected. He was ascertained afterward that Mr. Thompson was to pay but part of the sum due time he procured the loan, and the Board of Works applied to the Landed Estates Court for the payment of the £2,350 at once, on the ground that not having had the whole of the land in his possession for the term of only two years, and there is offered to My name a clean oblation." The Bishop having ascended the altar said the pastoral. Many of the boys were favored with two of the best schools that could be chosen for the education of their children—namely, the schools of the Christian Brothers and of the good Nuns of the Order of Mercy. He exhorted fathers and mothers not to neglect to send their children regularly to school, and to take care that the rising generation were instructed in the true faith. His Lordship next referred to the past history of Ireland, and observed that the Irish people seemed to have been favored with a special mission to spread the true faith in foreign lands. At the late great Council of Bishops the Irish Bishops were more numerous than those of any other country in the world. There are more Irish Catholics in America to-day than in Ireland itself. He was lately speaking to a Catholic priest, who returned from Scotland, and who was on the Scotch mission. He asked him were there many Irish Catholics in Glasgow? how many Scotch? He said three hundred. There was a glorious mission. Is not Ireland filling in some measure to-day as in past years? Yes, there is life in Ireland still, with God's blessing. He saw emigrants from all parts of Ireland going to America, and as a rule every single one of those emigrants prepared for the Sacraments before they left Ireland. Those emigrants were going as lay missionaries to America, there to propagate the Catholic faith. His Lordship said he was glad to be informed from the parish priest that there were no cases of public scandal in the parish since his last visitation. He thanked the parishioners for the generous manner in which they contributed toward the erection of the Queenstown Cathedral. About £20,000 was collected in Queenstown, and £11,000 in the parishes throughout the diocese. His Lordship, in conclusion, requested the congregation not to have drink at wakes and funerals.—Catholic Opinion, August 16.

Mr. O'Neill Daunt's Report on Irish Finances.

We copy from the London Examiner the following notice of the above subject, recently issued by the Home Government Association: "The report of the committee appointed by the Home Government Association to examine the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland, on the pressure of taxation on Irish resources, deals with an eminently 'practical' phase of the Irish question. If there be one thing that Union Ireland has been most unfairly treated in the matter of taxation, being compelled to contribute nearly one-fifth of the imperial expenditure, while her share of the general wealth of the empire does not enable persons to pay for her own subjugation, and that the money thus levied for purposes, has been discussed and settled in

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

St. Dominic's church, South Washington, is expected to be ready for divine services on Christmas Day. Its cost is $250,000

The Pope has received through the Reverend General of the Franciscans, in Rome, a large casting of a gold from Peru, and an album full of Peruvian signatures.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. Roderick Geraghty, Milltown, county Galway, Ireland, which took place on 5th August, at his residence in Milltown. The deceased clergyman's estimable qualities had secured to him the attachment of many by whom he is regretted.

Rev. Urban Heyar, of the Order of Saint Benedict, aged 32 years, died at the Benedictine Monastery in Atchison, Kansas, on the 5th August. He expired in the arms of Rev. Timothy M. Lesher, fortified by all the rites of the Church. Father Heyer was a native of Newhausen, Wurtemburg.

On Friday, August 13th, the ceremony of inaugurating the great altar in the Church of the Assumption, Wexford, took place. The altar is a most beautiful piece of work, carved by Messrs. Early of Dublin. It is the gift of the women belonging to the Confraternity of the Holy Family, and cost upwards of £500.

At a meeting recently held in Kanmare, county Kerry, Ireland, it was resolved that a testimonial should be presented to Miss Donnelly (the "Nun of Kenmare"), as a national recognition of her services to literature and religion; and also for the purpose of indemnifying her for the loss of more than £5,000 worth of her books in the great fire at Dooon. Many subscriptions are received.

A young lady named Agnes Schmidt, daughter of a wealthy Israelite merchant of Pittsburg, Pa., now absent with his wife in Europe, recently embraced her faith, and was received into the Catholic Church at St. Paul's Cathedral amidst imposing ceremonies. The sacrament was under the instruction of Father Orcan, and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Reardon.

The Rev. R. Banahan, of Bandon, died on the 28th of July, at that place. Father Banahan was a native of the parish of Carrigaonnacuse, and was born about the year 1836. His early life was a fervent preparation for the ministry. He read for college at St. MacCartan's, Monaghan, and his superiors were not slow in recognising his worth. He was speedily promoted to Maynooth, where he studied a full course of Scripture and theology. After his ordination he was appointed curate of Bandon, and labored only nineteen months.

The Oblate of Mary Immaculate have been a valuable and promising member of their community in the Rev. Father Ryan, who died at his residence, Alexandra Terrace, Bedford road, Surrey, England, on 29th July. The Rev. Father Ryan was born in the county of Cork in the year 1840, and, having joined the Oblate Order when young, was sent in their College at Aunay, in France, where he completed his philosophical course and was ordained priest in 1866.

The meeting held on the Rev. James Lonergan, O.S.A., was held in the subey chapel of Fethard on the 12th of August, and Very Rev. Dean Cantwell presided. The Very Rev. Archdeacon Quirke and F. M. Cantwell officiated as chanters; Rev. J. Blandell, Professor; Rev. F. Purcell and Ferrally, deacons. The following priests attended at the Mass:—Fathers Murphy, Dohany, Prout, Healy, Ryan, Condon, Lynch, St. George, Farrell, Murphy, J. Carbray, Mackey, Sheridan, O'Brien, etc.

Rev. Christopher Canon Burke, the zealous and exemplary parish priest of Saggart, He breathed his last among his flock, having received all the last solemn rites. He was indeed a worthy minister of the Gospel, and his death is lamented by all the energies were exerted for the promotion of religion and the welfare of his fellow-creatures.

On Sunday, August 17, the excellent Bishop of Ossory, the Very Rev. Dean Hughes, provided a gratifying treat for his parishioners, as well as numerous people from the surrounding parishes, by having invited the Rev. Robert Kelly, S. J., Dublin, to preach on the Association of Prayer in Honor of the Sacred Heart and against the intemperance. The very reverend preacher also invited the band and choir of the Artane Industrial Schools, numbering over one hundred boys, to sing the Mass and benediction. High Mass commenced at 12 o'clock, the celebrant being the Rev. Dean Hughes; deacon, Rev. M. Brennan, and the subdeacon, Rev. N. Staples; the master of the ceremonies was a young student named Walsh. After the solemn rites of High Mass the Rev. Mr. Kelly ascended the pulpit and preached a most eloquent sermon.

The following changes and appointments among the priests of the Diocese of Down and Connor have been made by his Lordship the Most Rev. Dr. Dorrian: Rev. Laurence McKenna, Ballymartin, to Glenlough, county Down; Rev. James McArdle, Ramoan, to Ballycastle; Rev. Patrick McAuliffe, Portglenone, to Randalstown; Rev. Joseph Conner, Killeter, to Clough, county Down; Rev. John Coleman, Loughinisland, to Downpatrick; Rev. Bernard McKenna, Newtownards, to St. Patrick's, Belfast; Rev. John McKenna, Newtownards, to Killeter; Rev. Edward Watterson, Clough, to St. Peter's, Belfast; Rev. Palmer King, Irish College, to Newtownards; Rev. Hugh McGee, Maynooth College, to Newtownards; Rev. John Conway, Maynooth College, to Loughinisland; Rev. Thomas Mealey, Maynooth College, to Whitehouse; Rev. Father McAuley, late of Lurgan, to Ballycastle; Rev. Peter Gallagher, Downpatrick, and Rev. Thomas Tynan, Newtownhill, to missions in the Diocese of Meath. Rev. David Meyer, Whitehouse, has left for the United States.

The Forty-hours Adoration commenced on Lady Day, August 15, in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Limerick, very impressively solemnly and reverential spiendor. During each day there were crowds of attendants at each of several churches. The procession ceremonies were carried out by the ministers of the Diocese of Dublin and neighboring clergy with the utmost reverence and solemnity. Each day there was an admirable choice of well-trained amateur assistance, consisting of ladies and gentlemen from the various districts of the parish. The Rev. Dr. James Doyle, of St. Michan's, preached an eloquent and touching sermon on the occasion. The Most Rev. Dr. Cullen, Cardinal Archbishop carried the most Adorable Sacrament on Sunday during the procession, supported by the Lord Mayor, Sir Dr. Lyons, and the Archdeacon of Dublin, with a large body of clergy, through the spacious and beautifully planted grounds. The local Catholic magistrates—Messrs. Archbold, Carroll, Swanzy, Caulfield and D. O'Neill—bore the canopy. The sacred edifice and yard were filled with an immense congregation at every rank. At the close of the procession, his Eminence delivered a morning and paternal address to a devoted and assembled portion of his flock.

MINING SUMMARY.

AMADOR COUNTY.

The Sutter Creek Independent gives the following concerning the Keystone mine: "Never before has the work been more successfully pushed than at present. In the lower levels the rocks looks fine and immense bodies of quartz are in sight, while the very first and heavy, and the foot wall is exceedingly solid. The sulphurets are exceedingly rich and are being worked to advantage."

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

The San Andreas Citizen says: "The Mullins & Ryan gravel mine, situated on Central Hill, has been worked for over seven years, during which time a tunnel has been run 1,200 feet in search of the lead, but until lately without success. After spending all their means in what seemed to be a wild-good chase, the proprietors, Messrs. Mullins & Ryan, and the faithful workmen stopped work. Mr. Dyas bought one half of the claim some two or three months ago. Already had $50,000 been expended in searching for the lead, and the prospect was indeed gloomy. Notwithstanding this, after Mr. Dyas had made a careful survey of the ground, he came to the conclusion that the lead was there, and that he could do what others had failed to do—find it. Under Mr. Dyas' management the tunnel had not been driven over four feet when the lead was found, and gold was visible in the gravel on the rock. They had struck the famous blue lead, one of the richest rivers" of California, in which has been found some of the best pay claims in the State. There has been no claim struck in Calaveras for years which will in its machinations fill with hills. The claim is 800 feet in length, and the pay streak is 110 feet from rim to rim, with a thickness of seven feet independent of the crevices, which are abundant. The claim will undoubtedly be worked for years, adding much to the prosperity of our country."

NEVADA COUNTY.

The following is the latest intelligence is from the Transcript of September 7th: Lowell Hill is situated about eight miles northeast of Little York, and about seven miles from this city. It has a population of about two hundred, and the number of men employed is seventy-five or eighty. Mining is mostly done in the localities by drifting. The gold is mostly coarse, and occasionally some very large nuggets are found.

The Swamp Angel Company, whose claims are located on this hill, have very fine diggings, and for several of our last issues we have noticed the rich yield of their claim. Their last clean-up was $35, another week's work. Out of forty cubic yards. Tich they cleaned up, only three ounces was fine gold, the remainder being nuggets, ranging in value from $30 to $5. Hill & Co. commenced, having cleaned up $1,700 a short time since, are now running a wooden bed-rock tunnel, in order to get to the bottom of the rich pocket found in the center of the hill. Mackin & Co. struck a fine prospect just previous to the water falling them, and have since been working it in time in drifting and fitting up for winter.

PLUMAS COUNTY.

The following is from the Nevada Democrat: Recently at Newton Flat, the O'Neill brothers struck what is supposed to be a back channel in the bed of Spanish Creek, and found it to be extremely rich. In a short time they took out $1,000 in coarse and fine gold. The claim will doubtless prove to be one of the richest on the north side of the county.

The spacious new canal which the company at Devil's Elbow is constructing, for the purpose of bringing the water of Feather River to the mouth of the tunnel at Forbestown, is nearly completed. It is surprised at the amount of work which is being done.

SIERRA COUNTY.

The Downieville Messenger of the 6th has a notice of the East Fork Mining Company's claim, from which the following is taken:

Several hundred feet above the river the ledge has been tapped and considerably developed. In this working the ledge is as much as thirty feet wide, and rock taken from any portion of the ledge pays to work well. Quite a quantity of rock has been taken out and saved for the time when a mill shall be erected.

The Rocky Point ledge is situated about two and a half miles down from the mouth of East Fork. The ledge, where it has been tapped, shows about fifteen feet of as solid and fine looking a body of ore as one often sees, with well defined and smoth walls, both foot and hanging.

SAN JUAN COUNTY.

The World says that a gentleman of experience, who recently made a tour of the mines in mining region, expresses the opinion that the Owens will prove to be as valuable a mine as can be found in the Julian district.

Nevada.

The Silver State of September 4th says: The richest mine ever found in this country was discovered last week, by a man named Hall, on the north end of the Golden Age quill, in Central district. The discovery has stripped the ledge, which average about six feet in width and is well defined wherever sunk upon, for a distance of several hundred feet, and it continues regular in its course, north and south. Samples of the ore have been tested, and yield from one hundred to five dollars per pound. Ten tons. There is no wood nearer than twelve miles, but water can be found in ten or twelve feet by digging."

The Pooche Record, in its last summary, says: "The yield for several of our Mill mines has improved in quality, and the development taken out is increasing. A good deal of ore has been shipped also, and hundreds of tons now lie on the dumps waiting for shipment. Next to the Pooche mine, the Pooche-Pooche, in which about forty men are employed, has ceased temporarily, but it is rumored that the mine will not long lie idle."

Colorado.

The Denver News has the following items:

New placer diggings have been discovered in Buckskin Guich, Park county, that promises from twenty-five cents to one dollar per pan to bedrock.

A rich silver bearing district has recently been discovered in the vicinity of Washington Guich, and is known as Silver Gem. Supplies are taken in by the way of Cochetopa pass.

Arizona.

The Tucson Citizen gives the following from the Wallapai District: "Quite dull times prevail, but the mines look well. Some money is being dug with arastras, and some in shipping ore to San Francisco. All the miners are in good cheer. Furnace No. 2 is now in blast under the charge of Peter Hess, and was then down from San Francisco for the purpose of starting her."

The Arizona Miner of August 30th says: Joe is running arastras by horse power, and A little above Painter's wheel, C. T. Hoel is working rock that pays him over $20 per ton.

The satisfactory results obtained by Jackson & Co., in their five stamp mill, and by Goodwin & Mickinson in their arastras, from War Eagle ore, have stirred up some of the other owners of feet on that rich lode, and they have been out to the mine and made arrangements for sinking shafts and doing work enough to preserve their titles.

Catholicity in Hesse.

In Hesse the conflict between the Church and State continues. The new Protestant laws not dared as yet to raise their heads, knowing, as they must do if there be any of them, that they never would have the ghost of a chance in a fight with that eminent prelate, Mgr. Ketteler, the Bishop of Mayence. But still the enemies of the Church are always sure of having a numerical majority on their side in a country in which the Catholics are comparatively weak in numbers, being only twenty-seven per cent. in the population of the whole grand duchy, though quite fifty per cent. in the Rhenish province. Thus, while afraid to strike a direct blow at its stronghold, they have determined on attacking it by a trusting movements, and to this effect they have now raised their favorite battle cry of "non-sectarian education." An act has lately passed the lower house of the Legislature for removing all religious orders from the schools by virtue of which the "English ladies" and the brethren of the Christian Doctrine are henceforth to be prohibited from teaching. By hurrying this law through the second chamber, the "Liberals" incapable of stealing a march upon their opponents; but they have been woefully deceived. The Catholics of Rhineland have risen to a man to elude this little game, and show up its machinations for the benefit of the public in their true colors. On the 4th inst. a mass meeting was held at Mayence, which was large hall of the Catholic "Casino," was filled to overflowing with an enthusiastic audience, and a petition to the upper house was adopted by acclamation against this wanton attack on the time honored right of the clergy to manage the education of the Catholic youth." The appeal will doubtless be listened to by the Upper Chamber, where the Conservative element is not swamped by the followers of Hoffman—the Falk of Hesse—as it is in the lower house, and everything leads us to believe that the privileges of the Catholics will remain as they have been for ages.—London Universe, August 16.

The Church in Brazil.

There are indications of a struggle in Brazil which will have at least the good effect of lopping off many "rotten branches." The immediate cause of the conflict was the excommunication by the Archbishop and the Bishop of Pernambuco; and upon that the Government has raised the question of "the jurisdiction of Rome in a foreign State." A correspondence has been published, from the fact, speaks of "the partial Independence still claimed by the Brazilian Church"—a passage which requires elucidation. If the people are of the Catholic Church, in which there is no "Church of Brazil." The Bishop of Pernambuco did not require, and, therefore, did not ask, the "legal sanction" of the Brazilian Freemasons. Freemasons, no matter what may be the idea of the Council of the State, evidently denizens of Rome, and not of the land of Bismarck. The secret societies were strong enough to set up "partial Independence" in the streets, so that the interposition of the army was necessary to the reestablishment of order. The Revista Contemporanea tells us that should the Bishops persist in their present course, the Government will meet them by the introduction of a civil marriage." There will be less scandal in this world when all such "Catholics" take their proper name. The Bishop of Pernambuco has refused to obey the orders of the Government, and is being prosecuted by the President of that province.—Catholic Opinion, August 16.

Catholicity in Texas.

The conflict between the Church and State continues. The new Protestant laws not dared as yet to raise their heads, knowing, as they must do if there be any of them, that they never would have the ghost of a chance in a fight with that eminent prelate, Mgr. Ketteler, the Bishop of Mayence. But still the enemies of the Church are always sure of having a numerical majority on their side in a country in which the Catholics are comparatively weak in numbers, being only twenty-seven per cent. in the population of the whole grand duchy, though quite fifty per cent. in the Rhenish province. Thus, while afraid to strike a direct blow at its stronghold, they have determined on attacking it by a trusting movements, and to this effect they have now raised their favorite battle cry of "non-sectarian education." An act has lately passed the lower house of the Legislature for removing all religious orders from the schools by virtue of which the "English ladies" and the brethren of the Christian Doctrine are henceforth to be prohibited from teaching. By hurrying this law through the second chamber, the "Liberals" incapable of stealing a march upon their opponents; but they have been woefully deceived. The Catholics of Rhineland have risen to a man to elude this little game, and show up its machinations for the benefit of the public in their true colors. On the 4th inst. a mass meeting was held at Mayence, which was large hall of the Catholic "Casino," was filled to overflowing with an enthusiastic audience, and a petition to the upper house was adopted by acclamation against this wanton attack on the time honored right of the clergy to manage the education of the Catholic youth." The appeal will doubtless be listened to by the Upper Chamber, where the Conservative element is not swamped by the followers of Hoffman—the Falk of Hesse—as it is in the lower house, and everything leads us to believe that the privileges of the Catholics will remain as they have been for ages.—London Universe, August 16.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PACIFIC TEA COMPANY,

OUR SPECIALTIES

COFFEE TEAS & SPICES

OUR TEAS.

TEAS: THOU SOFT, THOU SOBER, SAGE and vegetable liquid . . . . thou female dragon-rancidity, smile-smoothing, heart-opening, mind-dilating material. This specialty forms the Industrial Cutlery Cluber, in a by gone day, and the truth as unerringly, soulingly and soothingly stated is realized by the experience of millions—for even the very best of wholesale dealers, who have not the time to devote to it, but to attend to their other avocations, the unbearable must be dispensed with. This being so, the guarantee we will supply at a reasonable price a Tea at once remarkable for its strength, fish, and delicacy of flavor, forming a daily one of vital interest, as the article so largely contributes to the sustaining and comfort of the race. The undersigned are convinced that they can answer the question satisfactorily by furnishing a trial sample to suit the taste of the most fastidious, and at prices within the reach of all.

The Teas at the Pacific Tea Company's Stores are selected by experienced tasters, and graded by numbers; each grade being without a flaw in it, so as to secure to Buyers, by simply asking for the same numbers and quality, an article of being supplied with the same delicacy, the difficulty of matching Teas being obviated.

In most establishments with a miscellaneous stock, and a general assortment of Groceries, perfect Teas cannot be kept in air-tight canisters, perfect Teas strictly so. These canisters have adjus able corners, and the Tea is preserved and replenished daily, for unless that taken out being as good as the first. Every Tea warranted to give satisfaction, or the money will be refund d. The facilities possessed by the establishment for securing Teas, enable us to undersell any other house in the city.

Your patronage is solicited, a view to their intrinsic worth and good drinking qualities rather than low prices.

JAPAN.

Uncolored—No. 1—Extra choice . . . . $1 25
" —No. 2—EXN Extra . . . . 1 00
" —No. 3—Fine . . . . 0 87½
" —No. 4—Very fine . . . . 0 75
" —No. 5—Very good . . . . 0 62½
" —No. 6—Good . . . . 0 50

CHINA—BLACK.

Pekoe Young Hyson—No. 1—Extra choice . . . . $1 25
English Breakfast—No. 2—Choice . . . . 1 00
" —No. 3—Choice . . . . 0 87½
" —No. 4—Fine . . . . 0 75
Oolong—No. 1—Extra choice . . . . 1 00
" —No. 2—Choice . . . . 0 87½
" —No. 3—Fine . . . . 0 75
" —No. 4—Very good . . . . 0 62½
" —No. 5—Good . . . . 0 50
" —No. 6—Medium . . . . 0 37½
" —No. 12—Basket Tea . . . . 0 50

CHINA—GREEN.

Gunpowder . . . . $1 00
Young Hyson—No. 1—Extra choice . . . . 1 00
Imperial XXX extra . . . . 1 00

There is a fund of 10 per cent. better at a reduction from above prices.

OUR SPICES.

We have on hand a full and carefully selected stock of SPICES, which for purity of quality and strength, we can confidently recommend. We are manufacturers and have for sale, in quantities to suit the trade, Cloves, Cassia, Pepper, Ginger, Mustard, etc., also, SUMAC, which, for making the sweet Sumac Lemonade, is unequaled for delicacy of flavor.

NOTICE.—We have just introduced our 5-lb. package of Spices, which we put up in Tin Cans, with 10 cents off each. We guarantee this Coffee to be the best 5-lb. package of Spices ever offered. Our numerous advertisements were not withdrawn whatever. It is to be understood that we are not to be undersold by any house in the city. Our 5-lb. Spice Boxes are the best and cheapest package for family use ever offered. Thankful for work for all the seven. Trusting for you to Use in Heaven.

Send for Samples and Price Lists.

MURPHY BROS.,
Proprietors Continental Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,
759 and 761 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
apr6 1yr

WHYTE & NICHOLL,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS,
N. W. corner J and Seventh Sts.,
SACRAMENTO.
A Large Stock of MOURNING GOODS always on hand. mh18-1

UNPARALLELED LIBERALITY!
THE MADONNA DI SAN SISTO
OR MADONNA SIXTINA,
FOR SEVENTEEN CENTS!

☞ This is the same picture that the "Catholic Guardian" offers as a most extraordinary premium to those subscribers who give it to a friend, and of which it gives the following florid description:

"Unparalled premium! One cover offered by any publisher, either in this country or in Europe, to any person who will procure a subscriber to his publication. A splendid engraving! not a cheap colored picture, but a perfect beautiful work of art and a perfect fac-simile of its original painting. The engraving is executed expressly for the "Catholic Guardian" by the celebrated engraver-piece—known as "The Madonna di San Sisto."

The great original picture is in the Royal Gallery Raphael for the Monastery of St. Sixtus, in the city of Piacenza, in the year 1519, and is taken from the original desolation, the Madonna di San Sisto."

I shall send the "Guardian" to the monthly by mailing the identical Engravings print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Persons in the interior who may desire it, must send in extra for postage.

Address, KENNY & CO.,
Corner Fifth and Market streets, San Francisco.
jy16

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.
Where buy offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS
ETC., ETC., OF THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
and
105 and 107 DAVIS STREET.

☞ If this Should Meet the Eye of Mr. THOMAS BURKETT, he resides at 67 Broadway street, San Francisco, he can hear of something to his advantage by calling on or addressing the undersigned. Formerly of Ireland. [aug20-3m]

EDWARD CASEY,
Merchant Tailor,
70 Fourth Street, near Mission,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXPERIENCE in the business, and a thorough knowledge of the various kinds of Cloths, Trimmings, Linings, etc., and of the manufacturers and haves for sale, in quantities to suit the trade, Cloves, Cassia, Pepper, Ginger, Mustard, etc., also, SUMAC, which, for making the sweet Sumac Lemonade, is unequaled for delicacy of flavor.

NOTICE.—We have just introduced our 5-lb. package of Spices, which we put up in Tin Cans, with 10 cents off each. We guarantee this Coffee to be the best 5-lb. package of Spices ever offered. Our numerous advertisements were not withdrawn whatever. It is to be understood that we are not to be undersold by any house in the city. Our 5-lb. Spice Boxes are the best and cheapest package for family use ever offered. Thankful for work for all the seven. Trusting for you to Use in Heaven.

Send for Samples and Price Lists.

MURPHY BROS.,
Proprietors Continental Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,
759 and 761 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
and

WHYTE & NICHOLL,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS,
N. W. corner J and Seventh Sts.,
SACRAMENTO.
A Large Stock of MOURNING GOODS always on hand. mh18-1

UNPARALLELED LIBERALITY!
THE MADONNA DI SAN SISTO
OR MADONNA SIXTINA,
FOR SEVENTEEN CENTS!

☞ This is the same picture that the "Catholic Guardian" offers as a most extraordinary premium to those subscribers who give it to a friend, and of which it gives the following florid description:

"Unparalled premium! One cover offered by any publisher, either in this country or in Europe, to any person who will procure a subscriber to his publication. A splendid engraving! not a cheap colored picture, but a perfect beautiful work of art and a perfect fac-simile of its original painting. The engraving is executed expressly for the "Catholic Guardian" by the celebrated engraver-piece—known as "The Madonna di San Sisto."

The great original picture is in the Royal Gallery Raphael for the Monastery of St. Sixtus, in the city of Piacenza, in the year 1519, and is taken from the original desolation, the Madonna di San Sisto."

I shall send the "Guardian" to the monthly by mailing the identical Engravings print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Persons in the interior who may desire it, must send in extra for postage.

Address, KENNY & CO.,
Corner Fifth and Market streets, San Francisco.
jy16

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.
Where buy offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS
ETC., ETC., OF THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET,
and
105 and 107 DAVIS STREET.

☞ If this Should Meet the Eye of Mr. THOMAS BURKETT, he resides at 67 Broadway street, San Francisco, he can hear of something to his advantage by calling on or addressing the undersigned. Formerly of Ireland. [aug20-3m]

STOCKTON ADVERTISEMENTS

IN BUSINESS AGAIN.

New Grocery and Wine Store.

GEORGE NATT INFORMS HIM OLD FRIENDS and the public that he has resumed his business at the old stand, Weber Avenue, opposite the Court House, STOCKTON.

He opens with an entire new stock of GROCERIES, WINES and PROVISIONS, of the best quality, and has hand a large supply of SANTA CRUZ LIME.

He solicits a share of public patronage, and will endeavor to merit the same. Goods delivered free. jy15 GEORGE NATT.

HOW TO LIVE LONG!

DO UNTO OTHERS AS YOU WOULD HAVE them do unto you. Never worry about anything you can't help; keep your head cool, your feet warm, your bowels open, and buy your Clothing, Hats, Trunks and all kinds of Gents' Furnishing Goods at the Palace Clothing Store,

341 Main street, opposite the City Hall,
STOCKTON.
And you will live long and be happy.
aug6 KULMAN & SON.

STAIRING & SIEVERS,
RETAIL BUTCHERS,
Hunter street, between Channel and Rivers' Levee, STOCKTON.
☞ The best quality of Fresh Meats always on hand. Meats delivered to any part of the city.
jy15

GRAY & HICKMAN,
STOCKTON,
Importers and Dealers in Dry Goods,
Will keep at all times the best of Goods on hand. Country people will always find it to their benefit to call at this House.

YOSEMITE HOTEL,
STOCKTON.
The only great resort for those traveling on the Southern Route, Big Trees, Yosemite Valley, etc.
Connected with the Hotel is one of the finest and best conducted Bars in the State, stocked and attended by Jack Dougherty, and the Proprietor himself.
Last every traveler call. jy15 GALGIANI'S MARKET,
(Successor to Zapp),
Cor. st. Charles and Weber Ave. and Main st.
STOCKTON.
Buy at GALGIANI'S Vegetable and Fish Market.
Leave or. three doors west of El Dorado st.

CALIFORNIA
BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETY
IN BANKRUPTCY.
NOTICE OF FINAL DIVIDEND.
UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF OUR ACT of Incorporation, the California Building and Loan Society, bankrupt, and by virtue of the order of the Board of Directors and Trustees, we hereby declare a final dividend of ten per cent. of the assets of said Society, and the SIXTH AND FINAL INSTALMENT OF TEN PER CENT. of the amount of the stock of said Society, and that the same will be payable on and after the 1st day of October, 1873, at the office of the undersigned, in the city of San Francisco, to all creditors whose claims have been proved and allowed by the Trustees of said Society.
And Trustees, August 29, 1873.
JAMES B. KELLY,
FREDERICK ROBINS,
Trustees in Bankruptcy of said Society.
GALLAGHER & PIERCE, Attorneys.
Depositors unable to be present on the above mentioned day can receive their dividends at the office of the Trustees at the bank.

20 CENTS A YARD FOR EVERY DOLLAR
If you buy your School Books, Copy Books, Lead Pencils, Pocket Books and Stationery, Toilet Soaps and Razor Strops, Purses, Knives, Scissors, Combs, Hair and Tooth Brushes and Tooth Powders, Jewelry, Watches, Newspapers, Inks, Pens, Magazines, etc., from

F. Geisen,
666 Third street.....Between Bryant and Brannan
BRANCH STORE,
106 Second Street, corner of Howard

THE MONITOR:
The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
LYONS & BARRY, Publishers,
DENIS LYONS, JOHN T. BARRY.
RICHARD O'SULLIVAN, EDITOR
DENIS LYONS, BUSINESS MANAGER.
OFFICE—534 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Branch 7, Lyons' Specials.)
☞ All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):
Served by Carriers, per week . . . . 10c
Mail subscribers, per year . . . . $ 4 00
" " six months . . . . 2 00
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year . . . . 7 00
" " " Hardy's Lady's Book . . . . 4 00
" " " Demorest's Fashion Magazine . . . . 4 00
" " " Peterson's Ladies Magazine . . . . 3 00

ADVERTISING RATES:
1 square, 1 time . . . . $1 50 | 1 square, 6 months . . . . $10 50
" 1 month . . . . 3 00 | " 9 months . . . . 12 00
" 3 months . . . . 7 00 | " 12 months . . . . 15 00
" 6 months . . . . 10 00 | 1 page . . . . 25 00
☞ The above rates will be strictly adhered to.

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

A. WALDTEUFEL,
287 MUSIC HALL,
FIRST STREET.....SAN JOSE
Importer, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in CATHOLIC BOOKS
PICTURES AND ORNAMENTS,
Miscellaneous Books and Stationery.
AGENT FOR
STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS,
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS,
HAYNES BROS. PIANOS;
HERBERT CELLEY ORGANS;
MASON & HAMLIN'S ORGANS.
Always on hand a large assortment of the above justly celebrated Instruments.
☞ Liberal discount to the Rev. Clergy and Catholic Schools. Orders promptly attended to. my25-1y

VOL. XVI. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1873. NO. 52.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

A rich man, who had no children, proposed to his neighbor, who had seven, to take one of them, and promised, if the parents would consent, that he would give them property enough to make themselves and the other six children comfortable for life.

Which shall it be? Which shall it be?
I looked at John and I looked at Joe,
And when I found that I must speak,
My voice was husky, I'm sure, and weak;
"Tell me again what Robert said:"
And then I listened with bowed head.
"This is his letter:"

I will give
A home and land while I have a shilling or life to live,
To one child free from the blight of debt,
Who'll promise to provide for my sister."
I leaned at my head by the candle's glare,
I thought of all he had borne
Of poverty and work and care,
Which I, though willing, could not share;
I thought of never seeing a home so free,
And all I could answer was, "Robert!"

"Come, John," and I,
"We'll clear the table, and wash the dishes by And by."
So, willing hand in hand,
Dear John and I obeyed, and we first heard:
First to the cradle lightly stepped,
Where Lillie, the baby, slept,
Softly the father stooped to lay
His rough hand down in a loving way,
When dream o' whisper made her stir,
And kindly he said, "Not her."

We stepped beside the trundle bed,
And one hung a jacket and one a cap,
Almost the boyish faces there,
In sleep so beautiful and fair;
I saw on Jamie's rough red cheek
A tear-stain undried that would speak
Of his little sorrow, and he said,
"He's but a baby, too," said I,
And kissed him as we covered by.
Pain pierced Robert's anguished face
Still to be cast upon the world!
"Not for a thousand crowns, not him."
He whispered, while his eyes grew dim
With pitying love.

Four lads I had fed and clothed and taught
Sisters, ready to fly the nest,
Could he be spared? Nay, He who gave Bade us to nurture and to save
(So I felt rising within my breast)
Pattern enough for all the rest.
"And so," said John, "I would not dare
To take him from the motherless pair."

Then slyly he stole up above,
And knelt by Mary, child of Love;
Her dimpled hands were folded fast
As though in prayer she had striven
To lisp the blessing she had learned
Across her mother's knee that day,
And whose low bend, "May love, not thou,
Thy white lot mar," implored now.

Pretty and truthful, good and glad—
So like a bird was the child—
I suspect, will not, let him go
Without a struggle to keep her own.
We could not give one child away
And keep the others, bright as they;
Unless we wished to break the ties
Which bind us all in sympathies,
Which day by day more closely twine
Around our hearts, and which combine
To keep us pure and true and right,
Unless we chose to forfeit quite
Our claim to heaven.

The article then proceeds to describe what the Catholic societies, of which it treats, are, as follows:

Catholic societies are not bands of conspirators; they do not meet in secret places; they are not revolutionists; they do not encourage violence or bloodshed; they do not plot against the lives of princes; they are not in favor of the assassination of tyrants; they do not believe that they must not be loyal; they must not violate the laws of the country in which they live; they must not take a work without first being satisfied of its lawfulness; they must not read books which the Church condemns; they must avoid secret oaths; they must not violate the seal of confession; they must not commit mortal sin; they must not defraud their employers; they must not commit adultery; they must not steal; they must not bear false witness against their neighbor; they must not covet their neighbor's goods; they must not kill; they must not covet their neighbor's wife; they must not worship false gods; they must not take the name of God in vain; they must keep holy the Sabbath day; they must honor their father and mother; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the State; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the Church; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the family; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the school; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the workshop; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the factory; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the mine; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the ship; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the army; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the navy; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the militia; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the police; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the fire department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the health department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the street department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the water department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the gas department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the electric department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the telegraph department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the telephone department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the express department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the railroad department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the steamboat department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the ferry department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the omnibus department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the cab department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the hack department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the coach department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the carriage department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the wagon department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the cart department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the dray department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the truck department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the boat department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the canal department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the river department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the lake department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the ocean department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the sea department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the port department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the harbor department; they must not be disobedient to the lawful authority of the bay

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

St. Dominic's church, South Washington, is expected to be ready for divine service on Christmas Day. Its cost is $250,000.

The Pope has received through the Harvard General of the Franciscans, in Rome, a large offering of gold from Peru, and an album full of Peruvian signatures.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. Roderick Geraghty, Milltown, county Galway, Ireland, which took place on 5th August, at his residence in Milltown. The deceased clergyman's estimable qualities had secured to him the esteemment of many by whom he is regretted.

Rev. Urban Bayer, of the Order of Saint Benedict, aged 81 years, died at the Benedictine Monastery in Atchison, Kansas, on the 5th August. He expired in the arms of Rev. Timothy M. Lather, fortified by all the rites of the Church. Father Bayer was a native of Neuhausen, Wurtemburg.

On Friday, August 15th, the ceremony of inaugurating the great altar in the Church of the Assumption, Wexford, took place. The alter is a most beautiful piece of work, served by Messrs. Early of Dublin. It is the gift of the women belonging to the Confraternity of the Holy Family, and cost upwards of $500.

At a meeting recently held in Kenmare, county Kerry, Ireland, it was resolved that a testimonial should be presented to Miss Chisholm (the "Sister of Kenmare"), as evidence of recognition of her services to literature and religion; and also for the purpose of raising funds for the loss of more than $1,500 worth of her books in the great fire at Boston. Many subscriptions were announced.

A young lady named Agnes Schmidt, daughter of a merchant in merchant of Duisburg, Pa., now absent with his wife in Europe, has entered the Catholic faith, and has received into the Catholic Church in Paris, the Cathedral amidst imposing ceremonies. The convert was under the instruction of Father Grace, and the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Beaudoin.

The Rev. B. Banigan, of Bondo ran, died on the 30th of July, at Bondo, Illinois, after a short illness. He was a native of the parish of Carrick-macross, and was born about the year 1824. His early life was devoted to preparation for the ministry. He read for college at St. MacKarian's, Monaghan, and after completing his course of philosophy, he entered the Irish College at Paris, where he studied with success for the degree of Doctor of Scripture and theology. After his ordination he was appointed curate of Bundoran, in the county of Donegal.

The Oblates of Mary Immaculate have lost a valuable and promising member of their community in the Rev. Father Egan, who died at his residence, Alexandra Terrace, Bedford road, North Ferry, England, on 30th July. The Rev. Father Egan was born in the county of Cork in the year 1819, and, having joined the Oblate Order when young, was sent to their College at Aston, in France, where he successfully studied for theological science and was ordained priest in 1850.

The month's mind for the Rev. James Lonergan, Oakley, was held in the parish school of Pethard on the 12th of August, the Very Rev. Dean Power officiating. The Very Rev. Archdeacon Quirke and P. W. Cantwell officiated as deacons; Rev. F. Power, Ballyneale, was master of ceremonies; Rev. Father Purcell, deacon. The following priests attended: P. Hinksy, P.P., Fathom Murphy, Doherty, Proop, Hanly, Ryan, Condon, Lynch, St. George, Farrell, Murphy, J. Cantwell, Meagher, Sheridan, O'Brien, etc.

Rev. Christopher Cuaus Burke, the zealous and exemplary parish priest of Seggert. His brushed his last among his flock, who he had so long and so faithfully labored, and having published a name that will long be cherished with affectionate remembrance. He was, indeed, a worthy minister of the Gospel, and of saving the portion of the Lord's vineyard over which he was placed by the providence of God.

Rev. Edward Kelly, S. J., Dublin, to preside on the Association of Prayer in Honor of the Sacred Heart, and Agony, to appoint missionaries. The very reverend gentleman has also issued the brief and daily of the Arlone Industrial Schools, numbering over one hundred boys, to sing the Mass and Benediction. High Mass commenced at 12 o'clock, the celebrant being the Rev. Joseph Byrne; deacon, Rev. Jas. Brennan, and the subdeacon, Rev. P. Stapleton. The singer of the occasion was a young student from Clonliffe, Mr. Carr the sermon of High Mass the Rev. Mr. Kelly ascended the pulpit and preached a most eloquent discourse.

The following changes and appointments among the priests of the Diocese of Down and Connor are announced: Rev. Hugh Mc-Ahlip the latest Rev. Dr. Dorrian: Rev. Lawrence Duffy, Ballymena, to Clough, county Down; Rev. James McArdle, Ahoghill, to Ballycastle; Rev. Patrick McAuley, Ballycastle, to Ahoghill; Rev. Joseph Connor, Kilelut, to Clough, county Down; Rev. John Canavan, Loughinisland, to Ballycastle; Rev. Patrick Mc-Kenna, Ballycastle, to St. Patrick's, Belfast; Rev. Hugh Mc-Keveney, Newtownards, to Kilclief; Rev. Edward Watterson, Clough, to St. Peter's, Bank Place, Belfast; Rev. Hugh Mc-Kenna, St. Patrick's, Belfast, to Newtownards; Rev. Patrick Mc-Ardle, Maynooth College, to Newtownards; Rev. John Conway, Maynooth College, to Ahoghill; Rev. Michael Mc-Donnell, Maynooth College, to Ballycastle; Rev. Patrick Mc-Cartan, Maynooth College, to Warrenpoint; Rev. Father Fox, Warrenpoint, to Kilcoo; Rev. Father Gallagher, Downpatrick, and Rev. Thomas Tyr e, Downshill, to succeed Father Gallagher. Rev. David Morgan, Whitehouse, has left for the United States.

The Forty-hours A.C. ration commenced on Lady Day, August 15, in the Church of the Visitation, Dublin, and was brought to a most solemnly and reverential splendor. During each day there were crowds of devout worshippers, and when at the close of the solemn ceremonies were carried out by the clergy of some of the Dublin and neighborhood churches. Each day there was an admirable choice of well-selected music, and the sermons, consisting of ladies and gentlemen from the different districts of the parish. The Rev. James Doyle, of St. Nicholas's, preached an eloquent and touching sermon on the opening of the holy exercises. The Cardinal Archbishop presided the most Adorable Sacrament on Sunday during the procession which took place through the West Side of Dr. Lynch, and the Archbishop of Dublin, with a large body of priests, through the prominent and thickly planted streets. The local Catholic magistrates—Messrs. Archbold, Darrell, Savage, Caulfield and Dr. O'Neill—took the canopy. The several addies and yard were filled with an immense concourse of every rank. At the close of the procession, his Eminence delivered a moving and paternal address to a crowded and delighted portion of his flock.

MINING SUMMARY.

AMADOR COUNTY.

The Sutter Creek Independent gives the following concerning the Keystone mine: "Never before has the work been more successfully pushed than at present. In the tower levels the rocks look fine and indicate by richness. The hanging walls are very firm and heavy, and the foot walls are splendid. The sulphurets are exceedingly rich and are being worked to advantage."

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

The San Andreas Citizen says: "The Mullins & Ryan gravel claim, situated on Central Hill, has been worked for over seven years, during which time a tunnel has been run 1,200 feet in search of the lead, but until lately without success. After spending all their money in what seemed to be a wild-goose chase, the proprietors, Messrs. Mullins & Ryan, and the Harkins brothers, stepped work. Mr. Dyas bought one half of the claim some two or three months ago. Already had $50,000 been expended in searching for the lead, and the prospect was indeed gloomy. Notwithstanding this, after Mr. Dyas had made a careful survey of the ground, he came to the conclusion that the lead was there, and that he could do what others had failed to do—find it. Under Mr. Dyas' management the tunnel had not been driven over four feet when the lead was found, and gold was visible in the gravel on all sides. They had struck the famous blue lead, one of the "dead rivers" of California, in which has been found some of the best pay dirt mined in the State. There has been no claim struck in Calaveras for years which promises richness like this. The claim is 600 feet in length, and the pay streak is 100 feet from rim to rim. There is no need nor of seven feet independent of the crevices, which are abundant. The claim will undoubtedly pay well, and will make much to the prosperity of our county."

NEVADA COUNTY.

The following local gold mining intelligence is from the Transcript of September 7th: Lowell Hill is situated about eight miles northeast of Lake Valley by direct road, and nine miles from this city. It has a population of about two hundred, and the number of men employed is seventy-five or eighty. Mining is mostly done in this locality by drifting. The gold is mostly coarse, and occasionally some very large nuggets are found.

The Swamp Angel Company, whose claims are located on the hill, have very flattering prospects. Every day's run. A few days since, while drifting, they took out a specimen worth $53, another worth $30. Out of forty ounces which they cleaned up, only three ounces was fine gold, the remainder being nuggets, ranging in value from $30 to $5. Hill & Co. come next, having cleaned up $1,700 a short time since, are now running another bed-rock tunnel, in order to get to the bottom of the rich paying channel in the center of the hill. Mackin & Co. struck a fine prospect just previous to the water falling them, and have since been working at this time in drifting and fluming up for winter.

PLUMAS COUNTY.

The following item is from the National: Recently a Mr. Newman Fluke and O'Neill brothers struck what is supposed to be a back channel to the old Spanish Flat lead, and found it to be extremely rich. In a short time they washed out $24 in hasty coyote pans. The claim is about two miles from and one of the richest on the north side of the valley.

The copperas new canal which the company at Devil's Elbow is constructing, for the purpose of taking the water of Rock Creek through the mountain, a distance of about one mile, to the mouth of the tunnel, is progressing finely. The tunnel is now in about 1,200 feet, and will be completed in about two months. The amount of work which is being done.

SIERRA COUNTY.

The Downieville Messenger of the 6th has a notice of the East Fork Mining Company's claim, from which the following is taken:

Several hundred feet above the river the ledge has been tapped and considerably developed. In this working the ledge is as much as thirty feet wide, and rock taken from any portion of the ledge pays well. Quite a quantity of rock has been taken out and saved for the time when the mill shall be erected.

The Rocky Point ledge is situated about two and a half miles above town on the Mad Fork. The ledge, where it has been tapped, shows about fifteen feet of se solid rock, and has been traced for some miles each way, with well defined and smooth walls, both foot and hanging.

SAN JOSE COUNTY.

The World says that a gentleman of experience, who recently made a tour of the mining region, expressed the opinion that the Ovens will prove to be as valuable a mine as can be found in the Julian district.

NEVADA.

The Silver State of September 6th says: "The richest mine ever found in this country was discovered last week, by a man named Bowers, about five miles from the Golden Age mill, in Central district. The discoverer has stripped the ledge, which is about eighteen inches in width and well defined wherever sunk upon, for a distance of several hundred feet, and it continues regular in its course, north and south. Samples of the ore have been tested, and pronounce in richness with the famous ledge of $1,000 per ton. There is no wood nearer than twenty miles, but coal can be found within a few miles of the ledge by digging."

The Prince Record, in its last summary, says: "Who are in the employ of coal companies has improved in quality, and the amount taken out is increasing. A great deal of timber is being cut for the coal yard, loads of tons now lie on the dumps waiting for shipment. Several new veins of coal, Piedmont, in which shoots forty more are acquired, has caused temporarily; but it is rumored that the mine will not long be idle."

COLORADO.

The Denver News has the following items:

Very placer diggings have been discovered in Buckskin Gulch, Park county, the reports from twenty-five cents to one dollar per pan on the surface.

A rich silver bearing district has recently been discovered in the vicinity of Montgomery Gulch, about fifteen miles from Silver Cliff. Supplies are taken in by the way of Cochetopa pass.

ARIZONA.

The Tucson Citizen gives the following from the Walapai District: "Quite dull times prevail, but the mines look well. Every day something is being made with arastras, and some is shipping ore to San Francisco. All the miners are in good cheer. Parsons, Hall & Co. have been working for other parties, and was then down from San Francisco for powers of attorney.

The Arizona Miner of August 30th says: ore is running arastras by horse power, and A little above Fountain wheel, C. T. Bell is working rock that pays him over $50 per ton.

The satisfactory results obtained by Jochim & Co., in their five stamp mill, and by Goodwin & McKinnon in their arastras, from We Eagle ore, have stirred up some of the other owners of that rich lode, and they have been out to the mine and made arrangements for sinking shafts and doing work enough to preserve their title.

Catholicity in Reno.

In Reno the conflict between the Church and State continues. The New Testamentite have not dared as yet to raise their heads, knowing, as they must do if there be any of them, that they never would have the ghost of a chance in a fight with that eminent prelate, Mgr. Kaiseler, the Bishop of Meyonia. But still the enemies of the Church are always sure of having a numerical majority on their side in a country in which the Catholics are comparatively weak in numbers, being only twenty-seven per cent. in the population of the whole grand duchy, though quite fifty per cent. in the Rhenish province. Thus, while afraid to strike a direct blow at its stronghold, they have determined on attacking it by a turning movement, and to this effect they have now raised their favorite battle cry of "common-sectarian education." An act has lately passed the lower house of the Legislature for removing all religious orders from the schools by virtue of which the "English ladies" and the brethren of the Christian Doctrine are henceforth to be prohibited from teaching. By hurrying this law through the second chamber, the "Liberals" thought of stealing a march upon their opponents; but they have been woefully deceived. The Catholics of Rhineland have risen to a man to elude this little game, and show up the machinations of Bismarck's admirers in their time colors. On the 4th inst. a mass meeting was held at Meyence, when a large hall of the name "Catholic Casino" filled to overflowing with an enthusiastic audience, and a petition was signed in favor of the Catholic youth." This appeal will doubtless be listened to by the Grand Ducal Court, the Conservative element is not swamped by the followers of Hoffman—the Falk of Hesse—as it is in the lower house, and everything leads us to believe that the privileges of the Catholics will remain undisturbed in the end.—London Universe, August 16.

The Church in Brazil.

There are indications of a struggle in Brazil which will have at least the good effect of lopping off many "rotten branches." The immediate cause of the conflict was the excommunication of two Freemasons by the Bishop of Pernambuco; and upon that the Government has raised the question of "the jurisdiction of Rome in a foreign State." A contemporary, in commenting upon the affair, speaks of "the papal ideas and doctrines still claimed by the Brazilian Church"—a passage which reveals the ignorance of people are of the Catholic Church, in which there is no "Brazilian element." The Bishop of Pernambuco did not require, therefore, did not ask, the "legal exequatur" of the State to excommunicate Freemasons, no matter what may be the idea of the Council of the State, evidently desirous of acting a little after the fashion of Bismarck. The secret societies were strong enough to get up "popular tumults" in the streets, so that the independence of the Church was necessary to the reestablishment of order. The Brazil and Inter Plata Mail tells us that should the Bishops persist in their present course, it is thought the Emperor will step in by the introduction of a civil marriage." There will be less scandal in the world when all such "Catholics" take their proper name. The Bishop of Pernambuco has refused to obey the orders of the Government, and is being prosecuted by the Council of State, whose decision is awaited with the most lively interest.

Catholicity in Reno.

In Reno the conflict between the Church and State continues. The New Testamentite have not dared as yet to raise their heads, knowing, as they must do if there be any of them, that they never would have the ghost of a chance in a fight with that eminent prelate, Mgr. Kaiseler, the Bishop of Meyonia. But still the enemies of the Church are always sure of having a numerical majority on their side in a country in which the Catholics are comparatively weak in numbers, being only twenty-seven per cent. in the population of the whole grand duchy, though quite fifty per cent. in the Rhenish province. Thus, while afraid to strike a direct blow at its stronghold, they have determined on attacking it by a turning movement, and to this effect they have now raised their favorite battle cry of "common-sectarian education." An act has lately passed the lower house of the Legislature for removing all religious orders from the schools by virtue of which the "English ladies" and the brethren of the Christian Doctrine are henceforth to be prohibited from teaching. By hurrying this law through the second chamber, the "Liberals" thought of stealing a march upon their opponents; but they have been woefully deceived. The Catholics of Rhineland have risen to a man to elude this little game, and show up the machinations of Bismarck's admirers in their time colors. On the 4th inst. a mass meeting was held at Meyence, when a large hall of the name "Catholic Casino" filled to overflowing with an enthusiastic audience, and a petition was signed in favor of the Catholic youth." This appeal will doubtless be listened to by the Grand Ducal Court, the Conservative element is not swamped by the followers of Hoffman—the Falk of Hesse—as it is in the lower house, and everything leads us to believe that the privileges of the Catholics will remain undisturbed in the end.—London Universe, August 16.

The Church in Brazil.

There are indications of a struggle in Brazil which will have at least the good effect of lopping off many "rotten branches." The immediate cause of the conflict was the excommunication of two Freemasons by the Bishop of Pernambuco; and upon that the Government has raised the question of "the jurisdiction of Rome in a foreign State." A contemporary, in commenting upon the affair, speaks of "the papal ideas and doctrines still claimed by the Brazilian Church"—a passage which reveals the ignorance of people are of the Catholic Church, in which there is no "Brazilian element." The Bishop of Pernambuco did not require, therefore, did not ask, the "legal exequatur" of the State to excommunicate Freemasons, no matter what may be the idea of the Council of the State, evidently desirous of acting a little after the fashion of Bismarck. The secret societies were strong enough to get up "popular tumults" in the streets, so that the independence of the Church was necessary to the reestablishment of order. The Brazil and Inter Plata Mail tells us that should the Bishops persist in their present course, it is thought the Emperor will step in by the introduction of a civil marriage." There will be less scandal in the world when all such "Catholics" take their proper name. The Bishop of Pernambuco has refused to obey the orders of the Government, and is being prosecuted by the Council of State, whose decision is awaited with the most lively interest.

Undeveloped Vigor.

The feeble and debilitated usually fancy they are in a more hopeless condition than they really are. The resources of nature are not easily exhausted. Even when strength and appetite fail, when the system is nearly and insensibly, the considerate public, the nerves tremulous, the body attenuated, and the mind depressed, there is generally a reserve of latent power behind such palpable evidences of weakness. Various modes of treatment are re orted to by physicians in the hope of developing and rendering available this store of sleeping vitality; but the correct, and indeed the only thoroughly safe and reliable means of awakening the dormant energies of the system is a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Electricity, shower baths, the fresh breath, sea bathing, etc., may be well enough in their way, as auxiliaries, but they do not reach the source of the evil. All physical debility proceeds either from a derangement of the functions of the assimilating, secretive and vital organs, or from a sluggish constitution. In either case, and also in cases where both causes exist, the Bitters will certainly produce an immediate and salutary change in the condition of the patient, and eventually effect a complete cure. Point of the fangerous alkaloids, too often administered as tonics, can be taken with that deleterious under such circumstances, and to give necessary is positively criminal. The Bitters are entirely free from mineral poisons, and may be safely administered to an invalid apparently a mere shadow, a mere breath of mind, a gradual restore of strength, an increase of flesh, and a healthier complexion. Meantime, however, the constitution, if inert and feeble, will be toned up, and the digestive and other vitals elements of impurities contained in the Bitters.

It is now a settled matter that wheat will continue to bring good prices until next season. There is a short crop in most portions of Europe.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, } Friday, September 12, 1873. }

FLOUR—Quotations show an advance since our last report. We quote—Extra at $6 75@7 25, and superfine at $5 50@6 50 per bbl.

WHEAT—The market has been quite active at advanced rates, since our last report. At the close the market is firm at $1 50@1 56 per ctl.

BARLEY—The demand has been very active at advanced rates. We quote the range at $1 00@1 45 @ 100 lbs.

OATS—Have been in good demand, at improved rates, during the week. We quote—Surprise at $1 75@1 90 @ 100 lbs.

CORN—The receipts have been free during the past week, and a fair demand. Quotable at the close at $1@1 10 for ordinary to choice yellow.

RYE—Is in moderate demand at $1 75@2 00 lbs.

BEANS—The market shows a decline, and the following are the quotations: Bayos, $3 50@3 75; Butter, $4 50@4 75; Pinks, $4 50; Flat Red, $4 50; small White, $4 50 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free, with a fair demand. We quote at the close at 75c@$1 00 @ 100 lbs. sweet, $1 25@1 50 lb.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25 @ 100 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $20 @ ton from mills.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $1 25@1 37½ @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $18 @ ton from mill.

HAY—Quotable at $18@20 @ ton, according to quality.

HIDES—We quote California dry, 19@21c, and Salted, 14@15c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6@6½c @ lb.

WOOL—We quote Fall Clip: 1st quality, medium grades, 16@18; good to choice qualities, 20@ 23c @ lb.

CHINA—GREEN.

| | |
|---|---|
| Flowery Pekoe—No. 1 | Extra choice | 31 |
| Scented Pekoe— | " | 28 |
| " | No. 2 Choice | 25 |
| " | No. 1 Extra fine | 23 |
| Oolong—No. 1 | Extra choice | 31 |
| " | No. 2 | 28 |
| " | No. 1 Extra | 25 |
| " | No. 2 Good | 23 |
| " | No. 1 | 20 |
| " | No. 2 | 18 |
| " | No. 1 Fair | 16 |
| " | No. 2 | 14 |
| " | No. 1 Basest Tea | 12 |

CHINA—GREEN.

| | |
|---|---|
| Gunpowder | $1 00 |
| Young Hyson | 1 00 |
| Imperial EXT Extra | 1 00 |

Three, 5 and 10-pound boxes at a reduction from above prices.

OUR SPICES.

Are all ground and put up by machinery entirely free from dust and dirt. Every variety of quality and strength is carefully selected, and the Cassia, Cloves, Nutmegs and Mace are fresh and pure, in quantities to suit purchasers, and are warranted to be unadulterated with anything foreign to the spice. Also, ARROWROOT, which, for making rich sweet puddings, is unsurpassed.

NOTICE.—We have just introduced our L.B. packet Our PURE MALTZ BREWT JAVA COFFEE, at 12½ cents per can. It is guaranteed the Coffee to be perfectly pure, entirely free from any admixture of Chicory, Peas, Beans, or anything else, and to be the same Coffee we have been selling for the last two years. Orders from the country will be made on our above specialties where orders from Clubs throughout the country are received.

Orders, by mail or through our agents, receive prompt attention, and goods will be put up in any size packages desired, and delivered free of charge to any part of the city. Send for samples and Price List.

MURPHY BROS.,
Proprietors Confidential Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,
759 and 761 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WHYTE & BICHOLL,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS,
N. W. corner J and Seventh Sts.,
SACRAMENTO.
A Large Stock of MOURNING GOODS always on hand. mch1-f

UNPARALLELED LIBERALITY!
THE MADONNA DI SAN SISTO
(OR MADONNA SIXTINA),
FOR SEVENTEEN CENTS!

☞ The same picture that the "Catholic (cardinal" offers as a most extraordinary premium to those subscribers who give $3 in advance, and of which it gives the following description:

"Unparalleled premium! One copier colored by any publisher, and worthy to be placed in any family, the celebrated picture, 'The Madonna of the Chair,' (or Madonna di San Sisto), one of the most magnificent productions of art and as a work of art is worth many times the price of the whole publication. Size of the picture, 22 by 28 inches. Remember—none but new subscribers to the Illustrated Catholic Family Almanac are entitled to the Madonna di San Sisto."

Those who subscribe for the Almanac will be getting the identical lithographic print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Those who subscribe for the Almanac will be getting the identical lithographic print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Persons in the interior who may desire it, must send a cents additional for postage.

KENNY & CO.
Corner Fifth and Market streets, San Francisco.
jy16-tf

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
WHO HAVE THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
121, 123 and 125 FRONT STREET,
and 116 PINE STREET.

EDWARD CASEY,
Merchant Tailor,
19 Fourth Street, near Mission,
SAN FRANCISCO.

HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXPERIENCE in the business, I am prepared to do all clothing, and a thorough knowledge of the latest modes enables me to guarantee perfect fit and style from the Catholic clergyman, gentleman that I may favor with their patronage. Every article of mine made to order in the easiest manner. All garments warranted to give satisfaction. Cash payment of goods and not patterns. Give me a call. ly6

Teacher.

A AMERICAN GENTLEMAN OF EDUCATION and experience in teaching desires a position as Teacher in a Catholic family. Address, for one week, Box 1, MONITOR Office. sep6-1w

☞ If this Should Meet the Eye of Mr. Thomas Reilly, a native of Ballyhaise, county Cavan, Ireland, he can receive information of great importance to himself by addressing or calling on the undersigned, 1 Broadway street, San Francisco, he can receive information of great importance to himself by addressing or calling on the undersigned Kinkora, Truscott. sep6

MISCELLANEOUS.

PACIFIC TEA COMPANY.

OUR TEAS.

"TEA: THOU SOFT, THOU SOBER, SAGE and venerable liquid . . . thou female tongue-running, smile-smoothing, heart-opening, eye-sipping nectar." This quadruplicated the inimitable Cowley Cibber, by a hy gone day, and the truth is unchanging, nothing and nothing's added to it. Verified by the experience of millions—for even the very first cup of tea, in 1666, "Cowley" was a tea drinker, but not intoxicated—although other contemporary topers were—and the effect was the same. This being so, the question who will supply at a reasonable price a Tea as near remarkable for its strength, richness and delicacy of flavor, as possible, is one of material interest, as the article so largely contributes to the enlivening and comfort of the race. The undersigned are convinced that they can answer the question satisfactorily by furnishing as well as with all into the taste of its most fastidious, and at prices within the reach of all.

The Teas in this establishment are assorted by experienced tasters, mixed and graded by members' each grade being subject to a final test by Retail Grocers' Buyers, by simply asking for the same numbers and grades as they have been previously supplied with the article desired, the difficulty of matching Teas being thus avoided.

In most establishments with a miscellaneous stock, and where the atmosphere is impregnated with the odor of drugs, spices, oils, liquors and tobacco, the Tea is certainly injured by exposure to which it is entirely refused.

In this establishment such injury is impossible, as the Tea is kept in separate apartments, and the strictest cleanliness and purity of atmosphere adjoin able careers.

Those who have been in the habit of purchasing Teas because not being as good as the first.

All Teas warranted to give perfect satisfaction or the money will be refunded. The facilities possessed by this establishment for securing Teas, enable us to offer them at any other house in the city.

Buyers will find it to their interest to call in view to their interests worth and good drinking qualities rather than low prices.

JAPAN.

| | |
|---|---|
| Uncolored—No. 1 | $1 00 |
| " No. 2—XXX | 90 |
| " No. 3—Choice | 80 |
| " No. 4—Pleasure very good | 70 |
| " No. 5—Extra good | 60 |
| " No. 6 | 50 |

CHINA—BLACK.

| | |
|---|---|
| Flowery Pekoe—No. 1 | $1 25 |
| Scented Pekoe— | 1 00 |
| " No. 2—Choice | 90 |
| " No. 1—Extra fine | 80 |
| Oolong—No. 1 | 1 00 |
| " No. 2 | 90 |
| " No. 1—Extra | 80 |
| " No. 2—Good | 70 |
| " No. 1 | 60 |
| " No. 2 | 50 |
| " No. 1—Fair | 40 |
| " No. 2 | 30 |
| " No. 1—Basest Tea | 25 |

CHINA—GREEN.

| | |
|---|---|
| Gunpowder | $1 00 |
| Young Hyson | 1 00 |
| Imperial EXT Extra | 1 00 |

Three, 5 and 10-pound boxes at a reduction from above prices.

OUR SPICES.

Are all ground and put up by machinery entirely free from dust and dirt. Every variety of quality and strength is carefully selected, and the Cassia, Cloves, Nutmegs and Mace are fresh and pure, in quantities to suit purchasers, and are warranted to be unadulterated with anything foreign to the spice. Also, ARROWROOT, which, for making rich sweet puddings, is unsurpassed.

NOTICE.—We have just introduced our L.B. packet Our PURE MALTZ BREWT JAVA COFFEE, at 12½ cents per can. It is guaranteed the Coffee to be perfectly pure, entirely free from any admixture of Chicory, Peas, Beans, or anything else, and to be the same Coffee we have been selling for the last two years. Orders from the country will be made on our above specialties where orders from Clubs throughout the country are received.

Orders, by mail or through our agents, receive prompt attention, and goods will be put up in any size packages desired, and delivered free of charge to any part of the city. Send for samples and Price List.

MURPHY BROS.,
Proprietors Confidential Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,
759 and 761 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

WHYTE & BICHOLL,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS,
N. W. corner J and Seventh Sts.,
SACRAMENTO.
A Large Stock of MOURNING GOODS always on hand. mch1-f

UNPARALLELED LIBERALITY!
THE MADONNA DI SAN SISTO
(OR MADONNA SIXTINA),
FOR SEVENTEEN CENTS!

☞ The same picture that the "Catholic (cardinal" offers as a most extraordinary premium to those subscribers who give $3 in advance, and of which it gives the following description:

"Unparalleled premium! One copier colored by any publisher, and worthy to be placed in any family, the celebrated picture, 'The Madonna of the Chair,' (or Madonna di San Sisto), one of the most magnificent productions of art and as a work of art is worth many times the price of the whole publication. Size of the picture, 22 by 28 inches. Remember—none but new subscribers to the Illustrated Catholic Family Almanac are entitled to the Madonna di San Sisto."

Those who subscribe for the Almanac will be getting the identical lithographic print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Those who subscribe for the Almanac will be getting the identical lithographic print for the small sum of 17 cents.

Persons in the interior who may desire it, must send a cents additional for postage.

KENNY & CO.
Corner Fifth and Market streets, San Francisco.
jy16-tf

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
WHO HAVE THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS,
OILS,
GLASS
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATES.
121, 123 and 125 FRONT STREET,
and 116 PINE STREET.

AGENTS FOR "THE MONITOR."

Alameda—W. W. Wright.
Antioch—John Quinlan.
Amador City—M. O. Hara.
Auburn—James Wash.
Angel's—Rev. Martin Kelly.
Antioch—P. Griffin.
Bodie—Rev. Thomas Heslin, Master.
Bogus—Rev. Alameda Oe—Rev. M. Sullivan.
Benicia—Rev. Father Barry.
Bodie—Rev. Father Kelly.
Bolinas—Rev. Father Bayle.
Bay Point—James Egan.
Bodie—Thomas Walsh.
Cahuenga—P. Maigrow.
Columbia—Rev. Father Caubet.
Columbia—Matt. Brady.
Carson City—Rev. Edward Gallagher.
Centerville—Wm. Carey.
Cloverdale—Rev. Father Moore.
Centerville—T. Mope.
Dutch Flat—Rev. J. Delaney.
Downieville—P. Dowdall.
Dutch Flat—Rev. Father Hafford.
Dutch Flat—Rev. Father Andrew—P. Manterson.
Edwardsville—Rev. Father Kelly.
Eureka—Wm. Egan.
Folsom—John Sheridan.
Forest Hill—Rev. Father Wright.
Forest Hill—Rev. Father Hagan.
Fairfield—Rev. Father Hagan.
Gilroy—Rev. Father Hagan.
Grass Valley—Rev. Father Hagan.
Grass Valley—Rev. Father Hagan.
Gilroy

was resolved on. A woman's head, night-capped, was put out of the window.

"Who are you? Prussians?" she exclaimed.

"No, no, we are French soldiers," eagerly exclaimed Michel; and here is a Sergeant wounded."

"Sacre!" exclaimed the Sergeant, "open if you have any bowels of compassion for your poor countrymen."

"Ouvres, ma belle dame," said Mike, "or I fear mine lost let."

The woman hesitated owing apparently to remonstrance addressed to her from behind; but at last, with an impatient gesture, she turned away, and the party outside could hear her pronounce in emphatic accents "I will open." A moment after and the woman, a candle in her hand, appeared at the door. Looking keenly at the soldiers, as if to satisfy herself they were what they represented themselves to be, she flung wide the door, and bade them enter.

She was a comely dame of about five-and-forty, with somewhat of a stern expression on her face. Though her heart was adorned with the bonnet de nuit, she was otherwise fully dressed. While she was receiving the soldiers a shambling step was heard overhead, and then two feet in sabots slowly shuffled down the ladder which led from the loft in the roof. Again they were heard coming down the stairs, and at last the new-comers had an opportunity of seeing the owner. As they looked they were divided between horror and a tendency to laughter. It was an absolute pain to witness the terror that reigned in the face of the old man of sixty whom they saw. So white was the skin, so drawn the muscles, so staring the eyes, that it was almost impossible to gaze upon it and not to feel a thrill in sympathy with the strength of the emotion they indicated. He gasped rather than spoke, "Wife are these the Prussians?"

"No, it is not," replied the Sergeant in a tone whose contemptuous calm contrasted strongly with his.

"Then, at all events, they will be wanting provisions and robbing us."

The woman with an impatient shrug of her shoulders turned to the strangers and said, "Messieurs, we cannot accomodate you here, but I will give you food and drink."

"That will do for two of us, answered Michel, "but here is a third badly wounded who cannot go on, and you must—I am sure—be obliged to speak so—you must give him shelter."

"No!" shrieked the old man.

"Be quiet, old fool," said the wife. "Young man, it is hard that struggling, peaceable people like us should be made sufferers in this way by a war in which we have no interest; but I suppose we must do something for our country, must we?"

As she spoke there was a shuffling noise. The Sergeant had slipped out of Mike's arms, and lay insensible upon the floor. All this sight, all the woman in her nature burst out, and she plunged across and knelt down by his side. "Ah, mon Dieu, the poor soldier. Here, good man, take him up in my bed while I run into the village, and see de dead!" No, he breathes still. Take him up and I will bandage his poor wounds," and bemoaning her the cold, self-contained housewife, who had stood on her threshold with half an inclination to resist entrance by main force, she was in a moment of success, with effusive chatter was busy in the careful attendance of the wounded man, or in the internals providing for the refreshment of his comrades.

"Way, shoo," remarked Mike, as reclining on a high-backed chair, and stretching out his legs after an immense meal wherein slices of ham, roasted chestnuts, potatoes fried and other dainties had figured, all being washed down by a soup of good wine. "Fire, then, though I don't like retreating, as a general rule, upon my honour I'd have no objection to be on mamma's bay for a short time—a few days—an hour or so."

"We are here too long already," said Michel. "We have to join the army, and must not let the Prussians catch us."

Up jumped Mike, "I said he, "at least the best part of the day" with the ruffians once, and I'm not fond of their company. I'd sarve oars to see one of their ugly faces nearer than the point of my bayonet."

The two men went softly up to the chamber where their comrade lay, to bid him farewell. They were shocked at the change which had passed over him. Though he recovered from the swoon which had overtaken him, all sensation seemed gone, to have left his face, and all the courage which had enabled him to struggle through his bulletone journey appeared to have been weak into a semi consciousness. As he saw the companions enter, however, his dull eye lighted up and he strove hard to find his voice.

"Conscript, Irlandais," said he hoarsely and feebly, "my battles are done. You have been good comrades and brave soldiers. Go, God bless you, and give you strength to win the day for dear France."

Both the men took the heavy hand and pressed it affectionately.

"I would, Sergeant, I could stay to attend you," said Michel, "but you know my duty calls."

The Sergeant shook his head impatiently. "Go, go, my children, go, I hope I may again see you standing up for our country against its enemies."

A sigh was the Sergeant's only answer.

"Farewell, farewell, good soldier."

"Sergeant," said Mike affectionately, "when isn't a man in France or on Ireland's ground either, that deserves a respectable wake better than yourself. If I had my way I'd give you a berrin' that would do your heart good. But it can't be done, by heavens, Sergeant, some-body shall keen you as all sweets. If I don't make some of dhat Germans howl for what they did to you the blessed day, I wish I may be taller to a regiment of peelers."

A wan smile fitted across the face of the Sergeant as he gathered indistinctly from Mike's curious Frenchified something of his meaning.

"Good bye, Irlandais," he faltered, "and—well."

"Good by, Sergeant, and heaven rest your poor soul—amen," said Mike solemnly as he and Michel left the chamber.

The hospitality of the peasant woman did not confine itself to a good meal. She pressed on them bread and meat, and, what was not least acceptable, a little bottle of brandy.

And so they passed out to renew their disheartening search. It was now near midnight, and the rain which had fallen heavily in the earlier part of the day settled into a thick mist, while cold gloomy winds arose. The darkness added in no small degree to the difficulties of a progress which at best moved but slowly, and but little conversation passed between them. Their progress at last brought them to a road which they took without hesitation. Fatigue induced them to prefer even the risk of being captured to the toil of wading over the cultivated lands and through the rough woods.

"What is that before us?" asked Michel, pointing to a figure on horseback.

"Well," said Mike, "it's dawn't look like a Prussian. They prefer riding in a squadron to going single like that."

The horseman was but a little distance ahead, and they could see the progress was slow, and, as it seemed, uncertain. He was bent forward to such a degree that it seemed almost as if his head was resting on the neck of the horse. The animal itself was actually tottering. As they looked with curiosity, they saw the poor beast stumble, and, without an effort to recover itself, fall heavily back. As if stimulated by the shock, the man rose in the saddle and made an effort to keep the horse upon his feet, but too late, and perhaps impossible under any circumstances. The horse was prostrated and he himself rolled off, and lay by the side of his poor steed insensible.

The soldiers hastened up to his aid.

"It is a French officer," said Michel, as he examined the uniform.

"Then I'll try him with a taste of the brandy," remarked Mike.

Acting upon his own happy thought, Michel applied his flask to the lips of the fallen man, who immediately opened his eyes and rose, but with a cry of agony.

"Seventeen hours in the saddle," he murmured, "no wonder I feel sleepy. And my poor horse."

"The horse is quite knocked up, mon General, and you cannot remount him."

"Then we must move forward on foot. Who are you, my good fellows, to whom I feel much indebted for your aid?"

"We are soldiers of the line, mon—but good God! is it M. le Marechal," exclaimed Michel as he looked keenly into the face of the man he had aided to raise from the ground.

"Ay, my lads, so it is," said the Marshal, with something like his old gaiety of manner, "You have a badge round his forehead, and his arm is in a rude sling, reclining against the trunk of a tall tree behind which he sat. "Now you charge just to be shot at, with hardly a chance of getting a blow at the enemy."

"Aye, sir," said old Jean Voss, who was listening with eager attention to the conversation. "And is that the case with the whole army?"

"Well, you see, fighting infantry they are on equal terms."

"And is there much execution done among you?" was the next query. "Are many killed?" said the old man with a voice the quiver in which he sought earnestly to hide.

The military soldier shrugged his shoulders, and took up the conversation for his comrade who seemed disposed not to speak much. "If they are exposed they suffer; if not—well so much the better for them."

"Do you know the 150th regiment of the line?"

"Ah, yes; they were at Wissembourg."

"And they suffered?"

"Quia vs sans dire; every regiment that was in that infernal trap suffered. I had my way I'd give you a berrin' that would do your heart good. But it can't be done, by heavens, Sergeant, somebody shall keen you as all sweets. If I don't make some of dhat Germans howl for what they did to you the blessed day, I wish I may be taller to a regiment of peelers."

"Then will do for two of us, answered Michel, "but here is a third badly wounded who cannot go on, and you must—I am sure—be obliged to speak so—you must give him shelter."

"No!" shrieked the old man.

"Be quiet," said the wife. "Young man, it is hard that struggling, peaceable people like us should be made sufferers in this way by a war in which we have no interest; but I suppose we must do something for our country, must we?"

As she spoke there was a shuffling noise. The Sergeant had slipped out of Mike's arms, and lay insensible upon the floor. All this sight, all the woman in her nature burst out, and she plunged across and knelt down by his side. "Ah, mon Dieu, the poor soldier. Here, good man, take him up in my bed while I run into the village, and see de dead!" No, he breathes still. Take him up and I will bandage his poor wounds," and bemoaning her the cold, self-contained housewife, who had stood on her threshold with half an inclination to resist entrance by main force, she was in a moment of success, with effusive chatter was busy in the careful attendance of the wounded man, or in the internals providing for the refreshment of his comrades.

"Way, shoo," remarked Mike, as reclining on a high-backed chair, and stretching out his legs after an immense meal wherein slices of ham, roasted chestnuts, potatoes fried and other dainties had figured, all being washed down by a soup of good wine.

"Fire, then, though I don't like retreating, as a general rule, upon my honour I'd have no objection to be on mamma's bay for a short time—a few days—an hour or so."

"We are here too long already," said Michel. "We have to join the army, and must not let the Prussians catch us."

Up jumped Mike, "I said he, "at least the best part of the day" with the ruffians once, and I'm not fond of their company. I'd sarve oars to see one of their ugly faces nearer than the point of my bayonet."

The two men went softly up to the chamber where their comrade lay, to bid him farewell. They were shocked at the change which had passed over him. Though he recovered from the swoon which had overtaken him, all sensation seemed gone, to have left his face, and all the courage which had enabled him to struggle through his bulletone journey appeared to have been weak into a semi consciousness. As he saw the companions enter, however, his dull eye lighted up and he strove hard to find his voice.

"Conscript, Irlandais," said he hoarsely and feebly, "my battles are done. You have been good comrades and brave soldiers. Go, God bless you, and give you strength to win the day for dear France."

Both the men took the heavy hand and pressed it affectionately.

"I would, Sergeant, I could stay to attend you," said Michel, "but you know my duty calls."

The Sergeant shook his head impatiently. "Go, go, my children, go, I hope I may again see you standing up for our country against its enemies."

A sigh was the Sergeant's only answer.

"Farewell, farewell, good soldier."

"Sergeant," said Mike affectionately, "when isn't a man in France or on Ireland's ground either, that deserves a respectable wake better than yourself. If

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 18.
19—Sunday—Twentieth Sunday after Pentecost. Solemnity of the S. S. M.
20—Monday—St. John Cantius, Confessor.
21—Tuesday—St. Peter of Alcantara, Confessor. St. Hilarion, Abbot. SS. Ursula and Companions, Martyrs.
22—Wednesday—Feria.
23—Thursday—Vigil of the Blessed Sacrament.
24—Friday—St. Raphael Archangel.
25—Saturday—Vigil of the Immaculate Conception. SS. Chrysanthus and Daria, Martyrs.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....OCTOBER 18, 1873.

ILL-TREATMENT OF SEAMEN.

It is a consolation to know that some measures are at last being taken to make shipmasters and their subordinate officers understand that sailors are human creatures, who cannot be kicked, beaten or killed with absolute impunity. Certainly it is high time that this most important lesson was taught to a few of the nautical Nimrods who dishonor the American flag by their cruelties. Ship after ship has come into this port with the same story on the lips of the crew. Insufficient or unwholesome food, constant overwork, brutality practiced by captains and mates, and not unfrequently murder committed on some helpless and unresisting seaman, constitute the principal features in their narratives. The deaths, which are generally supposed to have been established for the purpose of preserving the life, liberty and natural rights of every individual, have hitherto taken little or no cognizance of the outrages which have been reported in the daily papers. The complicated machinery of those venerable institutions seemed somehow to have been clogged, or to have grown rusty, so that they had become practically useless. The most energetic remonstrances from private citizens could only produce a faint attempt at motion. Of course the consequences were that the man who should have been swung off the gallows, or have been condemned to life-long imprisonment, as a penalty for their crimes, were left unmolested, and walked through the streets of our city as if they were free from reproach.

The public, though long-suffering, will not, however, be trifled with beyond a certain degree, and when once aroused to the necessity for action, they go to work with a promptitude and earnestness which bode no good to those who excite their anger. The arrival in the bay a couple of weeks ago of a vessel from the deck of which three men had mysteriously disappeared during her voyage hither from New York, put the climax upon popular indignation. It was putting rather too severe a strain upon the innocent credulity of our citizens to ask them to believe that these three sailors managed to go overboard, quite by accident and unseen, at different times and under different circumstances, without anybody being able to blame about the matter. It was extremely hard to make people believe that any properly-managed vessel, not assailed with unusual violence by wind or water, could be so peculiarly unfortunate, and experience a very freely and many times expressed. Inquiry elicited facts, or allegations at any rate, tending to show that the three men were, by the most inhuman barbarity, actually driven to commit suicide.

It has been asserted that the treatment these poor fellows received from the officers of their ship, the "Sunrise," was so atrociously brutal and unmanly that they preferred death beneath the waves to a continuance of it. Yet—will our readers credit it?—even this infamy would have gone unpunished were it not for the energy of a private citizen, the editor of the Post. He succeeded in setting the sluggish officials of the Federal Courts in something resembling motion, and has kept them at it, much, very probably, to their disgust. Already justice has laid its hands on the Captain, CLARKE; the second mate is in jail; but, most unfortunately, the chief brute, the first mate, has up to the present successfully evaded the vengeance of the law. A good offer for his arrest by the spirited editor of the Post, may, however, lead to its capture at any time, for there are a great many individuals only too anxious to earn the money. There is even a chance that the tyrants of the "Sunrise" will be punished as they richly deserve, and their fate may serve as a warning to others who may be similarly disposed. Meantime we will have the satisfaction of knowing that they have some rights, and that they are not altogether debarred from protection of law.

THE CURTIN TRIAL.

The trial of CURTIN for the killing of WILLIAM JOHNSON resulted in a verdict of acquittal. The jury would not even find the accused guilty of manslaughter. They in effect upon record that, in their opinion, the slaying was no crime at all. Neither the declaration was based upon presumed temporary insanity or was founded upon the belief that the deed of blood was, under the circumstances, justifiable, we have no means of knowing. But in either case we cannot approve of the verdict. We do not think, if CURTIN's life or liberty was not at stake, half a dozen persons could be found in the whole State to assert that the accused had the most faint idea of insanity or emotional or other—about him when he fired the fatal shot. On the contrary, we believe it would be found to be the opinion entertained by the overwhelming majority of citizens that he left his house with the deliberately-formed intention of killing the young lad, and that he was thoroughly accountable for his actions. This effectually disentangles the insanity plea.

There remains only to be considered the defense of justification. We hold that if even the worst alleged against WILLIAM JOHNSON was true, CURTIN was not justified in taking his life, and should not have been held blameless. If the ruin of HANNAH CURTIN was, as she claimed and testified, effected by violence, the law might have been invoked; the accused, in case his guilt was proved, would have been severely punished, and further intimacy between the pair would have been stopped. But much value will not be attached to the statements of the unfortunate girl, which were plainly concocted with a purpose of extenuating with unusual violence by wind or water, could be so peculiarly unfortunate, and experience a very freely and many times expressed. Inquiry elicited facts, or allegations at any rate, tending to show that the three men were, by the most inhuman barbarity, actually driven to commit suicide.

It has been asserted that the treatment these poor fellows received from the officers of their ship, the "Sunrise," was so atrociously brutal and unmanly that they preferred death beneath the waves to a continuance of it. Yet—will our readers credit it?—even this infamy would have gone unpunished were it not for the energy of a private citizen, the editor of the Post. He succeeded in setting the sluggish officials of the Federal Courts in something resembling motion, and has kept them at it, much, very probably, to their disgust. Already justice has laid its hands on the Captain, CLARKE; the second mate is in jail; but, most unfortunately, the chief brute, the first mate, has up to the present successfully evaded the vengeance of the law. A good offer for his arrest by the spirited editor of the Post, may, however, lead to its capture at any time, for there are a great many individuals only too anxious to earn the money. There is even a chance that the tyrants of the "Sunrise" will be punished as they richly deserve, and their fate may serve as a warning to others who may be similarly disposed. Meantime we will have the satisfaction of knowing that they have some rights, and that they are not altogether debarred from protection of law.

THE CURTIN TRIAL.

The trial for CURTIN for the killing of WILLIAM JOHNSON resulted in a verdict of acquittal. The jury would not even find the accused guilty of manslaughter. They in effect put on record that, in their opinion, the slaying was no crime at all. Neither the declaration was based upon presumed temporary insanity or was founded upon the belief that the deed of blood was, under the circumstances, justifiable, we have no means of knowing. But in either case we cannot approve of the verdict. We do not think, if CURTIN's life or liberty was not at stake, half a dozen persons could be found in the whole State to assert that the accused had the most faint idea of insanity or emotional or other—about him when he fired the fatal shot. On the contrary, we believe it would be found to be the opinion entertained by the overwhelming majority of citizens that he left his house with the deliberately-formed intention of killing the young lad, and that he was thoroughly accountable for his actions. This effectually disentangles the insanity plea.

There remains only to be considered the defense of justification. We hold that if

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....OCTOBER 18, 1873.

ILL-TREATMENT OF SEAMEN.

It is a consolation to know that some measures are at last being taken to make shipmasters and their subordinate officers understand that sailors are human creatures, who cannot be kicked, beaten or killed with absolute impunity. Certainly it is high time that this most important lesson was taught to a few of the nautical Nimrods who dishonor the American flag by their cruelties. Ship after ship has come into this port with the same story on the lips of the crew. Insufficient or unwholesome food, constant overwork, brutality practiced by captains and mates, and not unfrequently murder committed on some helpless and unresisting seaman, constitute the principal features in their narratives. The deaths, which are generally supposed to have been established for the purpose of preserving the life, liberty and natural rights of every individual, have hitherto taken little or no cognizance of the outrages which have been reported in the daily papers. The complicated machinery of those venerable institutions seemed somehow to have been clogged, or to have grown rusty, so that they had become practically useless. The most energetic remonstrances from private citizens could only produce a faint attempt at motion. Of course the consequences were that the man who should have been swung off the gallows, or have been condemned to life-long imprisonment, as a penalty for their crimes, were left unmolested, and walked through the streets of our city as if they were free from reproach.

The public, though long-suffering, will not, however, be trifled with beyond a certain degree, and when once aroused to the necessity for action, they go to work with a promptitude and earnestness which bode no good to those who excite their anger. The arrival in the bay a couple of weeks ago of a vessel from the deck of which three men had mysteriously disappeared during her voyage hither from New York, put the climax upon popular indignation. It was putting rather too severe a strain upon the innocent credulity of our citizens to ask them to believe that these three sailors managed to go overboard, quite by accident and unseen, at different times and under different circumstances, without anybody being able to blame about the matter. It was extremely hard to make people believe that any properly-managed vessel, not assailed with unusual violence by wind or water, could be so peculiarly unfortunate, and experience a very freely and many times expressed. Inquiry elicited facts, or allegations at any rate, tending to show that the three men were, by the most inhuman barbarity, actually driven to commit suicide.

It has been asserted that the treatment these poor fellows received from the officers of their ship, the "Sunrise," was so atrociously brutal and unmanly that they preferred death beneath the waves to a continuance of it. Yet—will our readers credit it?—even this infamy would have gone unpunished were it not for the energy of a private citizen, the editor of the Post. He succeeded in setting the sluggish officials of the Federal Courts in something resembling motion, and has kept them at it, much, very probably, to their disgust. Already justice has laid its hands on the Captain, CLARKE; the second mate is in jail; but, most unfortunately, the chief brute, the first mate, has up to the present successfully evaded the vengeance of the law. A good offer for his arrest by the spirited editor of the Post, may, however, lead to its capture at any time, for there are a great many individuals only too anxious to earn the money. There is even a chance that the tyrants of the "Sunrise" will be punished as they richly deserve, and their fate may serve as a warning to others who may be similarly disposed. Meantime we will have the satisfaction of knowing that they have some rights, and that they are not altogether debarred from protection of law.

THE CURTIN TRIAL.

The trial for CURTIN for the killing of WILLIAM JOHNSON resulted in a verdict of acquittal. The jury would not even find the accused guilty of manslaughter. They in effect put on record that, in their opinion, the slaying was no crime at all. Neither the declaration was based upon presumed temporary insanity or was founded upon the belief that the deed of blood was, under the circumstances, justifiable, we have no means of knowing. But in either case we cannot approve of the verdict. We do not think, if CURTIN's life or liberty was not at stake, half a dozen persons could be found in the whole State to assert that the accused had the most faint idea of insanity or emotional or other—about him when he fired the fatal shot. On the contrary, we believe it would be found to be the opinion entertained by the overwhelming majority of citizens that he left his house with the deliberately-formed intention of killing the young lad, and that he was thoroughly accountable for his actions. This effectually disentangles the insanity plea.

There remains only to be considered the defense of justification. We hold that if

British Morality.

No country in the world boasts so much of the vastness of its religious organizations and its advanced civilization as England; yet probably no country of equal size is armed with so much crime, no country we produced such specimens of barbarity, no country is associated with so many horrid crimes. Can these facts be denied? Is the coincidence must be attributed to the undeniable fact that her religious organizations are to a great extent shams. To simply enumerate the barbarous outrages and cold-blooded murders we have had this year in England—and the year has several months to run yet—would be to devote more space to the disgusting subject than we feel disposed to waste upon it. Enough to say that some of the most atrocious of them have baffled the inquiries of the police, and are likely to remain forever mysteries, so far as this world is concerned. We refer now to this unhappily too common place subject to English newspaper readers, for the purpose of showing up as it deserves a murder which, for heartless brutality and cowardice, stands unparalleled in the annals even of the many fearful atrocities which yearly disgrace this much-boasted civilized country of ours.

It appears that for two years a woman named Martha Addison has been living in Islington with a man named Charles Dawson. On Saturday night, without any provocation, he left the house, and returned at midnight, and without even the exciting and debasing influence of drink as an excuse, Dawson asked her for a shilling. She left a candle and coolly said to the unfortunate woman, "Stop a few minutes to say your prayers and then I'll murder you." After waiting a few seconds Dawson picked up a black glass bottle, and struck the unfortunate woman to the floor. She fell without a moan. He then hurled the bottle at her face, and, following it up, broke into the closed fragments. He then left the house in the peaceful frame of mind with which they have been robbed by such an extraordinary combination of cruelty, violence and cruelty, as can scarcely be paralleled in the annals of any other people. The iniquitous measure of the Union has never been accepted or acquiesced in by the nation; nay, it has been repeatedly and uniformly exhibited as an oppressive and disastrous measure; and among several illustrations of the national feeling given by it, I need but refer to O'Connell's formidable agitation for its repeal.

But Ireland has her immortal reward; but his spirit, because it was the spirit of justice and truth, has gone marching on Irish people; and now their yearning for Home Government is more intense and more general than in the palmiest days of our history, determined as they are not to be satisfied without their National Legislature, for which they are pressing at the polls.

For me, I have no recollection of any period in which I did not regard the Irish Parliament, or grieve at its abstraction, or sigh for its restoration. And with the consciousness of this feeling, and with all the disasters which followed its extinction in thickening succession, I entertain a strong hope that the Irish people will be faithful to their best interests. They will peaceably and constitutionally achieve the realization of native rule, which, indeed, we cannot expect sound Catholic education for the Irish will Ireland, or continued peace and prosperity for the United Kingdom, I have the honor to be, with sincere regard, Your faithful servant,

J JOHN, Archbishop of Tuam.

W. J. O'N. Daunt, Esq.

SOLEMN CONSECRATION

Of All Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin Mary to the Immaculate Conception.

MR. EDITOR—The Sodality of the Roman College, called the "Prima-Primaria," and representing the highest Sodality of all its officers, having no officacious means of communication with the numerous Sodalities established in the United States, wishes to address the following notice to the editors of all the Catholic papers of the world, and therefore request you to insert it in your columns.

While the Revolutionary party, now unfortunately predominant, is making every effort for the triumph of apostacy, by the ruin of the country every principal State, and by openly declared hatred of God and His Anointed, our Divine Heart of Jesus is opened to the Faithful, as an asylum and a refuge from the deluge of iniquity that threatens them. We will fly to it with confidence, because that Heart of Love and Mercy will never refuse admission, but, welcoming all with indulgent compassion, will save them from certain destruction. Catholics in this Province, aware of the threatening danger and fearing less they should be involved in it, are consecrating themselves, with a generous and holy enthusiasm, to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and place themselves under its paternal rule, to escape from the tyrannical sway of the world. And this is done, not only by individuals, but by entire districts, provinces, nations and associations of every grade and condition.

The Sodality, which is the mother and head of numberless other Sodalities in all parts of the world, and which exercises this universal devotion to the Sacred Heart without being compelled to take part in it, and therefore, on the third Sunday of July last year, on which day we are accustomed to consecrate to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, we resolved to consecrate to the same Divine Heart, by a solemn and public act, not only this Sodality, but also all the related Sodalities of the whole Catholic world.

We have no doubt that the daughters will rejoice at this action of the mother, and that they will unite with her, not merely in a passing act of approval, but in a public renewal of the same solemn consecration on the third Sunday of July of every year for the future.

And surely if this act of devotion to the Divine Heart of Jesus is necessary for the saving protection in the duty of all Christians who feel its importance in the evil days in which we live, it cannot but be a more stringent obligation for us members of the Sodalities which were instituted especially to defend and spread the cult and religion, together with the love of Jesus Christ and of His Most Blessed Mother. Can there be better proof of this than the special hatred with which the enemy of all good pursues our Sodalities, which he knows to be most powerful opponents to the accomplishment of his diabolical designs?

Hence, from the Hall of the "Prima-Primaria," July 22, 1873.

VINCENZO SCIPIONI, Prefect.
AGOSTINO CATTERINI, 1st Assistant.
NICCOLA BENZI, 2d Assistant.
GIOVANNI BRUSO, Pro. Sec.

ALL DRINKS TEN CENTS.—T. P. Wall, of the Cosmopolitan Restaurant, No. 9 Third street, is fully up with the spirit of the times. He serves the very best hot Scotch and Irish whisky punches, as well as all other kinds of liquors, at ten cents a glass. His motto is, "Quick sales and small profits." His liquors have an aroma that would tempt the palate of an anchorite.

VESTMENTS, benediction veils, copes, chasubles, cinctures and all other Church articles, just imported; also, on hand a fine assorted stock of Holy Water, Prayer books, and all the late Catholic and Irish publications. I will sell all the above at less than New York prices. R. C. Bateman, importer of Catholic books, No. 9 Emery street, near Sacramento.

Secret Political Societies.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: I observe that you have copied the following dispatch from this city to the San Francisco daily papers—namely: "A new political society has been organized in this city to promote concert of action among Irishmen in politics. It disclaims all affinity with existing political parties; is secret in its proceedings, and professes to have but one end in view—Irish unity."

The position that THE MONITOR occupies, and the stand it has always taken regarding Irish and Catholic matters, imposes on its patron, a duty, as it were, to give correct information from the various localities in which it circulates throughout the State. It is evident that you have regarded the dispatch in question as conveying a statement of facts, else your comments would have been of a different character. You can, therefore, put it down with positive certainty that no political society of the character above mentioned exists in Stockton. The telegram was based on street rumor.

My files of THE MONITOR attest the vigor with which its editors have labored against all secret organizations, and in this course you have the sympathy and approval of all reflecting minds, irrespective of wide differences in minor matters. Regarding Irish political unity, so far it seems to be of a very harmless nature. The thoroughgoing populace is not much afraid of Irish unity; he knows well that there is a small but very select clique who have got a hold on it, and have unfortunately—of whom the less said the better. Presently another Country priest came down with the fever, lady and child. To make a long story short, the priest, when he saw the pictures on the transparency representing the Life of Christ, began to tell the child in a sample manner what Bible stories he had a name. He said a naturally loud voice, and his earnest manner and exceeding simplicity brought the people round him. He perceived this, raised his voice and told the story of the Passion in full, the effect that great event had on the house opposite changing constantly all the time.

The people were delighted and wrapt in attention. He must have had at least from forty to fifty persons around him, and when he came to the Crucifixion he pointed to the picture and said very earnestly, "There, my dear, how could the dear Lord in Washington, after a thorough investigation by a Committee of Congress, it was decided by a majority of nineteen that the gang justly and legally belonged to McClernahan. The present suit is brought to recover property of the mine and five millions of dollars for damages. In a few days the case will come up before Judge Seldon. In fact, no doubt will be done, as observed with deep interest by the entire people of this Coast, and, indeed, by most of the leading men of the nation, as it has for so long a time figured prominently before Congress and elsewhere.

JOHN HAMILL, Esq., Assemblyman elect, was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain on Thursday night of last week. Rev. James R. Kelly made the presentation speech, to which Mr. Hamill feelingly replied.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Margueritte—M. Thorpe | $1 00 |
| Petaluma—No name | 1 00 |
| Martinez—Mrs. Mary Ann Hall | 1 00 |
| Martinez—John Fitzgerald | 1 00 |
| Napa—Mr. Gallagher | 1 00 |
| Cottage Hill—John Sexton | 1 00 |
| Cottage Hill—A. K. Wilson | 1 00 |
| Canada—Mrs. Whitehead | 1 00 |
| Mrs. Lynch | 1 00 |
| Mrs. Lynch—Patrick Mulvaney | 1 00 |
| Cannon Cliff—M. Purcell | 1 00 |
| San Luis Obispo—Christopher Wilcox | 1 00 |
| Stockton—M. J. Carrie | 1 00 |
| Mare Island—Mr. Matthew McInerney | 1 00 |
| Santa Cruz—Richard Nugent | 1 00 |
| Patrick Tracy | 1 00 |
| John Kelly | 1 00 |
| James Williams | 1 00 |
| Peter Lacey | 1 00 |
| Patrick Mornbey | 1 00 |

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

Grant favors a resumption of specie payments.

Monastic orders are to be prohibited in Mexico.

A large number of Carlists have sought refuge in France.

The Jesuits have been ordered to leave Mexico immediately.

The President has named November 27 as the annual Thanksgiving.

The yellow fever is spreading in Memphis. There were sixty deaths there on Wednesday.

Marshal Bazaine lays the blame on the Emperor, and on the negligence of the intelligence service.

Père Hyacinthe has been elected one of the three curés in charge of the Old Catholics. His wife, we presume, is curate.

In Nashville, Tenn., on Monday, James Hogue, a young man of nineteen, shot and killed R. Mc Riccards, proprietor of the Academy of Music, who had seduced his sister and refused to marry her.

There was an immense open-air gathering at Cork Sunday in favor of Fenian Amnesty. Home Rule, and the rights of labor. Twenty thousand persons were at the meeting, which was somewhat disorderly.

The Mexican Congress has decreed the separation of Church and state, and declaring for freedom of religious opinion. Matrimony is to be a civil contract. Divorce is to be allowed with cause at a sacrifice of personal liberty.

The Protestant Episcopalians (Episcopalian) portrait of the Lord's Supper (or what is emblematic thereof) in a Presbyterian church in New York, on the 31 October, and has raised a dreadful hubbub therein in consequence.

The President has issued an order pardoning all deserters from the army who may return to their posts within the term of January next, and who will serve faithfully the remainder of their enlistments.

The notorious Ned Buntline—well known as a blackguard in the Sandwich Islands in 1854, and lately as a temperance lecturer, drew a postal package containing a pistol, 8½ c., on the 15th inst., while ostensibly drunk.

Hobert Alexis, a wealthy young farmer of Carrollton, Mo., suspecting the fidelity of his wife, shot and killed a St. Louis man on Friday night, but returned security to his bondsmen armed with a shotgun and pistol, and committed suicide. Subject of a young man named Elijah Healey when Austin sprung a trap and hanged him for the murder of Mrs. Hall and the woman. Austin surrendered himself to the authorities.

PACIFIC COAST ITEMS.

Soap Lake, near Gilroy, is to be drained, the residuum of water of lake of use of coal land.

Ex-Senator Nesmith (Dem), was elected Mayor of Portland, Oregon, on Monday, by about 1,200 majority.

Saratoga Rock Springs on the Pacific Railroad have been leased over by the showman Bailey for 99 years.

The Quiso Soda Quicksilver Mining Company, in San Luis Obispo county, is reported to have struck a rich vein.

An election is ordered in San Mateo county, to decide the county seat question, to be held next October.

Mr. Chapin is developing a very rich quicksilver mine in Colusa county, by means of a big reduction works now building.

Mr. Hamilton, of Solano county, has planted this season 700 trees, 1,000 peaches of which have interfered by the borers.

On October 10 a patent was issued for the Rancho Cañada de Pinole, in Contra Costa county, containing 6,000 acres, to Joseph Pinole and Ygnacio Pinole.

The Rio Grande was extremely high, being a mile and a half wide in the channel. Many citizens were compelled to hoist themselves twice to shifts to enable them to pass from house to house.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

General Higby, formerly Surveyor-General of the State, is lying ill of a complication of diseases, at the residence of Postmaster Hall, on Sutter street.

A few Italians have received permission from the Board of Supervisors to establish a cemetery for their countrymen on the Lone Mountain road, beyond the grave of the wife of Senator Sharon.

All the boys' uniforms of the Central Public Schools are now turned out and ready for issue to the pupils. In a few weeks the uniforms of the Southern Public and Mission Schools will be completed.

Wooden pavements are to be done away with. Hereafter nothing but cobble stones or stone blocks will be permitted to be laid. The Board have also raised an extra license on the Nicholson pavement and on all wooden pavements hereafter laid.

Some rufians or ruffians mixed sublimate of corrosive with whiskey and left it on the bar for anyone to help themselves to. Several persons have died from the effects of the poison.

In the estate of the estate of John Sime & Co., in bankruptcy, the assets available for distribution are $10,000. Debts proved and allowed are proved amounting to $30,000. But there is an additional claim of Sime, Baker & Co., Limited, of $31,000, contested in the Supreme Court, and until a decision is rendered in this case no dividend can be declared. The debts allowed, the claims against the insolvent estate are:

The Ignatian Literary Society on Tuesday evening elected the following officers: President, Rev. F. X. Nobili (re-elected); Vice-President, Alex. Rodgers; Recording Secretary, Thomas Hagan; Corresponding Secretary, J. M. Clement; Treasurer, Daniel Sullivan (re-elected); Librarian, Thomas Hagan (re-elected); Board of Directors—Robert Tobin, R. E. Queen, Thomas Hagan, Thomas Cleary, Chas. Lucas, Joseph Bonnet and Rudolph Kleinschmidt. The Society proposes to give a public entertainment in the Academy of Music, when a prize will be awarded to the member of the Society who shall distinguish himself most in the rudimentary branches.

The McGarrahan Suit

We take the following paragraph from Thursday's issue of the Call, and we only afford much pleasure to old Californians to learn that their highly respected fellow-citizen, Mr. McGarrahan, has such bright prospects of getting "his own again." The battle is long a one, and against odds, but honest and unscrupulous monopolists—the resistance he has so manfully made for years to fraud, perjury, forgery and theft—could have no more than a successful termination. We wish him a complete victory and a speedy one:

It appears by a telegram that Mr. McGarrahan has left Washington for California to prosecute his suit against the New Idria Quicksilver Mining Company. This suit—brief—and, we are happy to say, brought in the Courts of this State, was finally carried to Washington, where after a thorough investigation by a Committee of Congress, it was decided by a majority of nineteen that the gang justly and legally belonged to McGarrahan. The present suit is brought to recover property of the mine and five millions of dollars for damages. In a few days the case will come up before Judge Seldon. In fact, no doubt will be done, as observed with deep interest by the entire people of this Coast, and, indeed, by most of the leading men of the nation, as it has for so long a time figured prominently before Congress and elsewhere.

New Advertisements.

1st Festival at Notre Dame des Victoires' Church, TO-MORROW (Sunday), September 19th. Mass at 10 o'clock. Vespers at 3 o'clock.

$10 to $20 PER DAY. AGENTS WANTED. A. H. STINSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

GOLD AND SILVER PLATING

O'ALL KINDS, BY HARD, ON THE HERO. Or Process. In a superior manner, at the very lowest rates. Table ware, carriage work, bedsteads, harness, etc., done with neatness and dispatch.

PATRICK RIGNEY,
1718-1p 24 Geary street, San Francisco.

BACON & CO.,
BOOK AND JOB
PRINTERS,
PAPER RULERS,
—AND—
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,
Have the largest and finest office on the Pacific Coast.
Nianlic Building,
CLAY STREET.....CORNER SANSOME.

A NEW EDITORIAL LIGHT.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: Who is the editor of the Nationalist? Can you tell me? Who can he be? In God out, I beg of you, and satisfy an anxious community. He must be a great man—a very great man, a perfect gem in Intellect; and it is sure a pity that his name should not be counted from the public homage to which it is entitled. You saw that in the issue of the Nationalist of the 9th of this month he pins to its conscientiously that he is a good tax" as was wholly inconsistent with being a "loyal son of Ireland; and that Ireland would never be free until the Catholic Church was overturned in that country. In the issue of the 11th he further proved conclusively that our Irish are all unthinking asses, poor priest-ridden toads and fools, being every one of us led by the nose, without knowing why or where we are going. He proves all this, Mr. Editor, in such a nice, off-hand way, as not to leave any doubt about its being a fact. He just says "It is so." He does not descend, as small men do, to explain and argue the point. No, no; he is evidently too great for that sort of work. What a pity this great teacher—this new light, this poetical genius, who talks so beautifully about "cold water," "cake and beer," and "cold geese," who has suddenly appeared among us, did not get from under the bushel sooner; but let us be thankful that he has even now shown himself. It is evident he cannot hide from himself his own greatness; therefore there is no excuse for his not showing himself before.

Just read one of his grandiferous productions, and in every line of it you can fancy you see him swell and puff, as great fellows like him have a right to swell and puff, before they can produce anything. I assure that no one ever before thought it could be put forth without, in the judgment of all sane men, consigning the utterer to the company of fools or knaves. But now we see our mistake, for we all admire this great light of the Nationalist, while he asserts that we Irish, at the present day are a poor, miserable race of fools. Very fools, and unthinking asses, in the hands of smart fellows, born to secure the loaves and fishes. Now, Mr. Editor, I will acknowledge that there are such fellows, and that some of our countrymen in this country who are not so easily awed and overpowered as I am by this dazzling light of the Nationalist; they even go so far as to ridicule and scorn the silly assertion of "fools and fooldom," and insist that the Nationalist man is nothing but an insolent fool, and a knave to boot, and say that, in their opinion, this "Publishing Company" are tools themselves—the tools of a conspiracy. Two days, in our opinion, would be little enough.

The Judicial election on Wednesday was a quiet affair. Very little interest was manifested in the result. There were only 15,785 votes polled in this city, against 26,400 at the general election in September. A similar result is announced from the antelope counties. Judge E. W. McKinstry has been elected Justice of the Supreme Court by about 3,000 majority. Wheeler, as we predicted, has been elected Judge of the Nineteenth District Court by 481 majority, and Lounderback Judge of the Police Court by 13,534.

M. Hane, failing to appear before a French Court to answer charges preferred against him for being an active and acknowledged member of the late Commune, was sentenced to death.

Materialism and the Paray-le-Monial Pilgrimage.

We cheerfully give space to the following communication. The writer is evidently not a Catholic, but his protest against the materialistic tendencies of the age is one to the last instructive or reassuring:

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: It would seem the old-fashioned pilgrimage that once united in American and English communities, and which were accepted and acknowledged as the best evidences of moral health and vigor, are being invaded and brought into disrepute by a new and lax school of moralists. Our National Legislature and our Wall street have done, and are doing, their utmost to undermine business integrity and political and financial honesty in the land; while the stage, the office of which is supposed, by a pleasant fiction, to be that of a moral instructor, is lending its aid toward destroying the nice sense of virtue in our women; and the press, for the purpose of showing up as it deserves a murder which, for heartless brutality and cowardice, stands unparalleled in the annals even of the many fearful atrocities which yearly disgrace this much-boasted civilized country of ours.

It appears that for two years a woman named Martha Addison has been living in Islington with a man named Charles Dawson. On Saturday night, without any provocation, he left the house, and returned at midnight, and without even the exciting and debasing influence of drink as an excuse, Dawson asked her for a shilling. She left a candle and coolly said to the unfortunate woman, "Stop a few minutes to say your prayers and then I'll murder you." After waiting a few seconds Dawson picked up a black glass bottle, and struck the unfortunate woman to the floor. She fell without a moan. He then hurled the bottle at her face, and, following it up, broke into the closed fragments. He then left the house in the peaceful frame of mind with which they have been robbed by such an extraordinary combination of cruelty, violence and cruelty, as can scarcely be paralleled in the annals of any other people. The iniquitous measure of the Union has never been accepted or acquiesced in by the nation; nay, it has been repeatedly and uniformly exhibited as an oppressive and disastrous measure; and among several illustrations of the national feeling given by it, I need but refer to O'Connell's formidable agitation for its repeal.

But Ireland has her immortal reward; but his spirit, because it was the spirit of justice and truth, has gone marching on Irish people; and now their yearning for Home Government is more intense and more general than in the palmiest days of our history, determined as they are not to be satisfied without their National Legislature, for which they are pressing at the polls.

For me, I have no recollection of any period in which I did not regard the Irish Parliament, or grieve at its abstraction, or sigh for its restoration. And with the consciousness of this feeling, and with all the disasters which followed its extinction in thickening succession, I entertain a strong hope that the Irish people will be faithful to their best interests. They will peaceably and constitutionally achieve the realization of native rule, without which, indeed, we cannot expect sound Catholic education for the Irish will Ireland, or continued peace and prosperity for the United Kingdom, I have the honor to be, with sincere regard, Your faithful servant,

J JOHN, Archbishop of Tuam.

W. J. O'N. Daunt, Esq.

SOLEMN CONSECRATION

Of All Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin Mary to the Immaculate Conception.

MR. EDITOR—The Sodality of the Roman College, called the "Prima-Primaria," and representing the highest Sodality of all its officers, having no officacious means of communication with the numerous Sodalities established in the United States, wishes to address the following notice to the editors of all the Catholic papers of the world, and therefore request you to insert it in your columns.

While the Revolutionary party, now unfortunately predominant, is making every effort for the triumph of apostacy, by the ruin of the country every principal State, and by openly declared hatred of God and His Anointed, our Divine Heart of Jesus is opened to the Faithful, as an asylum and a refuge from the deluge of iniquity that threatens them. We will fly to it with confidence, because that Heart of Love and Mercy will never refuse admission, but, welcoming all with indulgent compassion, will save them from certain destruction. Catholics in this Province, aware of the threatening danger and fearing less they should be involved in it, are consecrating themselves, with a generous and holy enthusiasm, to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and place themselves under its paternal rule, to escape from the tyrannical sway of the world. And this is done, not only by individuals, but by entire districts, provinces, nations and associations of every grade and condition.

The Sodality, which is the mother and head of numberless other Sodalities in all parts of the world, and which exercises this universal devotion to the Sacred Heart without being compelled to take part in it, and therefore, on the third Sunday of July last year, on which day we are accustomed to consecrate to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, we resolved to consecrate to the same Divine Heart, by a solemn and public act, not only this Sodality, but also all the related Sodalities of the whole Catholic world.

We have no doubt that the daughters will rejoice at this action of the mother, and that they will unite with her, not merely in a passing act of approval, but in a public renewal of the same solemn consecration on the third Sunday of July of every year for the future.

And surely if this act of devotion to the Divine Heart of Jesus is necessary for the saving protection in the duty of all Christians who feel its importance in the evil days in which we live, it cannot but be a more stringent obligation for us members of the Sodalities which were instituted especially to defend and spread the cult and religion, together with the love of Jesus Christ and of His Most Blessed Mother. Can there be better proof of this than the special hatred with which the enemy of all good pursues our Sodalities, which he knows to be most powerful opponents to the accomplishment of his diabolical designs?

Hence, from the Hall of the "Prima-Primaria," July 22, 1873.

VINCENZO SCIPIONI, Prefect.
AGOSTINO CATTERINI, 1st Assistant.
NICCOLA BENZI, 2d Assistant.
GIOVANNI BRUSO, Pro. Sec.

The death of Joseph Walkup, at Auburn, is announced. Governor Walkup was Lieutenant-Governor during the administration of Higler, and for many years has been proprietor and editor of the Placer Herald. Several days ago he was attacked with a stroke of paralysis, which probably caused his death. The deceased leaves a family and brothers residing in this State. He was formerly from Pique, Miami county, Ohio, and emigrated to this State across the Plains in 1849.

Important to Settlers.

Railroad Lands that are Not Railroad Lands.

The following communication has been received in this city from Washington, and is self-explanatory:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., September 17, 1873.

GENTLEMEN—Your letter of the 15th inst. to the PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, SACRAMENTO, CAL., is before me, and in reply I have to inform you that the following tracts of land:

| Descriptions. | Section. | North. | West. |
|---|---|---|---|
| S. W. ¼ | 13 | | 1 |
| S. E. ¼ | 13 | | 1 |
| N. W. ¼ | 24 | | 1 |
| S. W. ¼ | 24 | | 1 |
| S. E. ¼ | 24 | | 1 |
| N. W. ¼ | 25 | | 1 |
| S. W. ¼ | 25 | | 1 |
| S. E. ¼ | 25 | | 1 |
| N. W. ¼ | 36 | | 1 |
| S. W. ¼ | 36 | | 1 |
| S. E. ¼ | 36 | | 1 |
| N. W. ¼ | 1 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 1 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 1 | | 2 |
| N. W. ¼ | 12 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 12 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 12 | | 2 |
| N. W. ¼ | 13 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 13 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 13 | | 2 |
| N. W. ¼ | 24 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 24 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 24 | | 2 |
| N. W. ¼ | 25 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 25 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 25 | | 2 |
| N. W. ¼ | 36 | | 2 |
| S. W. ¼ | 36 | | 2 |
| S. E. ¼ | 36 | | 2 |

—All of Mount Diablo meridian, were segregated by the grant to the California and Oregon Railroad, by the passage of the Act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, by section 3 thereof, and by the joint resolution of Congress adopted by the United States, and not contained in the list of lands thus segregated.

It is also appears that said lands were inadvertently included in patent to the Western Pacific Railroad Company, dated April 3, 1871, which conveyance is illegal, and you are hereby notified to withdraw the same, with a relinquishment of the apparent title of said Company acquired thereby.

Very respectfully, WILLIS DRUMMOND, Commissioner.

LETTER FROM SANTA CRUZ.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: Permit me to express our kindness in receiving communications from localities where your paper is extensively circulated and read with avidity. I thought the time not inopportune to send you an account of what is going on in our midst. The year which closes has produced a marked improvement in Santa Cruz. The long-talked-of railroad from here to Watsonville has at length commenced to be built, and in connection our citizens have made rapid improvements in the building line,

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

The New Church of the Capuchins.

Close to the tottering walls of an historic old chapel the new church of "Mary of the Angels" is rising up in graceful shape, and in proportions somewhat suited to the gathering needs of Catholic worship in our city. Great memories cling around and sanctify the venerable edifice whose place the new temple is destined to supply. Saintly priests have ministered at its altar, and words of burning eloquence have gone out from its pulpit. Dark and low and cramped as it looks to day, there was a time when "Church street Chapel" was ranked among the wonders of ecclesiastical architecture in the metropolis, and it seemed a very monster by contrast with the dingy constructions which alone the infamous cruelty of the penal laws would allow Catholics to own as dwelling places for the "Holy of Holies." In those dismal days the old chapel was a beacon light of Catholic faith, and cast out its comforting rays to many and many a street about. Arthur O'Leary often preached from its pulpit; Theobald Mathew won strength and perseverance for thousands upon thousands in their temperance pledge by his prayers in their behalf at the foot of its altar. Within shadow of their chapel the Capuchin Fathers of more than two generations ago built up the first Catholic poor school that had been known of in Dublin since the period of the Reformation, and hundreds went out from its halls guardians and defenders of the faith in troublous and risky times. Length of years has told upon the ancient fabric, and, as we said before, it is fast tottering to decay. But the successors of those who built and prayed in it were unwilling to part from the hallowed old spot, and they have set themselves with heart and soul to perpetuate the remembrances that ancircle it in a still more worthy of the better times in which they live. Therefore it is that they have cast the foundation of "Mary of the Angels," and have worked so earnestly that already it has assumed the outward lineaments of an almost completed structure. Amidst the gems of ecclesiastical architecture of which Dublin now can boast, the new church of the Capuchins will hold a not unworthy place.—Freeman, September 17.

Recent Cases in the Press.

We have already pointed out the important results to the United Kingdom which will be involved in the next general election. We are glad to find that the people of the South of Ireland seem to be fully alive to the momentousness of the pending issues. The electors of the Queen's county have set an example well worthy of general imitation. They have issued an address to their parliamentary representatives in which they set forth the questions which should occupy the attention of Irish constituencies at the approaching general election. Foremost among those questions is not unnaturally that of Home Rule. Next to that is the question of education, "respecting which they demand the simple question of full and complete equality. These demands are accompanied by a recommendation that the Irish representatives should form themselves into a permanent committee for the discussion of every proposed, substantive law or otherwise affecting the interests of Ireland. To this is added the suggestion that no individual member of Parliament should introduce any bill or give any notice of motion of importance having reference to Ireland without the sanction and support of the permanent committee. It is further addressed that Irish members should vote in a body, or abstain from voting on all party divisions, as the majority may decide. By this means unity and concentration of action would be attained, and the Irish vote made a telling blow in the struggle for Home Rule. These sentiments let us hope express the electors of Queen's county will soon complete their pioneering representation in this country from which they ought never to have been raised.—London Universe, Sept. 20.

Funeral of the Most Rev. Dr. Furlong.

The Most Rev. Dr. Furlong has issued a pastoral ordinan to his flock, prohibiting modern or fast dances, which was read throughout the diocese on Sunday. He has enjoined on the clergy, as a sacred and solemn duty in the discharge of their office as directors of conscience, to follow strictly the principles laid down in the address, and withdraw their powers of administering the Sacrament of Penance to those who are not resolved to abstain from the dances mentioned. He forbids appeals to the clergy to parsuade with regard to their children; and he said he but feebly reebood the sentiments of disobedience not only by party and zeal, but also for learning and wisdom, who have countenanced those dances and whom unfortunately then he did not condemn. Cardinal de Rondi excusses, "Who would not be horrified to see in Whose name these balls are not celebrating some Pagan festival? Where can you allow your eyes to rest in the midst of such shameful nudity and insnivious dances? No one will dare to say these are Christian assemblies." The late Bishop of Ossory said on "Ash sorrow" perceive that for some years past the le-et of pleasure in large Christian women to permit their daughters to engage in immoral dances. These same women make profession of piety, and they are also seen to approach the Sacraments." The Archbishop of Mathew says, "These dances were unknown in Ireland until they were introduced by men and women of loose character (in the temporary during the times of the French revolution." The Bishop of Limerick says, that "it was part in dances generally indecent that the mode of dancing in a mortal sin—hence the German dance among the educated nobles throughout the country and used them to Catholic Brothers' Schools.

A Rose Bella demonstration was held at Tralee on Sunday, September 16th. A procession marched through the town with band and banners with mottoes, such as "God save Ireland," "Home Rule," and etc., and carrying green boughs. At the meeting resolutions in favor of Home Rule and severely condemning the language used by Mr. O'Donogue in reference to Sir John Martin, were adopted. The rain fell heavily the whole day, and marred to a great extent the success of the demonstration.

ENGLAND.

The Archbishop and Ireland.

Commenting upon the recent letter of the Archbishop of Westminster to the Lord Primate of all Ireland, the London correspondent of the Nation brings out the political significance which he finds in the letter referred to. He says: "His Grace, hitherto, has avoided every pronouncement that might be calculated to commit him to the Home Rule policy. He maintained a prudent, honorable reticence, but certainly its silence was not undignified or meaning-less. Some months ago, when delicately pressed home upon the subject by a number of Irishmen then concerned in the founding of a Catholic club in London, his Grace declined to say yes or nay; and even then his graceful hesitation lent new life to the hope that he could be counted reckoned among the friends of Irish Parliamentary autonomy. He is its avowed friend to-day, and all Catholic Ireland in these bright days are more than ever his friends—loyal men and gentle women who would face the hard death rather than see a hair of that august head injured. Certainly to the Archbishop —seeing, around on all sides, the wicked-ness to which noman with eyes in his head can be blind, and constantly hearing the things to which no man with ears can be deaf—the spectacle of a great nation and a great people, such as the Irish fairly claim to be, "pervaded by faith and openly serving (God by every form of public and private duty," forms a hope, and a rallying ground, impregnable to the assaults of all despairs and misgivings. The man who writes—a century hence—the story of the Irish in England will naturally seize upon his Grace's letter as indicating the exact point at which our people, abused by the English press, somewhat scurrilously cast by the English masses, and contemptuously patronized by the doctrinaires, found in the gruegal, purest, gentlest, boldest, Prelate of this day, not a barren fount of emotional sympathy, but one who > "Stands his ground—plants his foot and wins—

> The hidden thunder clinging to the roof
> Of a closed bright, the lightning—was himself
> Not for himself, but for their sakes who writhed
> Under the fire of the world's hate for Ireland,
> And looked to him who said, 'This may not be.'"

Dr. Manning's Letter.

The Spectator has an article on the Archbishop's letter to the Primate of all Ireland in which an invidious distinction is drawn between the Catholic Church in England and in Ireland. The former is compared to a young man who armed at once to the front, the latter to a good-humored, round and lazy old beadle. The first comparison is, we think, a good one, but the other is decidedly opposed to facts. The Irish have no magnificent an edifice as the Armagh Cathedral is a more than sufficient answer to the accusation. Nor is there a town where did the Spectator learn that violent attempts at proselytizing were the best indications of Catholic energy and power? Surely not from a fair comparison of Ireland with other Catholic countries; for neither in countries where the Catholic faith is the faith of the people, nor in countries where it is the religion of a small minority, as in England, is the Church so full of life and strength as in the country of St. Patrick. The Irish have always been called a missionary people, and still, even in our own day, they deserve the title; the present condition of the Church of England sufficiently proves; but they are not like the Pharisees, who would move heaven and earth to gain one proselyte, and therefore it is that they do not enter into what the Spectator calls a "crusade against Irish Protestantism." The writer says, however, under a slight misapprehension when he thinks that the Catholic faith is not making progress among Protestants in Ireland. Its progress is not paraded before the world, but, nevertheless, is rapidly and surely advancing, even in Ulster.—Catholic Opinion, September 20.

Wesleyan Relics.

We have just read, as curiously as we could, the following paragraph, sent to us by a "constant reader:" "The foundation-stone of a Wesleyan chapel was laid at Burslem the other day, and it was announced that portions of the coffin, the shroud and the hair of John Wesley had been deposited in a bottle to be fixed in a cavity. Burslem is a sizeable town, and, as the whole was already pretty well provided sadly with 'Bethels' of all sizes and of the ones two sectarian shops. The population of less than 20,000, it had three Anglican churches and fourteen Methodist and other 'gospel shops.' And now they possess another, and, what is more, they have secured the owners of some fragments of the coffin and shroud of Wesley, as also a portion of his hair. This would be all very well, and quite natural in any race of people except that out of which have been formed the sects of Protestantism. Veneration is praiseworthy; but, then, the English-hall bursey of every hue has always scoffed at and derided it. Rome alone is moderal and is devout; but the English have long have from the first descended it as an invention of superstition. Wesley himself (unless we have read his catechism backwards) has called it diabolical and a deadly sin. What changed his views? Was it the decision parent these Wesleyans prove themselves to be? Or was it a desire to recommend them to the Calvinist "heels," and perhaps when he has drained the performances at the Lyric and Alhambra music halls, to regale us with a lecture upon the Popery of Wesleyanism.—London Universe, September 20.

The Alabama War.

The English have never once contemplated the possibility of defeat in the war which they have undertaken against the savages of Ashantee. They have calculated and perhaps rightly calculated, that their longrange rifles, Armstrong guns, and superior discipline will prove altogether more than a match for these wretched enemies. But, nevertheless, within the past week there has arrived from the Gold Coast such a British expedition up the river Prah was sometime since completely cut up by an unbounded force it had attacked at sunrise and a half on its route. The official account of it represented that some of the crew of an English man-of-war, the Rattlesnake, had been wounded by shots dired from out the woods on the banks of the Prah. Now a letter from the correspondent of the Times at Sierra Leone states that not only was the expedition cut to pieces by the natives, but that the "every man of the expedition, with a single exception, was more or less severely wounded." The Commodore received no fewer than four wounds, and one unfortunate officer was dragged on shore by the Ashantees, who hacked off his head with their knives in the presence of his comrades. In fact a very serious reverse was sustained, the moral effect of which will be all the more probably far more disastrous than are its material results.—Nation, September 20.

English Republicanism.

The Anglish Republicans, if we are to accept their own account of their progress, are making headway. The second conference of the "National Republican Brotherhood" was held on Monday at Nottingham, and the half-yearly report read and adopted thereat stated that since the decision not to discuss on the platform of the Brotherhood "anything of a religious or anti-religious character," "several clergymen and well-known Christians" had joined the Atheists who had almost exclusive charge of the movement. It appears from this report that the Republicans of England consider the Irish political prisoners brother Republicans, and have asked the new Home Secretary to grant them an amnesty. But Mr. Lowe refused their request; and, on the whole, when one looks into the matter closely, he will find that the Republican idea has not made that advance among the English with certain commentators of late time since would lead him to expect.—Nation, September 20.

FRANCE.

The Evacuation.

The evacuation of the French territory has been completed; the last Prussian soldier marched out of Verdun on Saturday, and the liberation of the soil is now a joyful reality. The daily papers are full of details of the evacuation; but in reality these details tell. The movement was a strategical one, and it was performed, as the Prussians well knew how, with the regularity of clock-work. The story sent by the Times correspondent about a financial difficulty at the last moment—a claim of a million of francs left outstanding for some postal claims after the indemnity had been paid in full—was a canard; and the Times was hoaxed, as it is often than it cares to own. The matter is cleared up in a paragraph which appeared in the Courrier de Verdun. It says: "Several Paris journals, as well as some foreign newspapers, have stated that difficulties of a serious nature were raised at the last moment between the Comte de St. Vallier and the German Commissioner charged with settling the clauses of the liberation of the territory. No difficulty have been encountered in Verdun—we believe we ought to state that we learn from a sure source that they have not existed anywhere. The last ceremonial observance by the late President of the Republic was to pay a speech to a French deputation at Ouchy, near Lausanne, last Monday, is reported to have stated positively that he and his friends included, when the Assembly met, to take steps to do their utmost to promote the restoration of a Conservative Republic. The misfortune is the existence of a doubt whether, in such a campaign, M. Thiers would be supported by his former friends in the Left Centre.—Weekly Register, September 20.

The Pastoral of the Archbishop of Paris.

The Pastoral Letter of the Archbishop of Paris, directing prayers to be offered in the Church under persecution, and especially for the Holy See, which has been despoiled of its rights and independence, has not it appears, as originally reported, been made the subject of diplomatic remonstrance by Italy, but it has been fiercely attacked by the Left in the Permanent Committee at Versailles. H. Noel Parfait declared that the Pastoral was a direct act of hostility friendly to France, and that the authorities in Rome had been obliged to forbid its publication in Italy. He wished to know whether the government was prepared to express their condemnation of it. To this the Duc de Broglie replied: Certainly not; he with sympathetic emotion. But there is nothing to do. The Government had its policy, which was certain commandments to observe in the diplomatic circular, and these were the only documents for which it considered itself responsible. The Pastoral was a question of taste, and as his colleagues seemed to satisfy the Left, who attempted to pin the Government to a repudiation of the Archbishop's manifesto, which, however, the Duc de la Rochefoucauld declared that he wholly shared. Ultimately, and evidently with "Bethels" of all sizes and of the ## COAST MINING NEWS.

A new concentration machine, for separating worthless rock from valuable ore, has been patented by Messrs. Peer and Lundquist of California. It consists of an elliptical pan, seven feet long and ten inches deep, made of heavy sheet iron. It has a horizontal jigging motion, and receives a vertical percussion at intervals. The heavier matter sinks and the lighter is carried away by the water. The machine has been tried at one of the foundries on Fremont street, and the reports of working are favorable.

AMADOR COUNTY.

The Bostwick mine, at Scottsville, about one and a half miles from Jackson, in Amador county, assays $25 per ton in gold, and $6 in silver.

Mr. Dougherty, of Comanche, informs us that work on Matt. Murray's coal mines, at Rancho La Liebre, is being energetically prosecuted, and that a fine body of good coal has been developed.

The citizens of Volcano are about inaugurating a very important enterprise, one in which, if prosecuted with diligence, must not only prove successful, but will be the means of bringing about a new era in prosperity in that part of the county. A meeting has been held for the purpose of organising a company to run prospect tunnels into the hills. Volcano and vicinity has produced more gold than any placer locality in the county. Most of the gulches leading into the basin wherein the town is located, have been fabulously rich, and the same may be truthfully said of the flats. Volcano numbers among its population very many energetic, enterprising men, who, when they undertake an important enterprise, such as the one now under consideration, will push it on to success. We really regard this movement on the part of citizens of Volcano as a very important one, not only to that town, but to the county. Should the contemplated tunnel prove successful, a mining region would be opened up that would acquire years to exhaust. We believe more gold by a thousand fold will be taken from deposits underlying the hills by which Volcano is surrounded than ever came from its gulches and flats.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

Another mine has been struck in the Wolverine, near Railroad. The 300-foot level has penetrated the south chimney a few feet, but for the distance made the ledge is of good size, and contains considerable galena and iron sulphurets, with gold visible to the naked eye. The 300 foot stopes on the same chimney are producing excellent rock; also the shaft, sinking below the 300-foot level on the north chimney.

Rich quartz has been struck in the Prussian Hill mine, near Railroad Flat. The company that recently came into possession of the property are pushing operations with great energy and vigor, and we are glad to know that the mine is exceeding their expectations.

NEVADA COUNTY.

The ledge owned by Bradley, Kile & Rose is located in Willow Valley, and has recently been leased by MacNate & Co. The company are now engaged in taking out ore from the upper level, which has paid them at the rate of $40 per ton, making fair dividends after all expenses are paid.

The fall ledge mine (better known as Parrish) is looking well at the present time. A party of miners have a contract there for taking ore, and are taking out rock which pays over $50 a ton. A crushing was had the other day of rock taken out by ten men in three weeks' time, and the result was 70½ ounces of gold, worth about $1,400.

PLUMAS COUNTY.

The National of the 11th says: "The Chapin mine has been taking out a great deal of rich cinnabar since our last. So much so as to be necessary to pay for putting up a furnace. Mr. Chapin went on yesterday morning to the Independence to go to Kadzville and see the works there, and make immediate arrangements for putting up one of those machines."

IRE COUNTY.

Work on the McDonough and Welch mine is being prosecuted with vigor. As we readers may remember, it is located in Cerro Gordo district. It is north of the Belshazzar and Whitney, and is supposed to be on the same vein. The ledge varies from one to three feet, and assays from $500 to $1,100 per ton in silver, besides some good gold. A shaft, 80 feet deep, has been sunk and two drifts have been run, the first of which is about 70 feet and the second 110. The rock taken from the mine is chiefly shipped to Swansea, and pays all the running expenses. The mine contains only 1,500 feet, and it seems to be the general opinion that when it takes its name, Thomas McDonough and Welch, who have given us the name of an old friend of theirs, John T. Barry of San Francisco. The Welch and McDonough is not incorporated, but is a mere levied assessment, and soon expects to declare a good dividend—a consummation devoutly to be wished."

State of Nevada.

The following is condensed from the Gold Hill News of October 11th:

BELCHER.—Daily yield 400 tons of ore. The quantity of ore extracted can be greatly increased whenever mills can be obtained to crush it. The main incline is down 113 feet below the 1,300 foot level, and sinking making excellent progress, having exhibited between the Crown Point and Yellow Jacket will shortly be removed to the intended lay from the 1,300 foot level will be resumed.

CROWN POINT.—About 380 tons of ore are being extracted daily. It is taken from the 1,000, 1,200 and 1,300 foot levels. Water, sounding but, flows as freely from the main drift on the 1,500 foot station that it has been considered unsafe to proceed with it, as the pump is now worked to its fullest capacity.

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA.—Enlarging the main shaft is being completed, and sinking once through it will be commenced in about four days more. There are now sixty tons of high grade ore being taken daily through the main drift on the 1,167-foot level of the Gould & Curry shaft, which will be increased to 300 tons per day as soon as the company can resume hoisting through their own shaft.

RAYMOND CONSOLIDATED.—The main west drift at the second station, during the week, cut through a solid vein of ore, lying directly against the east wall of the ledge. Five feet in thickness, which assays from $50 to $92 per ton. The drift is still continued to the westward, the face being in very promising vein matter, almost identical in character of striking a continuation of the ore.

JUNIPER.—The north drift from the upraise in the north drift on the 800 foot level, has developed some rich ore, which bids fair to develop into a fine and extensive body. The east cross-cut from the 300-foot level is being pushed rapidly ahead to make connection with the Waller Defoe works.

SAVAGE.—Sinking the main incline for the 1,500-foot level is making fine progress, the rock in the bottom working and blasting well. The east cross-cut on the 1,600-foot level is still pushed steadily ahead, with the face in clay, quartz and porphyry.

AMERICAN FLAT.—The first cross-cut from the main south drift at the station, has penetrated a splendid body of ore at the distance of ten feet, the full face of the drift still being fine ore.

DAISEY.—The shaft is down 103 feet, the sinking making excellent progress, the rock in the bottom blasting and working finely. An assessment of 50 cents per share was levied on the 9th inst.

YUCCA.—The shaft is down 108 feet, the sinking making good progress, although the flow of water somewhat impedes the work.

CROWN POINT.—Daily yield 100 tons of ore, the assay value of which is $38 per ton. In the Nine Wing section the ore breasts are not yet yielding quite so well at our last report. In the Potosi section the ore shows a considerable improvement in quality.

IMPERIAL.—Sinking the main incline is making fair headway, though the rock in the bottom blasts quite hard. The quartz in the face of the south drift on the 1,700-foot level has shown considerable improvement during the week. The cross-cut west on the 1,700 foot level is making good progress.

SIERRA NEVADA.—There is but little change in this mine to report. The ore breasts are all looking and yielding finely. The mill is kept steadily running, crushing ore from the mine. Daily yield, 80 tons of ore.

SILVER HILL.—The ore breasts on the first level, both north and south, continue to improve in appearance and quality of the ore extracted. The ore body on the lower level of the mine continues to improve in both the main north drift and west crosscut.

SCORCH.—The main east drift, at the second station of the new shaft in the cañon, is still driven ahead with the appearance of tapping the ledge in a very short time, when it is the intention to again start the company's mill on ore from the mine.

HALE & NORCROSS.—Daily yield, 60 tons of ore. Sinking the incline is making steady progress, though the rock in the bottom continues to blast tough and hard.

NORTH.—The face of the east cross-cut on the 1,700-foot level shows considerable improvement since our last report. The material in the face is a decomposed spar, with some quartz and excellent indications of a ore body ahead, proving continuously that the east wall of the ledge has not yet been reached.

NEW YORK CONSOLIDATED.—Sinking the shaft is making good progress, although the work is somewhat impeded by the heavy flow of water.

WOODSIDE.—Sinking the shaft is making good headway, the rock in the bottom working finely. Retaining ore from the old works continues to be the case, the ore only holding out, but steadily improving in quality and quantity as the rock progresses.

GOULD & CURRY.—Drifting and prospecting the different levels throughout the mine is progressing as usual, with no important developments of value to report.

ARIZONA, THE LAST EL DORADO.—The main west CDE at the 400-foot station is still driven ahead, with strong indications of a near approach to the main ledge.

BUCKEYE.—There is little or no change in either the quantity or quality of the ore now extracted since our last report. All the ore-producing sections are looking and yielding well. The ledge still continues to improve in size as depth is attained in the mine.

CALEDONIA.—The work of enlarging the main shaft by the addition of a third compartment is making good progress. The ore breast, both north and south, on the second level, is yielding finely.

UTAH.—Sinking the shaft is making but slow progress, the heat at the bottom of which from the bottom considerably impeding the work. The entire bottom of the shaft is in fine condition for work, with occasional spots of excellent ore.

GUSHMAN.—Sinking the shaft is making good progress, the rock in the bottom working finely. Extracting ly for him, passed unnoticed in the noise of the ride.

The troops were marched to a low building, which they immediately perceived was the railway station.

"Take the hostages into the station, and place a guard over them," said the officer with the yellow fringes to his face.

The prisoners were helped down with no gentle hand, and marched into the station, where a small salle d'attente received them.

"When does the train proceed?", they could hear asked by one of the sergeants on the platform to another.

"I fancy not until the infantry and the prisoners requisitioned from the villages come up."

"That will be an hour."

"Two, probably."

It proved to be more. The progress of plundered cows, of carts with stolen wine and bread, of frightened peasants coming in as prisoners on foot, was tardy, and the evening had grown into night when the convoy got to the station. Loading the trains with baggage, plunder and soldiers, proved also a tedious operation, and midnight had nearly come when it was prepared to start. The hostages had received little attention, a hunch of black bread and a draught of water being all the food offered to them.

His companions accepted it, but old Jean Voss, who was unable to eat even the little delicacies which Annette had on that very day tried to tempt him with, turned with loathing from the rough meal. He felt no hunger, appetite having been dulled with the rest of his senses. Even had his friends and neighbors not been too much terrified to converse, he would not have been able to join in any coherent discourse. For him the hours passed in a round of stupefied amazement.

At last the train was loaded and ready to depart.

"The hostages," called out a commanding voice.

"Come hostages—up quickly."

The four men rose, obediently. On the platform it was dark save where a rude lantern or a torch lit up a portion, but the ground was even, though somewhat encumbered with packages. But when they arrived at the end of the platform they had not reached their destination. The train was long, stretching over several hundred yards.

"This way," said one of the soldiers who held Jean Voss between them. They went down off the platform along the rough way at the side of the line. The old man endeavored to drag his faltering limbs after him. Thus stumbling along they reached the rail. Some rough planks above spread upon the coals in the tender, and the hostages were bade to mount and to take their seats on these. Old Jean was pushed up, not ungently, for the men in charge of him had pity on the poor old captive.

"Need they be tied?" inquired the corporal in charge of the party.

"I think not," laughed the sergeant; "they are not likely to jump off while the train is in motion."

No whistle was given but it might all need lessly the attention of a supposed watchful peasantry, as the train moved off. It went on cautiously gathering way until at its speed increased to about fifteen miles an hour. Though the time was summer the air even when still was not warm. When the pace grew tolerably rapid the draught became like a chill north wind. Jean Voss shivered from head to foot.

"How is it with you, old friend?" asked the Maire kindly.

The old man gave no answer.

"Cheer up, Jean Voss," said the Maire, "or you will get chilled to death."

A slight moan was all the answer.

The train went on moving, but with speed slackened, and at last, with a great jolt, which nearly shook the hostages from their seats, it stopped.

After a while the guard came up to the tender where the hostages sat.

"Get down," said the Sergeant.

Three of the party descended clumsily over the iron side and wheels of the tender.

"Come, you fourth," said the Sergeant.

No answer was made.

"Obstinate pig," said the Sergeant angrily, "come down or I will make you."

He held up his lantern as he spoke. It shone upon a face which gleamed white and cold in the glare. The old man had passed beyond the power of General Count Von Robenstich.

"Why, he is dead!" exclaimed the Sergeant.

"What else could you expect?" asked the Maire, forgetting prudence in his anger, "when you put a feeble, dying old man on such a journey than at night? I say it is mere murder."

"Hold your damned tongue," called out the Sergeant, "or you may learn whether you like a rope better than a ride. Come, take this body down out of this."

Four of the soldiers lifted down the corpse of Jean Voss.

"Do you see," said the Sergeant, "that you Frenchmen are of some use in the world? We have put you into the front of the train in order that your countrymen may play no tricks with it."

"I wish to Heaven they had smashed it and us," said the maire passionately.

"Ah, said the Sergeant mockingly, "you allow your feelings to run away with you. Is it not better a worthless old man like that should die than part come to the army of the Fatherland?"

"I tell you the Fatherland makes war by murder," answered the Maire.

"What," called out the Sergeant in a savage tone, "do you dare to blaspheme the glorious, unified German nation? I have warned you already that you had better be careful if you do not want to follow the example of your wretched countryman there. Here, fling that carpse into one of the goods stores."

The body was taken as the Sergeant directed.

"And now, brothers," said the patriot warrior, "let us sing Die Wacht am Rhein."

CHAPTER XXI.

"LETTERS FROM HOME."

"Vive L'Empereur!" was the cry which rose from a body of men who marched on a hot and dusty day in August by one of the main roads that led through the camp at Chalons.

No audible response was made to the loyal exclamation, but critical and rather contemptuous eyes examined the new comers.

"How full of enthusiasm messieurs the mobiots come up!" remarked an officer who sat in a café dividing his attention between a cigar and a glass of absinthe.

"Yes," replied his neighbor, "but it is true lumpkin loyalty. It cannot shout in time as the mob of a city would which had been used to the drill of a Sous-Prefet."

All the bowing for it it shouted in time it would be out of harmony with the picturesque irregularity of its step."

"When, I wonder, will these rawnails be fit to go into the field?"

In a voice clear sounding and sharp a grim voice replied, and had been listening to the conversation carried on with careless loudness, interrupted, "When you and jackanapses like you, who are called officers of the Imperial army, attend to your duties instead of lounging away precious time here in idleness and luxury."

So saying he walked out leaving the critics dumbfounded with amazement.

"Saprisi," said the first speaker of the two starting up from his seat, "that is the language of insult! He was almost a lad, the down of his mustache giving but questionable assurance of his manhood. "I shall demand reparation for wounded honor. Do you know who he is?"

"I think he is Colonel Lambeau. He was Major at Wissenbourg, and was promoted on the spot for the manner in which he covered the retreat and carried the remains of the General Douay."

"I am glad you know him, Alphonse, for you shall bear him a cartel from me."

"Are you a fool?" inquired his companion, who had the advantage of twelve months' seniority in years and service.

"Pardieu, none of your airs of superiority with me. I am young, but I am a gentleman and an officer, and I wear a sword, and no one, no matter what his rank, shall offend me with impunity."

"Tenez, Charles. Nobody suspects you for a coward, but you may yet prove to be an ass. If you send a challenge to a man who has just distinguished himself like Colonel Lambeau, you will not only get laughed at over the whole camp, but you will in all probability be sent to the rear. The Marshal is likely to tolerate but an attempt on the part of a Frenchman to slay one of his best officers."

"If he will not fight what right has he to be inspecting?"

"In truth, Charles, was he inspecting? Did he, indeed, go too far when he hinted that we might be better employed in looking after the young soldiers than in this way?"—pointing significantly to the contents of the table at which they had been seated.

"Pshaw! Can the army not fight without incessantly worrying about drill?"

"French armies can fight, but apparently the experience of the last two or three weeks indicates that they would fight even better if they had been more strictly drilled."

"Drill could hardly make them conquer six to one if their natural valor failed."

"Possibly not, but it would have made them bear defeat better. They say," here he lowered his voice, "that the Marshal was able to bring away little more than a third of his force."

"Ah, that is serious."

"Come, let us go out and see what stuff the new recruits are made of. I'm not so exciting it is a more harmless occupation than challenging a high officer, who has fought the Prussians well under the most tremendous disadvantages."

They strolled in the direction taken by the batch of mobiles who had given occasion to their conversation. The recruits had halted and were being inspected by a staff-officer. Many idlers had come forward, criticising the beauty of the country lads, who now for the first time came into contact with the regular army.

"I wonder has is bonne maman put by any sausage in his sack of powder pretty little ploupiou who makes such frantic attempts to grow a mustache?" was the good-natured remark of one.

"More likely she gave him a whipping before coming to get licked into shape here," sneered another.

"I hope she gave him a handkerchief to hold his tears," said a third.

The object of these disparaging criticisms was rather an undersized youth, who looked bewildered and disconcerted with the novelties about him. He was one of those who raised a cry of Vive l'Empereur that had received little response save shouts of laughter from those among whom his detachment passed. The observations which we have quoted, and many others to the same effect, were spoken in tones so loudas to be easily heard by him.

Suddenly his eye lit, as his ear caught accents which sounded familiarly. He heard a grave voice say—"I think you might be a little more sparing of your wit on poor fellows who come in an hour of need to do their best for the country."

"Michel Voss, Michel Voss!" cried out the little mobiot from the ranks.

"Sacre," cried out a Sergeant, "is this the discipline you have learned?"

The poor mobile looked ready to sink into his gaiters, but Michel Voss, whose voice it was that had attracted him, recognized with joy the face of an old village companion. He remembered they had played together, and had even experienced passing gentle feelings, which he knew would have made the meeting a delight to him, but superadded there was the hunger of news from home, which had been intensified by the excitement of events through which he had recently passed.

But he was compelled to curb his impatience. Lax as was the discipline of the French army then, it would hardly be tolerated that an officer should converse with others in the ranks, and as the inspecting officer was rather stricter than the average, poor Pierre Lochot had a narrow escape of a thrashing for the irregularity of his exclaiation. Michel was, therefore, compelled to wait —eating his heart meanwhile—for the slow process of inspection; to follow the detachment as it was marched off to the quarter assigned to the raw troops, so as not to lose sight of his newly discovered neighbor; to hang about for an hour until at last Pierre Lochot, released from control, came bounding over the ground to his friend who, he was quick enough to see, was watching for him with impatience.

"Ah, ah! Michel," he cried, as he ran to meet him, and flung himself upon the neck of young Voss, "how glad, how glad, I am to see thee." And the tears rushed into the poor boy's eyes at the joy of finding an old familiar face amid the crowd of strange ones.

"Believe me, Pierre, thou are not more glad than I to see an old playfellow—one from the dear village—"

"Tell me how they all are." "Have you seen them?"

"Ah, I was taken away before the Prussians came, but afterwards we marched within ten miles of the village, and several of the poor people came to us in a dreadful fright, running away from the cruelties and excesses of those terrible men."

"Who were they? Tell me. Was my father or Jean among them, or Annette Beaune?"

"To be sure, pretty Annette came. In the joy of seeing thee I was near forgetting. She gave me a letter for thee—"

"Oh, here, here, Pierre, good Pierre, hast thou got it—give it to me!"

"Got it, Michel? Thou dost not think I would neglect a letter for thee written by thy pretty fiancée—ah, and though I had no speech of her she looked sad, poor thing!"

"Sad! ah—Pierre, give me the letter."

"Where dost thou think I have kept that letter?"

"Safe, safe, I am sure; but give it to me, dear Pierre."

"Tenez," said Pierre, slowly and solemnly touching the breast of his tunic, "dost thou not see that I have kept it for thee as if it were a souvenir from ins propre chere amie—from Annette my love?" And at last he produced from the inner folds of his garment the much wished for letter.

"Here," he said, handing it to Michel. "Pretty Annette" he said indeed the laughter in her eyes I used to remember in our village when she give me this, but I am sure its contents will make thee glad. Girls look sad when they think of lovers absent at the war, but lovers are glad to get their letters, without least I am sure—" and here poor little Pierre heaved a sigh—though I am not long at the war, yet I should dearly like to have a letter from my fiancée—but she cannot write, poor thing."

Heedless of poor Pierre's chatter Michel tore open the paper, and eagerly devoured its contents, which ran in the following fashion:

MY DEAR FRIEND—I write to thee in bitter sorrow and anxiety. I know not whether this will find thee in life or in health, and I do not know, alas, that if it come to thee it will ever be read by thee, so great a new grief to thy pain. Oh, Michel, how can I tell thee the dreadful news! We are wounded in our hearts. It will nearly kill Oh, Michel, mon cher, I grieve for thee and for myself. I would I were near thee to give thee comfort, and to hear it in return from thy dear lips. But instead of comfort I miss only add to thy sorrow by telling how these awful events have happened. Thy poor father was cheerful and full of hope so long, as thy glorious army was near, and he had begun to think that wouldst soon return without having incurred any danger. Then after the news of the bouie of Wissembourg so dismay came of thee, and, oh, God, none since. Where, where are thou, Michel?

The poor old man was sorely stricken with thinking of you, and could settle himself down to sought. He used constantly to go up to the village to try if he could meet any one from the army who would give him tidings of his dear son. One day, at the Cerf Volant, the Uhlans came. I believe they came to see if there were any Prussians concealed. Some cruelty of the French kind was struck—he, the poor, gray-headed, kind old father. I found him lying bleeding, insensible on the ground. We got him home and he showed signs of recovery when the Prussians came again. This time they dragged him out of the house to be what they called a hostage. It appeared that they are afraid our peasants will tear up the line of railw—our railroads —on which they send their armies, and they resolved to put the persons of most consideration in the front of their trains, so that the peasants may know their own countrymen will be the first killed if anything happen to the train. Our Maire, Edouard Martin, Enrique Conscesoe and thy poor father were, it seems, selected. First they locked the village under what they called requisitions, and then those four were taken away to the railway station at Mommenheim, and they were put upon the engine, or the tender—I am not sure which —and driven along through the dark night all the way to Dutwiller—five leagues, as thou knowest. The Maire and Martin and Conscience returned none the worse. Your father—oh, Michel, he almost sick to death when taken from his home, died on the way. I have not seen him yet, but thy brother Jean has gone to Dutzwiller to fetch him back. He is dying, they say, but will not add to your misery by indulging in false hopes. Annette is almost as ill. We would have done so, but he was not in the house the day they came to take away thy father.

"Oh," groaned Michel, interrupting his perusal, "I would give my right arm that he had been there—and I his kiss."

With sad eyes and gloomy brow he continued to devour the contents:

I did not hear until this morning of the attack on the village, for I was ill myself, for I was buried myself in affliction—I had death in my own house. My poor father, my dear, suffering, patient mother, has come to her death by these awful Prussians. They know not she had the fever when they let for the army, and my letters told thee how escape of a shock to her system, the irregularity of his exclaiation. Michel was, therefore, compelled to wait —eating his heart meanwhile—for the slow process of inspection; to follow the detachment as it was marched off to the quarter assigned to the raw troops, so as not to lose sight of his newly discovered neighbor; to hang about for an hour until at last Pierre Lochot, released from control, came bounding over the ground to his friend who, he was quick enough to see, was watching for him with impatience.

"Ah, ah! Michel," he cried, as he ran to meet him, and flung himself upon the neck of young Voss, "how glad, how glad, I am to see thee." And the tears rushed into the poor boy's eyes at the joy of finding an old familiar face amid the crowd of strange ones.

"Believe me, Pierre, thou are not more glad than I to see an old playfellow—one from the dear village—"

"Tell me how they all are." "Have you seen them?"

"Ah, I was taken away before the Prussians came, but afterwards we marched within ten miles of the village, and several of the poor people came to us in a dreadful fright, running away from the cruelties and excesses of those terrible men."

"Who were they? Tell me. Was my father or Jean among them, or Annette Beaune?"

"To be sure, pretty Annette came. In the joy of seeing thee I was near forgetting. She gave me a letter for thee—"

"Oh, here, here, Pierre, good Pierre, hast thou got it—give it to me!"

"Got it, Michel? Thou dost not think I would neglect a letter for thee written by thy pretty fiancée—ah, and though I had no speech of her she looked sad, poor thing!"

"Sad! ah—Pierre, give me the letter."

"Where dost thou think I have kept that letter?"

"Safe, safe, I am sure; but give it to me, dear Pierre."

"Tenez," said Pierre, slowly and solemnly touching the breast of his tunic, "dost thou not see that I have kept it for thee as if it were a souvenir from ins propre chere amie—from Annette my love?" And at last he produced from the inner folds of his garment the much wished for letter.

"Here," he said, handing it to Michel. "Pretty Annette" he said indeed the laughter in her eyes I used to remember in our village when she give me this, but I am sure its contents will make thee glad. Girls look sad when they think of lovers absent at the war, but lovers are glad to get their letters, without least I am sure—" and here poor little Pierre heaved a sigh—though I am not long at the war, yet I should dearly like to have a letter from my fiancée—but she cannot write, poor thing."

Heedless of poor Pierre's chatter Michel tore open the paper, and eagerly devoured its contents, which ran in the following fashion:

MY DEAR FRIEND—I write to thee in bitter sorrow and anxiety. I know not whether this will find thee in life or in health, and I do not know, alas, that if it come to thee it will ever be read by thee, so great a new grief to thy pain. Oh, Michel, how can I tell thee the dreadful news! We are wounded in our hearts. It will nearly kill Oh, Michel, mon cher, I grieve for thee and for myself. I would I were near thee to give thee comfort, and to hear it in return from thy dear lips. But instead of comfort I miss only add to thy sorrow by telling how these awful events have happened. Thy poor father was cheerful and full of hope so long, as thy glorious army was near, and he had begun to think that wouldst soon return without having incurred any danger. Then after the news of the bouie of Wissembourg so dismay came of thee, and, oh, God, none since. Where, where are thou, Michel?

The poor old man was sorely stricken with thinking of you, and could settle himself down to sought. He used constantly to go up to the village to try if he could meet any one from the army who would give him tidings of his dear son. One day, at the Cerf Volant, the Uhlans came. I believe they came to see if there were any Prussians concealed. Some cruelty of the French kind was struck—he, the poor, gray-headed, kind old father. I found him lying bleeding, insensible on the ground. We got him home and he showed signs of recovery when the Prussians came again. This time they dragged him out of the house to be what they called a hostage. It appeared that they are afraid our peasants will tear up the line of railw—our railroads —on which they send their armies, and they resolved to put the persons of most consideration in the front of their trains, so that the peasants may know their own countrymen will be the first killed if anything happen to the train. Our Maire, Edouard Martin, Enrique Conscesoe and thy poor father were, it seems, selected. First they locked the village under what they called requisitions, and then those four were taken away to the railway station at Mommenheim, and they were put upon the engine, or the tender—I am not sure which —and driven along through the dark night all the way to Dutwiller—five leagues, as thou knowest. The Maire and Martin and Conscience returned none the worse. Your father—oh, Michel, he almost sick to death when taken from his home, died on the way. I have not seen him yet, but thy brother Jean has gone to Dutzwiller to fetch him back. He is dying, they say, but will not add to your misery by indulging in false hopes. Annette is almost as ill. We would have done so, but he was not in the house the day they came to take away thy father.

"Oh," groaned Michel, interrupting his perusal, "I would give my right arm that he had been there—and I his kiss."

With sad eyes and gloomy brow he continued to devour the contents:

I did not hear until this morning of the attack on the village, for I was ill myself, for I was buried myself in affliction—I had death in my own house. My poor father, my dear, suffering, patient mother, has come to her death by these awful Prussians. They know not she had the fever when they let for the army, and my letters told thee how escape of a shock to her system, she had almost recovered. But she was not to escape—very weak—and, Michel, I cannot but think thy absence preyed on her mind, and that she longed to see her child before she died. On the day thy father was taken away I was at thy house attending to him. Mother Catherine found me in the kitchen, dissolated in heart, to my mother. Judge my feelings when I found her in one corner of the room, weeping over the corpse of the fat, lying, sufferer

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 8.
November
1—Sunday—Twenty-second Sunday after Pentecost
3—Monday—All Souls.
4—Tuesday—St. Charles Borromeo, Bishop and Confessor. St. Vitalis and Agricola, Martyrs.
5—Wednesday—Of the Octave.
6—Thursday—Of the Octave.
7—Friday—Of the Octave.
8—Saturday—Octave of All Saints. The Four Crowned Martyrs.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....NOVEMBER 1, 1873.

THE POPE AND THE EMPEROR.

We give elsewhere the full text of the correspondence which, it is alleged, recently passed between the Sovereign Pontiff and the Emperor of Germany. We do not of course bind ourselves to the fidelity of the translation of these important letters, but publish it as we find it in the daily papers. We regard it as extremely probable that the correspondence is authentic, though the wording of the letters may be more or less distorted by prejudiced translators. But even as we give them, they afford reasonable evidence of the candor and sincerity animating the Holy Father, and the duplicity and craftiness belonging to the Prussian potentate. The Pope protests against the persecution of the Church, so actively waged now throughout the German Empire, and asserts that he cannot discover any justification for it. Emperor WILLIAM answers with sanctimonious special pleading worthy of an Evangelical Alliance declaimer. He talks about priestly defiance of secular authority, about ecclesiastical intrigues on the subversion of the Empire, and indulges in rogue generalities, which mean everything or nothing at all, according as one takes them. In fact, his Imperial Majesty's entire argument is a very cunning and very unscrupulous confounding of cause and effect. He makes the "agitation" of the clergy the cause of the persecution, whereas in reality the persecution is the cause of the agitation or discontent of which he complains.

If, previous to the enactment of the Bismarckian ecclesiastical laws, a single bishop or priest or religious had been tried in open court for conspiracy against the State, and found guilty upon evidence which would satisfy intelligent people, some justification might be pleaded and would be acknowledged. But nothing of the kind ever took place. Those who are acquainted with the despotic rigor of Prussian laws will feel convinced that if there was the faintest shadow of suspicion that any ecclesiastic, of high or low degree, had intrigued or conspired against the Empire, he would have been instantly arrested, and received a severe punishment. Those condemned to severe punishment. Those condemned to severe punishment. Those condemned to

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Home Rule and Amnesty.

The week has witnessed at least two important events in connection with the Home Rule movement. First there was a meeting of the Queen's County Independent Club, on Tuesday, in Maryborough, at which the remarkable manifesto from that quarter, which we published recently, was unanimously adopted. This meeting was fittingly presided over, in the absence of the worthy President, Mr. Lalor, by Father Tom O'Shea, and among the speakers were that other trusted, tried and eloquent advocate of the people's rights, Father Matthew Keeffe, and one of the county members, Mr. Edmond Dease. These three gentlemen spoke explicitly in favor of Home Rule, and Father O'Shea and Mr. Dease expressed their preference for the Federal plan as contrasted with simple repeal of the Union. On the whole, the meeting in Maryborough was highly satisfactory, and, indicating, as it unmistakably does, what the action of the county will be at the hour of total and thoroughly important.

The other event of importance in connection with the national movement this week is the meeting in Cavan, on Monday, at which Mr. Butt and Mr. J. O. Blunden attended as a deputation from the Home Government Association. There have lately been several splendid demonstrations in the North for the same purpose, but we doubt if in any of these so large a proportion of the electorate participated as in the one at Cavan, and in all other respects none of them was more imposing. All parts of the county, we believe, were represented on the occasion, and the result unanimously arrived at was that it was expedient to form a local branch of the Home Rule Association, and to support only Home Rule candidates at the general election. We should add that the political prisoners were not forgotten at Cavan. The last resolution adopted advocated their release as an act of justice, and condemned their further detention as an act of cruelty.

The second of the series of Amnesty demonstrations came off in Drogheda on Sunday, and was an undoubted and unqualified success. The patriotic town on the Boyne, with its worthy Mayor at its head, meant to have a good turn out to help to support the demand of the Irish nation. Dublin, Dundalk and other places sent contingents to add to the magnificent throng of thirty thousand persons who participated in the proceedings. The procession through the streets to the place of meeting was itself a highly imposing spectacle, and so great was the order, the peacefulness, the decorum that the following day there was not a single case in the local police court arising out of the demonstration.—Nation, October 4.

Mr. Butt—Sandwich and Retraction

In the course of an excellent speech, Mr. Blanenbassett, at the banquet given in connection with the Derry Agricultural Society's Show, in Truise, on 4th October, thus spoke with regard to the responsibility and duties of public men:

"The language and expression of opinion is an essential condition of political progress and national enlightenment. A gentleman said lately concerning towards me who differ from him in one of the most valuable, as it is one of the most attractive qualities which a man can exhibit. When I speak of toleration I do not mean that false and colorless shadow of it, which is a mere reflection of the indifference of the man who has neither the independence of mind nor the strength of character to form any opinions of his own. Neither do I mean that feeble acquiescence in the will of others which is displayed by those who lack the courage and manliness to stand boldly to the opinions they have formed; I mean something rather of the wide and generous forbearance and tolerance towards sentiments and feelings not his own, which distinguishes the man who, having sedately thought out his own opinions, is ready, if asked by them to the task; but who, while he does the same time, cheerfully concedes to others the freedom which he so highly prizes himself. I am able to say that, as a member for Kerry, I have never lost sight of the duty which it is my pride to be not the representative of any party or section of the constituency merely, but of the whole county. The conscientious performance of even one of the other functions of a member of the House of Commons entails an amount of labor and anxiety of which an adequate conception is commonly formed out of doors. Some encouragement in this work I have, which, I trust, as long as I am in your confidence, will never fail me. I find encouragement always in the kindly sympathy and confidence of my own supporters; encouragement in the generous forbearance of political opponents, and, above all, in the approval of my own conscience, strengthening me with the conviction that I am doing what in me lies, feeble and inefficient though it be, to advance those principles, and to get put into actual operation those measures which I believe to be conducive to the best interests of you whom I have the honor to represent, and essential to the prosperity of the country which I love."

The Catholic Clergy on Home Rule.

The following appeal has been published by the Very Rev. the Dean of Limerick. It is addressed to "the Very Reverend and Reverend Clergymen who signed the Limerick Declaration:"

GENTLEMEN,—Fourteen hundred of our body some time or four years ago signed a declaration in favor of domestic legislation. We proved in that "declaration" that our sentiments of the land question, or the Church question, or the question of education or of all of them together, would be sufficient to give England security and freedom and peace if the country were refused national self-government." There were four, or more hundred of pioneers in the feelings of the Irish people, and fourteen hundred clergymen proclaiming their own convictions. Have we not a right to the magnificent hope of hope? The Times newspaper—the most powerful agent of literary power and of the world's opinion—says, and England says we, the Catholic clergy, have changed. I think the time has come for us to prove to the world that we are not changed in as far as our feelings and determinations are unchanged. Many, inspired by our guidance signalled indifference, but many—those who know us—are well aware that we were "abiding our time." In fact, awaiting the coming grand conference in Dublin. Privately and publicly I have proclaimed that this was the feeling of numbers of our order; and privately and publicly I have been advising to bring it about. Our time has come at last, and I am pretty certain the Times will have evidence enough of the unchanged feelings of our people. I will hold on to my old way, I am, gentlemen, yours most faithfully,

R. S. O'BRIEN, D. D., Dean of Limerick, Chairman of the Limerick Declaration.

Sentencing Evidences.

At the City Session, yesterday, a period was for the sentence to the career of a modern Jack Sheppard. A vast number of burglaries have recently been committed, and the police, some time since, succeeded in discovering that the head and soul of all these enterprises was a certain John Farrell, alias Brady, who was duly hunted down, arrested, and brought up at Sessions before the Recorder. The man pleaded guilty to no less than eight burglaries, and was sentenced to serve seven years penal servitude. So far the case presents no feature of particular interest; but what should interest the public is the fact that some three months since Brady appeared at Orrell street other circumstances widely different from the time of his arraignment and sentence yesterday. On the 23d of June Sheward O'Kelly was tried for the attempted assassination of Mr. Murphy, of the Irishman. One of the principal witnesses against O'Kelly was a certain John Brady, who deposed that in saw the prisoner running away from the scene of the attempted assassination, that he pursued him, that the prisoner pointed a revolver at him, and that he never lost sight of the prisoner till he was arrested. The learned Judge naturally, when charging the jury, laid great emphasis on the evidence of Brady, and highly commended his conduct. Edward O'Kelly was found guilty, and sentenced to a punishment worse than death—penal servitude for life. Now, the John Brady, who testified against O'Kelly and the John Farrell who was sent to penal servitude for burglary were thesame and the same person. This raises a question serious indeed in its complexion. At the trial Brady's character was, it appears, not known. It is now plain that to get up a person's character for money "a dog should not be hung," and it was in a large degree on his evidence that a British, subject was doomed to a lifelong incarceration.—Dublin Freeman, Oct. 4.

The Callan Scandal.

After causing his and-papal friends a shock of unpleasant astonishment, Father O'Keeffe is back again in their good graces, restored immediately to favor on the discovery that he had not made the act of ordinable submission, for which, in common with our Catholic contemporaries, we gave him credit. "His flag is still flying," the Most audibly proclaims, "and his spirit unbroken." What that flag represents now beyond mercenary bargaining it would be extremely difficult to say. Father O'Keeffe himself admits that a vestige of honor remains, and that the clergy and laity and all the wealth and influence of Ireland have hardly ever displayed a more admirable unanimity and courage than they have in the present case. But the question as they do at present in favor of the Home Rule movement, notwithstanding all the we find an influential London daily paper lamenting itself by insulting in the disbelief of endeavoring to make the people of England believe that the people of Ireland are not in earnest in their demand for Home Rule—that they have become too prosperous and too happy to be discontented, and that, in short, if they do need or desire any change, that let the indignant and unjust journalist be condemned to the misery of living in Ireland. Surely intelligent Englishmen will not allow themselves to be misled into crediting such vile, uncalled-for and untrue bosh as this:

"The peasantry are so well off that they are ceasing to abide their landlords; and they need to do so on such trivial provocation that they hardly merit to be prosperous tenants. Indeed, just it suits the priests and the unemployed lawyers, and the professional agitators and the Parnies out of work, and all the disappointed litters of the people to demand an Irish Parliament—for what purpose they do not precisely know—and so the yearly work of turmoil is going on again."

Affairs in Tralee.

Tralee has settled down to its normal state of quietude. The O'Donoghue was still there at last accounts, but was making no canvass; the extra police force have been withdrawn from the country stations, and the sounds now heard are sounds of joy over the victory that has been won for the national cause, or wails, such as the following (which we find in the Tralee Chronicle) for the fallen chieftain:

O'DONOGHUE'S KEEN.

Ulalu! Ulalu! wail him so dear,
Wail for the chieftain whose reign is fled;
Wail for him, mountains of grandeur and pride;
Wail for him, valleys and deep flowing tide;
Wail him, cities, bleakly and gray—
Wail for the people, wail for to-day!
O chieftain, chieftain, no time can efface
The foul stain left on your name and your race.

Once how we trusted the promise that hung
On thy fair smiling face and thy eloquent tongue!
How our hearts leaped over hearty faith was given
Unto thy word—a mocking grimace.
Can ask us to trust you, fooled and betrayed?

Ulalu! Ulalu! wail him so dear,
Wail for the chieftain whose reign is fled;
Wail for him, mountains of grandeur and pride;
Wail for him, valleys and deep flowing tide;
Wail him, cities, bleakly and gray—
Wail for the people, wail for to-day!
O chieftain, chieftain, no time can efface
The foul stain left on your name and your race.

A valiant chief our manhood is shamed to thy shame,
And our sensual shall blush at thy miserable name.
What! trust you?—Foiled it, you salute and you betray!

Once how we trusted the promise that hung
On thy fair smiling face and thy eloquent tongue!
How our hearts leaped over hearty faith was given
Unto thy word—a mocking grimace.
Can ask us to trust you, fooled and betrayed?

Foiled it, you waves, as you thunder and fur
On the sensitive cliffs of our dear Irish shore.
Foiled it, you winds, as you flee
From the chains we once loved a rather than flee!
Foiled it, you mountains, as you echo the wail
For the last of the race—the primary penalled—
Ulalu! Ulalu! has a to life.
The inexorable doom of the traitor of men.

The people be audied at have boasted him and boast him back to his masters to cringe and to bow
He has sold them for gold—he has sold them for gold
He has brought on his kindred, his country and God.

Ulalu! Ulalu! now is the traitor's doom
He has fled from his manhood and faithful Tralee
He has left his dear home—he has left his dear home
To bear—if he can—his defeat and disgrace.

Mr. O'Regan's Case.

Grave dissatisfaction is expressed at the conduct of the Tralee magistracy in condemning Mr. O'Regan to a month's imprisonment. On Monday of last week this gentleman, who is an elector of the borough, and a Home Ruler, was summoned before the magisterial bench to answer a charge of assault, brought on the part of one of the Christian's" hireling supporters, who so lately made both night and day hideous by yells and screams in his behalf. Mr. O'Regan was accused of having plucked the lady's shawl from her shoulders. When the case was called The O'Donoghue's solicitor wisely suggested that it should be withdrawn. Believing this had been done, Mr. O'Regan and his legal advisers left the Court, after which the magistrates proceeded to try the case in their absence, and sentenced Mr. O'Regan to a month's imprisonment. The unfortunate gentleman is now undergoing the sentence, but he has determined to seek redress from the Court of Queen's Bench.—Catholic Opinion, October 4.

ENGLAND.

Protestant Rotality.

The Church Herald, being written by and for Anglican clergymen, may be supposed to know something of the state of religion and morals among the Protestant masses. We are sorry, therefore, to find it giving as every occupation but those which the teaching of the Christian dispensation has marked out for her. The care of her household, the gentle ministry of the sick and suffering, the teaching of the young and helpless, the tender solicitude of searching out and reclaiming the erring one of her sex—these are the sublime duties which true Christianity shadows forth for her as her most glorious work; but these are not the employments which modern philosophy would assign her. Blessed be heaven! the Catholic Church keeps up a system of yielding to this world-wise philosophy, and goes steadily onward, winning woman to her bosom with the sweet spirit that the Sisterhood of the Help of Christians has set itself to its beneficent labor. They have taken as their special charge poor, young work girls, who have no homes at all, or whose homes are at long distances from the place where they earn their bread. The Sisterhood have a large house, in which they have sleeping accommodation for a large number of the girls. The girls have their sleep and rest and their supper there completely, or they can have the choice of not sleeping, but of merely receiving their meals in the day-time. For poor girls without parents, in a large sinful city, need we say what a boon such a home is likely to prove? Is they are worldly, and supposed to be not utterly destitute of a slight chance is made for their mind, and a slight charge is made for their meals, but barely what covers the first cost of rent and provisions—for there is no question of making profit by the sales. The Sisterhood provides the establishment and attend at meals, and also at the evening exercises of the morning and the evening, bidding upon the poor creatures the light and the blessing of their gentle refinement and their holy example. At Amiens the Bishop has given over a considerable part of the work, and in their houses there 500 young girls are under the care, and the comfort and sinlessness of a convential home. At Paris they have as yet had none only a small beginning in a rented house, and already there are one hundred in its single room, one hundred some daily to its doors, beseeching for admission. In their resources increase the Sisterhood will in only very rejoiced to extend their mission. Such works as this are better than a thousand schemes for what we hear so often in the pulpits of the necessity of opening doctrinaires—the "emancipation" and "enfranchisement" of woman.—Catholic Union Publications.

French Monarchy.

The Comte de Chambord has published a manifesto which must materially strengthen on his chance of ascending the throne of his ancestors. His opponents have recently been drawing frightful pictures of the reception which would be given to him if he have asserted over and over again that he would restore the feudal regime, and demand re-igitous liberty; and M. Rimond has just published a letter signed by the count himself, in which he ridicules as a mere phantom the idea of restoring "the droit divin, feudal rights, religious intolerance, persecution of dissenters, and other evil relics of the darkness of the past." Of course, in this, as in all other legal chicane," "I know very well," he says, "that it is not always easy, without using these unworthy maneuvers, to preserve one's composure; but you must reckon on my self-command in the midst of such annoyances to adjust to such toolerie." Nothing can be more clear than this letter, which brings into it remembered how really the Count de Chambord is a man of his time, and has ever been in his dealings with France.—Nation, October 4.

The Army of France.

The French army, it seems, is beginning to feel the benefit of a more settled Government and the Presidency of an eminent soldier. By an official decree, gazetted this week, the army is to be reorganized on eighteen Army Corps—designed to occupy subsequently the eighteen military regions into which the Conseil-general is about to divide the whole country. Each Corps is to consist of two infantry divisions, and a brigade of cavalry. Each division is to consist of two brigades of infantry, and a brigade of artillery. Each brigade is to consist of four regiments of infantry, and a regiment of artillery. Each regiment is to consist of three battalions of infantry, and a battalion of artillery. The Corps are to be numbered from 1 to 18, and the following generals are appointed to the command of the 18 Corps: Duc d'Aumale, Clinchant, Montaubin, Lebrun, Dalgary, Martin des Pallières, Clicsey, Forgeot, Lallemand, Tartigue, Pellissier de Reynaud, Ducrot, Cissey, de Salignac, Fenelon and Auraile de Palladines. The Versailles Army is dissolved, and General Ladmirault remains Governor of Paris and Commander of the first military division. Other decrees follow relative to the organization of new regiments of different arms for various Army Corps. It is announced that a fresh decree will be decrees that the mode in which the military territorial division is to be established and the number of Army Corps in time of France Government.—Weekly Register, October 4.

GERMANY.

The Will of the Empress of Germany.

The will, with seven codicils, of her Majesty Caroline Augusta, Empress Dowager of Austria, born Princess of Bavaria who died at Vienna on the 9th of February last, was proved in London on the 16th ult., by Count Philipp Cavriani, the sole executor and trustee given and appointed by the will, subject to the jurisdiction of the English Court being sworn under £6,000. The will and codicils contain very numerous specific and pecuniary legacies, which it is impossible to do more than allude to. The testatrix bequeaths to her daughter, the Archduchess Gisela, and to the most of her dependants there are also a great many charitable bequests. The fourth codicil makes her principal heir her grandson the Archduke Carl Ludwig, adding to the legacies may be mentioned her grandson the Emperor of Austria, the Empress Elizabeth, her great grandchildren, the Archduke Rudolph, her great grand-daughter-in-law, the Archduchess Gisela, her grandson the Emperor of Brazil, her great-daughter-in-law, the Archduchess Charlotte, and the Dowager Queen of Wurtemberg. To the Imperial Exchequer at Vienna she bequeaths the consecrated vessels received by her from Pope Pius VII, at Rome in 1819, and to the Erzherzog at Munich the trowel sent to her by Leo XII. in 1827, after it had served him at the closing of the Holy Porte. To commemorate this it is bequeathed to the Caroline Institution for Soldiers' Daughters, at Vienna, that nationalities must in no case be considered, as far as there is only one Austrian army, the army which her husband thanked when on his dying bed. There is a direction that 5,000 holy masses should be read for her, and 5,000 florins are set apart for this purpose. The deceased Empress expresses a wish that, if possible on the occasion of her interment lying in state, her face may be covered with a veil, and the Archduke Carl Ludwig is requested to choose a keepsake for each of his children, "although the eldest will be too young to remember her long; but they will be told that their father was the favorite of the old great grandmamma, that she loved him dearly as well. May he and his children's, in spite of reproach and derision, continue to their Saviour, live more for duty than ambition, advantages or pleasure, and always give pleasure to their parents."

The Catastrophe in Spain.

Among the champions of the Carlist cause in Germany the distinguished Archbishop of Posen and Gnesno, Mgr. Count Ledochowski holds at the present moment one of the most prominent places. In his manly opposition to the execution of the baneful laws for suppressing the time-honored presbyterive rights of the Church, he has the whole of the people of ancient Poland at his back, who are anxious to resist the encroachments perpetrated by the Germans on Polish soil ever since the first dismemberment of the realm of the Jagellons and Piasts. What has been published in Prussia are prevented from speaking their mind by the arbitrary measures which Bismarck's police now hesitate in adopting against them; those appearing in Galicia are vieing with one another in espousing the cause so brilliantly advocated by the eminent prelate. As an instance we quote the following from a recent issue of the Polnische Jurnal published at Cracow:

"The power wielded by Mgr. Ledochowski is growing apace and assuming historical features, as time passes on. With calm and dignity the Archbishop stands aloof, while faithfully discharging the duties of a shepherd to his devoted flock, he likewise sides the national cause, and the good wishes of all those who have at heart the sympathies of the nation party and the progress of liberty, but, above boldly raising his head, are on his side. Let us join him with all our might in the combat; let us back him in the struggle—himself the head of our Church, the head of our nation, and therefore constituting a power of immense vitality and unpunished."

The Spanish Loan.

The Spanish loan of £32,000,000 sterling, which was announced in the Times of Monday, has been taken up with extraordinary rapidity. The subscription list was opened on Monday morning, and was closed in the afternoon, the applications having reached the enormous amount of £320,000,000 sterling, or ten times the sum required. The bonds are issued at 78 per cent, and bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum. The interest is guaranteed by the Spanish Government, and is payable in London. The bonds are redeemable at par in 75 years, by annual drawings, commencing in 1877. The loan is secured on the customs revenue of Spain, and on the property of the Church which has been confiscated by the Government. The subscription list was opened at the London and Westminster Bank, and the applications were received by Messrs. Baring Brothers, Messrs. Rothschild, Messrs. Hambro, Messrs. Glyn, Messrs. Morgan, and Messrs. Huth. The

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Home Rule and Amnesty.

The week has witnessed at least two important events in connection with the Home Rule movement. First there was a meeting of the Queen's County Independent Club, on Tuesday, in Maryborough, at which the remarkable manifesto from that quarter, which we published recently, was unanimously adopted. This meeting was strongly presided over, in the absence of the worthy Prendergast, Mr. Lalor, by Father Tom O'Shea, and among the speakers were that other trusted, tried and eloquent advocate of the people's rights, Father Matthew Keeffe, and one of the county members, Mr. Redmond Dease. These three gentlemen were equally explicit in favor of Home Rule, and of O'Shea and Mr. Dease expressed their preference for the Federal plan over unconditional repeal, while Father Keeffe declared the simple repeal of the Union. On the whole, the meeting in Maryborough was highly satisfactory, and—although, as it unavoidably does, what the action of the county will be at the hour of trial—hugely important.

The other event of importance in connection with the national movement this week is the meeting in Cavan, on Monday, at which Mr. Butt and Mr. J. O. Blunden attended as a deputation from the Home Government Association. There have lately been several splendid demonstrations in the North for the same purpose, and no doubt if any of these so large a proportion of the electorate participated as in the one at Cavan, and in all other respects none of them was more imposing. All parts of the county, we believe, were represented on the occasion, and the result unanimously arrived at was that it was expedient to form a local branch of the Home Rule Association, and to support only Home Rule candidates at the general election. We should add that the political prisoners' amnesty question at Cavan. The last resolution adopted advocated their release as an act of justice, and condemned their further detention as an act of cruelty.

The second of the series of Amnesty demonstrations came off in Drogheda on Sunday, and was in its dimensions and unqualified success. The patriotic town of the lady Boyne, with its worthy Mayor at its head, seems to have turned out en masse to support the demand of the Irish nation. Dublin, Dundalk and other places sent contingents, which, with the magnificent display of thirty thousand persons who participated in the proceedings, THE MONITOR through the streets to the place of meeting was itself a highly impressive spectacle, and so great was the multitude, the decorum was such that the following day there was not a single case to be found in the police courts of the demonstration.—Nation, October 4.

Mr. Brownrigg and Toleration

In the course of an excellent speech, Mr. Brownrigg said, at the banquet given in connection with the Royal Agricultural meeting, that Sir Trasie, on the October, in the same sub-regard to the responsibility of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, he could not help feeling that the public were entitled to know something about it. I am able to say that I am not responsible for any expression of opinion as to the general condition of political prisoners, personal enlightenment. A gentleman whose character and abilities demand respect and whose position entitles him to the confidence of the Government, and who is one of the most influential members of the Irish Bar, has, I am informed, visited the prisoners, and has reported to the Government that their health is good, and that their treatment is in accordance with the rules. Under these circumstances I am not prepared to say that I am responsible for any opinion as to the condition of the prisoners. I am able to say that I am not responsible for any opinion as to the condition of the prisoners. I am able to say that I am not responsible for any opinion as to the condition of the prisoners. I am able to say that I am not

COAST MINING NEWS.

AMADOR COUNTY.

The Sutter Creek Independent says that a wide ledge of rich pay rock has been struck in the North Amador mine, near that place, during the past few days.

It is stated at a strike of rich rock has been made in the Bunker Hill mine near Amador City. The ledge is about twelve feet wide at the point where it was struck. About nine feet of the ledge is richer than the rest, free gold being visible throughout this portion. Work is being vigorously carried on at this mine, and the prospects of a very large amount of good paying rock being taken out are very favorable.

An eight-foot ledge has lately been struck in the Alpine mine at Plymouth, which will pay $30 per ton. The other mines in that vicinity are also looking well.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

In the foothills of Calaveras county, two miles from Telegraph city and not more than twelve miles from Milton, the present terminus of the Stockton and Copperopolis railroad, is situated the property of the Tecumseh Mining Company. At a depth of 400 feet sharp knife comes to straddled gold-bearing quartz of a high grade. Their Superintendent is of the opinion that before a depth of 100 feet more is reached, he will be in good milling ore. Their main shaft is now down 320 feet. The rock through which it is sunk is composed entirely of porphyry, impregnated with gold and silver-bearing sulphurets.

The latest report from Blue Mountains is a continuation of the flattering intelligence we have already published in regard to the richness of the mines of that district. The blacksmithing plays largely. The difficulties of working the sulphurets of that mine have been removed by Mr. Kohler's patented process of amalgamation. The yield of rich quartz is increasing as work on the mine progresses. At the point now reached the vein is over 15 feet wide, and the rock pays from $275 to $300 per ton. The Ismeraldine and Good Hunter are also proving to be rich. Quarts yielding about the same as the Hockendern, has been struck lately in the Good Hunter. Work is pushed actively on all the leads of the district.

NEVADA COUNTY.

The Nevada Daily Transcript has the following regarding the Manzanita claim: Arrangements are being made for working the Manzanita gravel claims, situated on the outskirts of town, at the base of Sugar Loaf Hill, and owned by Roberts & Co., for extensive working, as soon as water comes. A tunnel is being run and will be completed in about three weeks, low enough to work the rich gravel channel to the bed rock. Sluices will be laid of sufficient capacity to run 2,000 inches of water, which will be double the amount run last season at any one time.

PLUMAS COUNTY.

The National of the 25th, has this item:

During the past three or four weeks, Mr. C. Lapp has taken from his little ledge, located on the mountain south of Indian Valley, something over $5,000. The best part of it is that he has pounded it out with a hand mortar.

SHASTA COUNTY.

Some time ago Baker, Engel, Rothwell, Hubbard and Higinbotham commenced running a tunnel, but they soon struck up with the intention of sealing the Dubuque cattle ledge in Igo District, in the eastern part of this county. Last week the tunnel reached the distance of seventy feet, when the ledge, which crops out on the surface above, was tapped. On passing through the ledge, it was found to be four feet in thickness, and the quartz closely impregnated with silver. Native silver is found all through the rock, and the owners of the property say they have found something that beats Comstock.

State of Nevada.

We condense from the Gold Hill News of October 24th:

CONSOLIDATED VIRGINIA.—Daily yield 250 tons of ore, 100 tons of which is being hoisted through the Gould and Curry shaft and the rest through the company's shaft. It is said, however, that no ore is being sent through the Gould and Curry shaft until a side track of the railroad is completed to the company's dump. The car body is being bronzed out both north and south, and connection is not only laid out, but improve la quality.

DAYTON.—The ore vein at the third station (400 feet level) has been struck both north and south, a distance of 10 feet, the face of both still being in good ore. The company have 700 tons of ore in the dump, and are still piling it up, ready to crush as soon as mills can be obtained.

CHOLLAR POTOSI.—Daily yield, 400 tons of ore. There is no change of importance to note in the situation of the north and breast, or either the 1,300, 1,200 or 1,100-foot levels. The main south drift on the 1,400-foot level has been stopped on account of the great heat and bad air, and an up-raise started to connect with the north winze from the 1,500-foot level, for the purpose of giving the ventilation to that part of the mine. The main south drift on the 1,500 level is making but slow progress, the heat being the most intense ever encountered in the mine.

WOODVILLE.—Sinking the incline is making good progress following the ledge and still in ore. The usual amount of ore is being extracted from the face of the north drift at the 2,000-foot station. The supply of timber for working purposes is good.

SCORPION.—Some very fine ore is being extracted from the east drift at the south station of the shaft in the incline. Sinking the new shaft east of the mill has been resumed.

HALE & NORCROSS.—Sinking the main incline is making good progress, although the rock in the bottom is quite tough and hard to blast. Daily yield of ore 95 tons, nearly from the eleventh, third and second station levels.

BELCHER CONSOLIDATED.—A cross-cut has been commenced in the north drift from the main west drift at the third station. The drift south on the ore body, at the second station, shows the ore to be both widening out and improving in quality. There is also a gratifying improvement in the ore body in the south drift of the first station.

AMERICAN FLAT.—The west drift from the main incline south, on the third station is being energetically driven ahead, the face within a very short distance of the point where it is expected that the ledge will be reached.

JUNCTION.—The ore body in the north drift at the 100-foot level, is opening out finely and the extraction of the ore ore has already commenced. The ore in the south drift at the 600 foot level is also improving in quality. Two mills are running on ore from the mine, and its future prospects are certainly very flattering.

SILVER HILL.—The shaft is now down 75 feet below the second station. The mine is looking finely throughout, the drifts both north and south showing fine developments of ore at both the first and second stations.

JACOB LITTLE.—Driving the main northwest tunnel is again being prosecuted with the utmost vigor night and day. Assays of ore from the face of the drift range from $9 to $506 per ton. It is the intention to commence shipping ore as soon as mills can be obtained to crush it.

YELLOW JACKET.—The pump is steadily gaining on the water from the 1,500-foot level, and it is expected that the water will be sufficiently drained to again commence work on that level by Monday next.

CHOLLAR POTOSI.—Daily yield, 140 tons of ore, which is worth $33 per ton, assay value. There is no change worthy of mention in either the looks or yield of the different ore-producing sections.

CALEDONIA.—Enlarging the shaft for another compartment is not yet finished, but is making good progress. Daily yield of ore, 50 tons. The ore breasts are looking finely.

OPHIR.—There is no change of value to report of the prospecting drifts at the 1,700-foot level. The face of the south drift on the 1,465-foot level is still in clay mixed with boulders.

SIERRA NEVADA.—Daily yield 60 tons of ore. The ore breasts are looking and yielding finely as usual. The mill is kept steadily running, crushing ore from the mine, and everything is prepared for a steady winter's work.

OVERMAN.—Opening the new station at the 1,200-foot level of the shaft is making excellent progress, and the prospects of the 1,000-foot level are without change of importance.

UTAH.—The main southwest drift at the 900-foot level is making excellent progress, and is expected to reach the ledge in a very short time. The winze in the shaft has been lowered to within 40 feet of the 1,000-foot station, and appears to be rapidly subsiding.

UTAH.—Opening new station to drift for the ledge is progressing favorably. Engineer, who has yielded the astonishing amount of $10,00 in silver and over $700 in gold per week. Another lot of a number of tons, assorted, yielded an average of $300 per ton.

Arizona.

The Arizona Miner of the 18th has intelligence from which the following is gleaned:

Goodwin & McKinnon are mining and working richer and better ore from their claim on the War Eagle lode than was ever worked by them in the last successful run.

Walnut Grove continues the liveliest mining district in Arizona. All the mines are running; miners are taking out a great deal of rich gold and silver rock, while numerous claims have leads are almost every day rewarded with a "find."

The Hibernia, recently sold to Wm. H. Hayward and others, is under the superintendence of L. R. Seaver, is in course of active development, producing tons of rich ore daily, and has already 20 tons of ore on the bank of the Colorado for shipment by the steamer. Daily Work, Gold Hill, Mr. Milner on the north, has been recently sold in San Francisco for $80,000, and work will be soon commence upon it.

The Illly Engel has ten tons of rich ore out, ready for shipment that will average $400 per ton.

The Arnold and Maguire have shipped five tons of ore, and are now erecting arastra to work their rock on the ground.

Burch and Peck are sacking bits from the Bunker Hill, an extention of the Billy Engel. They shipped five tons by the last steamer.

The Congress has out seven or eight tons of $600 rocks, ready for shipment.

These are only a few of the many mines that are being got ore on the Hope ledge, Cedar district.

Near Cerbat the Ida and Rhoda Lewis and the Cagel and Tiger have what drove. The Cupel Shipped eight or ten tons of fine ore on the last steamer.

The "Ell" is looking remarkably well, and Colonel Riley is actively developing it. The pay ore is from 15 to 18 inches wide, and is pronounced by all $1,000 rock. They have 6 or 7 tons on the dump. The last shipment to San Francisco was sold for over $900.

Idaho.

The following we extract from the Owyhee Avalanche of October 18th:

The old abandoned drifts in the fourth level of the Golden Chariot have been started up, and are being driven south with the prospect of finding good pay. The sixth level is also being driven south in good ore. The slopes from the stash to the eighth level are producing about 18 tons per day of high-grade ore. The eighth level is being driven south in a fine body of ore for 2 to 2½ feet in width. They are also getting ready to run the ninth level south, and will immediately commence to sink the main shaft 100 feet deeper. Present indications are very cheering, and it is the intention to prospect the mine on a very larger scale. Improvements are being made on the surface which will greatly economize labor and facilitate the assorting of ore.

The Morning Star mine is now yielding about 45 tons of ore per day. They have just come upon a new body of ore in the north level north; it is large, and similar in appearance and richness to that formerly found in the south end.

The fifth level drift of the War Eagle is being driven as rapidly as possible, and the shaft is being sunk down for the fifth level. The operations on this mine are at present confined to prospecting, with the view of opening up a rich body of ore known to exist south of the shaft.

The Clark shaft of the Red Jacket has been connected with and is now down 80 feet below the adit level, showing a large body of prospect rock, rich in gold and silver. Lumber and other material are accumulating at the mine preparatory to the immediate erection of steam hoisting works, which will greatly facilitate the operations to be carried on during the coming winter.

Splendid ore continues to be taken from the sixth and seventh level stopes; the new boiler is being placed in position, which will greatly increase the hoisting facilities of the mine.

In the Ida Elmore the stopes in the tenth level north are yielding a fine quantity of ore. The vein is from four to five feet in width. The main level drift is being extended north as expeditiously as possible. The new boiler will greatly add to the working facilities of the mine. Work is progressing as usual on the Illinois Central, Idlewild, Norfolk, Poseman, Crown Point and Bell Peck, all of which are yielding splendid ore.

The Indians and the Catholic Missions.

The following communication appeared in the Portland Bulletin on the 24th:

EDITORS BULLETIN: I was greatly surprised to see in the Bulletin of yesterday, in its usual purports a long article, being proceedings of the Presbyterian Synod, lately in session in this city, and a resolution offered by the Moderator, Rev. Dr. Lindsley, of Oregon, which was copied from the proceedings of the city of the 11th inst:

Resolved, That the Synod of the Pacific meet would most respectfully memorialize Congress, and urge by the Government to erect Roman Catholic Indian Reservations, for the following reasons, viz: The first and second treaty I pass over for the present, as they treat as follows: "Because there are no Catholic Indians, and the Catholic Church never claims the Indians."

With all due respect to the learned Doctor, permit me, Mr. Editor, to declare this assertion a wilful misrepresentation, which for charity's sake I will rather ascribe to his utter ignorance of the matter of which he treats than to any evil design or motive. And this I prove by the following stubborn facts and statistics derived from official sources:

First—The Catholic missions among the Yakima Indians were established in 1847 by the Oblate Fathers, who had the charge of them until 1855, when the Indian war put an end to their labors for the time being. Peace being again restored, these missions were regularly visited by priests from the adjacent valleys until 1865, when a resident missionary was appointed, who, in the course of fourteen years, had as two Jesuit Fathers, who, to this day, have the charge of these missions.

The Catholic Indians register kept at their principal station in Ataanum, just north of the Yakima River, enables me to learn that up to April last 705 Indians had been baptized by the Fathers, nearly 500 of whom form the Roman congregation.

To corroborate the above I will add that during a residence of nearly four years in the Yakima Valley, I here, Sunday after Sunday, saw Indians by the hundred congregating around their little log church, from distances ranging from fifteen to fifty miles, to receive the instructions of their Catholic missionary. At all seasons of the year, in rain or snow, they and their people of like creeds from all directions on Saturday evenings, pitching their temporary tents around the premises, the place presenting some the proportions of a respectable Indian village, when on the following Monday morning is again deserted till the next recurring Sunday. Time far concerning the Catholic influence among the Yakimas.

In 1860 the first Protestant minister arrived at the Yakima Reservation in the capacity of a school master, with a like salary from the Indian Department. A few years afterward the same school-master became the agent of said father misery, and appointed two of his illiterate Indian proselytes as assistants in the spiritual line, one of whom, his brother, whilst he continues to this day to have an eye to the temporalities. Thus, you see, Mr. Editor, that the Government in granting the Catholics permission to erect, at their own expense, a church on the Yakima Reservation is doing nothing but an act of tardy justice to their very just claims, on account of the priority of their missionary establishment among the Yakima tribes, which set I hope will soon be followed by a yet fuller recognition of said claims by the speedy appointment of a Catholic agent at the same time.

In conclusion, I would advise the Rev. Dr. Mclaurin, forever Haight and Gen. Joseph Palmer, that the above before alluded tempting to carry out the resolutions of the reverend hewers of the Pacific Presbyterian synod of San Francisco. The papers of that city and elsewhere, which, by publishing the reported sanctimonious have helped to circulate the above slander, are also respectfully requested to publish the present communication. All the Catholics claim is fair play.

J. B. BOUDET.
YAKIMA CEN., W. T., Oct. 17, 1873.

King John of Saxony is dead.

T. J. P., MARYSVILLE.—In 1861, when President Lincoln called for three months' volunteers, Thomas Francis Meagher enlisted in the famous Sixty-ninth Regiment of New York. Soon after, and before the regiment left for the seat of war, he was empowered to raise a company of Zouaves, to be attached to the Sixty-ninth, of which he was commissioned Captain. We are not certain that he participated in the first battle of Bull Run, but if he was not engaged in that famous rout he was in the vicinity of Washington. He left New York for Washington as a commissioned officer.

The Supreme Court last week reiterated an oft declared principle that a sale for public taxes, properly made, and not redeemed according to law, gives the purchaser an absolute title against all the world, save only the State and the United States. It wipes out all other titles or claims of whatever name or nature, whether mechanics' liens, prior deeds or any other device of law. The same Court also decided, within the past week, that a mother having minor children is not bound to sell the child or children to legitimate or not, is entitled to all the tenderments and benefits of the matrimonial law.

The famous Stokes trial for the murder of James Fisk, in New York, terminated on Wednesday of this week, the jury bringing in a verdict of "manslaughter in the first degree." Judge Ingraham sentenced him to the full penalty of the law, four years imprisonment in the Sing Sing or hard labor. Stokes and his friends gave expression to their delight in sheets.

The entire value of the salmon caught and shipped in and from the Columbia river last season foots up $950 000. Next year the business will give employment to three thousand hands.

The friends of State Printer Thomas A. Springer will be grieved to learn that he is so ill in this city that his physicians say he cannot recover.

Stokes and Burnside, the two Modocs whom the President pardoned, are now safely immured at Alcatraz.

Subscriptions Received.

Watsonville—Joseph S. Fallon.....$ 10 00
Castroville—Michael Barry.....5 00
Gilroy—Thomas Murphy.....5 00
Point Pinos—Mrs. Mary Ann Hall.....5 00
Salinas—Charles Mesplet.....5 00
Monterey—Joseph B. Harper.....5 00
Port Harford—Thomas Lilley.....5 00
Cayucos—John Rooney.....5 00
Cayucos—John Ferguson.....5 00
Maryville—R. S. Robertson.....5 00
Castle Island, Kerry, Ireland—Rev. Jas. Power.....5 00
Somerville—Patrick Duff.....5 00
Amador—James Fleming.....5 00
Amador—Thomas Fleming.....5 00
Amador—Hugh Burns.....5 00

Living Advertisements.

A medicine that has done more than all the prescriptions of the pharmacopoeia to protect the human system against the deadly influences of malarious and unhealthy climates, is certainly worthy of universal confidence, and it is plainly an evidence of its extraordinary merits that the proprietors of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an unchangeable quantity in unvarying demand, and that the sales are increasing in all portions of the country. The whole neighborhood frailty of the human constitution to which it is peculiarly exposed, the astigmatic-mail, but our space will not permit us to enumerate. Suffice it to say that while we heed in this catalogue no article of merit, we do not wish to be understood as recommending those of little value, but only such as we have personal knowledge of, and such as have been thoroughly tested by the public. Among the many preparations of this character which are offered to the public, we know of none that have been more thoroughly tested, or which have given more universal satisfaction than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Its reputation is established on a basis that cannot be shaken by the assaults of interested parties, and its extensive sale is the best evidence of its merits. Sold by druggists and dealers generally.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

GRAND OPENING
AT.....
THE WHITE HOUSE!
ON.....
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30,
WE OPENED OUR
NEW FALL STYLES
IN.....
PARISIAN SUITS
AND.....
CLOAKS,
AND WE ARE NOW SHOWING
THE NEWEST
AND MOST STYLISH GARMENTS
EVER.....
IMPORTED.
ALSO,
THE LATEST NOVELTIES
IN.....
DRESS GOODS
J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,
N. W. Cor. Kearny and Post Sts.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF
DRY GOODS!
We are now prepared to supply our customers with
The Best and Cheapest Goods
In the City. Among which are—
Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarniss Crotons,
Cashmeres,
Merinos,
Sorgos, Reps, Etc.
A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF
SHAWLS.
RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.
Our IRISH TATTING sold to the trade at a liberal discount.
Thankful to our friends and the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
706 MARKET STREET,
OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.
FALL IMPORTATION!
Woolen Hosiery,
NEW DESIGNS.
GENT'S FURNISHING GOODS,
LATEST STYLES.
RIBBONS AND MILLINERY GOODS.
LACES
AND EMBROIDERIES.
LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
AND WHITE GOODS.
FOR SALE BY
TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.
MISCELLANEOUS.
PIPIFAX
Mankind are easily impressed by slight changes and magnetic disturbances in certain conditions of atmospheres, which cause epidemics.
PIPIFAX
Keeps the skin in a supple condition, and, by its capillary action, the pores open, and brings the blood to the surface, thereby enabling the system to expel those baneful elements which otherwise poison it.
PIPIFAX
Strengthens the living vital nervaneous organism. It gives energy to the muscular nerves, filaments, membranes, and all tissues of the internal organs, as a cure for habitual drunkenness.
PIPIFAX
Acts as a tonic and stimulant, and so promotes the action of the secretory tissues, as prevents that absolute physical prostration that follows the sudden lessening of from the use of intoxicating drinks.
Persons in whom the passion for strong drink has grown into a habit, after using
PIPIFAX
Soon recover their self-control and lose the desire for liquor. PIPIFAX obtained such a great notoriety throughout California, that many worthless imitations, in a recent number of instances, have been palmed off on the unsuspecting public, and in order to protect ourselves and the public, we have registered the word
PIPIFAX
And have also secured the exclusive right to manufacture it. Any person, therefore, who shall hereafter offer for sale any article under the name of PIPIFAX, will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.
PIPIFAX
Is an enemy to all corruption, and destroys and forbids eaters. In manner of expression, it is the friend of the pure, and the foe of all somersetters of the body; all the bad humors which receive it.
PIPIFAX
Is sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Dealers.
THE FIRST MEDAL
AT THE
VIENNA EXPOSITION
BEING THE HIGHEST RECOMPENSE
AWARDED FOR ALL COUNTRIES, HAS BEEN AWARDED THE
MASON & HAMLIN
Cabinet Organ
BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE Special Jury, International Jury,
and
two Sub-Juries,
including the most Eminent Artists and Musicians of Europe, after a thorough examination and comparison with those of all other countries.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO., Agents
628 and 630 Clay Street.
TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
The People Have Spoken.—The experience of years has confirmed an intelligent public in all climates of the value of this unrivaled remedy for the stomach, diarrhœa in the bowels, and all conditions of the liver and nervous debility.
Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient is the surest, safest and swiftest remedy. Nervousness, sick headache, biliousness, dyspepsia, sea-sickness, fever and malarious affections, are promptly relieved by this delightful and refreshing saline aperient. It is a genuine preparation of refrigerants, a wonderful tonic, as an absorbent and alterative, and a certain corrective of impurities which may exist in the blood or other fluids of the body. Dealers in all localities of the United States and Canada keep this article. Sold by all Druggists.
$72 00 EACH WEEK.
AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE. Goods strictly legitimate. Particulars free. Address J. WORTH & CO., St. Louis Mo.

THE MONITOR,
The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
LYONS & BARRY, - - - Publishers.
DENIS LYONS. JOHN T. BARRY.
RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.
OFFICE—624 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts., Rooms 2, 3 and 4, upstairs. All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.
TERMS (Payable in Advance):
Served by Carriers, per week.....10c
Mail subscribers, per year.....$ 4 00
Six months.....2 25
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year.....7 50
" " Godey's Lady's Book.....5 25
" " Demorest's Fashion Magazine.....5 25
" " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine.....3 50
ADVERTISING RATES:
1 square, 1 time.....$1 00 | 1 square, 1 month.....$10 00
" 1 month.....7 00 | " 6 months.....50 00
" 3 months.....7 00 | " 9 months.....75 00
" 6 months.....12 00 | " 1 year.....100 00
☞ The above rates will be strictly adhered to.
Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1873. NO. 4.

THE IRISH RACE
IN THE PAST AND THE PRESENT.

BY REV. AUG. G. THEBAUD, S. J.

From Brownson's Quarterly Review for October.

It is refreshing to meet, in these days of superficial and flippancy, with a book from an author who thinks, and has mastered his subject. Father Thebaud has here given us a genuine book, solid and erudite, really profound and instructive, full of intense interest, and very similar in appearance and richness to that formerly found in the pages of Gibbon.

The author has evidently made a profound study of the Irish character, and his judgment of the genius and mission of the Irish race strikes us as just, and, as far as it goes, true. He regards, we think, justly the Irish as a providential people, called, trained and fitted by Providence to a special work in maintaining and diffusing the true faith, hardly less than the children of Israel, who were called to be the conservators of the primitive traditions and to prepare the way for the coming of the Messiah, who was to be born of their race. We agree fully with the author that every nation has a distinct character of its own, which cannot be destroyed without the destruction of its greater part of the nation itself. We agree also with him that this character is not only persistent, but providential; yet we have no faith in the belief, considering that, except in the case

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE CONVENT.

Outside the village of Hetzel, on the road to Hunzeville, there is a convent. The building is large but ruinous. It was a considerable place at one time, but it was sacked and partially burnt at the time of the Revolution, and the destruction had never been made good. Only one wing of the once stately pile was habitable, and there were now but five nuns in it. They were all old. Sister Monica, the superior-ess, had reached her seventieth year; Sister Ursule, the portress, who was looked upon the rest of the community as rather affected by the giddiness and levity of youth, was fast approaching sixty. They were cloistered, and the world had passed them by and ignored them. It was seventeen years since a postulant had sought shelter in their peaceful retreat. The convent was too far outside the village to be available as a general school, but the community did give instruction gratuitously to the children who came, and who consisted mostly of those at their own side of the rather straggling village. On Sundays they had a larger attendance, for then besides the children tendance, for then besides the children many of the grown girls, who had been pupils, came for religious instruction, and, when that was ended, may be for a pleasant chat with the dear, simple-minded, pious old sisters.

Among those who had preserved the custom of paying a weekly visit to the convent was Annette Renaume. She had been a favorite with the Sisters, but she had been the especial pet of Sister Teresa, the nun who ruled the superiores and was the presiding genius of the little establishment. Sister Teresa was one of the smallest women that ever wore a hood and wimple, but she certainly was the boldest. She used to say herself that she was always so occupied about other things that she had not had time to grow. When Sister Cecilia was too ill with the rheumatism to play the organ she played it; when the nuns in the school were rather larger than usual she helped were rather larger than usual she helped to teach. If there was a bit of carpentry required it was a lesson to see her tuck up her sleeves to use a hammer; while to watch her run up a ladder to nail a wall-tree—especially one of those that produced the famous Ilon Chretien pears—would re-joice the soul of a school-girl. She did all the cooking, and a great part of the washing. Her greatest trouble was the necessity of scolding the village matrons. Scarcely a day passed that she had not to send for some housewife whose children had come home tattered from school, whose husband had a bruised mummy, who was in trouble for whose unmended, who was in trouble for whose unmended, who was in trouble for whose unmended

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 22 November.
16—Sunday—Twenty-fourth Sunday after Pentecost.
17—Monday—St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, Bishop and Confessor.
18—Tuesday—Dedication of SS. Peter and Paul.
19—Wednesday—St Elizabeth of Hungary, Widow.
St. Pontian, Pope and Martyr.
20—Thursday—St. Felix of Valois, Confessor.
21—Friday—Presentation of the B. V. M.
22—Saturday—St. Cæcilia, Virgin and Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....NOVEMBER 15, 1873.

THE IRISH RACE.

At great sacrifice of our space we print to day the review of Father Thebaud's book on the Irish Race which appears in the last number of Brownson's Review. We feel assured it will create heartfelt emotions of pleasure and pride in the breast of every intelligent Irishman who carefully peruses it and reflects upon the important truths contained therein. Beyond doubt it is the grandest vindication of their blood, their traditions, their sympathies, their language, their national characteristics, in short—which has ever been penned in this country. The circumstance that it has been written by Dr. Brownson, at one time so deeply imbued with "American ideas," will materially add strength to it and give it additional point. The learned and pious Doctor has educated, so to speak, a large school of Americans, converts and others, and they regard all his utterances with profound respect, as indeed they ought. There was a time when the effect of his writings, indirect and entirely unintentional we admit, was to depreciate the Irish character in this country, and to make those who happened to be "natives and to the manor born" impatient at the slowness with which our people adapted themselves to the modes of thought in vogue here. That the Irishman was told, in the way of fatherly admonition, to be "Americanize" himself as quickly as possible if he wanted to be respectable or to exercise any legitimate beneficial influence, social or political, in his immediate neighborhood. How to be a Catholic without being Irish, or open to suspicion of Irishism, was a problem the solution of which was generously vouchsafed in the columns of more than one paper ostensibly devoted to the interests of the Church. Indeed, we have still among us representatives of this school of teaching whose aim, more or less concealed, is to denationalize our countrymen.

Now, it seems, all that is to be changed. Father Thebaud has written an admirable book and Mr. Brownson has penned an excellent criticism thereupon, the burden of which is to demonstrate that Irish ideas, or, to speak more correctly, the national instincts of the Irish race, are more in harmony with the laws of God, more capable of promoting the temporal and eternal well-being of Christendom than those even of the natives of this great country, who seemed to derive their ancestry from the settlers on Plymouth Rock! This is nothing new to us, for we have held it all along. We believe that God in his goodness imprinted a special mark upon the Irish race, and we shall cherish it as long as it remains true to its ancient traditions. We believe that to it is owing that instinctive sympathy with the cause of religion and order which the Irish have always exhibited, even in cases where other races, Catholics like themselves, were led astray. Pessimists in their devotion to liberty, for instance, they have never mistaken the machinations of revolutionists for labors in behalf of human freedom. Firm in their attachment to legitimate authority, they have never confounded the enactments of despotism with the legislation of wise government. In fact, it is impossible to either debase a good cause or baptize a bad one so as to deceive their keen insight into the nature of such things. The review which we publish to-day will, no doubt, have an immense effect on many American Catholics, and indeed them to do justice to a race whose greatest misfortune is that it has been misunderstood. We trust the lesson will not be lost upon some of our brethren of the press, as, to tell the truth, they stand very much in need of it.

Testimonial to John Mitchel.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—SIR: I noticed in the last issue of your paper, that the people in Ireland were getting up a testimonial to John Mitchel. I think his countrymen on the Pacific Coast ought to put one up immediately. I, for one, will be glad to contribute to honor John Mitchel, and the best way to have a good and substantial testimonial which would be worth something to the party receiving it, would be to remit to him the dust we pan out of the mines. I therefore enclose you herewith, per express, in box 1508, to make one of the kindest. Yours etc.,

J. P. GIBSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 10, 1873.

[It is with great pleasure, indeed, that we give insertion to the foregoing communication. It reflects high credit on the spirit, patriotism and liberality of Dr. Gibbon, who has always shown himself ready to give a helping hand to every good cause. We should like to see his challenge taken up. Certainly there ought to be a hundred Irishmen in this wealthy city willing to follow his example, and to testify in a most cold and practical manner their appreciation of John Mitchel's devotion to the independence of Ireland. We know beyond any shadow of doubt that there are a hundred, and a great deal more, able to contribute the required sum without at all injuring themselves by the liberality, but whether they are willing to do so is another question. We should be very proud, indeed, if we could answer this important query in the affirmative.—ED. MONITOR.]

DR. ABORN has just returned from an Eastern visit quite recuperated in health. Since his source he has received many flattering testimonials from patients that he prescribed for before leaving, who need them to him unsolicited, as a matter of gratitude for the wonderful success of his treatment.

CIRCULAR FROM THE ARCHBISHOP.

On Sunday last the following circular from his Grace the Archbishop was read in the different churches of the city. It deals, as will be seen, with two very important matters—the plague at Memphis and the society for the propagation of the faith. His Grace has appointed that the collection taken up to-morrow, (Sunday) in all the churches, shall be devoted to the relief of the orphans and others left destitute by the terrible ravages of the yellow fever in Memphis and other places. While the plague was raging in all its fierceness, and sweeping off its victims by the hundreds, Catholic priests and nuns, heedless of their own safety, responded to the call of duty and administered the consolations of holy religion to the sick and dying. Proud of their heroic and Christian charity we, who are at a distance from the scene of their labors, ought at least supplement their works of mercy by subscribing according to our means to the fund destined to alleviate the sufferings of the helpless and destitute who remain in the stricken cities. We trust that the collection taken up on Sunday will prove that the spirit of charity is active among the Catholic congregations of San Francisco.

You are, no doubt, already aware of the ravages of the yellow fever at Memphis, Texas, and other localities which its unfortunate inhabitants have been visited with during the present year. Thousands and thousands are dead, many more are now struggling with the fell scourge and many of those who escape through God's mercy, will be reduced to absolute want, and, in a large number of instances, to utter starvation. Many orphans are left destitute, whose parents, fathers and mothers, and friends will have to be provided, during a long and indefinite time, with the means of existence or support. In the name of humanity, without distinction of creeds, it is to cooperate in this great work of charity that we invite you now. No object more deserving could call forth the sympathies of all who have a spark of humanity in their breasts, and which more powerfully appeals to the charity of the Christian heart, than the misery and destitution of the children of God. Let all who can, then, give something towards relieving the wants of their fellow-creatures in Christ. And while urging you to give, each according to his means, I would have you bear in mind that our Lord and Master has said that whatever is given in the way to the least of His little ones He will regard as given unto Himself. The amount realized by this collection will be devoted to the relief of the poor in Memphis and other places in the South visited by the scourge.

PROPAGATION OF THE FAITH.

The second part of the circular refers to the Society for the Propagation of the Faith which has been some time established in this city. There is, we are sure, no work which commends itself more heartily to the pious and zealous in the cause of religion than that of the vast organization which has its center in the Catholic city of Lyons. A certain portion of Society has been more enriched by special favors from the Holy See than that of the Propagation of the Faith. The subscription requisite is so exceedingly small that it cannot prove a tax on any one. Yet what marvelous results have been achieved by it. There is no association in the world, secular or religious, which does much practical and truly Catholic Society. We recommend all our readers to take a part in this good work, and so secure for themselves participation in the numerous blessings accorded to members of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith by the Sovereign Pontiff.

We would be glad to see a branch established in every parish in the city and county. It has long since received the sanction of all Catholics, and has been the means, under God, of accomplishing immense results. We append a list of indulgences since last to month's issue, which will, we trust, prove a sufficient proof of the fervor with which the Holy See regards the organization, and of the many extraordinary favors bestowed upon its members by the Vicar of Christ. The small sum of fifty cents per annum is all that is required a week—with the recital of the following short daily prayer: "Most Holy Virgin Francis Xavier, Patroness and Advocate of the Missions, intercede with Jesus, the Author and Consummator of our faith, that the Holy Spirit may inflame the hearts of the faithful with zeal for the conversion of infidels. Amen."

On the 1st of August—The feast of the Assumption.

Every month—On any two days chosen by the Associates.

Once in any day within the octave of those festivals.

Once a year—On the day of the general communion of the Associates.

On the 30 of May—The feast of the Invasion of the Holy Cross—the day on which the Association was established.

On the 8d of November—The Feast of St. Francis Xavier, the Apostle of the Indies.

On the 24th of March—The feast of the Annunciation.

On the 25th of August—The feast of the Association.

Once a year—On the day of the general communion of the Associates.

Once a year—On the day of the opening of the Council, Directors, Associations of one hundred or more of the Faithful, by the Sovereign Pontiff.

Once a year—On the day of the anniversary of the Council, Directors, Associations of one hundred or more of the Faithful, by the Sovereign Pontiff.

300 days every time any Associate performs in behalf of the Society any work of devotion or charity. All these indulgences, both plenary and partial, are applicable to the souls in Purgatory.

Yours in Christ,

JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 6, 1873.

Death of a Religious.

It is with much regret that we have to announce the death of Sister Mary Patrick Cooper, of the Presentation Convent, Powell street, which end event took place last Saturday evening at ten o'clock. The deceased was a native of Kildare, Ireland, and she was only nineteen years and six months old at the time of her death. Of her young and unstained life four years had been passed in religion. Monday morning at half-past 9 o'clock Solemn High Mass for the repose of her soul was celebrated by Very Rev. Father Croke, Fathers O'Neill and Fagan acting as deacon and subdeacon. There were also present Rev. Fathers Dorham, O.P., Cassidy, Garriga, Harrington, and Phillips. The funeral, which was a private one, took place immediately afterwards. Sister Mary Patrick, who was a most amiable and pious lady, was carried off by that dread scourge, consumption, which seems to seek its victims especially among the young, the pure and the beautiful. May she rest in peace.

UNAVOIDABLY HELD OVER.—The letter of our correspondent from the Southern Coast arrived too late for insertion this week. It will, of course, appear in our next issue.

M. J. GAFFEY, a Sec., Homer street, between Washington and Market, Stockton, Are the exclusive agents for THE MONITOR in that city.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

THE LIFE OF THE MOST REV. M. J. SPALDING, D.D., Archbishop of Baltimore. By J. L. Spalding, D.D. New York: The Catholic Publication Society, 9 Warren street. Baltimore: John Murphy & Co.

This is a work in praise of which we can hardly speak too highly, as it is one of the best biographies we have looked at for some time. It is not, as many biographies are, a dry record of the prominent events in the career of a distinguished personage, but a living and breathing picture of the man as he appeared to those who knew him most intimately. Even more than that, it reveals the inner workings of his mind, and shows what thoughts were his concerning the growth and prospects of the Church in America. The life of Dr. Spalding is so closely connected with the spread of Catholicism throughout the Southern and Eastern States that, of necessity, his biography reads in part like a history of the propagation of the faith in our republic. On this account the work possesses much interest, and will be eagerly sought after by all who care to make themselves acquainted with the more than wonderful progress achieved by the Church in America. The binding, typography and general get-up of this volume are first-class, and might well serve as a model for Catholic publishers to imitate.

IRISH EMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES. What it has been and what it is. Facts and reflections specially addressed to Irish Parents intending to emigrate from their native land, and to those living in the large cities of Great Britain and of the United States. By Rev. Hugh Quigley, O.S.D. New York: The Catholic Publication Society, 9 Warren street.

The subject of emigration from Ireland is certainly not a pleasant one to deal with. It is sad to advise men to quit their native land, and abandon forever the dear old places of their forefathers. We never could find heart enough to do it, and would only counsel emigration as a last resort. When individuals find that the hardest toil leaves them still in poverty, when unflagging industry is insufficient to provide anything for old age, it becomes a duty to remove, if possible, to some part of the world where the battle of life is less bitter and severe. When an Irishman makes up his mind to leave the old country, the United States is certainly the best place to which he can turn his steps. But before he does so he will act wisely if he seeks information as to where he can find the most assuring prospects of success. He will act wisely if he makes himself acquainted with the dangers he has to avoid in the land of his adoption. Father Byrne's little book will enlighten him admirably on these matters, and prove a safe guide. That is all the praise we can give it.

CATHOLIC SERVICE DIRECTORY AND STATE GAZETTEER. Compiled by John Mortimer Murphy. First Year of Publication. Portland, Oregon: S. J. McCormick, Publisher.

This book is something more than a gazetteer. Upwards of two hundred pages are devoted to a well-written and highly interesting history of the State. Its early history, physical geography, geology, mineralogy, climatology, zoology, botany, topography, industrial productions and resources, trade and commerce, etc., are carefully and accurately sketched. Mr. Murphy is quite as agreeable writer, and can infuse attractions into the dryest subject, so that one forgets he is reading a "Business Directory" while glancing over the introductory portions of his book. The authorities in Oregon if they wish to have the State well and favorably known abroad, could not do better than procure an extended circulation to his clever sketch. The "State Directory" is most thorough and complete. Of its accuracy we can speak unhesitatingly, but we are confident that Mr. Murphy has exhibited as much fidelity in this portion of his book as he has literary ability in the first. The volume is embellished with several wood engravings of Oregon scenery. We trust that Mr. McCormick, who suffered much from the late fire in Portland, will find himself well recouped for his outlay on this useful volume.

REQUIEM MASS AT MILPITAS.—On Tuesday last a Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of John L. Smith, Esq., of Pierce-field, county Westmeath, Ireland, father of Rev. Father Smith, Pastor of Milpitas, was celebrated in the church of the latter place by the Very Rev. Father Dalton, V. G., of Grass Valley, assisted by the Rev. Father Bowling, Superior of the Institution of the Christ," by Very Rev. Dr. Moriarty, O.S.A. "The Evangelical Alliance," by F., is also well worth reading. There is, besides, a good article on the School Question by Mr. C. H. A. Esling.

Challenging to the Proof.

The German Bishops are not going to remain quiescent under the imputations of disloyalty cast upon them. Every day is challenging him to prove his assertions, and produce, for the benefit of the civilized world, some justification for his persecuting exactments. We rather think they have his Imperial Majesty in a corner:

LONDON, November 17.—The Times publishes the following sent to it by Archbishop Melchers:

A letter has appeared in the Mainz Journal, from Bishop von Ketteler, of Mainz, addressed to the German Emperor, in which the latter is challenged to prove the charges against the loyalty of German Catholics contained in his reply to the Pope's letter. It runs as follows:

"Your Majesty has charged us, in the face of Europe, with disloyal intrigues. Not one agitation can be more heartily condemned by us, the limits of law, and in that case you were not justified in bringing this charge against us or our conduct. If we have transgressed the law, and accordingly have committed treason, we demand your Government, on the ground of facts which must be at your disposal to the presence of the charges, to indict our leaders as traitors. After your Majesty has uttered so frightful an accusation against the honor, integrity and loyalty at least allow us to prove to you how ill-informed you have been."

It appears that there is a second letter from the Pope to the Emperor, which the latter has forgot he is reading in "Business Directory" while glancing over the introductory portions of his book. The authorities in Oregon if they wish to have the State well and favorably known abroad, could not do better than procure an extended circulation to his clever sketch. The "State Directory" is most thorough and complete. Of its accuracy we can speak unhesitatingly, but we are confident that Mr. Murphy has exhibited as much fidelity in this portion of his book as he has literary ability in the first. The volume is embellished with several wood engravings of Oregon scenery. We trust that Mr. McCormick, who suffered much from the late fire in Portland, will find himself well recouped for his outlay on this useful volume.

REQUIEM MASS AT MILPITAS.—On Tuesday last a Requiem Mass for the repose of the soul of John L. Smith, Esq., of Piercefield

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Rev. Dr. Taylor on the Late Labor Meeting in Maryborough.

On Sunday, October 12th, the parish priest of Maryborough, Rev. Dr. Taylor, cautioned the people at Mass against attending such meetings as that held in that town on the previous Sunday under the auspices of a society called "the Laborers' Union."

At that meeting, said the reverend gentleman, principles were laid down and doctrines inculcated which, if acted on, would upturn society and reduce it to one mass of confusion, violence and bloodshed. By way of improving the condition of our laborers, a gentleman comes here from London to tell us that the people born on the land are the owners of the land; that, they being the true proprietors of the soil, those who now hold possession of it are usurpers and inheritors of stolen goods; that landlords are a nuisance and should be got rid of—peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must; that it is the man who puts his spade and his hoe and his plow into the ground that has the first right to the produce of the soil—with many other startling propositions to the same effect. Language of this kind, said the reverend preacher, was not only dangerous, but wicked—calculated to lead ignorant, unreasoning people astray—putting false notions into their heads by persuading them that they have rights which they have not. If the landlord has no right to his estates, what is to become of the tenant who derive under him? They must fall to the ground. Again, if the laborer who puts his spade or his hoe or his plow into the ground has the first right to its fruits, will he scruple to help himself liberally to what grows on the land if he can only escape detection? See how all order all notions of right and wrong, of justice and injustice, would be leveled to the dust by such Communistic principles. If certain societies in England aim at executing their designs by creating disturbance, let them carry on such work at home, and not send over their emissaries here to practice on the suggesting Irish. When such messengers of discord come among us do not go near them; keep away from their meetings; have nothing to do with them.

After a few words to the same effect, he went on to observe that some of those who attended the meeting might say in him; "We know very well that it was all talk—not one present had any idea of war-fare. What harm was there in going to the meeting?" Dear, dear, it is no harm to give countenance and encouragement to evil? Is it no harm that the proprietors who live among us be filled with the belief that we look on them as usurpers and nuisances to be got rid of? Is it no harm to encourage the sowing of discord between class and class, between employers and their laborers? Is it no harm to vaunlish such ruuk Communism in the town of Maryborough in open day as to assure them if the land of Ireland was divided as it ought to be, every man, woman and child would have three acres? But you would not go, you say, if you thought such speeches would be made. How, then, are you to act prudently for the future? Take my advice, and do not go to a meeting unless you know that some of those whom you have been accustomed to follow as leaders and guides are engaged in getting it up. Their character will be a guarantee to you that you will not be entrapped into the false position of appearing to approve of what you really condemn. In conclusion the reverend gentleman reminded his congregation that they were well aware he would make no observations on the meeting if it had been merely a political one. As he was concerned they might be "Whigs or Tories or anti-Home Rulers—Repealers or non-Repealers—Federalists or anti-Federalists—but, where morality was deeply concerned, he would hold himself gravely culpable if he were silent.—Freeman's Journal.

An Unbended Charge.

Two Dublin car-drivers have had a serious escape from conviction and punishment on account of one of the worst crimes that a human being could well commit. The car-drivers of the Irish metropolis are proverbially civil and honorable, and it is satisfactory to find the innocence of the two accused men proved, who had such a grave charge of murder brought against them, proved beyond the slightest shadow of doubt. The two men to whom we are alluding were, the other day, brought before the police court in Dublin, charged with that it is the man who puts his spade and his hoe and his plow into the ground that has the first right to the produce of the soil—with many other startling propositions to the same effect. Language of this kind, said the reverend preacher, was not only dangerous, but wicked—calculated to lead ignorant, unreasoning people astray—putting false notions into their heads by persuading them that they have rights which they have not. If the landlord has no right to his estates, what is to become of the tenant who derive under him? They must fall to the ground. Again, if the laborer who puts his spade or his hoe or his plow into the ground has the first right to its fruits, will he scruple to help himself liberally to what grows on the land if he can only escape detection? See how all order all notions of right and wrong, of justice and injustice, would be leveled to the dust by such Communistic principles. If certain societies in England aim at executing their designs by creating disturbance, let them carry on such work at home, and not send over their emissaries here to practice on the suggesting Irish. When such messengers of discord come among us do not go near them; keep away from their meetings; have nothing to do with them.

After a few words to the same effect, he went on to observe that some of those who attended the meeting might say in him; "We know very well that it was all talk—not one present had any idea of war-fare. What harm was there in going to the meeting?" Dear, dear, it is no harm to give countenance and encouragement to evil? Is it no harm that the proprietors who live among us be filled with the belief that we look on them as usurpers and nuisances to be got rid of? Is it no harm to encourage the sowing of discord between class and class, between employers and their laborers? Is it no harm to vaunlish such ruuk Communism in the town of Maryborough in open day as to assure them if the land of Ireland was divided as it ought to be, every man, woman and child would have three acres? But you would not go, you say, if you thought such speeches would be made. How, then, are you to act prudently for the future? Take my advice, and do not go to a meeting unless you know that some of those whom you have been accustomed to follow as leaders and guides are engaged in getting it up. Their character will be a guarantee to you that you will not be entrapped into the false position of appearing to approve of what you really condemn. In conclusion the reverend gentleman reminded his congregation that they were well aware he would make no observations on the meeting if it had been merely a political one. As he was concerned they might be "Whigs or Tories or anti-Home Rulers—Repealers or non-Repealers—Federalists or anti-Federalists—but, where morality was deeply concerned, he would hold himself gravely culpable if he were silent.—Freeman's Journal.

An Unbended Charge.

Two Dublin car-drivers have had a narrow escape from conviction and punishment on account of one of the worst crimes that a human being could well commit. The car-drivers of the Irish metropolis are proverbially civil and honorable, and it is satisfactory to find the innocence of the two accused men proved, who had such a grave charge of murder brought against them, proved beyond the slightest shadow of doubt. The two men to whom we are alluding were, the other day, brought before the police court in Dublin, charged with that it is the man who puts his spade and his hoe and his plow into the ground that has the first right to the produce of the soil—with many other startling propositions to the same effect. Language of this kind, said the reverend preacher, was not only dangerous, but wicked—calculated to lead ignorant, unreasoning people astray—putting false notions into their heads by persuading them that they have rights which they have not. If the landlord has no right to his estates, what is to become of the tenant who derive under him? They must fall to the ground. Again, if the laborer who puts his spade or his hoe or his plow into the ground has the first right to its fruits, will he scruple to help himself liberally to what grows on the land if he can only escape detection? See how all order all notions of right and wrong, of justice and injustice, would be leveled to the dust by such Communistic principles. If certain societies in England aim at executing their designs by creating disturbance, let them carry on such work at home, and not send over their emissaries here to practice on the suggesting Irish. When such messengers of discord come among us do not go near them; keep away from their meetings; have nothing to do with them.

After a few words to the same effect, he went on to observe that some of those who attended the meeting might say in him; "We know very well that it was all talk—not one present had any idea of war-fare. What harm was there in going to the meeting?" Dear, dear, it is no harm to give countenance and encouragement to evil? Is it no harm that the proprietors who live among us be filled with the belief that we look on them as usurpers and nuisances to be got rid of? Is it no harm to encourage the sowing of discord between class and class, between employers and their laborers? Is it no harm to vaunlish such ruuk Communism in the town of Maryborough in open day as to assure them if the land of Ireland was divided as it ought to be, every man, woman and child would have three acres? But you would not go, you say, if you thought such speeches would be made. How, then, are you to act prudently for the future? Take my advice, and do not go to a meeting unless you know that some of those whom you have been accustomed to follow as leaders and guides are engaged in getting it up. Their character will be a guarantee to you that you will not be entrapped into the false position of appearing to approve of what you really condemn. In conclusion the reverend gentleman reminded his congregation that they were well aware he would make no observations on the meeting if it had been merely a political one. As he was concerned they might be "Whigs or Tories or anti-Home Rulers—Repealers or non-Repealers—Federalists or anti-Federalists—but, where morality was deeply concerned, he would hold himself gravely culpable if he were silent.—Freeman's Journal.

An Unbended Charge.

Two Dublin car-drivers have had a narrow escape from conviction and punishment on account of one of the worst crimes that a human being could well commit. The car-drivers of the Irish metropolis are proverbially civil and honorable, and it is satisfactory to find the innocence of the two accused men proved, who had such a grave charge of murder brought against them, proved beyond the slightest shadow of doubt. The two men to whom we are alluding were, the other day, brought before the police court in Dublin, charged with counsels his constituents to adhere to the principles of true progress, and expresses a hope that devotion of the two things most needful for Ireland, "Local legislation and a just settlement of the Irish education question," will be deemed essential characteristics in any man who aspires to represent the county of Wexford. An Irish member who was always "on his place" when duty called him, it is one of a small class of public men who can ill be spared; and the news of Mr. D'Arcy's resignation will be heard with regret on both sides of the water.—Catholic Opinion, October 18.

A Necessary Declaration.

At a meeting of the Amnesty Association on Tuesday evening a resolution was unanimously adopted, deprecating "in the strongest manner the introduction of any other subject than amnesty at any meeting purporting to be held to advocate the release of the political prisoners," and declaring that the Association has no connection with persons who are endeavoring to obtain a platform for the ventilation of their own views, under the pretence of advocating the cause of amnesty, as has been latterly done at Maryborough and Cork".—Nation, October 18.

At Tralee Again!

Again there are rumors of an impending election in Tralee. The extra force of police which lately occupied the town, is, it is said, about to return to its quarters in the local Protestant Hall, if it has not done so already; and the people cannot, it appears, help thinking that the advent among them as the harbinger of a visit from The O'Donoghue. However this may be, we know not; but one thing is certain—in case of a false alarm we ready for any emergency, however sudden.—Nation, October 18.

FRANCE.

The Last Moments of M. Odilion Barrot.

Some five and twenty years ago the name of Odilion Barrot wrought like a spell on the ears of the people of France and the French nation. He was one of the foremost of the formidable band of orators and agitators who struck down the monarchy of '48, and founded the republic of Lamartine and Louis Blanc. Eighteen years before that again he was a conspicuous figure in the doings of the three days of July, 1830, and was one of the three commissioners who tendered the dethroned Charles X. from Paris to Cherbourg, en route to his exile in England. Of late years he has kept aloof from the disputes and the turmoil of French politics, and has been content with a calm survey of them from his little villa near Bourgival, its dust there the other day, in the 82d year of his age. We notice the event here to correct a false statement of the lookers-on in the last hours. In his life he had never manifested much practical faith, and it was believed that his tendencies lay rather in the way of Atheism, or at least of skepticism. He died without receiving the last rites of our holy religion, and the infidel press of France has treated of the fact as an avidence that another great man had died worshiping the "Goddess of Reason" and defying the terrors of "superstition." The following are the true circumstances of Mr. Barrot's death: At the first manifestation of serious illness, a confessor was brought from the convent of Bourgival (in whose foundation and success he had always taken the liveliest interest) was brought to attend him. She ministered to him with great zeal and charity. She soon perceived that he was rapidly sinking, and was much concerned that she had never heard him utter the name of God. She gently reminded him that his days on earth were getting short, and asked him if he would not like to be visited by a priest. He answered "No." With tears in her eyes she spoke to him of his Master, and warned him that in a short time hence he would have to appear before his God. The old man listened in silence, but showed no signs of impatience or displeasure. Again, she took up the solemn theme, and spoke to him simply, but beautifully and most touchingly, with an artless grace and earnestness which he had never heard surpassed, of the awful scenes that depended on what he would do the few remaining hours of his life. He was deeply affected and blessed the brave effort of the good Sister, and M. Barrot asked her to go for a priest. The superioress of the convent went herself for the priest of a neighboring parish, who was a personal friend of the dying man's family. Unfortunately the clergyman was engaged elsewhere, but a medical man promised to bring the priest next day with him. Next morning the priest arrived, but in the meantime M. Barrot had died, quietly resuming the consolations and traditions. In a neat frame over his bed he had placed some leaves from off the palm trees of the Garden of Olives; and beneath this humble memorial of one of the holiest spots on earth his soul passed away. we may hope and pray to a better and a brighter world than this.—Catholic Union Publication.

Rare, the Communist.

M. Rance, a deputy in the National Assembly, and formerly a member of the Executive of the Commune, was sentenced to death this week, in Paris, by the Court empowered to try him for his share in the Communal insurrection. The Versailles government took no notice of his offense, and when he was elected by the town of Lyons as a member to the Assembly he probably assured himself that his past life was forgotten. The present Administration obtained a vote of censure against him for having left Versailles against the State, and the proceedings closed, as we said, a few days ago with a sentence of execution. There was little defect in the personnel of the Court. The member for Lyons was not there. M. Rance, as a deputy, got respectful notice of trial. He acted upon it, that is to say, he took the wise precaution of having nothing to do beyond the frontier, and letting the judges try him without him. We need hardly add that his early return to Paris was not expected.—Dublin Weekly Nation, October 18.

GERMANY.

The Catholic Party.

The Prussian House of Representatives has been dissolved and the new elections are to take place on the 28th inst. The Catholic agitation is now being carried on with the utmost energy throughout the length and breadth of the country, and more particularly in those provinces in which Catholicity is predominant—namely, in Rhineland, Westphalia, Silesia and Posen. Dr. Martin, the Bishop of Paderborn, has taken the lead of the movement by exhorting his diocesans, in a pastoral letter recently addressed to them, to be faithful observers of the good cause for their spokesmen in Parliament. The gist of this article is contained in the following passage:

"The first duty devolving on you is not to remain inactive in an emergency of such paramount importance for the public welfare, but to evince an amount of energy such as the occasion requires; and go to the poll, every one of you, whatever sacrifice it may cost you. Your second duty is to grant your vote only to such men as are bound to whom you are satisfied that they will act in their heart in their right place, and who will, regardless of any worldly considerations, stand up firmly and unflinchingly for truth, freedom and right."

These three words—truth, freedom, right, which Mgr. Martin has inscribed on the Catholic banner, will thus form the battle-cry of all the enemies of the present system at the forthcoming elections. It were time for this movement to prevail and to conquer, for the rabid rage with which the persecution of the Church is carried on is worse than ever. The eminent Archbishop of Posen, Mgr. Ledochowski, seems to have singled out as the principal victim. Having refused to obey Bismarck's commands and recall the priests he had recently appointed to various livings in his diocese, his salary has been attached, and it is now proposed to supersede and "interdict" him as some other place where he would be "out of harm's way." The people of Posen, however, remain unshaken in their fidelity to their spiritual leader, who challenges his persecutors to do their worst.—London Universe, October 18.

The Schismatic Bishop.

The success of recent French and English pilgrimages to Lourdes and Paray-le-Monial has induced the Russian Government to organize a South German pilgrimage to the same places. The Berlin correspondent of the Times, speaking of Bishop Reinkens' recognition by the Prussian State says: "After this the clergymen appointed by him will be legally entitled to marry, bury, and baptize; the priests ordained and the churches furnished with certificates by him will be considered as duly qualified to officiate the lessons of the Catholic religion in church and school; and communications addressed by the Pope to the other Catholic Bishops, if the controversy goes on, will perhaps be looked upon as illegal, on the very ground that they have not been sent to the one Episcopus specially patronized by Government. Viewing the recognition of the new dignitary in the light of these reflections, it cannot be denied that the time may come when he will be used as a powerful weapon by the secular authorities. His sect, indeed, is numerically insignificant, and doubtless the less said to remain so as long as religious motives alone actuate men to join it; but should the quarrel occasion political troubles, it is just possible that the educated Catholics supporting neither party at present, but siding with the Government as a matter of duty, may join the new denomination, while others, and those not a few, will withdraw their children in the instruction in religion by teachers of the new Bishop's providing. The ratification of Dr. Reinkens' election, therefore, is a measure that has been taken, with an eye to the future rather than from any immediate necessity."

A Foolish Policy.

In Alsace-Lorraine the Germans are carrying out their fatal initial blunder of setting their laws against the strongest sentiments of the conquered people—interest and faith. They have actually ordered the teachers in the primary schools to teach no more French, making the unhappy people more intensely French than ever by vainly attempting to Germanize them. Bismarck has perhaps been studying the history of Ireland—an English version, without the Irish. An Alsatian correspondent of l'Univers says: "Persecution is the greatest of the Prussian errors. It assails the noblest, the deepest, the strongest feelings of the human heart, wherein a man becomes powerful through his weakness and invincible from oppression! Still it is a cleverly planned persecution. Bismarck would place over parishes and dioceses only as would please him—intrusted, into his national Church notions, and obliged to military service before preparing for the priesthood! Need we be afraid? Well, some and in stages of his death-agony, the Saint stayed and prayed with him. He made the most earnest acts of sorrow for his past neglect, and died with his face closely pressed to the figure of our Lord on the cross. He had once paid a visit to the holy places of the East, and always cherished a profound veneration for their sacred memories and traditions. In a neat frame over his bed he had placed some leaves from off the palm trees of the Garden of Olives; and beneath this humble memorial of one of the holiest spots on earth his soul passed away. we may hope and pray to a better and a brighter world than this.—Catholic Union Publication.

Rare, the Communist.

M. Rance, a deputy in the National Assembly, and formerly a member of the Executive of the Commune, was sentenced to death this week, in Paris, by the Court empowered to try him for his share in the Communal insurrection. The Versailles government took no notice of his offense, and when he was elected by the town of Lyons as a member to the Assembly he probably assured himself that his past life was forgotten. The present Administration obtained a vote of censure against him for having left Versailles against the State, and the proceedings closed, as we said, a few days ago with a sentence of execution. There was little defect in the personnel of the Court. The member for Lyons was not there. M. Rance, as a deputy, got respectful notice of trial. He acted upon it, that is to say, he took the wise precaution of having nothing to do beyond the frontier, and letting the judges try him without him. We need hardly add that his early return to Paris was not expected.—Dublin Weekly Nation, October 18.

SPAIN.

Live of Madrid Officials.

General Nouvilas is not the only General serving under the Madrid party who has pensioned to fame as a writer of historical romance. Moriones beats him hollow in furnishing his employers with pleasing fictions in lieu of disturbing facts. Last week Moriones issued from the Madrid Foreign Office a telegram announcing a crushing defeat of the Carlists by Moriones at, or near, Puente la Reyna. The terms of its official report were so precise and positive that, though aware of the impudent mendacity of the Madrid rulers, we felt bound to swallow the news—but with a very large supply of salt. It turns out to be a gross exaggeration. The dispatch of Moriones—if he did write it—was not true, in fact, but the very reverse of truth, as we learn from the special correspondent of the Times, in the Carlist camp, who informs the British public that "General Moriones, with 5,000 troops and sixteen guns marched from Puente la Reyna, this morning (6th inst.), to attack Estella. General Elio with 5,000 Carlists and four guns marched to meet him. A battle was fought at Manoria. The Republicans at first took one of Elio's positions, but were afterwards repulsed with considerable loss and driven back, utterly routed, towards Puente la Reyna." So that the Carlists were the attacking party. With the Republicans the Carlist victory will be idle lies, adding that the details of this achievement "are crowned by the greatest satisfaction in the country, and produced a corresponding amount of depression among the Carlists." Another official canard from Madrid announces that the Carlist Princes have fled from Spain to escape capture, and have taken refuge in France. This we have say is as false as the mendacious report of the Carlist defeat. At Cartagena the Madrilites may claim some success against their more honest brethren, the 10-called Intransigentes. In an encounter between the wooden ships of the former and the iron clads of the latter the success was decided by the Madrilito commander. This the Irreconcilables attribute to the want of pluck on the part of their commander, whom they have superceded, the command being then given to the Capitan of the Numancia, who is described as a man of strong will and stern character. —Weekly Register, October 18.

The Proposed Conference.

Subjoined is the form of requisition for the forthcoming Home Rule Conference in Ireland:

We, the undersigned, feel bound to declare our conviction that it is necessary to the peace and prosperity of Ireland, and would be conducive to the strength and stability of the United Kingdom, that the right of domestic legislation on all Irish questions should be restored to our country, and that it is desirable that Irishmen should unite to obtain that restoration upon the following principles:

To obtain for our country the right and privilege of managing our own affairs by a Parliament assembled in Ireland, composed of her Majesty the Sovereign and her successors and the Lords and Commons of Ireland.

To secure for that Parliament, under a Federal arrangement, the right of legislating for and regulating all matters relating to the internal affairs of Ireland, and control over Irish resources and revenues, subject to the obligation of contributing our just proportion of the Imperial expenditure.

To leave to an Imperial Parliament the power of dealing with all questions affecting the Imperial Crown and Government, legislation regarding the colonies and other dependencies of the Crown, the relations of the United Empire with foreign States, and all matters appertaining to the defense and the stability of the Empire at large.

To obtain such an adjustment of the relations between the two countries without any interference with the prerogatives of the Crown, or any disturbance of the principles of the constitution.

And we hereby invite a conference, to be held at such time and place as may be found generally most convenient, of all those who are favorable to the above principles, to consider the best and most expeditious means of carrying them into practical effect.

An Aristocratic Caviler.

Lord Courtown will not sign the requisition for the Home Rule Conference. His lordship is afraid of Home Rule. He fears that the educated and property-holding class in Ireland would combine to trust their countrymen, but must rest the safety of their interests on the protection of British power. His fears also that the Federal system will not work, and treats the regulation of commercial, tariff, and of the cost of war by the Imperial Parliament as matters that would interfere with Irish control of Irish revenues, and lead to a collision which would end in separation, or the forcible reunion of Great and Home Rule. Is Ireland such a strange and monstrous anomaly as to be the rule of Federal States? Is Lord Courtown aware that the fact that strict provision is made in the Irish Federal scheme for a due share of Imperial burdens? Why should he assume that Irishmen, any more than Hungarians, or Poles, or Swiss, or Canadians, or citizen of the United States, will depart from their duties to the Empire of which they are arguing with a man in fear, and not to be touched by argument. We must agree without Lord Courtown's aid to let the success of our movement convince him in time to come that his terrors are groundless. It is enough to note that his unworthy of a nobleman, and of the culture and knowledge of the world.—Weekly News, October 25.

Evil Communications.

The corrupting power of evil communications was pointed out a long time ago. The ancient Roman Republic reminds us of the Apostle's maxim. But Germanic Emmanuel was bad enough before his late excursion to Berlin, but he has signalized his return, and proved the influence of the Emperor William, by the adoption of the plans of simony in the sacred city of the Popes. Within the past few days the Jesuits and the Vatican have been in a state of relief from their bonuses in Rome by the Italian Government for its civil power. Their treasures were rescued with cold and silent courtesy, and they were handed certificates for sums of an amount of Italian public stock, allotted to them by way of giving the robbery a moral and respectable appearance. At the same time it is stated that the Order of Loyola, the brave and brilliant vanguard of the army of the Church, has exiled from the citadel of the Christian world. We have fallen upon evil days, and should be on our guard. Consuls of America and Portugal presented their credentials on behalf of some Franciscans who are subjects of their respective States, but the protest was no more than formal. We must bear with what patience we can, and command the evils of this trying time, and hope for a better day of retribution.—Dublin Weekly News, Oct. 25.

PUBLIC PRAYERS FOR FRANCE. — The Holy Father has just granted an indulgence of three hundred days for each attendance at the Novena to be offered for the divine light and guidance of the French National Assembly in its deliberations, and a plenary indulgence for those who shall take part in the general communion of the closing day of the devotions for this most holy act as well as most patriotic purpose.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer degrees. It is conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Cross.

TERMS IN GOLD COIN.
Boarding (Bedding in advance)..... $
Board, Tuition, Washing..... $100 00
Medical Fee, per session..... 5 00
Drawing and Painting..... 10 00
Use of Piano..... 10 00
No charge for Use of French, Spanish and German languages, nor for Plain Sewing and Fancy Needlework.

The first term of the eighteenth annual session will commence August 1, 1873.

The Sisters will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

Good references required.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and pleasant town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of useful and ornamental knowledge suitable to the wants of young ladies. Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but, for the sake of uniformity, all are required to be present at the regular religious exercises of the Church.

The scholastic year commences on the first Monday in August, and ends on the last Thursday in June. No deduction will be made for pupils withdrawn during the session, except in cases of protracted illness. If received at any time, the fee to commence from date of entrance.

TERMS PER SESSION.
Per annum (payable half-yearly in advance):
Board and Tuition..... $125 00
Washing..... 12 50
Physician's Fee (if required)..... 5 00
Use of Piano..... 10 00
Drawing, Painting and Music form extra charges.
The French, German and Spanish languages, and Needlework, are taught free of charge.
All clothing not distinctly marked with name of owner will be considered as the property of the Institution.
Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the
SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY,
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS ACADEMY, CONDUCTED BY THE SISters of Notre Dame, is pleasantly situated on the delightful Valley of Santa Clara, at a distance of one mile from the town. Every attention is paid to the health, comfort, and refinement of the pupils. The system of education embraces all the solid and ornamental branches suitable to young ladies. Terms (per session of five months):
Boarding, Tuition, and Washing..... $150 00
Bed and Bedding..... 10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines..... 5 00
Use of Piano..... 10 00
Use of Violin..... 5 00
Modern Languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Pupils will be received at any time during the session.
For further information inquire of the Superior of the Academy, or address
SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.
Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)
For board, lodging, tuition, washing and mending of clothes..... $
Stationery..... 5 00
Use of Library..... 2 00
Vocal Music..... 10 00
Use of Instrument..... 10 00
Vacation spent at the College..... 30 00

DAY PUPILS.
Terms per session (payable in advance.)
Select Day School—Historic, first and second Grammar Classes..... $
Third and fourth Grammar Classes..... 2 00
Preparatory and Primary..... 1 00
Particular Schools, per month, throughout the year..... 1 00
No extra charge for French, plain and ornamental needlework.
For further particulars apply to the reverend Superior.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUtion, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday of August.

The object of the Institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical Education, in the lowest possible rate, at such time as the families can conveniently bear it, and to form students thoroughly acquainted with the Catholic religion, and thereby bring its sublime ages within the reach of all.

TERMS.
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once)..... $10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of five months..... 100 00
Music, French and German form extra charges.
Physician's Fee (if required)..... 5 00
Use of Library..... 2 00
Use of Bed and Bedding..... 10 00
Modern Languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Pupils will be received at any time during the session.
For further particulars apply to
REV. R. JUSTIN, President.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SANTA Monica Block, Main street, and is under the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and commodious.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS.
Invariably half yearly in advance:
Board, Tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per annum..... $
Physician's fee (if required), per annum..... 5 00
Music, use of instrument, per month..... 1 00
Painting, drawing, per quarter..... 5 00
No extra charge for French, Spanish and German languages.

Pupils will be received at any time during the session.

For further information inquire of the Superior of the Sisters of Notre Dame at Santa Clara.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPOrated according to the laws of the State and empowered to confer degrees, will commence the Fourteenth Annual Session on MONDAY, AUGUST 18, 1873. The Institution is conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Cross.

TERMS.
Entrance, to be paid but once..... $15
Tuition, per quarter..... 12 50
Washing, per quarter..... 12 50
Physician's fee (if required) is to be prescribed to pay the bill in case of sickness, per quarter 1 50
Piano, Organ, Guitar, Violin, Drawing form extra charges. There is no extra charge for the French, Spanish or German languages, nor for Plain and Fancy Needlework.

Payments are required to be made half a session in advance, viz.: from August 18th to January 1st, and from January 1st to the end of the session. au2-tf

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY,
MISSION DOLORES, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS ACADEMY IS A BRANCH OF THE Institution of Notre Dame, San Jose. The course of instruction, which embraces the Primary and Academic departments, is thorough in the English branches, comprises all the branches, both useful and ornamental, usually taught in the best schools for young ladies.

The first term of the Eighth Annual Session will commence August 1, 1873.

Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

TERMS:
BOARDING PUPILS.
Per quarter session (payable in advance)..... $
Board, tuition, washing, with use of bedding..... $
Use of Instrument..... 10 00
Vocal Music..... 5 00
Drawing and Painting..... 5 00
Vacation spent at the Academy..... 30 00

DAY PUPILS.
Terms per session (payable in advance.)
Select Day School—Historic, first and second Grammar Classes..... $
Third and fourth Grammar Classes..... 2 00
Preparatory and Primary..... 1 00
Particular Schools, per month, throughout the year..... 1 00
No extra charge for French, plain and ornamental needlework.
For further particulars apply to the reverend Superior.

SANTA MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Conducted by the Christian Brothers
Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

These will complete the Classical Course, receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the benefit of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

Pupils will be received at any time during the session, subject to the College rules now in force, receiving the same proportion of the annual fee as the time of their entrance bears to the whole session.

The daily exercises of Religious Instruction, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly attended and criticised by the class.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)
Board, Tuition and Washing..... $150 00
Bed and Bedding..... 10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines..... 5 00
Use of Library..... 2 00
Use of Piano..... 10 00
Use of Violin..... 5 00
Modern Languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Pupils will be received at any time during the session.
For further particulars apply to
BROTHER PATRICK, Director.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS ACADEMY, CONDUCTED BY THE SISters of Notre Dame, is pleasantly situated on the corner of Santa Barbara and Victoria streets, and is under the most delightful and healthy part of the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and commodious.

The course of instruction embraces the usual branches of a thorough English education. Spanish is also taught.

TERMS.
Invariably half yearly in advance:
Board, Tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per annum..... $
Physician's fee (if required), per annum..... 5 00
Music, use of instrument, per month..... 1 00
Painting, drawing, per quarter..... 5 00
No extra charge for French, Spanish and German languages.

Pupils will be received at any time during the session.

For further information inquire of the Superior of the Sisters of Notre Dame at Santa Clara.

The "Old" Catholic Bible.

It may not be uninteresting our readers to learn the form of oath allegiance for the German Emperor, which has just been taken by the "old" Catholic Bishop Reinkens. We give the translation of that document, and also the Patent of Recognition, signed by the Emperor William, as they have been submitted by the correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph at Berlin. The oath is as follows:

"I, Joseph Hubert Reinkens, swear an oath to Almighty and omniscient God, upon the Holy Evangelical Writ, that I, being thereto raised to the dignity of a Catholic Bishop, will be subject, faithful, obedient and devoted to his Royal Majesty William of Prussia, and to the legislative successor in government of his Majesty, and will conscientiously observe the law of the land; will particularly endeavor, as far as in me lies, to avoid injury and prejudice to the State, and to further, as far as I can and may, whatever is conducive to the welfare of the same. More especially I vow that I will not entertain any association or connection, be it within or without the kingdom, which may be prejudicial to public order and safety, but that I will make the propositions shall be made anywhere what may result in injury to the State, but will signify the same to my Royal Majesty. I promise to fulfill all this, the more willingly in that I am persuaded that no office obliges one to anything which can be opposed to the oath of allegiance to the Sovereign, and that it is also not obedience to the law of the land, if the I swear, so help me God and His Holy Evangelists."

The Patent of Recognition, signed by the King, reads thus:

"We, William, by the grace of God, King of Prussia, etc., etc., give to know, and make ready known, that we herewith, in virtue of the royal power, have decided in the 4th June, 1873, and of the consecration to the Catholic Episcopate, performed by the Bishops of Deventer and Roermond on the 11th August, 1873, do recognize the ordinary Professor in the Catholic Theological Faculty of Breslau University, Dr. Joseph Hubert Reinkens, as Catholic Bishop; and accordingly, we command our Upper Presidents, Presidents and Provincial Colleges, as well as each and every our vassals and subjects, of whatsoever name, position, apply or condition, herewith, graciously and expressly to recognize and respect the said Joseph Hubert Reinkens as Catholic Bishop, and let the same proceed undisturbed in the exercise of his episcopal function by anybody, all that which may be necessary to this end, without delay and hesitation, or may be exacted in virtue thereof, by way of honors and dignities, profits and advantages, on penalty of our royal displeasure and heavy inevitable reprimands; without prejudice, however, to all that belongs to us and to our royal and episcopal princely privileges.

"In witness whereof we have completed the present Patent of Recognition with our own Exalted Signature, and have caused it to be sealed with our Royal Signet.—Thus given Berlin, September 15th, 1873.

"WILHELM."

English Falsehoods.

We are growing accustomed to the fruitfulness of the London press, but it requires all the philosophy that patience and experience can teach to read without a flush of scorn the following paragraph from a letter on which figures in the Morning Post of Tuesday last. "Reddin," says this journal, "must have had a fine time of it for a couple of days before and again after the fight. The entries upon his late paper show that he had roast mutton, rump steaks, eggs, bacon, porter, wine, lemonade and brandy. Its consumption at the rate of 'sack four gallons, one pint and fourteen ounces of port wine, and over twenty-nine pounds of butter.' The fact is that this worthless fellow who had assisted in the murder of a policeman." When it is remembered that Reddin entered prison according to the sworn evidence of the prison medical officers, a strong, healthy man, and that, after being subjected to continual torture as a malingerer, he was discharged a pal-sied party-pre wreck, unable to walk, scarcely able to speak—the "fine time" he had of it in prison can be readily appreciated. But why did Reddin get it? Because the horrible crime for which he was subjected rendered it absolutely necessary to give nourishment if the man was not to be murdered outright. He had been reduced by torture to such a state that the doctors feared a slight improvement from the starvation diet on which he had been living absolutely indispensable if a coroner's inquest were to be avoided. Of course, the idea of his fare read well in the Morning Post; Reddin "had" roast mutton, rump steak, and so forth—when it was found that no other means were left of preventing him from sinking under the treatment he suffered, except applying unpleasant injuries; but we are to understand nothing more from this artful statement than that he got them in the ordinal nutritious quantities as medicine. All the while he drank at Millbank, which is all he will be allowed a day during his imprisonment. As to the allegation that he had assisted in murdering a policeman, it is just as true as the rest of the malignant concoction. He assisted in murdering no one, and if the policeman first be referred, to he was not murdered at all. He was accidentally and unintentionally killed. The whole sickening subject, and gladly leave to public contempt the ferocity and indecency of the Morning Post.—Nation, 18.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Such we find ourselves under the disagreeable necessity of reminding our subscribers throughout the State to come up promptly with their remittances. There is a large amount owing to us, but not more than we have been receiving much out of it. The present year, as far as it has gone, has been a fairly prosperous one, and that we believe our friends can have no difficulty in settling their accounts, which, individually, are small, though when added together they amount to a very respectable sum indeed. We now publish in THE MONITOR a complete list of our authorized agents, so that our subscribers can see at once to whom they should remit their money in their own vicinity. We are doing our best to make THE MONITOR a first-class family journal, worthy in every way of the faith, patriotism and intelligence of the Irish population of the Pacific Coast, and we confidently expect that our friends will not be backward in showing their support. At any rate the very least we ought to expect is payment of what is justly due to us. We should be very sorry to reproach our friends, for we believe no paper in America can boast of truer or stauncher; but the sums due are small in each instance, the times of payment are long between, for four dollars is twelve months is not a difficult undertaking, and consequently the very fact of payment is likely to forget their indebtedness

AGENTS FOR "THE MONITOR."

Alameda—W. H. Wright.
Alvarado—John Quigley.
Amador City—M. Hughes.
Antioch—James Wakefield.
Austin, Nev.—Martin Igo.
Auburn—P. Griffin.
Angels' Camp—Thomas Mackey.
Brooklyn, Alameda county—
Benicia—
Bodie—Peter O. Tarpey.
Bodie—Mrs. Ellen M

THE IRISH RACE.

Continued from First Page.

her great public works, the Champlain and Erie canals. The contractors soon found that, though American engineers, overseers, mechanics and teamsters could be obtained, perhaps in sufficient numbers and with passable skill, American laborers, to take the pick and spade and do the work of excavation, could not be found. An American could invent a steam excavator, but he could not or would not dig. There was no resource for the contractors but to send to Ireland, where the supply of labor was largely in excess of the demand, and import Irish laborers. The factory system going into operation about the same time, absorbed the farmers' daughters, hitherto relied on for domestic help, and there sprang up a great demand for female domestics. So Bridget was also sent for, and came over, and though many are the complaints we hear of her, a great blessing she has proved to the country. The only fault to be found with her is that she has become too Americanized in her notions and lost somewhat of her genuine Irish character.

In a word, the industries and wants of the country in the non-slaveholding States, after the peace of 1815, caused a demand for both male and female labor which the home market could not supply. Ireland, owing to Protestant ascendency and English misrule, could and did supply the demand. But these Irish laborers and domestics, without whom our public works, canals and railroads could not have been constructed, our manufacturing interests sustained, or domestics be had, were Catholics, and brought their faith with them, and must have the priest and the church; and hence the marvelous growth of Catholicity in this spiritual wilderness of ours. The old

AMERICAN PEOPLE HATED THE CATHOLIC RELIGION

As the devil does holy water; but business is business, and they were obliged to tolerate it, for these Catholic Irish were indispensable to the industrial success and prosperity of their homes. If English capital and American enterprise have done much to develop the material resources of our country, the migration of Irish labor has done still more; for without the devoted, hopeful and cheerful toil and spirit, it is doubtful, to say the least, if Americans, severed from their traditional resources, they would retain even their faith beyond the second generation. Catholicity, even if converted, yet receiving nothing from the good example of an old and persistent Catholic people, or from association with them, and retaining in all, except in manners strictly of faith, their American modes of thought, manners and usages, would soon lose all Catholic public spirit, and pure their Catholicity grow till hardly distinguishable from Protestantism. They and Protestant Americans would form one common unity, interests, and have their children to grow up and remain Protestant or Catholic as accident, or caprice might dictate. There is nothing in the Catholic or civil constitution and fundamental law of the country incompatible with the most indefinite Catholicity, but in every other sense American civilization is decidedly anti-Catholic—that is, decidedly and intensely Protestant. It is easier for the missionary to succeed in making good Catholics of our North American Indians or negro

AVERAGE AMERICANS.

His feeble intellect, his grocery feeble every day, little respect for authority, only a utilitarian regard for law, brooks with impatience, and cares not a straw for what he father believed or held to be sacred or obligatory. His politics are based on the principle, 'it am as good as you,' and his religion and morality, with his civilization, are based on the assumption that every individual is sufficient for himself, and sufficient for everything, and has the right at all times and in all things to be his own master, and to have his own judgment and will prevail. He is gregarious rather than social, cheerless, gloomy and opposed to all social liberty, mirth or fun. He knows no cheap or light-hearted and innocent pleasures, and tolerates no enjoyment in common with the poor, or that is not costly and corrupting. The world, he is a Protestant, abhors poverty, hates Catholicity, which has the same divine sorties for rich and poor, the prince and the beggar.

Now, it is certain that, while Catholics may even surpass Protestants in love and devotion to the independence, autonomy and real interests of the country, they may not adopt their manners, customs, and form one community or one homogeneous people with them. This is wherefore it is desirable that the Irish, domiciled or naturalized as citizens, with all the rights of any other class of citizens, should retain their distinctive character as Irishmen, and their attachment to their traditional Irish civilization; and therefore we rely for the conversion of the country on the internal growth, expansion and assimilating or absorbing power of the old Catholic colonies Providence has planted in our midst, and, as leaven hidden in three measures of meal, are ultimately to leaven the whole lump, than on missions directly to obtain accessions from without.

THE IRISH ARE NOT THE ONLY CATHOLIC COLONY

in the United States, far from it; nearly all the nationalities of Europe are represented here in both clergy and the laity, especially the Germans, who are given us in a large number of our priests, secular and regular, several of our venerable prelates, and more than one million and a half of our Catholic laity. We owe much to them all, especially to the Germans and Germans; but without making any invidious national distinctions, which are all one in faith and charity, we may say the Irish clergy are by far the most numerous, and exert greater influence on the Catholic American life. They, too, bring with them the remlniscences of their primitive civilization, and better than any others any where, they know how to cure their own.

We are far from pretending that the Irish in our country are faultless; indeed they have many faults very shocking to American notions of respectability; they are Scribes and pharisees; but their chief real faults are of American origin, caused by American influences and circumstances, and do not belong to the race, as we find it in Ireland or in any other country. They come from their attempt to imitate Americans, whose civilization is really antagonistic to their own, and from their natural agency, full flow of animal spirits, and great physical vigor which our politer civilization seeks to repress, and but only forces to break out in the shape of vice or crime. There are no faults, no vices, no crime against person and property and from vice and immorality as the Irish in Ireland and anywhere under the British flag, excepting always offenses of a political nature—always excepting offenses one hears of in Ireland. Even here the Irish and their descendants are by all odds, and under every possible form, the best and the most trustworthy portion of the American people. On the great body of them are chaste, industrious, ardently attached to their religion, and liberal in their contributions to the various calls of necessities, for its support. Drunkenness, do you say? Drunkenness there certainly is among them, but less than in the Yankee, perhaps than there is, among the pharisaic yet very respectable Americans. I have yet to see an Irish sot, such as I was in the habit of seeing in my boyhood in New England towns, reeling through the streets or store where liquor was sold, or to be had. Much has been compelled more to drink on the sly, or to substitute opium for rum. Intemperance is not the vice of the Irish, but is confined to the soul, or to society even, as pride and covetousness. There are

DAY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

DRY GOODS,

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

Corner of Minna ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

French, English and American

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS.

New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.

NO. 4 THIRD STREET,

Near Market Street. ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

TAXES!

1873-74.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT A CERTified copy of the ASSESSMENT BOOK of the Taxable Property of the City and County of San Francisco (Real Estate and Personal Property) for the Fiscal Year 1873-4, has this day been received; that the State, City and County Taxes for said Fiscal Year are now due and payable at the office of the undersigned, Room No. 1, City Hall, and that the laws in regard to their collection will be strictly enforced.

Taxes will become DELINQUENT on the FIRST MONDAY IN JANUARY, 1874, and unless paid prior thereto FIVE PER CENT. will be added to the amount thereof.

A. AUSTIN,

Tax Collector of the City and County of San Francisco.

San Francisco, October 28, 1873. 31

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Bishop of Milwaukee has recently dedicated the Polish Church of St. Stanislaus.

A telegram from Rome announces that the final establishment of the Jesuits will be removed to Malta.

The twentieth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Loughlan of Brooklyn, N. Y., was celebrated on the 30th October.

On one day, October 19th, one hundred and five Catholic churches in the diocese of Philadelphia were consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Archbishop Purcell and Bishop McCloskey have both dedicated churches for colored congregations, the former at Cincinnati and the latter at Louisville, Ky.

Archbishop McCloskey, of New York, confirmed eight hundred boys at the Catholic Protectory on the 15th of October, and in the afternoon of the same day confirmed four hundred girls of the same institution.

The Archbishop of Posen is said to be suffering from the excitement caused by the prosecutions of the Russian Government under the new laws against the clergy. He is said to be prostrated by a series of attacks of typhus fever.

The miracle of the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius took place this year with more than ordinary effect. The Neapolitan papers say that the miracle has not been so evident and unmistakable in twenty-five years. Every one should read the book on this miracle.

Applications for divorce are so frequent in Washington City, it is organizing a charity, we may say the Irish people are by far the most numerous, and exert greater influence on the Catholic American life. They too, bring with them the reminiscences of their primitive civilization, and better than any others any where, they know how to cure their own.

We are far from pretending that the Irish in our country are faultless; indeed they have many faults very shocking to American notions of respectability; they are Scribes and pharisees; but their chief real faults are of American origin, caused by American influences and circumstances, and do not belong to the race, as we find it in Ireland or in any other country. They come from their attempt to imitate Americans, whose civilization is really antagonistic to their own, and from their natural agency, full flow of animal spirits, and great physical vigor which our politer civilization seeks to repress, and but only forces to break out in the shape of vice or crime. There are no faults, no vices, no crime against person and property and from vice and immorality as the Irish in Ireland and anywhere under the British flag, excepting always offenses of a political nature—always excepting offenses one hears of in Ireland. Even here the Irish and their descendants are by all odds, and under every possible form, the best and the most trustworthy portion of the American people. On the great body of them are chaste, industrious, ardently attached to their religion, and liberal in their contributions to the various calls of necessities, for its support. Drunkenness, do you say? Drunkenness there certainly is among them, but less than in the Yankee, perhaps than there is, among the pharisaic yet very respectable Americans. I have yet to see an Irish sot, such as I was in the habit of seeing in my boyhood in New England towns, reeling through the streets or store where liquor was sold, or to be had. Much has been compelled more to drink on the sly, or to substitute opium for rum. Intemperance is not the vice of the Irish, but is confined to the soul, or to society even, as pride and covetousness. There are

BAY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

DRY GOODS,

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

Corner of Minna ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

French, English and American

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS.

New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.

NO. 4 THIRD STREET,

Near Market Street. ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, November 13, 1873.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been light. We quote—Extra at $4 87½@5; and superfine at $4 25@4 50; in sacks $ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has ruled active and at advanced rates since our last report. At the close the market is quotable at $1 70@1 82½ @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range at $1 37½@1 45 @ 100 lbs.

OATS—Have been in light demand, at a decline in rates during the past week. Quotable at the close at $1 80@1 90 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—The receipts have been fair during the past week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $14@17 for ordinary to choice @ ton.

STRAW—Quotable at 50@55c @ bale.

OATS—Quotable at $1 17½ for large yellow @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—The following are the jobbing rates: Bags, 24 oz., $24 00; Pick and Red, $1 00, and small White, $1; small Butter, $1 50 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The receipts have been fresh with a fair demand. We quote the range at 50@75c @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 25 @ 100 lbs.

BEANS—Quotable at $3 @ 100 lbs.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $30 00 @ ton from the mill.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at 2½@2 12½ @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—We quote Plaster at $6 (Quarry, Alpha, and Monard, Union $ B.

CORN—We quote at $1 37½ @ 100 lbs.

HOMINY—We quote California 6½, 10 and 12½c, and Eastern 6½c.

CRACKED WHEAT—Quotable at 6½@7½c @ lb.

OIL CAKE MEAL—Quotable at $32 50 @ ton from the mill.

WOOL—The market has remained inactive and without change since our last. The wineries have not been so efficient and unmistakable in twenty-five years. Every one should read the book on this miracle.

Applications for divorce are so frequent in Washington City, it is, since its organization as a District of the United States, that it is contemplated to assign one of the Judges of the Supreme Court to that district to the trial of such cases exclusively. The suits in such cases average nine a week.

Father Hecker, of the Paulist Fathers, pastor of St. Mary's Church, Lancaster, Penn., lectures on the golden jubilee of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, and says that thirty priests were present; only three of his parishioners who received him fifty years ago, are living still.

Most Rev. Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati baptized Mr. Samuel Freiog, a prominent citizen of Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Ewing had been through Episcopalianism, Presbyterianism, Swedenborgianism, etc., but on being satisfied with either, he sought refuge in the Catholic Church. He and a Mr. Walker, another Cincinnatian convert, were confirmed the same afternoon.

The King of Belgium is the most learned sovereign in Europe. He speaks seven languages and converses freely in Greek and Latin. He is a great connoisseur in sculpture and painting, and cares little or nothing for music; but his Queen is an accomplished musician. They are both pious Catholics and lead a most exemplary life.

The Catholic Review says that "at the present day many of the lineal descendants of the United States, an eminent and popular friar preacher was named Provincial, and his nomination has reached Rome for confirmation, pending which it will not be decent to indulge in the chapter of Roman Notes." The MONITOR is of opinion that this points to Father Burke. The chapter referred to does not include the province of the United States and Terrltories.

The MONITOR gave and extract last week from a speech of James Parton, the historian, at a meeting of the Free Religious Association, held in Boston, Sunday, 26th, in the Chairman, Hev. Mr. Frothingham, said: "Religion in America will be overthrown by common sense. It will not be Christian in any recognized sense of the term. Our religion requires no creed, no church, no sacrament, no prayer!" If our dog could speak he would say the same.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

GRAND OPENING

—AT—

THE WHITE HOUSE!

—ON—

TUESDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 30,

WE OPENED OUR

NEW FALL STYLES

—IN—

PARISIAN SUITS

—AND—

CLOAKS.

PARIS BONNETS, ETC., ETC.,

AND WE ARE NOW SHOWING

THE NEWEST

—AND—

MOST STYLISH GARMENTS

—EVER—

IMPORTED.

ALSO,

THE LATEST NOVELTIES

—IN—

DRESS GOODS,

AND WHITE GOODS.

FOR SALE BY

TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.

oct7-1m

CITATION WANTED.—A YOUNG IRISH lady, lately arrived from the old country, would like a situation in some office or store; has good classical and English education, and is not afraid of work of any kind; is here to rule herself, could take charge of a school, or give private lessons in Latin, Greek, French and German. Address—HIBERNICUS, this office. 2

INFORMATION WANTED—OF JAMES DRISCOLL, a native of Queenstown, County Cork, Ireland. When last heard from he was in London. Any information regarding him will be thankfully received by TIMOTHY BURLEY, No. 1 Stevenson street, San Francisco. Papers please copy. 4-97. 4w1*

DRY GOODS, ETC.

GRAND OPENING

—AT—

THE WHITE HOUSE!

—ON—

TUESDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 30,

WE OPENED OUR

NEW FALL STYLES

—IN—

PARISIAN SUITS

—AND—

CLOAKS.

PARIS BONNETS, ETC., ETC.,

AND WE ARE NOW SHOWING

THE NEWEST

—AND—

MOST STYLISH GARMENTS

—EVER—

IMPORTED.

ALSO,

THE LATEST NOVELTIES

—IN—

DRESS GOODS,

AND WHITE GOODS.

FOR SALE BY

TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.

oct7-1m

J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF

DRY GOODS!

Complete in Every Department,

We are now prepared to supply our customers with

The Best and Cheapest Goods

In the City. Among which are—

Black Silks,

Japanese Silks,

Empress Cloths,

Tarnise Cretons,

Cashmeres,

Merinos,

Sorges, Reps, Etc.

A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF

SHAWLS.

MASON & HAMLIN

Cabinet Organs

BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE

Special Jury, International Jury, and

Two Sub-Juries,

(including the most eminent Artists and Experts from different countries, it is significant that in comparison with other Organs the American Organs were not found worthy of even a display.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO., Agents,

653 and 655 Clay Street.

oct-qtrly

THE FIRST MEDAL

—OF THE—

VIENNA EXPOSITION

BEING THE HIGHEST RECOMPENSE AWARDED TO REED ORGANS OF ANY CLASS AND FROM ALL COUNTRIES, HAS BEEN AWARDED THE

MASON & HAMLIN

Cabinet Organs

BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE

Special Jury, International Jury, and

Two Sub-Juries,

(including the most Eminent Artists and Experts from different countries, it is significant that in comparison with other Organs the American Organs were not found worthy of even a display.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO., Agents,

653 and 655 Clay Street.

oct-qtrly

THE FIRST MEDAL

—OF THE—

VIENNA EXPOSITION

BEING THE HIGHEST RECOMPENSE AWARDED TO REED ORGANS OF ANY CLASS AND FROM ALL COUNTRIES, HAS BEEN AWARDED THE

PIPIFAX

It is with confidence that the present proprietors of the famous PIPIFAX, place it before the public, feeling assured that is an article of extraordinary merit, and only needs to be introduced to be appreciated. It is recommended by the principal physicians of Berlin, Prussia, and is largely used in the hospitals thereof, and a well known Hospital Surgeon in this City has pronounced it the best remedy for the cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Jaundice, Loss of Appetite, Nervousness, and a general debility of the system.

PIPIFAX

Is a purely vegetable preparation, and is entirely free from Mercury, Arsenic, Antimony, or any other mineral substance, and is perfectly harmless in its effects upon the most delicate constitution.

PIPIFAX

Is a GRAND TRUTH that the mind is every fiber of the body as water in a sponge, is without the influence of such a remedy as PIPIFAX. It elevates and clears the rational powers and preserves that happy equilibrium which constitutes a healthy state of the human system ter of a mile or so. We shall then be near my own district."

The dragoon bowed and they moved on. Arrived at a clump of trees the figure of a soldier was seen.

"Ha! Vose," said the Brigadier, "you are there."

"Your horse is below and ready, mon General."

"Where is your companion?"

"About a quarter of a mile further down on the road. We thought it as well he should keep watch while I was waiting for you."

"Would to Heaven the numskulls in high command would take hint from you," thought the Brigadier as he mounted and rode down the dark road-way which led from the camp, first dismissing the escort.

They moved on in silence until they reached the spot where Michel had last parted from his compagnon. But he was not to be seen.

"What has become of your comrade?" asked the Brigadier sharply.

"I am surprised, but cannot explain," answered Michel.

"So if he has fallen asleep anywhere about."

"I am quite sure he has not."

"Can he have proved treacherous?"

"I would lay my life he has not."

"What idea has become of him?"

Ah, that was not easy to say.

While Michel was ruminating mentally all sorts of conjectures as to his absent comrade, he heard a low whistle which bore the burden of a tune he recognized. Michel could not have named it, but it was that which tells the peasant stroke how "limeach is beautiful." But though he could not tell the name of the tune, he knew there was but one pair of lips in the French army likely to frame that melody.

"Ha!" he exclaimed in a subdued tone, "that is he."

"I will have him punished for being off his post," said the Brigadier angrily, although, speaking in a low voice.

"M. le Brigadier," said Michel respectfully, "I can assure you that Irlandais will not be found to be guilty of neglect. May I go and see?"

"I shall go with you," said the Brigadier.

They crossed a low fence and made their way through some brushwood, guided carefully and certainly by the tune which they heard distinctly in the dead silence that prevailed. Not more than a hundred yards had they passed, when close to them they perceived the object of their search. They up to a small tree by the legs and arms, with his countenance directed to the sky from which a few stars glimmered faintly. was Mr. Mahony pensively warbling the tune which had attracted their attention.

"What is the meaning of this?" asked the Brigadier sternly.

"Oh, then, Brigadier, I'll tell you, and welcome," said Mr. Mahony in his best French, "I assure your honor I was never so delighted to see you."

"Unloose his bonds at once, and let me learn the meaning of this," said the Brigadier impatiently.

Michel stepped past the Brigadier to execute his order, when the pioneer cried, "hold—mind what you are doing."

Michel stopped.

"Look down, can't you," said Mike.

Michel's glance was directed downwards and he was startled to see at his feet a corpse.

"What is this?"

"Look again," cried out Mike.

A few paces further off there lay also the body of a man towards which Michel stooped. As he did so a groan from the prostrate form met his ear.

"Why, they are Prussians," he cried.

"Uncommonly like," said Mike coolly, "But it wasn't my fault. I was only doing my duty, and when I saw them coming I just gave them a polthogue apiece, and they fell down as you see. I'm sorry for it, for I'm not fond of killing a man in cold blood, but I'm not a franc-tireur as you'll see if you do me the honor to inspect my uniform." "I cannot see a uniform in this light,' says he, and then Brigadier—I thought I never heard more unpleasant sounding French in my life—he says, 'we're going to hang you.' 'I'll you do,' says I, 'you'll break the laws of war.' 'No,' says he, 'we'll break your neck.' Well, Brigadier, though the joke wasn't bad for a tiernan, I hadn't much disposition to laugh at it. However, I put on a bold face, and says I, 'well, give us a good long rope anyhow.' 'Yes,' says he, 'for you.' But then I saw them consulting among each other, and it struck me they thought themselves short of rope. At all events, they tied me with such hard as you saw in these slender trunks, that were quite strong enough to hold me. Just as they did so there came the sound of a shot from the camp. They started. Then there came the clatter of horses feet down the road. They were alarmed, and one of them was about to bolt, but he was stopped. The one that spoke French to me called to him, and said something. It meant, I'm sure, 'carry off the prisoner.' Immediately the fellow he called to went to unloose me, but they had tied the knots so infernally tight that he bungled over them. Another swore. Though I don't talk Dutch myself, though I don't talk German myself—and at last he said something, like the meaning of which I soon understood. The fellow made a run of the bayonet at me, and then he ran off himself."

"Well, your honor, I got a touch, no doubt, for I feel my shoulder a bit sore, a side rather wet and sticky, but the puncan has cut through my beautiful new tunic with the richest green facings all round. I wish I had him, now that my hands are untied."

"If you are not too much hurt to march, we must get over to the camp as quickly as possible, for things here look serious," said the Brigadier.

"Why then, your honor, considering that ten minutes ago I thought I was going to be sent on a journey unprepared to the foliage of the beech tree over there, it would take a deal more inconvenience than I feel at present to prevent my stepping on."

"Allons."

CHAPTER XXVII.

SEAMONT AND GUISOMAN.

"The end has come," said the Marshal.

"Do you mean to say," said the Emperor, his pale cheek growing a shade paler, "that you have abandoned hope?"

"I do not quite know what Palikao has urged upon us is impossible, and has to be abandoned. To reach Rome, we should have been able to march eight leagues a day, and we have scarcely accomplished four miles. An army is perfect in all but in point of numbers, the one spoon our flesh is double our strength."

"Have you communicated your news to him?"

"Repeatedly, with additional insistance each time."

"Is he at last convinced?"

"I know not," replied the Marshal, with a bitter laugh, "but events will soon convince him that I was right."

A gloomy satisfaction, Marshal."

"Ah, sire, I would be glad to forfeit my life, and what I value more than my honor as a soldier, to be proved wrong. But there is nothing now left save to do the utmost we can under the circumstance."

"Right."

"Spirit of all, sire, there is one thing to be done which depends on you."

"What is that?"

"Why Majesty may think well."

"To be blessed upon every boulevard, stoned wherever a crowd assembles, perhaps to be assassinated by bombs of the old well known pattern."

"There's a risk, no doubt. Would your Majesty deem it well to join the Prince Imperial in Belgium?"

"MacMahon, when I have recounted the perils to which I would be exposing in Paris do not think it is they that deter me. You know I have faced as much before without disgrace. The risk I incur now arises from a the notion that I should go back to the capital with the disgrace of defeat on me, without at least the redeeming feature of having borne the brunt of the disaster. In Belgium I would possibly be free from physical danger, but I could not feel myself free from shame."

"Well, sire—"

"Tell me, MacMahon, were our places changed, what would you do?"

"Sire, it is impossible for a blunt soldier like me to put myself into the thoughts of a Minister of State, who has great policies to guide, and on whose existence vast combinations may depend."

"Ah, MacMahon, you evade the question. But it is not fair to compel you to speak out. If determination is taken."

"And that is?"

"To remain. If perchance for success, why I shall reap the advantage, and may be a little share of glory—though, trust me good friend, I will not rob you of your 2,000,000 francs."

"I know it well, sire."

"If I have as my sure fears seem to portend—then—then—it is hard to think it—but it is as good to die."

"I didn't hope not."

"Ah, MacMahon, hope for victory if you will, but, as from friend and soul subject, do not hope for life for me without victory."

"Your Majesty, at all events, has expressed the ardent wish I feel for myself."

"And are you selfish?"

"Mon Empereur, I know not. I can only say that all the energy of my mind and life shall be employed to avert the terrible alternative you have spoken of."

"I know it. Ha, what is that?"

The sound of cannon was borne distinctly upon the breeze.

"They are engaged probably over in the direction of Beaumont. I hope they are on the alert there We shall soon be fully employed ourselves."

"To horse," said the Emperor.

They mounted and rode out. The protection of the Marshal seemed to be near fulfilment.

An aid-de-camp rode up.

"M. le Marechal," he said, "the Prussian cavalry and artillery have appeared on the left, and, under cover of the hills near Bonay have attacked and severely handled our forces."

"Who is in command there ?"

"General Despres."

"Bid him retreat slowly to Vaux, and hold the heights. He shall be strongly aided."

The aids departed.

"Ride," said the Marshal to another aide, "to General Desmoulins, and tell him to bring two regiments of infantry, and a battery of artillery up to Vaux, and support General Despres in holding the heights."

The second messenger disappeared.

Intelligence came that the Saxon troops were crossing the river.

The Marshal ordered a demonstration to be made on their side.

By-and by the messenger returned.

"Well," said the Marshal, impatiently, to the hot and dusty rider who rode up.

"The Saxon advanced guard recrossed the river above Carignan, and suffered a good deal under the fire of our artillery."

"Good."

"M. le Marechal," said another aid riding up, "General Jacquin's dead men the enemy down the heights of Vaux."

"Let the enemy continue his advance," said the Marshal briefly and turning to those near him, he remarked, off we can follow up this advantage steadily we may beat them in detail."

"Ha, Marshal, said the Emperor, "our star has not yet set."

"I trust not, sir," briefly responded MacMahon.

As he spoke the sound of cannon, which had been reverberating in distant echoes to the south and west, grew heavier and closer.

The Marshal looked anxiously forward. "I wish to heaven we had news if De Failly," he said.

Turning to Major Lamboeu, he added, "One of your fellows saw Prussian cuirassiers last night, I think you told me."

"Yes; but whether they were in force or not he could not be sure."

"We shall be convinced before long, I fear," resumed the Marshal in a tone of voice whose anxiety he scarcely took trouble to conceal.

Nearer came the sounds, and now on the crest of the hill forms of soldiers could be discerned, first scattered, then in denser bodies, and lastly in close lines.

The turning far sweep of the rest appeared an aide de camp, who rapidly approached the Marshal. The latter eagerly tore open the dispatch and read with a gloomy brow.

"De Failly has been attacked, I perceive," he said at length, speaking in the emotion.

"But he writes in a congratulatory strain, that the enemy has been unable to prevent his effecting a conjunction with me."

"That is at least satisfactory observed the Emperor.

"Hum, I should like to know details. A junction after victory is pleasant, but a junction after defeat will not be very moderately gratifying."

And now the main body of De Failly's corps approached the Marshal nearer,

"I fear," said the Marshal, "this ends our chance of victory at Vaux. De Failly's retreat from a whole army to assail our force there in flank and rear."

In a few moments a regiment of De Failly's infantry, with broken ranks and confused looks, straggled by.

"Michel," said Mike Mahony, who with his companion were in attendance on their horses, "I am loath, and said as a respectful distance outside the circle of the staff, 'do you see that fellow with the down look limping along there?'

"I do and know him."

"Isn't he his swetheart that was selling the Emperor's sheets the other day?"

"He is, and the fellow is not the man to bring bad news."

"Still me, mon ami, were you ever in Ireland?"

A shake of the head, "No, I was not in that country."

"May be, then you never heard of a river called the Shannon?"

"Le Shannon? No, I never did."

"Augh, God help you, At all events, though you never heard of it, there is such a river."

"To be sure,"

"And it is the biggest and finest river in Ireland."

The soldier nodded assent.

"And there's a stash of salmon there in the season—time—and sometimes out of the season, too"—interrupted Monsieur Mahony with a wink, "that beats anything in the world, I suppose."

"Ah, excellent, no doubt."

"Now, do you know they fish for that salmon that?"

"Guess devils,"

"And many times I've taken a pull at the nets as they were engaged in that amusement."

"Most probable."

"Well, now, if you watch the way that net goes round that island, it's most curious. At first the fish never see it at all, nor feels it even, but its sailing around and goes near it, and takes no notice, almost so to say, but gradually it comes closer and closer together. If he is desirous it draws up, and it tickles him on the side, and sees him moving into the shallow strand, where he is certain to be grabbed."

"Eh, then?"

"Well, we are that salmon."

"What?"

"The net is round us. We are just after getting landed in the side down there by Beaumont and Carignan, and we are swimming pleasantly into the strand."

"And what, ben castarada, is the strand?"

"Maybe Sedan—I think that it is below there."

(To be Continued.)

LINES

On the Death of a Sister of Charity.

Dust—An aged sport, of yellow fever, a Sister of Charity, whose name in religion was Sister Gabrielle Marie Louise Poupardin—Special dispatch.

Sister of Charity, nurse unbroken,
In religion, Sister Gabrielle;
Closing like rose-bud at the sunset noon,
Sunset to the fever and fell, scourge.
Hymn her death-bed, and a sad to hell
Hang the cheek of the nurse who tended her;
Dear shall the Lord she loved so well.

Bending over the sufferer's bed,
Watching the flame of life waning clear,
Trying to rest the fevered head,
And the sister, devoted, nurse, and friend,
Poisoned and lost the patient's cross—
Death is sad—but it is not the end;
Yet gratefully rest for a lord's belonging from.

Glory and fame enshroud the name
Of Sister Gabrielle Marie Louise Poupardin;
Where the fever-fiend
Has reaped the martyr's glorious brand,
Where the sister's devotion is known;
Such deeds are common in every age
In the history of the Sisters of Charity,
Tyrants threaten and cowards deny,
And continue in wounds are proved in die.

The Catholic Platform.

The New York Times, edited by Englishmen, said the most virulent of all Republican papers, publishes the following "Plea for equal religious rights in the matter of public education," by a Protestant who has children in the public schools of the city. This "plea", embraces all that Catholics claim or desire. It is fully in accord with the theory of equal rights on which our Government and its institutions are based, and we believe there is not a Court in the United States which will refuse it. We think now the persecuted for conscience sake much longer:

Where are we drifting? We are told, on good authority, that a vast majority of the American people are in favor of excluding, by law, belong to no church and make no profession of religion. We think it highly improbable that any change could be an improvement, or that the present system of public schools will sustain full short of revolution. Everybody is familiar with those dreadful pictures of the savage fighting with his brother over differences in religious matters? Hold! Hold! Let us not return in a child generation to the days of the Thirty Years' War! Bonaparte had not yet reached this part of the country, and there was a general persuasion that the French troops had been victorious.

The Emperor was a little astonished, but he took care not to let his astonishment appear, and he courteously took off his hat in acknowledgment of the compliment paid him.

"This must be cheering to your Majesty," so many unpleasant occurrences of late," remarked an old officer who rode on his left.

"Very," said the Emperor, in a slightly sarcastic tone, as he took the cigar from his lips, "very. I wonder, though, if I pass through to-morrow, after they understand the manner in which our cannon are worked, they be so filled with loyal enthusiasm?"

"No doubt, sire, they would not be in as good humor."

"No doubt, Macmurpre, they would cry out, as I hastily know MacMahon on the field of battle, and left to take care of my own person."

"Vive l'Empereur!" again rose the cry, and once more the Emperor raised his hat with his customary grace, and rode through the narrow streets, the infatuation for his religious instruction to their children, are all thoroughly overpowering. Fine and open sky eyes and looks at things as they are.

But there are the Sunday-schools! The Sunday-schools, so far as they go, are doing a work of which the full value is that a majority of the children of our general population, who are in the greatest need of religious instruction, do not go to those schools. Suppose they all went to Sunday-school, what then? Why, at best, these could not supply the instruction they get in a week. Look at their public schools, excluding, as they must do, all religious teaching, and give them only from twenty to thirty hours' instruction a week in secular knowledge, and at once a man's understanding of the Bible is getting a conjunction with me."

"That is at least satisfactory observed the Emperor.

"Hum, I should like to know details. A junction after victory is pleasant enough, but a junction after defeat will not be very moderately gratifying."

And now the main body of De Failly's corps approached the Marshal nearer,

"I fear," said the Marshal, "this ends our chance of victory at Vaux. De Failly's retreat from a whole army to assail our force there in flank and rear."

In a few moments a regiment of De Failly's infantry, with broken ranks and confused looks, straggled by.

"Michel," said Mike Mahony, who with his companion were in attendance on their horses, "I am loath, and said as a respectful distance outside the circle of the staff, 'do you see that fellow with the down look limping along there?'

"I do and know him."

"Isn't he his swetheart that was selling the Emperor's sheets the other day?"

"He is, and the fellow is not the man to bring bad news."

Still me, mon ami, were you ever in Ireland?"

A shake of the head, "No, I was not in that country."

"May be, then you never heard of a river called the Shannon?"

"Le Shannon? No, I never did."

"Augh, God help you, At all events, though you never heard of it, there is such a river."

"To be sure,"

"And it is the biggest and finest river in Ireland."

The soldier nodded assent.

"And there's a stash of salmon there in the season—time—and sometimes out of the season, too"—interrupted Monsieur Mahony with a wink, "that beats anything in the world, I suppose."

Are They in Earnest?

That no great change was ever effected in the world of human politics without an immense accession of active opposition is as well as passive obstruction, may be considered as a truism, so trite, indeed, as to be, in the very nature of things, almost inevitable. In the first place it is so hard to convince those in whose power it is not open to conviction. There is something in the human mind itself, whether it be the result of pride, or self-love, or part of that general debasement which is the heritage of our race, which engenders a spirit of resistance against every new scheme, however highly commended, and no matter how earnestly recommended. Hence are some people, well-meaning, but dreadfully obtuse, whose whole life is one unceasing struggle against character for life, and whose ideas, consequently, run forever in ca narrow groove, and who are almost similar to the idea that it is possible that any change could be an improvement, or that anything could be made which would fall short of revolution. Everybody is familiar with those dreadful pictures of the savage fighting with his brother over differences in religious matters? Hold! Hold! Let us not return in a child generation to the days of the Thirty Years' War! Bonaparte had not yet reached this part of the country, and there was a general persuasion that the French troops had been victorious.

The Emperor was a little astonished, but he took care not to let his astonishment appear, and he courteously took off his hat in acknowledgment of the compliment paid him.

"This must be cheering to your Majesty," so many unpleasant occurrences of late," remarked an old officer who rode on his left.

"Very," said the Emperor, in a slightly sarcastic tone, as he took the cigar from his lips, "very. I wonder, though, if I pass through to-morrow, after they understand the manner in which our cannon are worked, they be so filled with loyal enthusiasm?"

"No doubt, sire, they would not be in as good humor."

"No doubt, Macmurpre, they would cry out, as I hastily know MacMahon on the field of battle, and left to take care of my own person."

"Vive l'Empereur!" again rose the cry, and once more the Emperor raised his hat with his customary grace, and rode through the narrow streets, the infatuation for his religious instruction to their children, are all thoroughly overpowering. Fine and open sky eyes and looks at things as they are.

But there are the Sunday-schools! The Sunday-schools, so far as they go, are doing a work of which the full value is that a majority of the children of our general population, who are in the greatest need of religious instruction, do not go to those schools. Suppose they all went to Sunday-school, what then? Why, at best, these could not supply the instruction they get in a week. Look at their public schools, excluding, as they must do, all religious teaching, and give them only from twenty to thirty hours' instruction a week in secular knowledge, and at once a man's understanding of the Bible is getting a conjunction with me."

"That is at least satisfactory observed the Emperor.

"Hum, I should like to know details. A junction after victory is pleasant enough, but a junction after defeat will not be very moderately gratifying."

And now the main body of De Failly's corps approached the Marshal nearer,

"I fear," said the Marshal, "this ends our chance of victory at Vaux. De Failly's retreat from a whole army to assail our force there in flank and rear."

In a few moments a regiment of De Failly's infantry, with broken ranks and confused looks, straggled by.

"Michel," said Mike Mahony, who with his companion were in attendance on their horses, "I am loath, and said as a respectful distance outside the circle of the staff, 'do you see that fellow with the down look limping along there?'

"I do and know him."

"Isn't he his swetheart that was selling the Emperor's sheets the other day?"

"He is, and the fellow is not the man to bring bad news."

Still me, mon ami, were you ever in Ireland?"

A shake of the head, "No, I was not in that country."

"May be, then you never heard of a river called the Shannon?"

"Le Shannon? No, I never did."

"Augh, God help you, At all events, though you never heard of it, there is such a river."

"To be sure,"

"And it is the biggest and finest river in Ireland."

The soldier nodded assent.

"And there's a stash of salmon there in the season—time—and sometimes out of the season, too"—interrupted Monsieur Mahony with a wink, "that beats anything in the world, I suppose."

"Ah, excellent, no doubt."

"Now, do you know they fish for that salmon that?"

"Guess devils,"

"And many times I've taken a pull at the nets as they were engaged in that amusement."

"Most probable."

"Well, now, if you watch the way that net goes round that island, it's most curious. At first the fish never see it at all, nor feels it even, but its sailing around and goes near it, and takes no notice, almost so to say, but gradually it comes closer and closer together. If he is desirous it draws up, and it tickles him on the side, and sees him moving into the shallow strand, where he is certain to be grabbed."

"Eh, then?"

"Well, we are that salmon."

"What?"

"The net is round us. We are just after getting landed in the side down there by Beaumont and Carignan, and we are swimming pleasantly into the strand."

"And what, ben castarada, is the strand?"

"Maybe Sedan—I think that it is below there."

(To be Continued.)

LINES

On the Death of a Sister of Charity.

Dust—An aged sport, of yellow fever, a Sister of Charity, whose name in religion was Sister Gabrielle Marie Louise Poupardin—Special dispatch.

Sister of Charity, nurse unbroken,
In religion, Sister Gabrielle;
Closing like rose-bud at the sunset noon,
Sunset to the fever and fell, scourge.
Hymn her death-bed, and a sad to hell
Hang the cheek of the nurse who tended her;
Dear shall the Lord she loved so well.

Bending over the sufferer's bed,
Watching the flame of life waning clear,
Trying to rest the fevered head,
And the sister, devoted, nurse, and friend,
Poisoned and lost the patient's cross—
Death is sad—but it is not the end;
Yet gratefully rest for a lord's belonging from.

Glory and fame enshroud the name
Of Sister Gabrielle Marie Louise Poupardin;
Where the fever-fiend
Has reaped the martyr's glorious brand,
Where the sister's devotion is known;
Such deeds are common in every age
In the history of the Sisters of Charity,
Tyrants threaten and cowards deny,
And continue in wounds are proved in die.

THE CELT AT NIAGARA FALLS.

Beside the rude and swift wave
He stood a moment, and then gazed
Self-poised and fearless on the gulf
That rolled his heaven of half its light,
And flung him in a sullen fear
A fettered wave of memory.

The exile's eye strove not or rest
Upon the cataract's rattling crest,
Nor paused it on the brilliant bow
Which hung scarce higher than his brow,
The banks of adamant to him
Were but the walls of his dim cell,
And from his gaze a child had guessed
There regret was sacred in his breast.

A flag against the northern sky
Above engaged his watchful eye;
Upon Canadian soil it stood—
In his low mind full many a feud
He'd seen crossed with pallid wars,
Pale, steady, stiff as prison bars
"Ah, cursed flag!" the exile said,
"The sky-prop of my hapless head,
My cursed keeper in my bonds,
My cursed brain within that skull
Which, like a cage of slaughter,
Urged I never cursed my death
Till I beheld the flag of wrath.
Then on thy squadrons shall be poured
The vengeance heavy so long has stored."

Then turning to his friends, who had Formed him, (the nation's dearly won,
"My Friends," he said, "you little know
The grave you've had to-day to sow
Hour but an Irish heart can tell
The thought that rankles in the swell
When I behold the fatal sign
That blights all Erin's land, save mine—
That stripped her of each gallant chief;
That scorned and bore her to the grief
That seems have blotted out her name
From the sacred bay the Trench of Kane;
So, help us heaven, the navies' can While true and valiant Irishmen."

LOS ANGELES.

At last, after a fatiguing and tedious journey of fifteen hours, we reached Los Angeles—Correspondence of the Angeles: Our Southern Portion.

but neither history nor the romance of the state whether they are fallen angels or otherwise, but from conjecture, however, that, considering the geographical position of the county, in the south of California, it must be the most favored region. With an immense treeless valley of 2,000,000 acres of fine agricultural land; with a climate unsurpassed for salubrious warmth; and has presented the climate which has been so long and so universally engaged in building, cultivating the land on all its real residences, and turning to advantage all the gifts that Providence has bestowed upon this angel land.

FRUITS—WINE-MAKING—AROMA.

The walnut, almond, orange and grape culture are now and have been for years the principal and most remunerative. Wheat, barley and corn are raised to a great extent, but the branch of industry which is based on on the greatest scale is that of wine-making. There are now in about Los Angeles wine which entitles it to the pre-eminence. The French still accept as grape wine. It may lack age and experience to make it little "earthy," but adulteration with alcohol, or with the poisonous drugs of its places, it is free. The Frenchman is a connoisseur in wine, and a Frenchman who has a large land of California vaults, formed me that he sold his last year's crop, amounting to 60,000 gallons, from the Anaheim firm at twenty-five cents per gallon, and that he made twenty per cent. profit at that low rate. The Italian vineyards will be very short." Other prophecies relate to Russia, Poland, England, etc.

The Schemer Mooney.

A correspondent writing from London says that Mr. Thomas Mooney publicly boasts of his reception in Ireland, and asserts that he has the whole people of Ireland with him. If this be true, it is one only say that Mr. Mooney protests far too much. He made two public addresses—one at Cork and one at Dublin—and both failed. The latter place he was listened to with considerable attention, and also the former he was condemned first and hooted afterwards. At Maryborough he brought out his peculiar opinions upon the land question, before an audience of farmers; and at Cork he discanted upon the special claims of the workingmen of that city, after having been refused a hearing at the great meeting of Sunday week. These are the principal events of his visit to the land of this gentleman, and they are certainly not calculated to justify him in boasting that he has the sympathies of the people of Ireland. We don't quarrel with all that Mr. Mooney says, although the greater part of them we cannot agree; but if by forcing his own views upon the Home Rule question upon the people of the Provinces Dunnion, then we should say he is doing the work of our enemy by the wayside. Marksmig delivered to all parts of the city free of charge. 81

A Tilled Bigot.

The Hotspur of the English Conservative party—that "cultivated ruffian," as an English newspaper, not unjustly styled, once called him—the Marquis of Salisbury, has made an onslaughter on the Government, and incidentally on the priests and people of Ireland, that recalls Disraeli's memorable letter to the Queen regarding Bulgarian atrocities in the Catholic wards of Bath. At a Conservative demonstration in Hertford, on Friday week, this peer delivered a speech in which, after having steered at the policy which Gladstone is pursuing the left cheek to Russia and America while demanding the uttermost farthing from Ashanti," he declared that the Irish are a measure which left the landlords of poor, and interpreting tenants in the "absolute warfare and lunacy of the police magistrates as to how they should manage their property." The Church, he said, has made "congregations who had all the offices of religion found for them for many generations, upon their own resources." Then the Irish peasantry, to conciliate whom the Government was passed, has been denounced for centuries for their turbulence and wards England; the priesthood, to conciliate whom the latter was passed, has been denounced for centuries for their turbulence and arrogance throughout the world," and both put together are now more violent, exacting and insatiable than at any previous period of their history. As for the Home Rule movement, its object, according to this man, is the dismemberment of the empire, and he therefore hopes that it will be met by a coalition of every English party to repel it with disdain." Pretty strong language, it must be confessed; but strong language wanting the ingredient of truth, in this dose, is, after all, in the long run, but a very impotent weapon.—Nation, Oct. 25.

Suuvoo, Illinois, was said, about thirty years ago, to contain a population of 25,-000, all Mormons. When this people removed westward the town became the property of French socialists. Now it is to the bands of Irish and German Catholics, for whom Bishop Foley of Chicago lately dedicated a very handsome church.

BUSINESS CARDS.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
643 Montgomery Street,
Between Washington and Merchant streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

C. GREENWICH HOWARD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Office—641 Montgomery street (west side),
Nat. California and Sacramento sts., San Francisco.

G. D. HALL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Office—647 Merchant Street,
(Opposite City Hall.)

PETER DEMPSEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
No. 621 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

M. COONEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law.
Office, Room No. 7, Court House,
630 CLAY and 633 MERCHANT STREET

F. J. BREARTY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
La Porte, Plumas County, Cal.
Will practice in the Courts of the 3d and 10th Judicial Districts. Collections attended to.

JOSEPH A. HARRINGTON,
ARTIST AND PORTRAIT PAINTER.
Pupil of the Academy of St. Luke, Rome.
STUDIO—Room No. 1 Mercantile Library Building, Bush street, between Montgomery and Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.
See Lessons given in Drawing, Painting, etc. 1m11

BONNARD & DALY,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
630 WASHINGTON STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Every Description of Job Printing
EXECUTED IN FIRST-CLASS STYLE.
J. D. CALLAGHAN, M. D.,
Physician, Surgeon and Accoucheur.
OFFICE AND RESIDENCE:
920 FOLSOM STREET.—San Francisco.
Office Hours—10 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4, 6 to 7 p. m. 9m1

DIXON BROTHERS,
Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters,
Opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.'s.—SAN FRANCISCO
All work warranted. 81

REMOVAL.
THE EXCELSIOR IRON WORKS
Have Removed from Sansome street to
151 and 153 Beale st. and 609 Howard st,
SAN FRANCISCO.
JAMES J. GALLAGHER, Manufacturer of Machinists and Blacksmiths' Tools, Mining Machinery, Iron Fronts, Shutters, Doors, Columns, Iron Railing attended to with dispatch. Orders by mail promptly executed. 81

MARTIN & CO.,
Importers and Dealers in
MIRRORS, PICTURES, &C.,
120 Fourth Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.
A large stock of Chromos, Engravings, Lithographs, &c., always on hand. Frames and re-gilding done at the lowest figures. Goods sold at wholesale or monthly instalments. 81

JOHN H. McMENOMY,
BUTCHER,
Stalls 7, 8 and 9, California Market,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Hotels, Restaurants and Families supplied on reasonable terms. Shipping supplied at short notice. Corned and Salt Beef, by the barrel, warranted. Marketing delivered to all parts of the city free of charge. 81

JAMES O'CONNELL,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
Wood and Coal,
LARUE'S WHARF,
Near Market street Wharf.—SAN FRANCISCO.
Hotels, Boarding-houses and Families supplied at the lowest rates. Orders left at the Yard or at 414 Clay street, will be promptly attended to. 81

JOHN MOLLOY,
PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT,
AND DEALER IN
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS
54 Clay st., bet. Drumm and Kearney,
SAN FRANCISCO

FRANCIS BUCKLEY,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
Also agent for the celebrated
GAS FIXTURES,
AND DEALER IN IRON PIPE,
And all Kinds of Plumbing Materials.
Gasfitting and Plumbing Work promptly attended to. Orders from the country promptly executed.
Sole Agents for the Improved Sun-Burner and Chimney, for lighting Halls, Churches, Theatres, etc. 1y37

CANDIES! CANDIES!
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Of all descriptions and of the best materials, freshly manufactured every day by
CANTY & WAGNER
Wholesale and Retail
Confectioners
107 MONTGOMERY ST.,
Between Bush and Sutter.—SAN FRANCISCO

The attention of the trade is called to our immense assortment of Candies and other goods, which are warranted to keep in all climates. Prices low and terms liberal. Orders from the interior promptly and carefully attended to 81

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS

IMPORTANT NEWS!
HOUSEKEEPERS CAN SAVE TWENTY PER cent by purchasing their GROCERIES AND LIQUORS
AT THE
STEVE McGILLAN'S,
643 FOURTH STREET.
He guarantees to sell to customers at WHOLESALE RATES, besides delivering goods free of charge. ap12

FAMILY TRADE WANTED.
T. P. WALL,
Cosmopolitan Sample Rooms,
50 THIRD STREET,
Between Stevenson and Minna sts., San Francisco.
HAS REVITED HIS SAMPLE ROOMS IN the new brick, and has on sale the very finest brands of WINES AND LIQUORS, imported direct by the importer, and intended specially for family use, which he offers for sale at the following low rates: Good Bourbon Whisky, $1 75 per gallon, or 50 cents per bottle; Pure Old Brandy, $2 50 per gallon, or 75 cents per bottle; Superior Old Brandy, $3 per gallon, or $1 per bottle.
Wines of all varieties at proportionate rates.
Attending the Sample Rooms is a large room for Lunch and Club meetings; also a Reading Room, where will be found the principal weekly papers on file. my17 T. P. WALL, 50 THIRD st.

JOHN T. KELLY'S
BAR AND BILLIARD ROOMS,
640 Market Street,
Opposite Fourth street.—SAN FRANCISCO.
Finest quality of Ales, Liquors and Cigars. 81

P. H. BREEN'S
SAMPLE ROOMS,
46 and 48 Sixth street, bet. J and K, Sacramento.
Always on hand Finest Bottled Liquors for family use.

J. J. CADOGAN,
184 J street, between Sixth and Seventh, Sacramento,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS,
Butter, Cheese, Eggs, Flour, Potatoes and Beans.

HUGH DUFFY,
Wholesale Dealer in FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC WINES AND LIQUORS,
19 J street, between Third and Fourth, Sacramento.

CITY HOTEL,
No. 39 First street (opposite C P R R Depot, between I and J streets), ..... Sacramento.
Choice Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand
CASSIDY & REYLAND ..... Proprietors.
C. CASSIDY. T. REYLAND.

JOSEPH A. CUNHOE,
108 J street, bet. Fourth and Fifth, Sacramento.

CENTRAL SALOON,
40 K street, bet. 3d and 4th, ..... Sacramento.
DUNN & O'HALLORAN, Proprietors.
MARTIN DUNN. JOHN K. O'HALLORAN.

BLUE WING SALOON,
Corner Fourth and K streets, ..... Sacramento
M. BALLANAS ..... Proprietor.
None but the very best Wines, Liquors and Cigars

BARNEY CLARK,
Central Exchange Saloon, Oyster and Chop House,
Southeast corner Seventh and J streets, Sacramento.
Open night and day.

DUFFY BROS.' SALOON,
621 Merchant Street ..... San Francisco.
Best Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

LYMAN, RAFFERTY & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND
WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALERS,
616 BATTERY STREET,
Corner of Merchant..... San Francisco.

CITY HOTEL,
49, 51, 53, 55 and 57 K street, bet. Third and Fourth,
J. H. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
Wines, Liquors and Cigars,
536 COMMERCIAL STREET,
Above Montgomery ..... East California Market.

WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 506 FRONT STREET.

F. & P. J. CASSIN,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers in
WINES AND LIQUORS,
NO. 502 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Sole agents for O. K. GOLDEN PLANTATION WHISKY.

JOHN KENNY,
IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS,
Has removed from 322 Market street to
NO. 513 FRONT STREET,
Between Washington and Jackson.....San Francisco.

EBERHART & LACHMAN,
MANUFACTURERS OF CALIFORNIA SPARKLING WINES.
SWEET AND DRY CHAMPAGNES,
Sparkling Muscatel and Claret.
Also, Importers and Dealers in Wines and Liquors, agents Angelica, Muscatel, Madeira, Port, Sherry, Rhine Wines, Hennessy, Hudnut, Sweet and Dry Catawba, etc. Grape Brandy, Pure Old Rye Whisky, etc. All our Wines and Liquors are made exclusively from Mountain Grapes, and are pure, for sale, corner of First and Market streets, San Francisco

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
142 Third Street ..... San Francisco
Importer and Dealer, Wholesale and Retail in French Wines and Brandies,
AND
Irish Whiskey,
Imported direct from Ireland.

HE HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AS-sortment of California Wines of every description, which he will offer, wholesale or retail, at the convenience of families.
All orders left at the store, 142 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city.
Remember only one GREAT AT HOME, $7 20. Hunt's Remedy for Kidney Diseases.
Look at our CHEAPEST VOICES, for Schools, Societies, Lodges, etc., above Pianos for sale at retailers, cheap, postpaid, on receipt of price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., C. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.

The Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener
3 MONTHS FREE.
Will be sent FREE for the last three months of 1873 to any person in all who will send their name and address at once. We do not ask any money in advance, but will paper until they know what they are to get. It speaks for itself. Price only 75 cents per year. The SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR is a work of 64 pages, that tells in simple language how to grow fruits in abundance for home use or market. Price 30 cents, postpaid.
A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N. Y.

$72 00 EACH WEEK.
AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE. Business strictly honorable. Particulars Free. Address at once, J. WORTH & CO., St. Louis, Mo.

SACRAMENTO ADVERTISEMENTS.
J. W. ARMSTRONG, ..... Sidney
ARMSTRONG & HINKSON,
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW,
Office, corner Seventh and K streets, Sacramento
CITY FRONT SALOON,
No. 39 Front street (opposite C P R R Depot, between I and J streets), ..... Sacramento.
Choice Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand
CASSIDY & REYLAND ..... Proprietors.
C. CASSIDY. T. REYLAND.

JOSEPH A. CUNHOE,
108 J street, bet. Fourth and Fifth, Sacramento.

CENTRAL SALOON,
40 K street, bet. 3d and 4th, ..... Sacramento.
DUNN & O'HALLORAN, Proprietors.
MARTIN DUNN. JOHN K. O'HALLORAN.

BLUE WING SALOON,
Corner Fourth and K streets, ..... Sacramento
M. BALLANAS ..... Proprietor.
None but the very best Wines, Liquors and Cigars

BARNEY CLARK,

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 29, Inclusively.

23—Sunday—Twenty-fifth and last Sunday after Pentecost. St. Clement, Pope and Martyr.
24—Monday—St. John of the Cross, Confessor.
25—Tuesday—St. Catharine, Virgin and Martyr.
26—Wednesday—Dedication of St. John Lateran. St. Peter of Alexandria, Bishop and Martyr.
27—Thursday—Vottve of the Blessed Sacrament.
28—Friday—Feria.
29—Saturday—Vottve of the Immaculate Conception.

THE MONITOR:

THE ONLY

Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....NOVEMBER 22, 1873.

THE AMERICAN NAVY.

When we boast so much and so frequently about American supremacy in trade, commerce, agriculture, industry and so forth, we are very apt to forget there are some things, almost equally worthy of a nation's attention, in which we have grievously fallen off and are losing ground at every day. It would be paying an undue tribute to national vanity to assert that the United States are at present either as much feared or respected by foreign powers as they were twenty years ago. Thinking men are struck with admiration at the apparently unwarying activity of our population; statisticians are amazed at the variety of incontestable resources to possess; political economists agree future before a country which affords such a wide scope for human energy to work in; yet when one speaks of America as a nation, as a power apart, as something like contempt is felt, even though it may not be expressed. It was not, however, always so. There was a time when the proudest monarch of Europe would not consider the chances of success worth risking the anger of the Republic. There was a time when the Stars and Stripes symbolised something higher and nobler than forty millions of people engaged in making dollars and cents.

What is the reason of this lamentable decadence? The accession of the radical Republican faction to dominancy over the country, beyond doubt or question. As long as the Democratic party was in power the national strength was adequately represented on land and on sea, the national honor was kept pure and unsullied, the national dignity was a matter of solicitude to obstreperously loiter the world. Then American statesmen were really and truly gentlemen, then American office-holders were honest and capable, then the people's money was not squandered in a reckless manner, then the people's business and not either wasted or stolen. Ever since the election of that low and tricky country lawyer, ABRAHAM LINCOLN (whom the fool fiend of a cowardly assassin converted into a popular martyr), ever since the defeat of the Democratic national reputation and public spirit have been decaying. It was a Radical Administration that inflicted upon the country" in the Texas affair, one of the grossest humiliations that ever befell any country. If the White House had been occupied in 1861 by a Democratic President the Trent would never have been stopped, or else Queen-coddler Wilkes would have been reprimanded instead of feted, or else the memories of England would have been answered by defiance. It has been Radical Administrations that have fostered every villainy, as if they were studying the problem how to take the most money from the people and give them the least in return.

As an illustration of their extravagance and dishonesty let us take the Navy. It is now a notorious fact that the American Navy is not at the present moment equal to that of a third-class European power. It is, to tell the whole truth, practically worthless. The republic has not afloat, and does not own, a single ship able to cope with one of the iron-clads composing the fleets of other nations. The contention that a country made of free shores can be competent to engage the Spanish frigate now being reported in one of the Eastern dock-yards) and the suggestion was actually put forward that such an ship should be stopped, and that she should be prevented from getting ready for sea! England appears exactly anxious that we should go to war with Spain as the Virginius affair, and, according to one of our city papers, she is so because she knows that the Spanish men-of-war would drive all American traders from the sea, establish their supremacy and throw it at once more into the hands of the British. Some Eastern papers complacently remarked that a movement against Cuba would surely be successful because most of the Spanish vessels in West Indian waters were laid up and out of commission. So it is conceded by the best authorities that the United States have no navy worth speaking about. Our officers are excellent, the sailors are excellent, but the ships are good for nothing.

To excuse this state of affairs it is often urged that we do not want any navy; that we will engage in no foreign wars, and that we can make a navy whenever we need it. All this is sheer nonsense. War may be forced upon us, whether we like it or not, and we must accept it unless we wish to abandon all pretensions to nationality. Ships capable of fighting cannot be improvised like so many militia regiments. Then there is the argument of expense; but this is completely refuted by the fact that even at present sufficient money is expended upon the American navy to maintain a first-class fleet—such a one as could defend the honor of our country against any European power. But the money is wasted in slothering, patching and stirring, more, it would seem, for the purpose of keeping a certain number of vessels employed, and for securing comfortable positions for political vice-pullers, than for keeping even those ships in proper order. How is this state of affairs to be remedied? There is, indeed, only one way. The citizens must vindicate themselves at the first opportunity by hurling from power the crowd of political cormorants who, provided they gorge themselves with plunder, care little about the people and less about the country.

THE CASE OF THE "VIRGINIUS."

Towards the end of last week the public mind received an unpleasant shock from the intelligence that the notorious Cuban steamer "Virginius" had been captured by a Spanish man-of-war, and most of her crew and passengers shot. The first report was to the effect that thirty-eight individuals, among whom were several prominent Cuban insurgents and the Irish-American adventurer, General RYAN, were summarily executed. A subsequent report declared that about sixty other persons, comprising nearly all the steamer's crew, had been put to death. This latter news lacks confirmation, and the probability seems to be that there is no foundation for it. However, there can be no question of the fact that some of those who all the cabals and machinations of party, were on board the "Virginius" at the time of her capture have paid the penalty of their foolhardiness, and met an untimely death at the hands of the Spanish authorities. Several of them were American citizens, and the United States Consul at Santiago protested against their execution, but to no purpose, the Cuban officials maintaining they were pirates according to international law, and justly liable to extreme punishment. The execution of these unfortunate men has raised a terrific storm of excitement throughout the Eastern States, and nothing short of an immediate war with Spain will, apparently, satisfy the people. The Government, however, is not well able to pay the popular passion, but is taking steps to learn exactly and officially to what extent the national honor has been compromised by the executions; and should it appear that the Spanish authorities have exceeded their duty, apology and reparation will be demanded and exacted by the whole strength of the country if necessary.

It appears to be admitted that the "Virginius" was not in Spanish waters and was flying the American flag when she was overhauled by the "Tornado." The question to be first settled, then, is whether she had any right to carry that flag or whether she was bona fide an American vessel. Some months ago she was transferred from the British to the Spanish American port, and an United States man-of-war conveyed her out to sea, and it was generally understood that after this proceeding our Government freed itself from further responsibility about her. It is generally believed that she soon after became the property of individuals interested in the Cuban rebellion, and if the supposition be correct it will deprive the United States of all justification for interfering. Beyond a question the transfer was a mere actual breach of the Spanish neutrality laws, but they were matters of internal discipline which, according to international law, is not open to the censure of foreign powers.

Every man on board the "Virginius" knew very well she was in the service of the Cuban insurgents; every man knew she was bound for the shores of Cuba, loaded with arms, ammunition and other military stores for men who were in rebellion against the Spanish Government; consequently, all on board were aware that they were not engaged in legitimate trade, but in an extraordinary business which might cost them their lives at any moment. They were all paid exorbitant wages, and they accepted them as full compensation for the great risks they ran. They played a desperate game for high stakes, and, unfortunately for themselves, they lost. Had they succeeded and landed their cargo safely they would have caused the Spaniards the loss of many a gallant soldier; they would have caused the destruction of more valuable property; they would, in short, have increased the misery and suffering arising from the operations of the insurgents; but they would have earned very little indeed, and as long as they earned their money, and their conduct would be applauded by American journalists who never care to inquire into the right or wrong of anything, but follow the current of popularity no matter in what direction it may set. Money is being collected, men are being enlisted, expeditions are being organised, in open defiance of the municipal laws, and in utter disregard of the national dignity and honor of the United States, without one word of protest being made by those who call themselves leaders of the people.

The Government, however, is not wholly insensible to its duty; it may tolerate these things to a certain degree, but the moment any overt act is committed it will surely step in and assert the supremacy of the law. If war is to be made upon Spain—and the great probabilities are there will be no occasion for it—it must proceed from the nation, and not be a speculation in the hands of private individuals. Meantime inquiry is being pushed energetically to the discovery of the fact as to whether or not the "Virginius" was properly an American vessel at the time of her capture; if she was the shooting of any one on board her was an unjustifiable barbarity which must be atoned for; if she was not, the wretched men who met their death in Santiago were themselves alone to blame for their tragic end.

PURCHASING GROCERIES.—People who come into town in order to purchase their supplies of family groceries are often very much at a loss to know where they had better go. They want good wholesome and unadulterated articles at a moderate price, and are not aware of where they can be found. We can very readily solve the difficulties of these perplexed individuals. We recommend them to try the store of Murphy Brothers, Nos. 2 and 701 Market street. In that new well-know establishment they will find groceries suiting at prices to astonish them by their cheapness.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

There will be no restoration of the monarchy in France, at least for the present. The Count DE CHAMBORD has emphatically declared he will recognize nothing the revolution has done, and refused to accept the tricolor as the national flag. Expostulation by his best friends failed to induce him to change his mind or to persuade him to offer any kind of compromise. He takes his stand on principles, and refuses to abandon them for mere worldly considerations. He is now a man past middle life, he has no family of his own, he has ample means to support himself comfortably, and he is not troubled with much ambition. He has no cravings after the glories and vanities of the throne, he will not condescend to intrigue for a restoration; above all, he will never renounce the political traditions of his ancestors. He believes that if the French people put him on the throne they will do so because they think it is the best thing for themselves, and not because they have a wish to confer royal dignity upon him. So he remains involved amid all the cabals and machinations of party, and calmly says to the nation, "If you want me you must take me on my own terms or not at all. I do not want you and can do very well without you." Seeing him so firm, the monarchists endeavored to make him abdicate, or rather renounce his claims, in favor of one of the Orleans princes, who, it was well known, would stick at such trifles as the color of a flag when it lay between them and the kingly dignity; but in this they failed, because if DE CHAMBORD is conscientious in his opinions he is conscientious scruples for his own benefit, he certainly was not the man to give them up for any other individual.

The Republicans were, of course, delighted at this turn of affairs, since it threw legitimacy into their hands at the very moment they were expecting disastrous defeat. The Royalist members of the Assembly, seeing the monarchical reparation thus rendered impossible, are now endeavoring to procure a prolongation of MACMAHON'S powers for a period of seven years. The Radical minority, headed by THIERS, are resisting this, and it appears probable the Republican party will prevail in the end. The conservative politicians throughout France look upon the gallant Marshal as thereby refuge against a revival of the Commune, with little or no prospect of any better government, and they will fight a hard battle before acknowledging themselves beaten or giving up the reins of power. It is not unlikely that they will carry their point, at all events to the extent of securing some prolongation of the President's authority. If they can procure a term of five years—two years less than they ask for at present—they will have every reason to congratulate themselves, and they may be able to preserve their country from the horrors of anarchy and "All the success or failure of the Conservative party would be equivalent to throwing the destinies of the country into the hands of the radical faction or a revival of the Commune. Five years of assured peace and of a strong Government will allow the people to be educated into a knowledge of their requirements and political rights, and how they should be worked, as well as to explode all the pernicious socialistic theories which are now so prevalent and so generally accepted by the masses. Should MACMAHON'S adherents be defeated, THIERS will come into power; after him GAMBETTA will gain prominence, and after that gentleman will come civil war and outrages against religion. It is a notorious fact that VON BISMARCK and his Imperial master are extremely anxious for the removal of the gallant Marshal and the accession of Monsieur THIERS. Of course they know who omits their best and what is most favorable to their policy. But the true friends of France should take warning from the circumstance, and should learn how to bestow their sympathies in the present crisis.

Since the foregoing was written telegrams have arrived with intelligence to the effect that the Conservatives have secured an unconditional prolongation of MACMAHON'S powers for the full period of seven years. This is a great victory for the cause of law and order. It affords an opportunity for either establishing permanently a republic presided over by men of reconcile and Christian principles, or else, should they prove impossible, bringing about a restoration of the monarchy without any danger of civil war. Conservatives and Radicals will work hard during these seven years to gain over the masses to their side, and so secure ultimate control of the country and its Government.

—PARIS, November 19.—The Assembly held a tumultuous session to-night over the amendment of the report of the Committee of Prolongation, providing that President MACMAHON'S powers be prolonged seven years, independently of the passage of the Constitutional bills. Labouiaye, Riviere and others opposed the amendment, but it was adopted by a majority of sixty-six. A motion was made on the part of the Right that a committee of thirty be appointed to report on the Constitutional bills, and adopted by a majority of sixty-eight. There is much excitement in Paris over the result.

CATHOLIC HALL AND LIBRARY.—We request our readers to pay special attention to the letter from Father Gleeson, which we print elsewhere in our columns. That part of it which has reference to the proposed establishment of a grand Catholic Hall and Library should be seriously considered by all who may feel inclined to favor such a project.

The Freeman's Journal says that "rich Protestants, in the public school programme, are sumptuous beggars at the doors of Catholic taxpayers."

A WORD TO THE CATHOLICS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

To the Editor of The Monitor—SIR: I read with much pleasure in your last issue Brownson's review of Father Thébaud's work on the Irish. I have never met with anything like it. It is, as you say, the grandest vindication of the blood and traditions of the Irish that has been penned in the country—you might have added, in the world. Its chief value lies in the fact that Brownson is not Irish, by blood or proclivities, while as a philosopher and critic he stands facile princeps among those of his calling. Unconsciously he has made us his debtors to an extent we can never repay. The characteristics for which he accredits our people, both in the past and at present, are so honorable and estimable that they deserve to be deeply impressed on the minds of our race and carefully transmitted to posterity. Morally, physically and intellectually he places us foremost among the peoples of the earth. Irishmen and their instinctive appreciation of the refined he brings out in the Saxon. Naturally the Celt is remarkable for its rare physical development, and furnishes specimens of manhood and female beauty and strength unmatched in any other known race. "Even to-day you will find in the Irishman the Christian virtues of humility and poor lowliness you find in the English or German peasant. Compared with either, the Irish peasant has the feelings and manners of a gentleman." But why repeat, someone may say, what we have already quoted? We are golden sentences and deserve to be remembered by all; not, indeed, for purposes of vanity, but for making our people what they have been intended for both by nature and grace.

The concluding remarks are equally worthy of note. They are these: "There are no people on earth who have a greater love for and property and from vice and immorality as the Irish in Ireland . . . The Irish in Ireland and in the United States are, by all odds and under every point of view, the purest and best-natured people, the most patient people, the most forgiving people!" and again: "Your greatest criminals are not Irish, but Americans. The Irishman is not corrupted though sometimes assuming Irish names. Thanks, immortal thanks, to the venerable parents of the Irish people, that they have brought themselves

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

An English Gentleman.

Mr. Bernal Osborne must look to his laurels. Wakefield, says the Protestant Journal, as Mr. Patrick Power Scanlan, who used to be in the cork-cutting trade, has turned out a tremendous wit, and the town of Waterford is delighted with him. He appeared at petty sessions the other day as complainant against two citizens for an assault. Mr. Scanlan's manner, which the local journals hardly succeed in reproducing, is apparently of the listless kind. It would be a pity not to give him the benefit of a report in the first person. He stated his case in this fashion:

Sat Wednesday, the 24th of October, I was taking a constitutional walk in Newtown as I passed Foot's residence, Hennessy, Clampett and Another Fellow dared to get on the parapet before me, but the third remained behind; how dare they stand on the parapet before the Englishman, a born gentleman? Hennessy and Clancy walked before me for a short distance, and then stopped; how dare they stop before me? When I came up to them I struck my stick on the ground, and said, allow me to pass; no answer; I then demanded them to leave the way for a real Englishman and an English gentleman; yes, I am an English gentleman and a born gentleman; Hennessy had a paper showing it to Clancy; I then said, an Englishman gentleman demands to pass; Hennessy stopped off the parapet to the road and seized my stick and knocked off my hat and shoved me against the wall; he then proved his attack on me by saying "that's the way," he said, "we treat English gentlemen here."

That ended the discussion and a new case against Scanlan was heard.

Mr. Hennessy deposed that Mr. Clancy said he was standing on a curbstone, looking over a boat paper, when Scanlan came behind him, and striking his stick on the ground, told the Irish beggars to clear the pavement for an English gentleman; did they not know he was an English gentleman; he said afterwards, "if you don't clear the way for an English gentleman and real Irish beggars, I will drive my stick down your throat;" he made a lounge and the stick struck the paper parapet, so he seized stick, &c.

To the bench—So struck on before I spoke I wonder I took no notice of his talk, for I consider it a most perfect nuisance, who causes crowds to collect—ladies pass without insulting them.

Scanlan, striking his stick furiously on the floor—Oh, Gad! Oh, Gad! Oh, Gad! How dare you, you bare-legged raging, you dare not interfere in the matter, but your degree from poverty college. How dare you say such a thing to an English gentleman? I am a gentleman, I am a gentleman.

Mr. Hennessy—He is a perfect nuisance and ought to be put under a rule of bail.

Scanlan—Oh, Gad! Oh, Gad! Bring you down to the English gentleman who is up Irishmen, this is new Irishman. I claim protection as an English gentleman.

The Mayor—An English gentleman will be protected, but we cannot act with impartiality.

Scanlan—That is a nice doctrine. You have offered an insult to the British flag in my person, and look you to it.

And inferring the menace, the ugest Briton left the court.

Sermon.

The Most Reverend Dr. Moriarty, of the Catholic Bishops on the subject of higher education has been followed by prompt and energetic action. The staff of Professors in the Catholic University has been completed by some excellent appointments, and arrangements are in progress for giving full effect to the constitution. Among these we learn that Mr. John Casey, LL.D., who has been elected for the chair of higher mathematics, vacated by the Rev. W. G. Penny, M.A., who has undertaken the charge of an English mission. Mr. Casey is a distinguished graduate of the University of Dublin, and might have obtained a fellowship in Trinity College but for the religious tests. His accession to the Catholic University, the Irish correspondent of the Times says, is regarded as an ample set off to the desertion of Professor Sullivan.—Catholic Opinion, October 25.

ENGLAND.

Grand Mass Said Demonstration in Liverpool.

On Monday night, October 20th, a meeting was held in Liverpool in favor of Home Rule. The building was densely crowded, and there was the greatest difficulty in obtaining admission. The principal speakers were of the most enthusiastic character. Among those present were Messrs. Isaac Butt, Philip Callan, Hugh Henrick, Rev. Father McKay, Rev. J. Daly, Rev. T. Hogan, Rev. M. Cunningham, Rev. Father Dorras, Rev. P. Hickey, Dr. Maher, Dr. Bligh, etc. Mr. Joseph Martin was to have been present, but was prevented in consequence of having received a train.

The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said he never felt more proud than he did that night in presiding over such a meeting—a meeting which was a credit to the Irish of Liverpool and to the great cause they had come there to rally around.

Mr. Isaac Butt said that in coming before a meeting like this in England he always felt that he had a double duty to discharge. He had to appeal to Englishmen to satisfy them of the reasonableness of the Home Rule movement, and to satisfy them that it was not made in any spirit of hostility to England; and that if Irishmen were ever the foes of England it would be because England persisted in treating Irishmen as slaves. He had also to speak to his own countrymen and to lament the inestimable blessings of freedom and self-government contained upon a country, and he had to assert that, if he could, he transcended the power that was placed in their hands if they would only act together at the next general election. He believed that the concentration of Irish power which had been accomplished in the two or three conferences which had been held was such as no English statesman and no English party could afford to neglect. He had been asked to say under what style Ireland was suffering from the want of Home Rule, and he answered the great style, a foreign alien Parliament managing their affairs. Ireland had no control over constitutional government or a representative system, and that might appear strange with their one hundred and fifty members going to the House of Commons. The essence of constitutional government was that the sovereign administered its affairs by advisers responsible through the medium of advisers responsible to a popular assembly, and controlled by an assembly that represented the feelings of the people. He asked, did that system of government, or any system approaching it, exist in Ireland? They had no parliamentary government in Ireland, and no administration controlled by the people, and therefore Ireland did not enjoy a free parliament which represented the people. He challenged any Englishman to say that there was in Ireland any government controlled by a popular assembly and brought into unison with the feelings and wishes of the people. They might, therefore, appeal to England man through their love of constitutional government to give to Ireland that constitutional and representative government which had made England great among the nations of the earth. Ireland was a province governed by seven individuals, and there was not an Irishman among them. Would England tolerate such a government as that? He thought the Irishmen were just as capable of governing England as Englishmen Ireland, and if they attempted to do so they would just make as great a mess of it as Englishmen did in trying to govern Ireland—they certainly could do no worse. He contended that the Union had not given Ireland that which it professed to give it—a constitutional government and prosperity. He had defended some of the Fenians, and he must say that never were men actuated by more pure and unselfish motives than many of those who went into exile for Fenianism. He saw that, and felt deeply, when he looked back on the history of his country and saw how many noble lives had been sacrificed in endeavoring to rid Ireland of English oppression by force; and he said, was it possible a plan could be devised by which they might be thought that he might devise a plan by saying to England, Give to Ireland the full and unconditional power of managing her own affairs, and they would then seek no separation, but would be willing to meet in the imperial Parliament to arrange imperial affairs, and to stand by England in peace and war, provided Ireland had the inalienable right of managing her own affairs at home. He was able to say that the Irish people had accepted that proposition with wonderful unanimity. He bore, then, a message of peace to England, and he thought Englishmen who were lovers of fair play and constitutional government would assist them in obtaining what they asked for.

British Slavery.

Can Durham be in England and England be really the center of civilization we have been so long taught to believe she is? This is the highly respectable province of the still Protestant region, which figures in some papers in the North of England:

"The plain fact is, that in Durham no inconsiderable number of our fellow-creatures live like savages and die like brutes, while many of their more refined neighbors are content that it should be so, so long as it does not interfere in the slightest with their profits and their pleasures. Now and then a few of the worst of the savages are hanged—I'm glad to say that relief is forthcoming—but still being indispensable for the government of barbarians. Savagery runs riot among the colliers, and six days a week is trial in Durham jail."

This is not a very shocking state of affairs—almost as bad as anything which has ever been attributed to the inhabitants of that part of country whom many of the Englishmen have been taught to look upon as the benighted, ignorant Irish." And all this in the face of no end of Protestant Sunday schools, churches, sermons, lectures, prayer-meetings, Bible societies, school boards, Good Templars, ecclesiastical missions, and all the other means of grace which are the glory of England. Is it any wonder that the people despair at the sight of these four Radical elections; they will make the pilgrims pay the more, and make the good wish the more for a return to principle. Even the merchants in the city have taken the alarm; the funds have gone down one per cent. On every side you hear a cry of distrust and suspension fur mercy.—Westminster Gazette, October 25.

H. Mane.

This worthy representative of communistic Lyons has ceased to be a member of the National Assembly. It will be recollected that he took an active part with the Commune during their reign of rapine, incendiarism and murder in Paris, none of their nefarious decrees bearing his signature. Like some other of the leading influences of that period, Mane had cunning enough to see that their orgies must have an early close, and he then ceased to figure among the Committee of Public Deservation. After the entry of Marshal MacMahon into Paris, Mane disappeared for a time from Paris. But learning that he had nothing to fear from the Government of M. Thiers, notwithstanding the gross imputation of his name in the crimes of the Communists by the evidence taken before several Courts Martial, he picked up courage and reappeared in Paris. There he re-established himself and undisturbed until his election for Lyons, when the public attention was called to his communistic transactions. The result has led to Mane being deprived by the Assembly of that which he thought that he might devise a plan by saying to England, Give to Ireland the full and unconditional power of managing her own affairs, and they would then seek no separation, but would be willing to meet in the imperial Parliament to arrange imperial affairs, and to stand by England in peace and war, provided Ireland had the inalienable right of managing her own affairs at home. He was able to say that the Irish people had accepted that proposition with wonderful unanimity. He bore, then, a message of peace to England, and he thought Englishmen who were lovers of fair play and constitutional government would assist them in obtaining what they asked for.

GERMANY.

The Catholic Party

The elections to the Parliament of the western half of the Austrian empire have now begun, and will not be terminated before the end of the week. The result has thus far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the Catholic party. A strong majority was all they hoped to obtain in the forthcoming Reichsrath; instead of this they already count on two thirds of the votes hitherto secured. Out of sixty-two members elected up to the 21st inst. as many as forty belong to the opposition. In Tyrol and Salzburg the Catholics have been victorious on the whole line. In Carinthia the Old Slovenian party has gained to a man—have gained the day, and the German ticket has been defeated. In Upper Austria one Liberal and four Catholics have been elected. At Krainburg the ruling party had left no stone untursned to secure the return of their candidates still. Count Hohenwart, the premier in the late Conservative ministry, heads the poll, and is likely to become the leader of the Catholic and federal party in the house. Dr. Giskra, one of the best known of the Liberals, was put up both at Vienna and at Brunn, but in both places he has suffered a very lukewarm reception, and will probably find himself among the limbo of played-out Liberal statesmen. Should the ultimate result of these elections may be, they certainly go to show that Liberalism has no hold on the masses, and that they shall probably see the Catholic and Conservative party triumphant.—London Universe, October 25.

The Pope.

Archbishop Ledochowski has been sentenced to another fine of three hundred thalers for a breach of the new ecclesiastical laws, passed to enforce beaurocratic discipline. The offence of which he was convicted was the whole machinery of coercion with a hearty good will, and now threaten the heroic prelate with exile or imprisonment. Commenting on their threats, the Correspondance de Geneve says—"Oh, folly of human pride, which ambitions to take from a Bishop that which he holds from God alone. As well might M. de Bismarck attempt to rob the sun of its natural splendor. After the entry of Marshal MacMahon into Paris, Mane disappeared for a time from Paris. But learning that he had nothing to fear from the Government of M. Thiers, notwithstanding the gross imputation of his name in the crimes of the Communists by the evidence taken before several Courts Martial, he picked up courage and reappeared in Paris. There he re-established himself and undisturbed until his election for Lyons, when the public attention was called to his communistic transactions. The result has led to Mane being deprived by the Assembly of that which he thought that he might devise a plan by saying to England, Give to Ireland the full and unconditional power of managing her own affairs, and they would then seek no separation, but would be willing to meet in the imperial Parliament to arrange imperial affairs, and to stand by England in peace and war, provided Ireland had the inalienable right of managing her own affairs at home. He was able to say that the Irish people had accepted that proposition with wonderful unanimity. He bore, then, a message of peace to England, and he thought Englishmen who were lovers of fair play and constitutional government would assist them in obtaining what they asked for.

British Slavery.

Can Durham be in England and England be really the center of civilization we have been so long taught to believe she is? This is the highly respectable province of the still Protestant region, which figures in some papers in the North of England:

"The plain fact is, that in Durham no inconsiderable number of our fellow-creatures live like savages and die like brutes, while many of their more refined neighbors are content that it should be so, so long as it does not interfere in the slightest with their profits and their pleasures. Now and then a few of the worst of the savages are hanged—I'm glad to say that relief is forthcoming—but still being indispensable for the government of barbarians. Savagery runs riot among the colliers, and six days a week is trial in Durham jail."

This is not a very shocking state of affairs—almost as bad as anything which has ever been attributed to the inhabitants of that part of country whom many of the Englishmen have been taught to look upon as the benighted, ignorant Irish." And all this in the face of no end of Protestant Sunday schools, churches, sermons, lectures, prayer-meetings, Bible societies, school boards, Good Templars, ecclesiastical missions, and all the other means of grace which are the glory of England. Is it any wonder that the people despair at the sight of these four Radical elections; they will make the pilgrims pay the more, and make the good wish the more for a return to principle. Even the merchants in the city have taken the alarm; the funds have gone down one per cent. On every side you hear a cry of distrust and suspension fur mercy.—Westminster Gazette, October 25.

H. Mane.

This worthy representative of communistic Lyons has ceased to be a member of the National Assembly. It will be recollected that he took an active part with the Commune during their reign of rapine, incendiarism and murder in Paris, none of their nefarious decrees bearing his signature. Like some other of the leading influences of that period, Mane had cunning enough to see that their orgies must have an early close, and he then ceased to figure among the Committee of Public Deservation. After the entry of Marshal MacMahon into Paris, Mane disappeared for a time from Paris. But learning that he had nothing to fear from the Government of M. Thiers, notwithstanding the gross imputation of his name in the crimes of the Communists by the evidence taken before several Courts Martial, he picked up courage and reappeared in Paris. There he re-established himself and undisturbed until his election for Lyons, when the public attention was called to his communistic transactions. The result has led to Mane being deprived by the Assembly of that which he thought that he might devise a plan by saying to England, Give to Ireland the full and unconditional power of managing her own affairs, and they would then seek no separation, but would be willing to meet in the imperial Parliament to arrange imperial affairs, and to stand by England in peace and war, provided Ireland had the inalienable right of managing her own affairs at home. He was able to say that the Irish people had accepted that proposition with wonderful unanimity. He bore, then, a message of peace to England, and he thought Englishmen who were lovers of fair play and constitutional government would assist them in obtaining what they asked for.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academical honors. Besides the Literary course embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION,
(Payable in advance).

Board, Tuition, Washing.....$125 00
Music with use of Instrument.....20 00
Drawing and Painting.....10 00

No charge for the French, Spanish and German language, nor for Plain Sewing and Fancy Needlework.

The first term of the Eighteenth Annual Session will commence August 28, 1873.

Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

Good references required. 805-1y

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of instruction deemed taught in the most approved seminaries of the State. The system of moral training is such as will form the character for the duties of life. Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from date of admission.

TERMS
Per session (payable half yearly in advance):
Board and Tuition.....$225 00
Washing.....10 00
Use of Piano.....10 00

Pupils remaining at the Academy during vacation will be charged $20.

Drawing, Painting and Music form extra charges. There is no extra charge for the French or Spanish language, nor for Needlework.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress.

Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the
SISTER SUPERIOR.

1y36

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.

Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Per board, tuition, washing and mending of clothing, bed linen.....$288 50
Entrance fee, to be paid only once.....15 00
Vacation at College.....60 00

DAY PUPILS.

Scholar class.....$40 00
Class.....60 00

Vocal and instrumental music, drawing and modern languages will form extra charges, according to the rules of the scholastic year commence respectively on the 1st of September and 1st of January.

For further information address the Secretary.

REV. P. CHIOCCHIO, C. P. S. B.
VERY Rev. P. MENNABERY, Superior.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State and empowered to confer academical honors, will commence the Twenty third Annual Session on MONDAY, August 11, 1873. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:

Entrance, to be paid but once.....$10
Boarding, per quarter.....62 50
Washing, per quarter.....12 50
Bed and bedding (if may be preferred to the regular bill to case of annual per quarter 2 50
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session.....250 00
Music, French and German form extra charges.
Drawing and Painting.....10 00
Use of Piano.....10 00

Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from date of admission.

COAST MINING NEWS.

AMADOR COUNTY.

We clip from the Amador Ledger of the 15th:

Work on the canal is progressing rapidly, a large force of men being now engaged upon it. The energetic manner with which the work is pushed ahead upon the canal will assure the completion of this great enterprise at an early day.

Work on the Valparaiso mine at Fiddletown is progressing rapidly. At the present depth the walls are well defined, with a fair ledge to work upon, and the most encouraging prospect that the mine will soon be developed into a permanent paying one.

The vein on which the Valparaiso and Phillips are located has borne gold from the surface, and when a proper depth is reached both mines will prove to be valuable.

In the "State of Maine" the pay-rock is on the increase and indications very favorable.

The Phœnix mine, at Plymouth, looks remarkably well, with an immense amount of pay-rock developed.

Very favorable reports reach us from the Alpine, also situated at Plymouth. The ledge has increased to 11 feet in thickness and of an excellent quality.

Work is being rapidly prosecuted on the Victoria tunnel, and everything seems favorable to a successful issue.

CALAVERAS COUNTY.

From the Calaveras Chronicle we learn that the Sandstrom is making a better showing and attracting more attention than any other mine in the country. Rock of unprecedented richness is being obtained from the north level at a depth of two hundred feet that belong or deep as the shaft is sunk. Free gold is diffused all through it, good judges estimating that it will still $400 per ton. Not a piece of rock can be taken from the level or dump that does not show gold. This level has been run forty-five feet in this character of rock; and still the chimney is not on through.

The Gwin is fall blast again, sinking in main shaft. Fine sulphurets ore has been struck in the main shaft of the Good Faith.

The Tuolumne mine is located on one of the largest deposits of porphyritic rock known in the county west of the Sierra Nevada mountains. It is a true fissure vein, over four hundred feet in width, containing similar indications throughout with iron and copper sulphurets carrying a large percentage of gold and silver. This mine is being prospected through a vertical shaft which has reached a depth of four hundred feet, and a paying drive at the rate of 2½ feet per day. The bottom of the shaft is in a superior quality of quartz stained with alternate sulphurets.

PLACER COUNTY.

The Herald of the 15th says: "In the Cronin mining they are now down three hundred and twelve feet, and at this level they have commenced drifting each way along the ledge. At this depth the rock at the bottom of the shaft is very rich, and they find in drifting that it does not decrease in value. For the last hundred and odd feet they have been sinking through $60 and $60 rock all the time, and when they get their levels in and begin stoping out this rich rock in large quantities, we shall expect to hear of some immense clean-ups from the St. Patrick Company's mill."

Southern California.

The San Diego Union of the 15th has the following: "Hedley Piley, one of the United States Inspectors on the boundary line, arrived from Milquatay yesterday. While there, on Monday evening, he met a miner, name of Wilson, who had just arrived from the Jaqa placer diggings. He says mines are very much richer there than has been reported—but that the great drawback is having to dig for water with the alternative of carrying the dirt three or four miles to water. All of the men at the mines who are willing to work are doing well. A wagon load of dirt taken from a rich crevice about $100 in dust when washed.

State of Nevada.

The Pioche Record of November 8th says: "During the past week the excitement with regard to our mines has continued. The stocks have been rising and falling, as it were, by jerks, and been alternately hopeful and and might be seen on our streets every day. With regard to the strikes reported, it seems that the ledge found in the American Flag mine is rich and extensive. It is reported as such by those who ought to know most about it. The Washington and Creole stock has risen, but the management of the mine is not looking with regard to new developments. As to the rumored discovery of the best body of ore yet found in the Raymond & Ely, the talk, as far as the public is concerned, has ceased. A number of those working in the mines in the vicinity of the Washington and Creole and American Flag are expecting to make similar developments to those reported.

Idaho.

The following summary of the Idaho mines is from the Owyhee Avalanche of November 8th:

Mineral-bearing quartz was first discovered in this camp in the spring of 1863, Jacobus Crydler, the second oldest man in the camp of any importance on the Pacific Coast—Weaber being the first. Although not value enough as large as the famous Comstock, yet their permanence and richness are quite as certain. There is not, we believe, a single exception, where our mines have been reasonably worked, but they have improved upon development, and we have good reason to expect that every one of the incorporated mines now being worked here (and they are the Ida Elmore, Golden Christ, Minnesota, Mahogany, Red Jacket, Empire, War Eagle and Silver Chief), will ere long become dividend-paying ones. The Ohio mein and Golden Chariot are entirely new, as far as work, and judging from the ore in sight in the South Chariot, we should think that it will be the next to wheel into the line.

Arizona.

The Arizona Miner has the following:

Peter Taylor, who has working charge of the Vulture mine, had struck a large and rich body, or mass, of ore, which was turning out exceedingly well in the mill. We have a specimen of this ore, and a very rich one it is, exhibiting gold all over its surface.

Coming nearer Prescott, we find quartz and placer miners hard at work in Weaver and Walnut Grove districts. In the latter Henry & Smith are arastraing Rainbow ore; C. B. Gosney is working ore from the Montgomery; Loetarel is crushing out of the Providence—all with pleasing, and of course paying, results.

It is said that Messrs. Goodwin and McKinnon, on Saturday last, secured the bottoms of their two arastras and found $2,300 in gold—the product of eight tons of War Eagle ore.

George Hogle, a good miner and prospector, has returned here after a long trip to the mountains. He says he saw nothing to compare with mines in this vicinity.

Dr. Charles A. Ostheron has been elected an honorary member and Professor of the Royal Hibernian Academy of the Fine Arts, and the election has been approved of by his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant.

The Tax Bills.

The recent opinion of the Supreme Court of this State is one of the most extraordinary medleys of legal acumen that ever emanated from a Court, and justifies the opposition which men of reflective minds have offered to an elective judiciary. The Sacramento Union summarizes it in the following fashion:

In connection with this new phase of the matter a word may be said in relation to the recent decision of the Supreme Court; that monument of argumentative acumen and labyrinth of legal sagacity, which has so confounded both the legal and non-legal minds in this community. The Court, as we take it, meant to say, and did in effect say, that inasmuch as all property is taxable under the Constitution, and inasmuch as solvent debts are a species of property, therefore solvent debts are taxable. The Court then, in a non-official way, endeavored to show that certain solvent debts could not be taxed without duplicating the taxation, and did express, more or less emphatically, the opinion that double taxation is objectionable. But, this detour made, and the private opinions of the Court in regard to the odiousness of double taxation being thus expressed, the Court returned to the main issue; held that under its construction of the meaning of property the Constitution permitted double taxation to be imposed; and concluded with the consolatory assurance that the Courts could afford no remedy for this evil, the Legislature alone, by amendment of the Constitution, being capable of giving relief. One point the Court did not treat upon, which might have been elucidated. We refer to the apparent inconsistency of the Constitution with itself. It declares that all property shall be taxable; and under the most recent construction of that provision double taxation is permissible. But it also declares that taxation shall be equal and uniform; and double taxation is neither the one nor the other. This is rather confusing, but, then, instead of obscurity and confusion being urged upon the organic law, rather thank Heaven that we possess such a Constitution, and such a Supreme Court to interpret and make its dark places clear for us.

Father Garesche and other Fathers of the Society of Jesus giving a mission at St. Aloysius' Church in Washington, D. C., closed the first week with 3,000 communions and the baptism of five converts from Protestantism and thirty under instructions. The mission was to continue another week. The Washington Chronicle says: "The mission now in progress at St. Aloysius' is attracting attention from all 'creeds.' Crowds, among them Jews and Gentiles go to hear the wonderful eloquence of Father Garesche who is conducting the services. He is a man wonderously like his brave brother Col. Jolius Garesche, in commanding presence and superb personnel; his voice is peculiarly sweet, and his style of preaching forcible and eloquent. Crowds are turned away nightly from the church, who go to hear this man as he stands before the famous Monsignor Capel of England." Father Garesche is a native of St. Louis, Mo.

Wholesale Market Report.

MORTON OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, }
THURSDAY, November 20, 1873.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been light. We quote—Extra at $4 37½@$5, and superfine at $3 @$3 50, in sks & 1-2 bbls.

WHEAT—The market has ruled active and at advanced rates since our last report. At the close the market is quotable at $1 [illegible] 82½ to 1 60 lbs.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range at $1 37½@$1 45 per 100 lbs.

OATS—Have been in light demand, at a decline to rates ruling during the past week. Quotable at the close at $1 [illegible] to $ 100 lbs.

HAY—The receipts have been fair during the past week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $15@17 50 for ordinary to choice tr bch.

STRAW—Quotable at 60@65c tr bale.

CORN—Quotable at $1 47½ for large yellow tr 100 lbs.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayo, $3 25; Pea, $4 00; Pink, $3 50; Lima, $6 50; Small White, $4; Small Butter, $4 50 to $5.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free, with a fair demand. We quote the range at $1 50@2 50 tr 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 87½ @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $18 tr ton from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $26 @ 28 ton from the mill.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2@3 12½ tr 100 lbs.

SEEDS—We quote Flax at 3c; Canary, 6@8c; and Mustard, 10@15c $ lb.

RYE—Quotable at $1 87½ @ 100 lbs.

HIDES—We quote California dry, 14½@16c, and salted at 8½@9c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6½@7c $ lb.

GILLSKE MEAL—Quotable at $15 50 @ ton from mill.

WOOL—The market is reported inactive and easy, with no effort at any price. The clip is now ships do not exceed 1,000 bales per week. The New York wool circulars.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh roll, good to choice, 50 @55c; do firkin, 45@50c; do pickled roll, ordinary to good, 35@45c; choice, 50@55c.

CHEESE—California, 15@16c; Eastern, 19@20c.

EGGS—California, 30½@32½c $ dozen; Oregon, 80 @35c; Eastern, 30@32½c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 11 @ 12½c; W.R.; Oregon, none.

BACON—California, 11@12½c; W.R.; Eastern sweet cured, 13@14c; do canvas, 15@16c; do clear, 13@13½c.

LARD—California, 11@11½c; Eastern, 12½@13c; do in tins, 14c; Oregon, none.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—Fore'qrs quality, 7@8c; second quality, 8@ 9c; hind quarters, 9@11c.

VEAL—At 6@10c $ lb.

MUTTON—At 8@9c $ lb.

LAMB—7@8c $ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 7½@8c; do foot, grain-fed, 5½@6½c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

FOWLS—Hens, large, $7 50@8 50; Broilers, $5 50@ 6 50; Young Roosters, $8@9 $ dozen.

DUCKS—Tame at $7@8 $ dozen; Mallard, $1 50@2; Gray Teals, $1@2 50; Sprig, $1 50.

GEESE—Tame at $12@15 $ dozen.

TURKEYS—Live, 17@18c $ lb.

HARE—$2@2 50 $ dozen.

RABBITS—Cottontail, $1 50@1 75 $ doz.

QUAIL—$1 50@2 $ dozen.

Subscriptions Received.

San José—Denis Noonan.....$1 00
John Devine.....4 00
James Toomey.....4 00
William Carroll.....4 00
Thomas Cahill.....4 00
Henry Cahill.....4 00
P. Burns.....4 00
Edward Burns.....4 00
Abell & Co.....4 00
Thomas M. Smith.....2 00
J. Donohoe.....4 00
J. Carmichael.....4 00
William Stern.....2 25
James Fagan.....4 00
Rev. Father Gallagher.....4 00
P. C. Moore.....4 00
Patrick Nilon.....4 00
James McGowan.....4 00
P. O. Sullivan.....4 00
John Tully.....4 00
Michael Mullen.....2 25
Thomas Cahill.....4 00
Correspondence—Francis McMurray.....4 00
Thomas Devine.....4 00
P. J. Smith.....4 00
Mountain—James Dunn.....9 00
Santa Clara—Thomas Cahill.....4 00
Mayfield—Thomas Cahill.....4 00
William Miller.....4 00
Mountain View—Patrick Cahill.....4 00
Mariposa—James Miller.....4 00
Sacramento—A. S. Hopkins.....4 00
Brooklyn (Alameda)—Rev. Father Closon.....4 00

DAY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

DIRECT IMPORTERS OF—

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

116 and 118 Third Street,

Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

French, English and American

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS.

New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.

NO. 4 THIRD STREET,

Near Market Street.....SAN FRANCISCO.

20 CENTS SAVED ON EVERY DOLLAR

Expended for School Books, Cap Paper, Slates, Lead Pencils, Drawing Books and Drawing Materials, Note Paper and Envelopes, Pictures, Pocket Knives, Scissors, Combs, Hair and Tooth Brushes, Toys for Children, Blank Books, Newspapers, Periodicals, Novels, Magazines, etc., from

F. Goldman,

616 Third street.....Between Silver and Bryant.

BRANCH STORE,

126 Second Street, corner of Howard.

ON GREENBACKS taken at par.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1874.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

$50,000 WORTH

—OF—

BLACK SILKS

Bought for Cash

IN NEW YORK

DURING THE LATE FAILURES.

JUST RECEIVED

—AND—

NOW OFFERED FOR SALE AT

—AT—

THE WHITE HOUSE!

3,000 yards at $1 25 per yard;
Worth $2 50 per yard.
4,000 yards at $1 50 per yard;
Usual price $2 75.
8,000 yards at $1 75 per yard;
Regular price, $3 00.
8,000 yards at $2 per yard;
Good value at $3 50.
5,000 yards at $2 25 per yard;
Cost to Import, $3 75.

THE ABOVE GOODS

ARE, WITHOUT EXCEPTION,

The Cheapest Lot

—OF—

BLACK SILKS

EVER OFFERED

—IN—

San Francisco.

THIS MAGNIFICENT STOCK

—OF—

DRY GOODS

IS NOW BEING SOLD BY

J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,

N. W. Cor. Kearny and Post Sts.

or to-if

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF

DRY GOODS!

Complete in Every Department,

We are now prepared to supply our customers with

The Best and Cheapest Goods

In the City. Among which are—

Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Cretons,
Cashmeres,
Merinoes,
Serges, Reps, Etc.

A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF

SHAWLS.

RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.

Mourning Goods Bought and Sold to the trade at a liberal discount.

Thankful for our friends and the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

706 MARKET STREET,

OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.

FALL IMPORTATION!

Woolen Hosiery,

NEW DESIGNS.

GENT'S FURNISHING GOODS,

LATEST STYLES.

RIBBONS AND MILLINERY GOODS.

LACES

AND EMBROIDERIES.

—ALSO—

LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS

AND WHITE GOODS.

FOR SALE BY

TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.

[illegible]

FOUND.—A NEATLY-BOUND PRAYER Book (also "Gems of Paradise"), which was left at BEALEN & CO.'S Mill Manufactory, can be had by calling at the office and paying for this advertisement. 2t

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIPIFAX

Mankind are easily impressed by climatic changes and magnetic disturbances in certain conditions of atmosphere, which causes epidemics.

PIPIFAX

Keeps the skin in a supple condition, a cuticle plant, the pores open, and brings the blood to the surface, thereby enabling the system to counteract those baneful atmospheric influences.

PIPIFAX

Acts as a tonic and stimulant, and so partially supplies the place of the accustomed beer, and prevents that absolute physical prostration that follows the sudden breaking off from the use of intoxicating drinks. Persons in the habit of using opium for strong drink is more powerful than the will.

PIPIFAX

Soon recover their self-control and lose desire for stimulants. Hundreds of cases of a great notoriety throughout Germany on account of its marvelous effects, that it was styled the

MAGIC BITTERS.

The Trade Mark of a Red Devil was adopted because that during the Middle Ages you Discovery in arts, science or medicine was attributed to Satanic influence. The present proprietors have adopted a new Trade Mark. A portrait of a CUPID AND BASKET OF FLOWERS, with the words, "Restores Youth and Health" underneath.

PIPIFAX

Promotes the separation of bile, which passes into the blood, preventing fevers and diseases peculiar to this climate. It restores a healthy condition of the stomach and bowels.

PIPIFAX

Is an enemy to all corruption, and adds and fortifies nature. Its manner of operation is to drive out noxious matter, and through all communication of the body, all the bad humors which misbest it.

Sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

THE FIRST MEDAL

—AT THE—

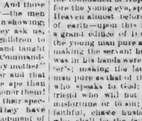
VIENNA EXPOSITION

BEING THE HIGHEST RECOMPENSE

AWARDED TO ORGANS OF ANY CLASS, AT

THE UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION

HAS BEEN AWARDED THE



MASON & HAMLIN

Cabinet Organs

BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE

Special Jury, International Jury

two Sub-Juries,

Including the most Eminent Artists and from different countries. It is especially comparison with those other American were also awarded the highest prizes.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO., AGENTS,

638 and 635 Clay Street.

BACON & COMPANY, LITHOGRAPHERS, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PRINTING

Paper Ruling and Book Binding

Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply

PERFORMED BY

Bacon & Company

Corner Clay and Sansome

Printing tickets will receive special attention. Orders from the country will receive prompt attention.

MENEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY

WEST TROY, NEW YORK

Established in 1826.

CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND STEAMBOAT BELLS, made of copper and the best quality of Bell Metal, mounted with our New Patent Yoke—the most perfect and durable Bell Hanging now in use. For prices and catalogues apply to

E. A. & G. R. MENEELY,

West Troy, N. Y.

aug8-1y-new

SITUATION WANTED.—A YOUNG LADY, recently arrived from the old country, who has had experience in some office or store; also a thorough knowledge of the French language, and is well versed in all kinds of plain and fancy needlework. For further particulars apply at the office of the Monitor, or give private terms of Terms, Address—HIBERNIA, this office.

THE MONITOR:

The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

LYONS & BARRY, - - - - Publishers.

DENIS LYONS. JOHN V. BARRY.

RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER

OFFICE—604 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts., Rooms 2, 7 and 8, up-stairs.

All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

Served by Carriers, per week.....10c
Mail subscribers, per year.....$4 00
Six months.....2 25
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year.....6 50
" " Lindey's Lady's Book.....5 50
" " Demorest's Illustrated Magazine.....3 50
" " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine.....3 50

ADVERTISING RATES:

1 square, 1 insert.....$1 00 | 1 square, 6 months.....$10 00
" 1 month.....4 00 | " 9 months.....12 00
" 2 months.....7 00 | " 6 months.....12 00
" 3 months.....9 00 | " 1 year.....20 00

The above rates will be strictly adhered to.

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

MODERN SCIENCE.

A Lecture by Very Rev. Thomas Burke.

On Sunday, November 9th, the Rev. T. S. Burke, O.P., preached in the Cathedral, Killarney, county Kerry, Ireland, in aid of the schools under the care of the Presentation Order of Monks in that town. The building was crowded to its utmost capacity, upwards of three thousand persons being present. The Right Rev. Dr. Moriarty, Lord Bishop of the diocese, presided; and was celebrated by the Rev. Mr. Griffin; while the chancel were the parochial clergy and the Franciscan Fathers from the neighboring convent of their Order. Among the laity were the Right Hon. Earl of Kenmare, and other leading residents of the town and district. The sermon was one of the most beautiful and powerful of Father Burke's many splendid discourses, and was listened to with wrapt attention and the deepest interest by the large congregation. The concluding portion, in which the Very Rev. preacher spoke of the peculiar spirit animating modern scientific inquiry and speculation, is thus reported in the Cork Examiner of November 11th:

The resultsare to-day, at the close of the nineteenth century, the work of intellectual emancipation, as it is called, has produced its fruits; men boast of the glorious work which they have done; men found upon it their claim to educate the whole world, and to tell the Church of God to stand aside! But let us, by examining briefly for a moment, what these boasted results are. Here, then, are their fruits. In Speculative Philosophy, as long as the world was studied in her schools and universities, Philosophy—Speculative Philosophy—led up through every step of human knowledge, and brought man to seek the origin of his being in the action of the creative hand of God, to the knowledge of a spiritual and immortal soul from the very mouth of God with him. He, how grand was that Philosophy which taught man the possibility of his being by tracing his origin to God; and the knowledge of his fallen state, and highest virtue by showing him that the sole remedy for sin was the Redemption of God, brought out in him! Now for these boasted results of this great Philosophy, which destroyed the old pagan world, and for fifteen hundred years formed the mind of man. Modern Philosophy and Literature have been for the last century amusing themselves with the pulpit of Modern Infidelity, and listening to the words of its teachers. Well, what is the first part of this accusation I have nothing to say. We all know a man cannot be taught too much concerning God, that their labors before them through every vicissitude, sanctifying every sorrow and blessing all more every joy—if you would make them to be worthy of the Church of God which has always loved them, as it loved their fathers before them, who devoted themselves to it as holy priests and martyred bishops—if you wish to preserve all that makes Ireland dear to us and that makes us dear to the Church of God, and through her to the divine Lord—you must ensure to the Catholic youth in this blessed land of Ireland a true, sound, Catholic, and at the same time most perfect human education. For this do I plead—for the community that represents here this sacred principle—for the men who are contented to live upon the lesser pittance with which your charity will supply them, provided that you enable them to continue their glorious work, to make the four hundred or more children who are daily received into their schools all that God, all that the Church all that their motherland would wish them to be—namely, perfect men and perfect Christians. I leave the cause, I leave my Monks, I leave the schools, I leave the children now in your hands, and with all my heart and soul I pray that God may send down upon you the angel of this endangered mercy, that you may be made the instruments in the house of God—your land is to grow, to live, to suffer perhaps, but for the rise into everlasting glory.

THE ENLIGHTENMENT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH,

State of the Church in Europe.

At the great festival under the auspices of the Catholic Union of Boston, recently held in the Music Hall of that city, the Rev. Robert Fulton, S. J., Rector of Boston College, spoke on the state of the Church in Europe. The Boston Pilot of November 22nd thus reports his address:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Within the past few days the question has been often put—What is the specific object of the Catholic Union? Would it be correct to assume if the answer were hazarded? Certainly not. Among the objects of the Union are those which bring its members into closer relations with each other over this progress, existing state and prospects of our German brethren, and other nationalities; the better social and political condition of labor and sacrifice for her children—a Faith which has made the Irish name, at home and abroad synonimical of all that is highest and grandest and noblest in Catholicity. They talk us purity, which in our Irish women becomes the glory and splendor of our race, ennobled land, and made our women to be the admiration of the whole world—aye, and ever they went. For wherever the daughter of Ireland goes, full of living faith and full of divine love, she presents to the eyes of an unbelieving world that image and that attribute of Mary in which the indevout heart that ever throbbed was united to the purest soul and body that ever were sent upon the earth. They left us the tradition of our manly chastity and purity which has preserved this most ancient race in a strange integrity, vitality and strength of mind and body; which has enabled us, wherever we have gone in our various paths of emigration, even to the ends of the earth, to show signs and brave traces of our undying strength and energy in the mighty works which mark the exodus of the Irish people in every land.

And it is for this I call upon you to-day. If you wish your children to be worthy of their married forefathers, to be worthy of their national traditions, to be worthy of that grace and blessing which has followed their labors before them through every vicissitude, sanctifying every sorrow and blessing all more every joy—if you would make them to be worthy of the Church of God which has always loved them, as it loved their fathers before them, who devoted themselves to it as holy priests and martyred bishops—if you wish to preserve all that makes Ireland dear to us and that makes us dear to the Church of God, and through her to the divine Lord—you must ensure to the Catholic youth in this blessed land of Ireland a true, sound, Catholic, and at the same time most perfect human education. For this do I plead—for the community that represents here this sacred principle—for the men who are contented to live upon the lesser pittance with which your charity will supply them, provided that you enable them to continue their glorious work, to make the four hundred or more children who are daily received into their schools all that God, all that the Church all that their motherland would wish them to be—namely, perfect men and perfect Christians. I leave the cause, I leave my Monks, I leave the schools, I leave the children now in your hands, and with all my heart and soul I pray that God may send down upon you the angel of this endangered mercy, that you may be made the instruments in the house of God—your land is to grow, to live, to suffer perhaps, but for the rise into everlasting glory.

State of the Church in Europe.

At the great festival under the auspices of the Catholic Union of Boston, recently held in the Music Hall of that city, the Rev. Robert Fulton, S. J., Rector of Boston College, spoke on the state of the Church in Europe. The Boston Pilot of November 22nd thus reports his address:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Within the past few days the question has been often put—What is the specific object of the Catholic Union? Would it be correct to assume if the answer were hazarded? Certainly not. Among the objects of the Union are those which bring its members into closer relations with each other over this progress, existing state and prospects of our German brethren, and other nationalities; the better social and political condition of labor and sacrifice for her children—a Faith which has made the Irish name, at home and abroad synonimical of all that is highest and grandest and noblest in Catholicity. They talk us purity, which in our Irish women becomes the glory and splendor of our race, ennobled land, and made our women to be the admiration of the whole world—aye, and ever they went. For wherever the daughter of Ireland goes, full of living faith and full of divine love, she presents to the eyes of an unbelieving world that image and that attribute of Mary in which the indevout heart that ever throbbed was united to the purest soul and body that ever were sent upon the earth. They left us the tradition of our manly chastity and purity which has preserved this most ancient race in a strange integrity, vitality and strength of mind and body; which has enabled us, wherever we have gone in our various paths of emigration, even to the ends of the earth, to show signs and brave traces of our undying strength and energy in the mighty works which mark the exodus of the Irish people in every land.

And it is for this I call upon you to-day. If you wish your children to be worthy of their married forefathers, to be worthy of their national traditions, to be worthy of that grace and blessing which has followed their labors before them through every vicissitude, sanctifying every sorrow and blessing all more every joy—if you would make them to be worthy of the Church of God which has always loved them, as it loved their fathers before them, who devoted themselves to it as holy priests and martyred bishops—if you wish to preserve all that makes Ireland dear to us and that makes us dear to the Church of God, and through her to the divine Lord—you must ensure to the Catholic youth in this blessed land of Ireland a true, sound, Catholic, and at the same time most perfect human education. For this do I plead—for the community that represents here this sacred principle—for the men who are contented to live upon the lesser pittance with which your charity will supply them, provided that you enable them to continue their glorious work, to make the four hundred or more children who are daily received into their schools all that God, all that the Church all that their motherland would wish them to be—namely, perfect men and perfect Christians. I leave the cause, I leave my Monks, I leave the schools, I leave the children now in your hands, and with all my heart and soul I pray that God may send down upon you the angel of this endangered mercy, that you may be made the instruments in the house of God—your land is to grow, to live, to suffer perhaps, but for the rise into everlasting glory.

The Monitor.

FIDES. PATRIA. UNITAS. CARITAS.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1873. NO. 7.

A. WALDTEUFEL,

287 MUSIC HALL

FIRST STREET.....SAN JOSE

Importer, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

CATHOLIC BOOKS

PICTURES AND ORNAMENTS,

Miscellaneous Books and Stationery.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS;
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS;
HAYNES BROS. PIANOS;
BURDETT CELEST ORGANS;
MASON & HAMLIN'S ORGANS.

Always on hand a large assortment of the above named celebrated Instruments.

Liberal discount to the Rev. Clergy and Catholic Schools. Orders promptly attended to. my25-1y

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XXX.

A WOUND.

"If wouldn't care to live in a well for a long time," remarked Monsieur Mahony to his companion, as the two women, escaped from Bazelles, stood upon the height between it and Sedan.

"No, it is not pleasant."

"But something can be said for it when the well is dry."

"No doubt."

"But now, Michel, what can be said for this bed under an apple tree, with the grass so wet that it seems like taking a swim to lie down there."

"Nothing, except, perhaps, that we had no other."

"Well, my bo there's something in that, too. But I'll rather have more breakfast than an apple affords. I was fool of apple pie in my young days," added the speaker in a thoughtful vein, "and suffered for them in a small way, such as black eyes and bloodened shins; but somehow my fancy appears to be clean gone. I would exchange willingly these rosy cheeks for a loaf of bread."

"There's no help. We must bear hunger as long as we can for the present."

"Ah, my dear, I assure you myself an Irishman can stand starvation as well as any man going. You see we had practice in my country."

"Are your arms all right?"

I think everything is, or about me except the powder. That's dry. And by the way, it's a very extraordinary thing I'm dry myself, too. Here, my dear, I'll make swallow at this blessed moment a quart of Adam's ale if you'll only say the word."

"It is surely daylight yet, and the enemy may be about. If we were to be seen, like other ministrels, he likely to produce you a say, I'd be called."

Michel laughed in fashion, the men, who had spent a night of terrible privation, the damp of heavy dews following their long fatigues, and the loss of food for days, like water had rested, and destitute of food for nearly eighteen hours, trudged along on the road to Sedan.

The village of Balan lies between Bazelles and Sedan. As you approach it on elevation of the road which commanded the one the village and the sacked and burnt town that preceded it. The Prussians, after having taken possession of the village, had left it, and the ill-fated ship drifted in with terrible force on her consorts. She ran into the sinoner Pilot, a small sailer, throwing her crew into the water. The collision hurled the master overboard and he was drowned. The Captain (Morrison) of the Liverpool was applied at once to the Lord Mayor of Dublin for the assistance of the Irish Legion in extinguishing the flames. The request was at once complied with, but all their efforts were unavailing. It was not long, however, before the ship was ready to sail, and in the following year she was again in the Mersey.

"They must be ours," said Mike, "for they don't appear to be heavens, were you in the midst of all that carnage and horror?"

"Yes. We escaped with some difficulty."

"Aye," added Mike, "and a deal of hunger."

"Who are these soldiers and what are they doing here?" asked an officer who rode up to the door.

"French soldiers who escaped yesterday from Bazailles, and were in the midst of all the horrors!" burst out the shopkeeper, brimful of the subject.

He silenced all the soldiers speak for themselves.)

Marshal Le Bœuf was said the wounded man falsely, "every one must take his own share. As soon as we get back, tell them what we have seen—he must take my place—tell him to be on the alert here—he indeed he must be everywhere."

"I will take care."

"As the bridge across the Chier broken down as I ordered?"

"I am not sure—I fear not."

A groan was the only response, whether of mental or bodily pain, the hearers could not determine. The sufferer, relieved from both, had fainted.

CHAPTER XXXI.

SEDAN.

The memorable 31st of August of Sedan broke upon the French army amid the thunder of the enemy's guns from the plain lying to the west of the town, in the direction of Donchery. With it came the knowledge that the beloved Commander-in-Chief was wounded, dying, perhaps dead. It had crept out that General Ducrot, whom the Marshal designated his successor, was not acceptable to the powers at Paris, and that General Wimpffen, an officer but two days promoted from Algeria, would act in the Marshal's place.

The latter was not in any one direction. It was everywhere. North, south, east and west, the French found themselves pressed into a narrow and ever-narrowing circle. In some places the raw troops fought indifferently; in most, prodigies of valor were performed. In the Balan, Illacla-Charge was repeated by the cavalry on a hotly-contested plain, the difference that it was done not against the old brown Bess, but against the deadly mitrailleuse. The General's staff exposed themselves personally, the officers charged at the head of their troops, the men, even where discipline was wanting and confidence in success had departed, exhibited the most reckless courage. Still resistance failed in every quarter; valor booed not, or only added to the tide of blood which reddened the river that rolled beneath the walls of Sedan. The French were in the interior of a wide basin, and around them on all sides, as far as eye covered, was an army more than three times their number.

"Where is that?" asked Mike of his companion.

"That's the new Commander-in-Chief."

A general officer, accompanied by several others of inferior rank, rode up to the spot where the comrades, after the skirmishers, were maintaining a fire upon some of the advanced posts of the enemy. There was a look of anger and vexation on his face.

"Brigadier Lambeau," he said, "there is absolutely no hope here."

"I confess I cannot see it."

"I have been led into an infernal trap. Put at the head of a French army whose positions I hardly know, to receive the final coup of disgrace! It is too hateful."

"I confess it seems hard."

"There is but one thing to do. The army is tied. I must see the Emperor."

"How is that to be done?"

"Give me a pencil."

Tearing a leaf out of his pocket-book, the General wrote in haste and handed the paper to his companion, who read:

SIRE—I have determined to force the line which lies in front of the corps of General Lebrun. I hope to succeed, but my presence is needed here. I beg to entrust the command in the midst of peace, and which I am sure you will justify.

"On side-de-camp," added the General, "there is no mounted aide here, M. le General," said an officer.

"Orderly, I will send the letter conveyed as fast for you as any mounted officer could do it. Here," and he summoned Michel Vose.

"To the Emperor, at once, and bring back a reply."

With the speed of an arrow Michel disappeared. His seated on the gate of the town and made his way through the ruins. Horses riddled by shell were falling in the streets. Artillery, ammunition, women and children were killed by the explosives; horses rushed madly through the thoroughfares, adding little, however, to the existing confusion. Some cabarets were open, and as he passed, Michel could be seen in a uniform carousing within, and hear the strains of a frenzied merriment roaring through the open windows.

"Why should I carry the cursed wasp one any longer?" shouted a Zouave. I will never lead another unfortunate Frenchman to slaughter." So saying he lifted his chassepot by the barrel, and rapping the stock sharply against the pavement, it smashed. His comrades cheered.

"Right, mon enfant. It is time to give up fighting when we have ceased to be commanded."

"It is time, you mean, to stop when we see we have been betrayed."

And then arose a chorus of abuse against the incompetence, the selfishness and the treachery of commanders.

Hurrying on, Michel at last reached the Sous-Prefecture, a handsome, modern house. There was still a sentry at the door, but his musket was leaning against one jamb, while he was leaning against the other smoking, and at the same time conversing with some soldiers and civilians who formed a little crowd.

"Is the Emperor to be seen?" asked Michel, breathless with the speed he had made.

The sentry nodded without interrupting his conversation, and Michel entered the open door. There was no one in the first room, so on chance he ascended the wide staircase and came to the door of the saloon. That, too, was open. Michel looked in, but he saw no one. Embarrassed he entered the room, stupefied by all the misery of a person to whom richly furnished apartments are a stranger. Then he perceived the figure of a man who was gazing out the window, as if watching the work of destruction and confusion that was going on outside. With his right elbow he leaned against the sash, while the left arm hung by his side. In the hand was a cigar which had become extinguished, as if the smoker had forgotten it.

Aroused by the slight noise Michel's entry had made, he turned. It was the Emperor.

"Who is that?"

"A messenger, sire, from General Wimpffen," announced Michel bandage his side entrusted to him.

The Emperor opened and read it with a gloomy brow. "Impossible," he muttered. Then turning in a door leading to another apartment, "Major Bonlemps," he called.

A young officer entered hastily.

"See," said the Emperor, "what we have come to."

The Major's face grew pale as he read.

"I will write a reply to him," said the Emperor.

"And it will be—"

"A refusal."

A shade that seemed like disappointment passed over the officer's face, but it was only momentary.

"No doubt, your Majesty is in the right."

"Enough blood has been shed. I cannot allow more men to be sacrificed for me."

"Of course not, sire," but to Michel's attentive ear there seemed a slight tone of constraint in acquiescence.

The Emperor sat and wrote a brief note in which he declined that, prior to the abdication of the town and the army outside, there would be a difficulty in his joining him; that in any case he could not mass up his mind to sacrifice a great number of his brave soldiers for the sake of his personal safety, and that he was resolved to share the fate of the army. As he looked up to hand the note, he for the first time he showed a glance at the messenger, who was waiting at a respectful distance from the table.

"Ha!" he exclaimed, "have I not seen you before?"

"I had the honor to be spoken to by your Majesty at the railway station at Chalons."

"Ah! I remember. I fear you have a perilous task in the delivery of this letter. But you are accustomed to perils, I recollect."

"Your Majesty is very condescending to bear it in mind."

"I never forget devotion, fio, brave fellow—here," he added, stretching out his hand by a sudden impulse, "we, perhaps, shall never meet again."

Michel bent on one knee, took the offered hand and kissed it, and then fled to the accomplishment of his task.

Even the brief period that had passed appeared to have increased the horrors of confusion and peril that prevailed, and Michel found augmenting difficulties in his return. Outside the gates the ground was strewn with wrecks, limbs of trees scattered about, ground torn up as if by a subterranean dead; here the body of a ransom, there a wheel in pieces, farther on a gun carriage, over which lay the body of what had been a soldier. Here and there, especially, the officers charged at the head of their troops, the men, even where discipline was wanting and confidence in success had departed, exhibited the most reckless courage. The wounded still kept their ranks; valor booed not, or only added to the tide of blood which reddened the river that rolled beneath the walls of Sedan. The French were in the interior of a wide basin, and around them on all sides, as far as eye covered, was an army more than three times their number.

"Who is that?" asked Mike of his companion.

"That's the new Commander-in-Chief."

A general officer, accompanied by several others of inferior rank, rode up to the spot where the comrades, after the skirmishers, were maintaining a fire upon some of the advanced posts of the enemy. There was a look of anger and vexation on his face.

"Brigadier Lambeau," he said, "there is absolutely no hope here."

"I confess I cannot see it."

"I have been led into an infernal trap. Put at the head of a French army whose positions I hardly know, to receive the final coup of disgrace! It is too hateful."

"I confess it seems hard."

"There is but one thing to do. The army is tied. I must see the Emperor."

"How is that to be done?"

"Give me a pencil."

Tearing a leaf out of his pocket-book, the General wrote in haste and handed the paper to his companion, who read:

SIRE—I have determined to force the line which lies in front of the corps of General Lebrun. I hope to succeed, but my presence is needed here. I beg to entrust the command in the midst of peace, and which I am sure you will justify.

"On side-de-camp," added the General, "there is no mounted aide here, M. le General," said an officer.

"Orderly, I will send the letter conveyed as fast for you as any mounted officer could do it. Here," and he summoned Michel Vose.

"To the Emperor, at once, and bring back a reply."

With the speed of an arrow Michel disappeared. His seated on the gate of the town and made his way through the ruins. Horses riddled by shell were falling in the streets. Artillery, ammunition, women and children were killed by the explosives; horses rushed madly through the thoroughfares, adding little, however, to the existing confusion. Some cabarets were open, and as he passed, Michel could be seen in a uniform carousing within, and hear the strains of a frenzied merriment roaring through the open windows.

"Why should I carry the cursed wasp one any longer?" shouted a Zouave. I will never lead another unfortunate Frenchman to slaughter." So saying he lifted his chassepot by the barrel, and rapping the stock sharply against the pavement, it smashed. His comrades cheered.

"Right, mon enfant. It is time to give up fighting when we have ceased to be commanded."

"It is time, you mean, to stop when we see we have been betrayed."

And then arose a chorus of abuse against the incompetence, the selfishness and the treachery of commanders.

Hurrying on, Michel at last reached the Sous-Prefecture, a handsome, modern house. There was still a sentry at the door, but his musket was leaning against one jamb, while he was leaning against the other smoking, and at the same time conversing with some soldiers and civilians who formed a little crowd.

"Is the Emperor to be seen?" asked Michel, breathless with the speed he had made.

The sentry nodded without interrupting his conversation, and Michel entered the open door. There was no one in the first room, so on chance he ascended the wide staircase and came to the door of the saloon. That, too, was open. Michel looked in, but he saw no one. Embarrassed he entered the room, stupefied by all the misery of a person to whom richly furnished apartments are a stranger. Then he perceived the figure of a man who was gazing out the window, as if watching the work of destruction and confusion that was going on outside. With his right elbow he leaned against the sash, while the left arm hung by his side. In the hand was a cigar which had become extinguished, as if the smoker had forgotten it.

Aroused by the slight noise Michel's entry had made, he turned. It was the Emperor.

"Who is that?"

"A messenger, sire, from General Wimpffen," announced Michel bandage his side entrusted to him.

The Emperor opened and read it with a gloomy brow. "Impossible," he muttered. Then turning in a door leading to another apartment, "Major Bonlemps," he called.

A young officer entered hastily.

"See," said the Emperor, "what we have come to."

The Major's face grew pale as he read.

"I will write a reply to him," said the Emperor.

"And it will be—"

"A refusal."

"GOD SAVE OLD IRELAND."

How fondly now, how proudly now, the ether fans around
The thrilling air of sorrow's joy, the tone of sadness sound!
How sweetly on the midnight hours that failed soon expire
Like golden light that glances soft at dawning blue and fair
And tear drops glitter in the eyes of gallant men and true
As they sing the fragile flower, oft bears the mournful dew
O hark! the brisk and martial music sounds loud for the three
And valor's cheer of Ireland—struggling Ireland—Ireland over the sea!

How bravery now, how subtly now, the few and fear-ful fate
The struggling sons in Freedom's van who work for their native land.
Who dare the dangers, face the steel, and mount the scaffold high
Aye, ready now, like men of old, to bravely fight or die.
Oh! long shall their heroic deeds be dear gained deeds be told.
And Allen's name shine through the years a burnished lamp of gold!
And Emmet's children pray to heaven their sons as brave may be.
God save old Ireland!—struggling Ireland—Ireland over the sea!

Oh! may these swan-like dying notes of Kitla's martyr'd braves
Be wafted far, and move the hearts of those beyond the waves—
The wanderers Celts whose dearest dire has dimm'd our glorious green—
May all unite in Erin's name—let women chant the chorus—
Oh! let the winds that break and scatter bear the sound
Let the sighing breeze who vow revenge hear it
If there's who
Swear, swear you'll struggle side by side to man
God save old Ireland!—struggling Ireland—Ireland over the sea!

—REV. T. AMBROSE BRYAN.

"Be Profunds."

Such was the short but mournfully significant text of a lately police preaching the other day from the pulpit of the grand old abbey church of St. Denis at Paris. The occasion and its surroundings were singularly impressive, and singularly, if some what sadly, impressive. From the land of their exile and their captivity a large body of their population had come from the towns and villages of Alsace-Lorraine as pilgrims to the shrine of S. Denis, to do honor to his memory and to the illustrious Furad, an Alsatian like themselves, and one of the abbey's most famous priors, and to pray to him for their intercession in his bitter calamities that had come down upon their prudent and plundered province. Most of them had come to the abbey in the quaint national costumes of Alsace and Lorraine, and as they came along in solemn procession, headed by their priests and the chiefs of their municipal bodies, they presented an appearance very solemn and picturesque. Only a few days had passed since the cry first arose in the French territory they left themselves—for it was one of the pilgrims, "breathing freely in the old atmosphere of home." In a few hours more they would be entering once again their prison land, but they would carry back with them sweet memories of that day and strong hopes for the future. Many of them, no doubt, had not since the gloomy days of the war, and before, they entered the church, let their prayer there was many a fervent greeting and many a pledge of loyalty to the old allegiance rang out among the throng.

There was a solemn High Mass, and the music from the choir chants of the good French days, sung with peculiar beauty and pathos by the choir of children, under the direction of one of their own old schoolmasters. When the Mass was over, the Abbé Fischer, of Wissembourg, preached on the text we have given above, and told in many ways [illegible] as they did, they [illegible] in their children when we are dead and gone." Then he spoke of the glorious resurrection in the not distant future, and his justice to Ireland counsel in the Irish Church Bill. How do our English people like the principle? How would the English people like to have it applied to themselves? We pause for a reply. It will have to be given some day not far off.—London Universe, November 1.

M. J. HARVIE & SON, Hunter street, between Washington and Market, Sacramento, are the sole wholesale agents for THE MONITOR in that city.

Archbishop Manning on Education.

At St. John's, Islington, on Sunday, November 23d, the annual sermons were preached on behalf of the schools of that mission. In the morning the pulpit was occupied by the Rev. F. Signini, O.C., and in the evening by his Grace the Archbishop. The church was crowded at both services. At the High Mass the preacher paid a warm tribute of admiration to the good parishioners of St. John's, who had gone beyond the expectations of his Grace in their generosity, and even beyond the wants of the mission, in providing school accommodation. From those who had done so much to supply the building there was every hope that funds for school maintenance would be also supplied. It was harder work to found the schools than it was to support them; and such a large congregation as they saw present that day was a pledge that the necessary support would be given. He would wish to say something on the great subject of education. The teaching of Christianity is an essential feature of education, so essential that if children were to be trained by schools without being taught the Christian religion, it would be only an abuse of the venerable name of education; for education without its being centered in the Christian religion, was nothing but a mockery and a sham. The education of the young was one of the highest duties that had gone forth and spread throughout civilized society. Wherever they were the Church of God, "educating the whole child." The man must be educated; the child of God must be educated. But there was a painful remark; in every good thing there was the agents at work—God and the devil; the devil seeking that which was of God. The great work of the devil concerning this mighty question of the education of the young is—to teach them to live as if there was no God in existence." Behold the unanswering spiritual life and real Catholicity of the Protestant Church, which would unmask his falsehood. The preacher then proceed to prove the moral necessity of religious education, and concluded with a most earnest appeal for funds to support the poor children; 400 in number, in the Islington schools.

In the evening the Archbishop took for his text the words of our Lord St. Matthew xxiii., "See that you despise not one of these little ones, for I say to you that their angels always behold the face of My Father in heaven." His Grace said that he would have preferred to speak on the beatitude of the hundred and forty and four thousand saints standing in white robes in glory, or on the Church's most touching of all commemorations—that of the holy innocents, who were the first to die with Christ's education was forced upon him by the circumstances of the hour. It is a matter vital to all of us—the Christian education of children. In the text we have our Lord's own words, and before the throne of little children. In the sight of God He says they are of great value. They have angels for their guardians, and those angels are always looking up into the face of My Father. As they gaze upon the glorious face of God to know His will concerning their little ones; what they shall do or leave undone for their salvation, and guide them. Think for one moment, dear brethren, how little children whom we see bare-footed and bare-headed in the street, whom we pass by so coldly, have angels by their side, ever beloved, ever present to the Lord. Our Lord has given us the example of a little child for our imitation; for our reverence and obedience. He commands us to enjoy, if we would enter the kingdom of heaven. In many ways He has shown unto, and in a little child, the way to heaven. He says, "If any man shall scandalize any of these little ones that believe in Me, it is better for any man shall cause one of them to sin against Me, that a mill stone should be hanged about his neck, and he should be cast into the depths of the sea." The most reverend preacher went on to speak of the awful sin of scandal, and of the long interval since then a more appropriate time than the present could scarcely have been chosen for paying honor to his literary achievements and to his saintly name. The tribute which has just been paid to Alfred Lapointe the foreigner and the ingratitude of these times, and a testimony that, in some mysterious way of His own, God will ever assure that the promises shall be fulfilled that in memoriam eternus erit justus. The ceremonial of the other day was full of interest. A solemn High Mass was sung by the Bishop of St. Die, and an eloquent oration on the life and works of Ozanet was preached by the Bishop of Autun. The faithful of the Vosges, and from the country of the Lorraine, gathered in crowds to the celebration, and listened with delighted attention as the distinguished prelate discoursed of the great Benedictine, and explained for them the full force of the epitaph which John Calasel had written for his tomb—"Legis, seraps orans, musa." The ceremonial of the other day was performed—God grant that I may have done so with profit." The words have been scattered upon the winds, and in concluding his discourse the venerable preacher addressed an appeal to the people of Lorraine, to which the French capital presented no parallel. You who have a Christian education of the poor. His three hundred and sixty-five days festivals displayed by the people of the metropolis of the British empire, and which is the envy of the world, is never to be allowed in a secular school if I have power to prevent it. He then concluded one of the most remarkable and stirring sermons we have ever heard him deliver by an earnest appeal to Catholics to cooperate with him in watching over the

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK BEGINS DECEMBER 14, December
7—Sunday—Second Sunday in Advent.
8—Monday—Immaculate Conception of the B. V. M.
9—Tuesday—St. Ambrose, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor of the Church.
10—Wednesday—Of the Octave of the Immaculate Conception. St. Melchiades, Pope and Martyr.
11—Thursday—St. Damasus, Pope and Confessor.
12—Friday—Of the Octave. Pope.
13—Saturday—St. Lucy, Virgin and Martyr.

THE MONITOR,
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....DECEMBER 6, 1873.

THE TWO MAYORS.

The valedictory of Mayor ALVORD and the inaugural of Mayor ORIS are both excellent addresses. We regret that their great length precludes us from publishing them, for to give them insertion we should sacrifice matter of more general interest to our readers. At the same time there are a few points in each which call for some notice at our hands. Most of the suggestions made by Mr. ALVORD will be warmly indorsed by the citizens of San Francisco, as they exhibit an intimate knowledge of the requirements of our rapidly-extending city. The notorious insufficiency of the Consolidation Act, the failure of that enactment to provide for the due regulation of city affairs, necessitates, Mr. ALVORD declares, an amended charter, which could be drawn up according to our experience of the real requirements of the city and county. Among the many good things which a new charter might do, the depriving of the Supervisors of the power of deeding away the people's property for the ostensible purpose of encouraging private enterprise ought to be accorded a prominent place. The many and great abuses which have been made of this power are too well known to need more particular mention. The recommendation of a restriction of licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors is an admirable one and highly worthy of adoption. There are hundreds of low groggeries in this city the proprietors of which, if not actually thieves themselves, are in league with thieves and evil characters of every grade. The trouble which these haunts of iniquity give the police is simply incalculable. Besides the crimes committed in them, or caused by the deleterious compounds sold in them, annually costs the city ten times as much as is gained from their licenses.

Mr. ALVORD's suggestions about the making and repairing of streets are prompted, no doubt, by a desire to offer a solution of a very difficult problem. He considers that wooden pavements be abandoned henceforth and that granite blocks be the future surface of our thoroughfares. But it is questionable whether these will be entirely satisfactory. The sandy nature of the site on which the city is located will, in our opinion, prevent even the most durable pavement from keeping an even surface and therefore constant repairing will still be the order of the day. The street difficulty is one which will hardly ever be effectually disposed of. Mayor ALVORD is thoroughly convinced that when he says that the city should own the water supply and distribute it to the citizens. It is monstrous that one hundred and seventy thousand persons should be dependant upon a few private speculators for the supply of one of the first necessaries of life, and that they should be made pay an exorbitant price for it. The same may be said of the gas-works. We are paying entirely too much for our gas—the charge per thousand feet is preposterous; but in addition we are literally robbed by false measurement. Mayor ORIS agrees with Mr. ALVORD on nearly all these points, and he alludes to them in almost identical terms. This fact is a good proof that among intelligent and observant persons there is little or no difference of opinion as to the reforms necessary for the better management of municipal matters.

Mr. ORIS lays great stress upon the desirability of introducing manufactures into San Francisco, and in this he only expresses the feelings of every father of a family in the city. Too many of our young men are growing up in idleness; not, indeed, that they are disposed to vicious habits, but simply because they cannot find anything to do. If San Francisco cannot be made a center of manufacturing industry, it can never become anything more than a port of transhipment of Oriental exports and imports, and there is no justification for looking to any great increase in its material prosperity." But if we do not like we need not content ourselves with merely acting as agents for individuals and corporations in the East. There are a great many facilities for manufactures to be had here, and we trust they will be soon turned to advantage. With such an earnest and well-disposed Mayor as Mr. ORIS promises to be—in these respects he is only a worthy successor to Mr. ALVORD—we have every reason to hope that the interests of the city will be faithfully guarded, and that many excellent reforms will be effected in every department of municipal Government.

THE "SUNRISE" CASES.

The trials of Captain CLARKE, HARRIS and MALONY, of the ship "Sunrise," for cruelty to the sailors under their authority, have all been finished and their sentences pronounced. The first gets fourteen months in the county jail and one thousand dollars fine; the second, four years in the State Prison; the third, sixty days in the county jail. The sentences are by no means severe, considering the crimes against humanity which were laid to the charge of these individuals; but we confess that a careful examination of the evidence has satisfied us that their conduct was represented to be much worse than it was in reality. We believe that the sailors, learning the general excitement here about cruelties on ship-board, thought there was a good thing in accusing their captain of undue severity, and took their measures accordingly. The circumstance that they agreed to accept fifty dollars each as compensation for whatever wrongs or injuries they sustained, proves conclusively that they had not been very outrageously treated. But they imprisoned, or were led to imagine, that they could make more money out of legal proceedings, and for that reason the actions for damages were instituted. Now that all is over they must know that it would have been better for them to accept Captain CLARKE's compensation. Nominally they were awarded two hundred and ninety-nine dollars, but nearly the whole of the was swallowed up by law costs, and, we have seen it stated, each man had only about ten dollars for himself when all claims were satisfied. This sum, of course, quickly went in dissipation, so not one of the Ouangdas" crew is the richer, or the better off in any way for his venture in our law courts. An analysis of the evidence adduced impresses the careful reader with a belief, amounting almost to conviction, that if the sailors were not guilty of entering into a conspiracy against their former commander, they at least had a mutual understanding as to what they were to swear. We may be mistaken in this, but we merely say what an examination of all the testimony has forced upon our mind. If CLARKE, HARRIS and MALONY were really guilty of the inhuman atrocities laid to their account, then their sentences are ridiculously insufficient and an outrage upon rather than a satisfaction to justice. But without attempting to penetrate too deeply into judicial mysteries we may suppose that the judge, after making allowances for untruths and exaggerations, thought the three accused had been guilty of sufficient misconduct to warrant him in inflicting the punishments above mentioned. We would derive a moral from this story, to the effect that it is dangerous to place much reliance on the statements of newspapers anxious to "run" a sensation on their own account, and that the cause of justice can never be advanced by arousing popular excitement.

THE FIRE COMMISSIONERS.

The farce played last Tuesday by the two sets of Fire Commissioners may have been very amusing, and probably created much merriment among those who learned the details, yet it was not without its serious side. Here we have men whose term of office has expired, whose successors have been duly elected, deliberately setting at naught the verdict of the people and behaving as if their positions were good for years to come. And, moreover, these obstructionists impede the legally existing Board by the discharge of their duties, by possession of the books, keys, etc., of the Commissioners. They have, we believe, in the last mentioned respect laid themselves open to an indictment for felony, and it would please us much to find them so punished. Their insubordinate conduct is all the more reprehensible, inasmuch as it is prompted by the narrowness and most illiberal of party prejudices. Everybody in San Francisco knows that of late the Fire Department was rise altogether in the interest of a secret, anti-Catholic organization. Efficient and trustworthy men were arbitrarily dismissed because their opinions did not coincide with those of the individuals at the head of the Department, and their places were filled by persons of "the right stripe," whose services were not nearly so valuable.

The citizens of San Francisco did not want any such un-American spirit pervading a body entrusted with the guardianship of the property of the whole community, irrespective of creed or class, and they expressed their sentiments very plainly in the election of Mr. FORD. That gentleman has pledged to the restoration of Chief SCANNELL and the trust that he would be true to his pledge carried him triumphantly through the contest. But when the factionists found that they were defeated at the polls, and that a reorganization of the Fire Department on a broader, more liberal and more democratic basis was imminent, they got up the clever dodge of that "open letter" which was printed so conspicuously in all the daily papers. To-morrow there was nothing more or less than an appeal ad misericordiam to Mr. FORD not to disturb the existing state of affairs. Great pains was bestowed upon the efficiency of the Department—the men were exceptional, the discipline admirable, the activity and vigilance unsurpassed. When everything was thus "lovely" where was the need of change? This pitiful prayer might have had some effect if the vicious disposition at the bottom of it were not perfectly notorious. The sum and substance of the letter might be condensed into—"Do let the political Cincinnatus in the Department so as to keep out Irish papists, and we will be satisfied, no matter what happens."

It was not alleged—the thing would be too shameless—that Mr. SCANNELL was not, at the lowest possible estimate of his worth, as capable and as competent a Chief as Mr. WHITNEY. It was not asserted that the Department would suffer anything by the intended change of management. "Let well enough alone" was the strongest plea urged. We have never been an advocate of change for change's sake, and have always maintained that good men should be kept in the service of the city, whatever their religious or political opinions might be. But we would like exceedingly to find other people exhibiting a similarly just and generous disposition. Now we would ask: Suppose the case were reversed—suppose that SCANNELL had been the actual Chief and WHITNEY the aspirant—how many of those who signed the "open letter" to Mr. FORD would think of drawing up such a document? Very few, indeed, we are certain. Well, we strongly object to that one-sided kind of impartiality, and we congratulate Mr. FORD upon his firmness in carrying out the publicly-expressed wishes of the community. As for the radical and Cresent gentlemen, they are only just acting as might be expected from them. They are displaying the spirit of all fanatics, whether religious or political. When they cannot rule they will do their utmost to ruin. Obedience to law, submission to the will of the people, recognition of the decision of the ballot-box, are all very fine as long as they are the dominant party and have things their own way; but when their opponents get the upperhand, lawlessness, insubordination and rebellion against the popular voice are what they are most given to indulging in. And yet these persons call themselves republicans, and prate loudly about our free institutions. Truly, a nice liberty there would be in any country over which they could exercise undisputed sway! The object aimed at now by the turbulent Commissioners seems to be the bringing about of legislative interference, and the complete abolition of the Board. As Crescentism will not be allowed to monopolize the Department any longer, its destruction must be effected. We hope for the sake of the city, for the safety of the valuable property, the very existence of which is dependent in great measure upon the efficiency and trustworthiness of the fire brigade, that the machinations of these illiberal intriguers will be signally defeated.

PROGRESS.

To the comprehension of sectarians there must be something extremely mystifying in the unexpected progress, rapid spread and vigorous growth of Catholic institutions all over the United States. Half a century ago the sorrows of Puritans might wander abroad without his eye being offended by the sight of the Cross, or his ear lured as he sailed by the sound of the vesper bell. His heart, too, might swell at the thought that Rome had no foothold in the region of which Plymouth Rock was the center. New England could boast that within its limits no Catholic school had existence. In fact, beyond a handful of unheeded French and a sprinkling of despised Irish, no Catholics at all were to be found there. The record of 1825 tells us that, for the six States between New York and New Brunswick, there were but three priests and eight poor churches. Our religion was held in utter contempt, and its followers proclaimed to be so far buried in superstition as to hate the light that might dispel gloom around them, and to be, therefore, opposed to progress and incapable of improvement. In our days the outcry is of another sort. We are found not only to possess systematic energy, but to possess it in much of it. The world was told that our condition was one of stagnation, while it is now assured that we are not only in motion, but even aggressive and domineering. Our progress is dangerous and "menacing" and, as one of the persistent slanderers thereof, our adversaries bemoan the fact that Catholicism is triumphant where first in America the Puritan made his home. Where less than half a century ago there were but three priests, there are in this year of grace six bishops and four hundred and forty-one priests; where less than four churches, there are now four hundred and thirty-two, many of which are majestic testimonials to the generosity and piety of other days. Nor are these overwhelming two hundred and fifty, mostly Cubans, scattered through the city of New York, which is to be Papal as soon as Archbishop McHale made his escape from the Penitentiary. His men proceeded in going to the steamer out of the harbor, but she was again captured by a revenue cutter, with all on board, General Ryan not being among the number. These men were liberated on parole, and they took the "Hornet" to Central America. From there the made several expeditions to Cuba, landing men and munitions of war from time to time, and often chased by Spanish gunboats. Ryan was frequently in Cuba; he was arrested in Washington, and put on trial for violation of the United States with a view of getting the charge of hoist on his plate or in the moonlatns, missionaries are daring as the soldiers of the pioneers, planting the standard of the Cross and dedicating the sun-lit wastes of region to heaven's service. And there the victories achieved by the Church have been not less glorious in the sight of God than the world-wide promise. Wheresoever men have been led by the ambition of conquest or power, thither have followed the servants of God, not to be dazzled by the gleam of gold or the thirst for human blood, but by an irresistible desire to smoothe the way of salvation for their fellowmen. It was not the discovery of the natural riches of America which allured the clergy and religious of the Catholic Church to the Pacific Coast. They came here and are still coming for a far nobler purpose than to gather gold from the mines or fruit from the soil: their ambition is to plant the high and holy seed of enriching these lands with a thorough and practical Christian faith. And it is one of all men that heaven has signally blessed their undertaking. The number of churches which a quarter of a century has produced and the large congregations which fill them might well be adduced in proof of progress. After providing, however, for the first necessities of the Catholic population by the establishment of churches and schools, there remained and to a great extent still remains, an enormous task to be performed by the Church in this part of the world. Clearly it is not enough to take care of the adult and the aged: the young must receive, at the very least, proper instruction in faith and morals, or the growth of the Church must be a mere seeming. Hence the necessity of parochial schools and academies for boys and girls. Without these the Church would be shorn of its strength, and the future would be left to the chances of a godless education.

It is to the credit of the Archbishop of San Francisco that he has always been alive to the importance of this subject. Even when the Catholic population was comparatively small, and the means at his disposal were limited, he did not hesitate to found Catholic schools in this State; and, considering the difficulties of the time and the difficulties inseparable from the case, the results are creditable to our people. The zeal given to this good work by the Sisters of the various orders is such as to call only for moderate praise. The number of our parochial schools for boys is yet limited, and it is often difficult to provide them with zealous and competent teachers. In this city, with its immense number of Catholic boys, there are parochial schools attached only to four churches—namely, St. Mary's, St. Patrick's, St. Francis' and St. Joseph's. The establishment of St. Ignatius College has been of immense benefit to a large number of our children; but taking the pupils there and in the schools previously mentioned, we have but a fraction of the boys for whom it is our duty to provide a first class Catholic education. The number that enjoy the benefits of superior instruction in the Santa Clara College and St. Mary's College, though considerable, are yet but another fraction. In short, the great bulk of our boys are not sufficiently provided for. The numbers of any other denomination would perhaps be admired for with the splendid results already secured to the rising generation by the schools and colleges referred to; with Catholics it is very different. Progress, onward and upward, must be their motto in educational matters till the most ample facilities are provided for giving to every Catholic on this coast the means of a training that shall fit to the high level which can be reached only by a thorough intellectual and Christian education.

In order to view of the pressing needs of large numbers of our boys the late lamented Archbishop left nalled on to establish the new College on the Hayes Park Larkin streets; and it was in recognition of this generous public view as well as of confidence in the ability of the Christian Brothers to carry out a scheme whose care it is conceived, that our people so graciously responded to the appeal for funds necessary for the completion of the building itself is completed, and shows in its magnificent proportions the generous ideas suggested by a long and varied experience which have been adopted. Thanks to the untiring energy of Brother Justin, the Sacred Heart College will throw open its doors to the public on the 15th inst. The first week of the new year, and as the class-rooms are to be filled with all the modern appliances which are found to contribute to comfort and progress, we have no doubt whatever that, under teachers so zealous, capable and successful as the Christian Brothers are, the establishment of this college will soon be one of the principal progress to which San Francisco may hereafter refer with legitimate pride. Next week it will furnish us with a few details concerning the Sacred Heart College, but may now state that the success of its most attractive features will be the fact that the sons of parents unable to pay shall be taught gratuitously, and while in the college will be on the same footing as the sons of millionaires.

H.

Who Was General Ryan?

We glean from our Eastern and Canadian exchanges the following sketch of General Ryan's life: His name is Matthew Anthony C. Ryan, and he was born in Somersville, a few miles from Toronto, Upper Canada, in 1846. He learned the trade of shoemaking from his father, and worked with him up to the time of the breaking out of our civil war, when both proceeded to the United States and enlisted in the Federal army, from which he was honorably discharged with the rank of Lieutenant. In New York he became connected with a fashionable paper called Our Society, and by the publication of articles against the Cuban refugees, and with them formed the Cuban League. He was appointed commander of the fleet of vessels sent by the United States to Cuba in 1871, and on the last trip of that year was arrested, with others, for a breach of our neutrality laws, in fitting out the steamer "Hornet" for another expedition. He then remembering two hundred and fifty, mostly Cubans—was scattered through the city of New York, which is to be Papal as soon as Archbishop McHale has escaped from the Penitentiary. His men proceeded in going to the steamer out of the harbor, but she was again captured by a revenue cutter, with all on board, General Ryan not being among the number. These men were liberated on parole, and they took the "Hornet" to Central America. From there the made several expeditions to Cuba, landing men and munitions of war from time to time, and often chased by Spanish gunboats. Ryan was frequently in Cuba; he was arrested in Washington, and put on trial for violation of the United States with a view of getting the charge of hoist on his plate or in the moonlight, and proceeding to the sea of Spain. It was he alone who kept the Cuban League alive, and had Cuba gained her liberty she would have been the President of it.

General Ryan had two brothers, John and Patrick. John seems to have sympathized with Fenianism, and was in the habit of promising that, when he was elected to the Irish Parliament, he would be the first to hoist the green flag on the Parliament House. Patrick was a Jesuit priest, and was arrested for some connection with the assassination of Mr. Thomas Scott, for the assassination of President Lincoln. After some time spent in chains in Washington he was released and went to Canada as a Southern Relief Commissioner. He now resides in New York.

MR. P. J. TORMEY, the representative of our valiant and valued contemporary the New York Freeman's Journal, is at present in our city and stopping at the Brooklyn Hotel. He comes on a canvassing tour in the interest of that paper, and will, we understand, visit most of the towns and cities of California. Mr. Tormey is a gentleman of very pleasing address and is thoroughly adapted for his business. We make no doubt he will secure a goodly number of subscribers in our State, because Mr. McMasters, the zealous and learned editor of the Freeman's Journal, has hosts of admirers in this part of the world.

REV. J. B. DUGGAN.—There has been forwarded to Rev. Father Alleguy, Louisiana, a letter for the Rev. J. B. Duggan. As we are not acquainted with that gentleman's address we are unable to deliver it. If he sees this notice, or send a duly accredited messenger, the letter will be handed over.

THANKS.—We tender our most sincere and respectful thanks to our fair correspondent in Virginia City for her really beautifully-written communication. It is a great pleasure to us to receive and insert contribution of such a high order of literary merit.

MONDAY NEXT, being the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, will be a holiday of obligation. The duty of hearing Mass and abstaining from servile works is, of course, incumbent upon all Catholics.

FAIR IN VIRGINIA CITY.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: As my last messenger bearing tidings of real Patrick's Day in Virginia City, Nev.," was so kindly received, my long-silent muse ventures once more out of her hiding-place, to make a pilgrimage to the shrine of THE MONITOR. She leaves Virginia in charge of the white-robed Angel of the Snow, and hastens towards you with memories of raindrops dancing to the music of the windharp still clinging round her.

Let me prophetically announce what she will do when she reaches your sunset city. Being well acquainted with her, I can safely assert that her first act will be to pay her homage to THE MONITOR; and after lingering at its shrine till her devotion is satisfied, she will humbly crave an audience with those who so faithfully keep the light of THE MONITOR burning, that its cheery beams are reflected, not only from the mystic portals of California's "Golden Gate," but also from regions many, many miles this side of the snow-shrouded range that separates our land of silver from your land of gold. She will make her best obeisance before them, and to their kind inquiries as to what she has noticed since her last visit, she will answer, I think, in some such words as these:

"They gave me, dear Editor, for being quite unequal to the task of recounting all I have observed since I last enjoyed your hospitality, but allow me to atone in some degree by telling you about a few of the most interesting scenes that have helped to vary the monotony which characterizes our mountain city when "stocks are down." It is almost useless to say that the event of this last-closing year was the Fair for the benefit of the orphans. Three months previous a council of the ladies was held in the counsel-parlor, and from that day till the close of the Fair everything was done to render it a success. Raw material was transformed in an incredibly short period into the most beautiful specimens of fancy-work that deft feminine fingers could fabricate. The children of the asylum's district guished themselves in that line, and their handiwork reflected credit on the Sisters who teach them. In short, every one was in a whirl of excitement, and tongues were not idle while fingers were busy. The good Sisters were consulted at all hours of the day and night, and that, and 12th doorbell at St. Mary's must have been in constant vibration, if one may judge by the gay, eager crowd of fair ones that daily besieged that home of the orphans.

Well, the three months glided almost unperceived away, and at last the eventful opening day dawned bright and clear over the city. The lower hall of the spacious Rest building had been secured, and through it the brisk sound of the carpenters' hammer had resounded for days previous. Booths were erected, and every available corner was filled with fancy articles, and the Chelsea Cinema in Science and Art connection with the South Kensington Museum.

No one have been arrested by the constabulary in Dundalk for attempting to upset the Archbishop. Dundalk is the property of the Earl of Roden, who has distinguished himself before their eager gaze. Here, there, and on each side, stood against the wall, or in the centre, tables groaning with tempting articles, illumined by the gaslight, and looked more like fairy-land than the former, resembled as many fairy palaces seen through a golden haze. Suspended from the ceiling of the hall, in the most picturesque manner, were flags of Erin and America, and smaller flags of the same nations were placed over the respective booths, while in the background of each booth, and in the bars, at reasonable distances from each other, were suspended the Stars and Stripes. Green was displayed in all its snowy purity, while Epicurus modestly set up his refreshment-stall in a corner, where he was liberally supplied, at the far-end of the hall, talking to special friends, and on the keep very own informed that there was "supper at eight hours."

The large offset at the rear of the hall was consecrated to Terpsichore, and the orchestra stationed at the entrance thereof nightly played a very choice selection of twelve, for the benefit of the light-footed dancers.

After the crowd was in awhile there would be a perfect Babel of voices: "Oh, dear, I've lost my ticket—have you one, sir?" —"a ticket on that?" "Oh, now Mr. —, just picked that up for you," to which would be answered such laughing answers as "Why, can I? I'm dead-broke!" "Yes, I'll be happy to treat you." "Don't you want a meerschaum pipe?" etc. One genial old gentleman, whose open-handedness reminded us of diminutive Mr. Crook of Pleasiers, at length got quite contagious "Hit me a blow!" "Here, girls and boys, a meerschaum pipe would be the death of him yet. A bright son of the Emerald Isle, hailing from the land of the shamrock, was heard through the crowd with a lady, when asked to buy a ticket on the "Maid of Erin," replied, "Haven't got enough with this one?" jocosely pointing to the lady at his side. There was plenty of fun, and many a quiet joke was passed, and the place was vocal with merry laughter. Not to be outdone by the lighter sex, the "boys" in a few short months before, the very hall where they were then walking was a scene of confusion and disorder, and that on the spot where they then stood were found some of the mutilated corpses of those killed in the great explosion of last June.

Every hour the patronized the tables was welcomed by smiling faces and ready hands, and the shower of quarters kept the "Wheel of Fortune" in a constant whirl; and the only part of the hall where any one met with a chilling reception was at the entrance stand. Never was so much charity displayed in such a quiet way as at this Fair. Our revered Archbishop was admitted to degrees, receiving the attention of the lawl-officers. The Union, upon a reference from the Vice of the University.

The Managing Committee of Lattermore Library District in Oughterard Union have appointed Mr. Joseph Hynes, secretary thereof, for the district, in place of Mr. Hyde, resigned. Mr. Hynes was formerly assistant in the Clonbur district of Ballinrobe.

A special party of Bradford met on the 13, and passed a resolution, expressive confidence in their ability to carry out the next general election, with the ort on his part, and hoping that ability to put forward that effort.

His Grace the most Rev. Dr. Lynch, Archbishop of Toronto, Canada, and the Rev. J. D. Pinsi, Missionary to the Indians of Canada, and Chaplain to his Excellency arrived in Londonderry November 13, en route to Dublin.

A large meeting was held at Cremorne Gardens, London, November 11th, to urge on the Cabinet the importance of extending household suffrage to the counties, and of bringing about a redistribution of seats, and requesting that Government measures to these ends be introduced next session.

At a meeting of the Maryborough Town Commissioners Mr. William Gibbons was elected in the place of Mr. Robert Hume, who retired, and Messrs. Peter Fitzpatrick and Peter Doran, reelected, signed the requisite declaration and took their seats at the Board.

On the 9th November the Court at Autun, France, passed sentence on those persons charged with conspiracy against Marchioness MacMahon, and with affiliation to the International. Two of the accused were condemned to be imprisoned for four years, one for three, and two others for two years.

A special meeting of the Carlinford Lough Improvement Commissioners was held in Newry November 12th, when it was resolved that an application be made to Parliament for a provisional order to vest additional borrowing powers in the Commissioners, and to enable them to alter their existing schedule of tolls.

The committees of the London Irish Home Rulers held a meeting November 12th at which arrangements were made for a lecture to be delivered in Grafton Hall on the evening of Sunday, November 23d, on the men who died for Ireland, with particular allusion to Allen, Larkin and O'Brien. Many lives, motives and aspirations.

At the last monthly meeting of the Town Commissioners of Parsonstown it was decided to hold a general meeting on Wednesday, and the consent of the Earl of Rosse was asked. His lordship had no objection to the establishment of a second market, provided tolls could be levied for goods sold or brought into the market.

The only Berlin paper which alludes to Marshal MacMahon's message is the Nord-deutsche Allgemeine of November 8th. It briefly reviews the message, praising it in earnest, dignified tone, but calls attention to the utterances of Gambetta, in which it traces a family likeness to the speeches from the throne in the failing days of the Second Empire.

At a meeting of the Home Rule Association, held November 11th, a resolution was passed approving of the policy pursued by the council to carry out the National Conference, and a number of members were admitted, and it was announced that the Most Rev. Dr. Keane, Lord Bishop of Cloyne and Ross, had signed the requisition for the Conference.

On November 10th, in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench, leave was given to Mr. Cust, J. P., of Tipperary, agent over the estate of Mr. Harry, M. P., to file supplemental affidavits in reply to those of certain Town Commissioners of Tipperary, against whom a rule was granted for criminal information charging them and others with conspiracy and libel.

The marriage is announced of the Archbishop of Posen, which were recently seized by the Prussian police, have been purchased by the Polish Catholics for 61 thalers, with the intention of re-opening the church. Meanwhile the bishop, Dunalska Dr. preach another serious attempt against the Catholic Church—namely, the introduction of a measure for obligatory civil marriages.

A shoemaker ..... named Wilson, a Mr. Goldsmid, died while working his trade at his residence, No. 2 Sumbuilding, Dublin. The deceased had been ailing for some time.

Mr. Henry Sargeant addressed a meeting in the Ball Post, Ballybrickan, November 10, on Home Rule. There was a large attendance during Mr. Sargeant's address. He was frequently cheered.

The Rev. Thos. Bently, C.C., Rathmines, Dublin, writes to say that the announcement of the appointment to the Episcopacy of Monsignor Woodlock, which appeared recently, both unauthorized and incorrect.

Lady Gilpin has kindly signified her intention of presiding at a sale of work for the prizes; and thus fool and clothing will be provided for many poor families during the bitter cold winter which has already begun. Even now the ground is white with snow on the grand old Hesket and Mangerton are covered with the shrouds of winter. We have had no summer in this poor part of Ireland, and the hay is all but so completely rotted the potatoes that they are still lying in the ground, for the farmers do not care to dig them. We shall have a hard winter again, and I hope those who can do so will send us help for the poor. If they knew all that was done through their charity last Christmas their hearts would be full of joy. He who gives to the poor lends to God, and God will repay the loan to the generous and kind-hearted.

Let me once more beg that each person who sends the letter will at once send for some tickets. Many persons have called at the office orders or checks on banks can invariably be paid over the counter, or more dollars as they can afford it. Remember that he who gives at once gives double. Ask your dear friends to help you and send this letter to send help also. Yours very gratefully in Christ,

SISTER M. FRANCES CLARE.

KENMARE, County Kerry, Ireland.

Editors are requested to copy this letter.

HOLIDAY TIMES.—Holiday times are fast approaching. Presents and remembrances will be looked for on every day. Of course everybody will seek for something choice and rare, but few desire to be fleeced at Christmas or New Year. In the store of Mr. A. Waldteufel, 120 Kearny street, he safely declare, is found an assemblage of articles suited to the offerings of friendship which cannot be surpassed in any city. Besides a large stock of Catholic books in both large and varied; while of pious articles and appendix supply from the very best manufacturers. The unrivalled collections of Stationary, Chickering, Haines and Herts are to be had from him at very reasonable rates.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL SOCIETY.—Following is the list of subscribing members to St. Mary's Hospital Society for the month of November, collected by Mr. Owen Breslin in Nortonville and vicinity:

| | |
|---|---|
| Mrs. Wm. H. White..... | $10 00 |
| Mrs. Wm. H. White..... | 1 00 |
| Austin Jones..... | 1 00 |
| Thomas Martin..... | 1 00 |
| Daniel Cafferty..... | 1 00 |
| Mrs. Daniel Cafferty..... | 1 00 |
| Thomas Cosgrove..... | 1 00 |
| Robt. Humphreys..... | 1 00 |
| James Dwyer..... | 1 00 |

T. K., SANTA CLARA.—The great Spanish Armada sailed from the mouth of the river Tagus, in three divisions, on the 28th, 29th and 30th of May, 1588.

A BEAUTIFUL PREMIUM.—We will furnish THE MONITOR and HERRMANN'S MAGAZINE for 1874 for $4.50. This will include the magnificent chromo, "Old Oaken Bucket," after Jerome Thompson, the retail price of which is about $10. It is 17x26 inches in size. The money must in each case accompany the order, else no need will be paid to it.

LATE NEWS ITEMS.

An amnesty meeting was held in Maryborough November 9th.

A dividing hospital was launched at the Neath-mill, Dublin, November 8.

Archbishop Manning has withdrawn his petition to prosecute Mr. Newdegate.

A great Home Rule meeting was held in Gleeny on Wednesday, November 12.

A number of Mormon missionaries arrived in Liverpool November 12th.

Dr. Cameron has been unanimously appointed, analyist to the city of Limerick.

Henry Hodgens, of Beaufort, Rathfarnham, has been appointed to be Commissioner of Oaths.

Charles Mervyn Boyne, Esq., has been appointed Deputy Lieutenant for the County, of Charles A. Walker, Esq., deceased.

Viscount Ashbrook has been appointed Deputy Lieutenant for the Queen's county, a room of George Adair, Esq., deceased.

John Gunley, a small farmer, residing at Aghyarrina, was stabbed in an altercation with a laborer named Brophy.

Jam Palmer, of Drumkeel House, Killygarn, has been appointed to be Deputy Lieutenant of the County Leitrim.

Father Mayelle is quite seriously ill; yet as he is receiving the best of medical aid and the most untiring care, it is to be hoped that he will ultimately recover. Pray for him.

Having said so much, my muse will bid you "farewell," and hasten back to Erin.

MARY A.

The Nun of Kenmare's Grand Banner for St. Patrick's Day.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: As many Confraternities are anxious to possess this banner in time for St. Patrick's Day I am sending you a sketch of the design of the Lord Lieutenant of the County Down, ireland.

It is said that the Hon. Edward Howard, (Howard Castle, Yorkshire, is about to be raised to the peerage under the title of Lord Launceston.

Mr. A. B. Walker, recently elected Mayor of Belfast, has announced his intention of providing an art gallery for the town at cost of £20,000.

A branch of the Home Government Association was opened at Kilkelly on saturday, November 15th. There were 150 members present, and 1 thousand signatures.

The wooden bridge at the Nenagh railway station, for the accommodation of passengers, was upon on the morning of November 13th.

The guardians of Parsonstown Union, at one unanimously agreed to increase the salary of Mr. Henry Tooly, clerk of the Union, from £75 to £100 per annum.

Mr. Bouverie is again spoken of as Mr. Disraeli's successor in the Postoffice; but this is more than likely a mere gossip. He is very unlikely to take the office if offered to him.

There was a monster Home Rule demonstration in Ballinasloe (Leitrim) on 15th November, at which Mr. Brady, J.P., and P. J. Smyth, M.P., were present.

Mr. John Coffee, of Killian, near Newport, County Tipperary, has been elected one of the guardian for the electoral division of Newport, in place of the late Mr. John Ryan.

Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M.P., distributed the prizes gained at the recent examinations of the Chelsea Cinema in Science and Art connection with the South Kensington Museum.

No one have been arrested by the constabulary in Dundalk for attempting to upset the Archbishop. Dundalk is the property of the Earl of Roden, who has distinguished himself before their eager gaze.

Mr. Daly will announce through the papers further particulars. He is also prepared to receive and to forward parcels for which he is equally fitted, as he is himself going to Ireland. Mr. Daly has been for some years a writer for the press and a contributor to our leading Catholic magazines.

Mr. Butt, in addressing a meeting, making an appeal to all who may read it, to send help for the "Home Rule lottery," as the letter will be read by thousands in all parts of the great continent. If every one who reads this will send for a few tickets, I would soon have money enough to pay the girls their yearly wages for working the exquisite banner. I have refused to give the use of Grafton Hall for the purpose, stating that at this time, and under present circumstances, they could not possibly consider a public discussion of the subject would be prejudicial to the character of the rising village, and injurious to its peace.

Let me once more beg that each person who sends the letter will at once send for some tickets. Many persons have called at the office orders or checks on banks can invariably be paid over the counter, or more dollars as they can afford it. Remember that he who gives at once gives double. Ask your dear friends to help you and send this letter to send help also. Yours very gratefully in Christ,

SISTER M. FRANCES CLARE.

KENMARE, County Kerry, Ireland.

Editors are requested to copy this letter.

HOLIDAY TIMES.—Holiday times are fast approaching. Presents and remembrances will be looked for on every day. Of course everybody will seek for something choice and rare, but few desire to be fleeced at Christmas or New Year. In the store of Mr. A. Waldteufel, 120 Kearny street, he safely declare, is found an assemblage of articles suited to the offerings of friendship which cannot be surpassed in any city. Besides a large stock of Catholic books in both large and varied; while of pious articles and appendix supply from the very best manufacturers. The unrivalled collections of Stationary, Chickering, Haines and Herts are to be had from him at very reasonable rates.

His Grace the Most Rev. Dr. Lynch, Archbishop of Toronto, Canada, and the Rev. J. D. Pinsi, Missionary to the Indians of Canada, and Chaplain to his Excellency arrived in Londonderry November 13, en route to Dublin.

A large meeting was held at Cremorne Gardens, London, November 11th, to urge on the Cabinet the importance of extending household suffrage to the counties, and of bringing about a redistribution of seats, and requesting that Government measures to these ends be introduced next session.

At a meeting of the Maryborough Town Commissioners Mr. William Gibbons was elected in the place of Mr. Robert Hume, who retired, and Messrs. Peter Fitzpatrick and Peter Doran, reelected, signed the requisite declaration and took their seats at the Board.

On the 9th November the Court at Autun, France, passed sentence on those persons charged with conspiracy against Marchioness MacMahon, and with affiliation to the International. Two of the accused were condemned to be imprisoned for four years, one for three, and two others for two years.

A special meeting of the Carlinford Lough Improvement Commissioners was held in Newry November 12th, when it was resolved that an application be made to Parliament for a provisional order to vest additional borrowing powers in the Commissioners, and to enable them to alter their existing schedule of tolls.

The committees of the London Irish Home Rulers held a meeting November 12th at which arrangements were made for a lecture to be delivered in Grafton Hall on the evening of Sunday, November 23d, on the men who died for Ireland, with particular allusion to Allen, Larkin and O'Brien. Many lives, motives and aspirations.

At the last monthly meeting of the Town Commissioners of Parsonstown it was decided to hold a general meeting on Wednesday, and the consent of the Earl of Rosse was asked. His lordship had no objection to the establishment of a second market, provided tolls could be levied for goods sold or brought into the market.

The only Berlin paper which alludes to Marshal MacMahon's message is the Nord-deutsche Allgemeine of November 8th. It briefly reviews the message, praising it in earnest, dignified tone, but calls attention to the utterances of Gambetta, in which it traces a family likeness to the speeches from the throne in the failing days of the Second Empire.

At a meeting of the Home Rule Association, held November 11th, a resolution was passed approving of the policy pursued by the council to carry out the National Conference, and a number of members were admitted, and it was announced that the Most Rev. Dr. Keane, Lord Bishop of Cloyne and Ross, had signed the requisition for the Conference.

On November 10th, in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench, leave was given to Mr. Cust, J. P., of Tipperary, agent over the estate of Mr. Harry, M. P., to file supplemental affidavits in reply to those of certain Town Commissioners of Tipperary, against whom a rule was granted for criminal information charging them and others with conspiracy and libel.

The marriage is announced of the Archbishop of Posen, which were recently seized by the Prussian police, have been purchased by the Polish Catholics for 61 thalers, with the intention of re-opening the church. Meanwhile the bishop, Dunalska Dr. preach another serious attempt against the Catholic Church—namely, the introduction of a measure for obligatory civil marriages.

A shoemaker ..... named Wilson, a Mr. Goldsmid, died while working his trade at his residence, No. 2 Sumbuilding, Dublin. The deceased had been ailing for some time.

Mr. Henry Sargeant addressed a meeting in the Ball Post, Ballybrickan, November 10, on Home Rule. There was a large attendance during Mr. Sargeant's address. He was frequently cheered.

The Rev. Thos. Bently, C.C., Rathmines, Dublin, writes to say that the announcement of the appointment to the Episcopacy of Monsignor Woodlock, which appeared recently, both unauthorized and incorrect.

Lady Gilpin has kindly signified her intention of presiding at a sale of work for the prizes; and thus fool and clothing will be provided for many poor families during the bitter cold winter which has already begun. Even now the ground is white with snow on the grand old Hesket and Mangerton are covered with the shrouds of winter. We have had no summer in this poor part of Ireland, and the hay is all but so completely rotted the potatoes that they are still lying in the ground, for the farmers do not care to dig them. We shall have a hard winter again, and I hope those who can do so will send us help for the poor. If they knew all that was done through their charity last Christmas their hearts would be full

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

The Home Rule Movement.

The list of gentlemen who on Thursday, October 9, were allotted members of the Home Rule Association may well be termed a remarkable one. It contains, in the first place, over fifty clergymen, including many well-known names of men who have served Faith and Fatherland by long lives of piety and patriotism. The list of laymen who have joined the Association is almost equally as remarkable. It includes men from every part of Ireland, and of every rank, vocation and calling—magistrates, farmers, traders—men who own many broad acres, men who till the land. Such a list as this is more significant than eloquent speech or solemn resolution. It shows how, in the best and highest sense, the Home Rule movement is a national one, including in its wide embrace men of every faith, of every calling, of every rank and position in society. It shows, above all, that the old banner which led the people to victory will be unfurled in the great rank of the Home Rule cause. On many a glorious and well-fought field "green and people in Ireland have stood together in their country's cause, separated." In the Home Rule movement, as in all previous movements having for their aims the right, liberties and happiness of the country, priests and people will march side by side. The enemies of Home Rule know how all-potent such an alliance would be. Hence the secret of their unavailing but sedulous efforts to sow dissension and distrust where love and amity have, up to this, prevailed. Such efforts are as vain as would be attempts to turn the stream of the Liffey, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

Eviction at Bantaliffe, County Cork.

That Mr. Bolt does not complain without reason of the shortcomings of Mr. Gladstone's Land Act, the following letter from a correspondent of the Cork Examiner will sufficiently prove: "I have witnessed a sight to-day on the lands of Lisbeenowen and Knockpope, and I wish from my heart I should never again witness such another. The Sheriff of the county, with Mr. Hoskell of Cork, agent of William Oliver Jackson, of Ahinlek, Midleton; Sub-Inspector Sheehan, of Mallow, eighty of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and six bailiffs, proceeded on well-appointed cars to the above lands. The bailiffs at once, with the Sheriff, entered the dwellings of the tenantry to be evicted and gave orders to have them cleared in four of the furniture. A scene took place in each house as we went along that baffles a description from my pen. The poor people cried, and they had cause—aye to bear their lamentations would soften any heart, one would think; but Mr. Russell stood like a rock, and only responses he made was that they had no alternative—that the whole matter was in his hands—that they should be put to no further outlay, for pay any more rent, and that the only favor tenants if they were allowed to remain on the lands. He said he was willing to accept a payment of rent by the year, but not for the life. I asked and implored of him to take them as caretakers for a month, still such was not to be—no power to give offer made to him avail. No, I can not do it.' He had a well-appointed brigade from Cork, with crowbars, locks and axes; also, with a willing band they went to business, and made short work of the furniture, the butter, cream and milk, all thrown out on the dunghill. The police, though used to hard work, shed tears."

A Liberal Bertram.

The Castlebar Telegraph gives in this wholesome set of advice when inviting attention to the Irish case as stated in certain English organs; and having arrived at the conclusion that in things political might continues to be right, our contemporary continues: "Making a little allowance for the change of manners, one must confess that there is nothing new in politics since the time of Cæsar. We have no Whigs or Tories more desirous for the continuance of the rule of the stranger than were the Herodians and Pharasees in their day. And we should like to know if the representative of royalty could express himself less offensively when lecturing the Nationalists on their impatience under a foreign yoke than did Agrippa the Zelotes in the name of his sovereign. The very arguments advanced in support of foreign rule are those in use at the present hour. The rights of the sword, the privileges of the scarring, were the ideas put forth on the part of Cæsar. What substitute have any modern powers found for them? The Frenchmen hold two Loires, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

Eviction at Bantaliffe, County Cork.

That Mr. Bolt does not complain without reason of the shortcomings of Mr. Gladstone's Land Act, the following letter from a correspondent of the Cork Examiner will sufficiently prove: "I have witnessed a sight to-day on the lands of Lisbeenowen and Knockpope, and I wish from my heart I should never again witness such another. The Sheriff of the county, with Mr. Hoskell of Cork, agent of William Oliver Jackson, of Ahinlek, Midleton; Sub-Inspector Sheehan, of Mallow, eighty of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and six bailiffs, proceeded on well-appointed cars to the above lands. The bailiffs at once, with the Sheriff, entered the dwellings of the tenantry to be evicted and gave orders to have them cleared in four of the furniture. A scene took place in each house as we went along that baffles a description from my pen. The poor people cried, and they had cause—aye to bear their lamentations would soften any heart, one would think; but Mr. Russell stood like a rock, and only responses he made was that they had no alternative—that the whole matter was in his hands—that they should be put to no further outlay, for pay any more rent, and that the only favor tenants if they were allowed to remain on the lands. He said he was willing to accept a payment of rent by the year, but not for the life. I asked and implored of him to take them as caretakers for a month, still such was not to be—no power to give offer made to him avail. No, I can not do it.' He had a well-appointed brigade from Cork, with crowbars, locks and axes; also, with a willing band they went to business, and made short work of the furniture, the butter, cream and milk, all thrown out on the dunghill. The police, though used to hard work, shed tears."

A Liberal Bertram.

The Castlebar Telegraph gives in this wholesome set of advice when inviting attention to the Irish case as stated in certain English organs; and having arrived at the conclusion that in things political might continues to be right, our contemporary continues: "Making a little allowance for the change of manners, one must confess that there is nothing new in politics since the time of Cæsar. We have no Whigs or Tories more desirous for the continuance of the rule of the stranger than were the Herodians and Pharasees in their day. And we should like to know if the representative of royalty could express himself less offensively when lecturing the Nationalists on their impatience under a foreign yoke than did Agrippa the Zelotes in the name of his sovereign. The very arguments advanced in support of foreign rule are those in use at the present hour. The rights of the sword, the privileges of the scarring, were the ideas put forth on the part of Cæsar. What substitute have any modern powers found for them? The Frenchmen hold two Loires, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

ENGLAND.

British Mormonism.

The English Mormons held their annual conference on Sunday, at a music-hall in the East India Dock-road. Twenty "elders" were on the platform, and nearly a hundred "saints" in the body of the hall. Twenty-six branches were represented, consisting of about two hundred members and the balance-sheet was a very favorable one. The addresses delivered were a remarkable and painful comment upon the doctrine of private interpretation of the Bible, and each speaker seemed to believe in the prophetical character of John Smith, treasure-seeker, rascal and discoverer of the "golden tables." The argument most strongly urged, however, was that of the inordinate advantages which Mormonism possessed. This may, perhaps, explain in some degree the so-called "conversions" which have disgraced so many of the laboring districts of England and Wales, since it is scarcely credible that the most ignorant person could be influenced by Joseph Smith's pretensions. Perhaps, however, this may be too much to affirm, since the histories of Southcote, Courtenay, Brothers, etc., show that three hundred years of regular and orderly Christianity failed to prevent people in Ireland have "stood together in their country's cause, separated." In the Home Rule movement, as in all previous movements having for their aims the right, liberties and happiness of the country, priests and people will march side by side. The enemies of Home Rule know how all-potent such an alliance would be. Hence the secret of their unavailing but sedulous efforts to sow dissension and distrust where love and amity have, up to this, prevailed. Such efforts are as vain as would be attempts to turn the stream of the Liffey, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

FRANCE.

Activity of the Reds.

LYONS, October 31.—The interest centers so entirely round Versailles, and will each day become more rapidly by the direct courier and telegrams, that I limit myself this week to a general view of the situation of the country antecedent to the meeting of the Assembly. It may be called an uncritical, possibly more so than it has been since the late war, or even during the Commune. Three years of the "ennui loyal" have given time for a complete organization of the forces of the Left, and for a ceaseless propaganda of evil literature and journalism, whose calumnies, ceaseless as they are, form a terrible obstacle to the work of reconstruction. Nothing is too absurd for the revolutionary agents to spread among the rural populations, or to be received as gospel by them, especially when they have acquired their property by the robberies of ecclesiastical and feudal lands in 1793, and which, they are told by the Radical press, will be taken from them if the Monarchy is proclaimed. The timidity of the Liberal Conservatives, especially among the bourgeois, is another stumbling-block. It is impossible to indoctrinate by day or night and openly in defiance of public order, almost, without the fear that a Red Republican Municipality will be elected. The Assembly, there is no fear of anything further. Several provincial addresses are taken on themselves to inform Marshal MacMahon that they cannot answer for any offer made to him even a Mayor not do it.' He had a well-appointed brigade from Cork, with crowbars, locks and axes; also, with a willing band they went to business, and made short work of the furniture, the butter, cream and milk, all thrown out on the dunghill. The police, though used to hard work, shed tears."

A Liberal Bertram.

The Castlebar Telegraph gives in this wholesome set of advice when inviting attention to the Irish case as stated in certain English organs; and having arrived at the conclusion that in things political might continues to be right, our contemporary continues: "Making a little allowance for the change of manners, one must confess that there is nothing new in politics since the time of Cæsar. We have no Whigs or Tories more desirous for the continuance of the rule of the stranger than were the Herodians and Pharasees in their day. And we should like to know if the representative of royalty could express himself less offensively when lecturing the Nationalists on their impatience under a foreign yoke than did Agrippa the Zelotes in the name of his sovereign. The very arguments advanced in support of foreign rule are those in use at the present hour. The rights of the sword, the privileges of the scarring, were the ideas put forth on the part of Cæsar. What substitute have any modern powers found for them? The Frenchmen hold two Loires, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

Eviction at Bantaliffe, County Cork.

That Mr. Bolt does not complain without reason of the shortcomings of Mr. Gladstone's Land Act, the following letter from a correspondent of the Cork Examiner will sufficiently prove: "I have witnessed a sight to-day on the lands of Lisbeenowen and Knockpope, and I wish from my heart I should never again witness such another. The Sheriff of the county, with Mr. Hoskell of Cork, agent of William Oliver Jackson, of Ahinlek, Midleton; Sub-Inspector Sheehan, of Mallow, eighty of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and six bailiffs, proceeded on well-appointed cars to the above lands. The bailiffs at once, with the Sheriff, entered the dwellings of the tenantry to be evicted and gave orders to have them cleared in four of the furniture. A scene took place in each house as we went along that baffles a description from my pen. The poor people cried, and they had cause—aye to bear their lamentations would soften any heart, one would think; but Mr. Russell stood like a rock, and only responses he made was that they had no alternative—that the whole matter was in his hands—that they should be put to no further outlay, for pay any more rent, and that the only favor tenants if they were allowed to remain on the lands. He said he was willing to accept a payment of rent by the year, but not for the life. I asked and implored of him to take them as caretakers for a month, still such was not to be—no power to give offer made to him avail. No, I can not do it.' He had a well-appointed brigade from Cork, with crowbars, locks and axes; also, with a willing band they went to business, and made short work of the furniture, the butter, cream and milk, all thrown out on the dunghill. The police, though used to hard work, shed tears."

A Liberal Bertram.

The Castlebar Telegraph gives in this wholesome set of advice when inviting attention to the Irish case as stated in certain English organs; and having arrived at the conclusion that in things political might continues to be right, our contemporary continues: "Making a little allowance for the change of manners, one must confess that there is nothing new in politics since the time of Cæsar. We have no Whigs or Tories more desirous for the continuance of the rule of the stranger than were the Herodians and Pharasees in their day. And we should like to know if the representative of royalty could express himself less offensively when lecturing the Nationalists on their impatience under a foreign yoke than did Agrippa the Zelotes in the name of his sovereign. The very arguments advanced in support of foreign rule are those in use at the present hour. The rights of the sword, the privileges of the scarring, were the ideas put forth on the part of Cæsar. What substitute have any modern powers found for them? The Frenchmen hold two Loires, or to make the Powerscourt Waterfall lay one spring its bill. Ireland knows too well the fruits of the English policy, Divide et impera. English intrigue has up to this time kept large sections of our Protestant brethren out of the National camp, but we do not despair that in the end they will see the necessity of thorough union with their fellow-countrymen, and that the demand for Home Rule will be made with the unanimous voice of a united nation. It needs no prophet, no soothsayer, to say that when such a demand is made, it will be impossible to refuse its concession.—Dublin Freeman, Nov. 1.

Eviction at Bantaliffe, County Cork.

That Mr. Bolt does not complain without reason of the shortcomings of Mr. Gladstone's Land Act, the following letter from a correspondent of the Cork Examiner will sufficiently prove: "I have witnessed a sight to-day on the lands of Lisbeenowen and Knockpope, and I wish from my heart I should never again witness such another. The Sheriff of the county, with Mr. Hoskell of Cork, agent of William Oliver Jackson, of Ahinlek, Midleton; Sub-Inspector Sheehan, of Mallow, eighty of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and six bailiffs, proceeded on well-appointed cars to the above lands. The bailiffs at once, with the Sheriff, entered the dwellings of the tenantry to be evicted and gave orders to have them cleared in four of the furniture. A scene took place in each house as we went along that baffles a description from my pen. The poor people cried, and they had cause—aye to bear their lamentations would soften any heart, one would think; but Mr. Russell stood like a rock, and only responses he made was that they had no alternative—that the whole matter was in his hands—that they should be put to no further outlay, for pay any more rent, and that the only favor tenants if they were allowed to remain on the lands. He said he was willing to accept a payment of rent by the year, but not for the life. I asked and implored of him to take them as caretakers for a month, still such was not to be—no power to give offer made to him avail. No, I can not do it.' He had a well-appointed brigade from Cork, with crowbars, locks and axes; also, with a willing band they went to business, and made short work of the furniture, the butter, cream and milk, all thrown out on the dunghill. The police, though used to hard work, shed tears."

FRANCE.

Activity of the Reds.

LYONS, October 31.—The interest centers so entirely round Versailles, and will each day become more rapidly by the direct courier and telegrams, that I limit myself this week to a general view of the situation of the country antecedent to the meeting of the Assembly. It may be called an uncritical, possibly more so than it has been since the late war, or even during the Commune. Three years of the "ennui loyal" have given time for a complete organization of the forces of the Left, and for a ceaseless propaganda of evil literature and journalism, whose calumnies, ceaseless as they are, form a terrible obstacle to the work of reconstruction. Nothing is too absurd for the revolutionary agents to spread among the rural populations, or to be received as gospel by them, especially when they have acquired their property by the robberies of ecclesiastical and feudal lands in 1793, and which, they are told by the Radical press, will be taken from them if the Monarchy is proclaimed. The timidity of the Liberal Conservatives, especially among the bourgeois, is another stumbling-block. It is impossible to indoctrinate by day or night and openly in defiance of public order, almost, without the fear that a Red Republican Municipality will be elected. The Assembly, there is no fear of anything further. Several provincial addresses are taken on themselves to inform Marshal MacMahon that they cannot answer for any offer made to him even a Mayor

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Catholic population of the diocese of Richmond, Va., is 18,000

The Sisters of Mercy whose Mother house is at Manchester, N. H., have established at Portland, Maine.

A Roman paper says that Prince Torlonio has offered the expelled Jesuits his great farm house at Castle Gondolfo.

The nuns of Dubuque have one of the finest churches in the West, and are now building a school-house at a cost of $15,000.

A Catholic Order of Odd Fellows is established in England, and consists at present of nine lodges. It takes no oath in the dark.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Mirror is very severe, and justly so, on the illustrations in the Catholic Family Almanac for 1874.

The Sydney Freeman's Journal says that the progress of the Catholic Church in the colony during the the past ten years has been truly wonderful.

Bishop Wadham of Ogdensburg, New York, has administered Confirmation to five hundred persons in St. Andrew's Church, City Hall Place, in that city.

The Rev. Felix Moulion, pastor of St. Patrick's church at Albany, N. Y., died at his residence in that city recently, in the fortieth year of his age.

The Sisters of Charity from the House of Providence, Montreal, Canada, have arrived at Portland on their way to Vancouver, Washington Territory.

Bishop Hennessey, of Dubuque, has forbidden dancing at the close of fairs and festivals. This puts an end to dances and so-called calico parties at fairs in the dioceses of Iowa.

A sale of cotton, donated by Reed Taylor to the Sisters of St. Dominic at Memphis, was sold at auction on the 10th November, and brought $1,500.

At Berwick, Ohio, a fine school-house was lately blessed, and the pleasant event was graced by the pastor that nearly every child within a distance of four miles attended school.

Bishop Grom of Savannah, Ga., did not go to Florida for the benefit of his health, as reported last week. He came North, and is sojourning in his native city of Baltimore.

The Cathedral of Boston will be consecrated November, 74. It is proposed to invite every bishop in the country and from the British provinces, and every priest in New England, with many outside of it.

A beautiful marble bust of Father Tom Burke has been completed by Foley, the Irish sculptor, and now awaits transference from his studio to its destined place in the Malvern Club.

There are eighty-eight societies of the Irish Catholic Temperance and Benevolent Union in Pennsylvania. In Virginia the President of the Union is said by the Richmond papers to be the most eloquent Democratic speaker in the State.

The Catholic Union of St. Paul, Minn., has taken measures for and adopted a plan for a Catholic Mercantile and Industrial School for boys. They say it is a fixed fact that it will be established and Christian Brothers in charge of it within a year.

Father Dausch of Baltimore, Md., maintains that besides the members of the priesthood, no indeed to criticise too severely the work of Catholic journalists, and that they should use the salutary light of criticism by aiding with their voices, their purses and their pens.

"It may so mean you never will see another hundred Catholic parishes in Germany while not parish priests, all of them having been deprived of their legitimate pastors by the operations of Bismarck. This causes many Protestant ministers to rejoice. They prefer York, Jew and heathen to a so-called papist.

The mother of the great reformer Jonathan Edwards, when on her death-bed, inquired her son to call her whether the truth was to be found in Protestantism, in the Catholic Church, or in Pantheism, and he replied, "Mother, Protestantism is more conformable to reason, but the Catholic Church has more marks of the true."

When Father Xaxlet took charge of the parish of Guinness, in the diocese of Hamburgue, there were but fifteen Catholic families in the whole county, now there are fifty or more, with a membership of 1,000. They have a flourishing convent school, and are preparing to build a new church.

There are five Catholic colleges now in operation in different churches in the city of New York, of which the Jesuit Fathers are at St. Stephen's, where they are expected to inculcate the doctrine of the syllabus and the law of the Church in regard to the schooling of Catholic children.

The Rev. P. De Roe, direct from Antwerp, Belgium, has arrived at Portland, Oregon, to labor on the mission of that Archdiocese. Father Orth, hitherto attached to the college at Portland, has been assigned to the Umatilla Reservation. His departure is much regretted by the German Catholics.

The Roman Seminary of Birmingham, England, was formally opposed by the Bishop and Chapter at Oscott, near Sutton Coldfield, in Warwickshire. The sermon was delivered by Very Rev. Dr. Newman. The building is erected on forty acres of land which have been secured for the purpose, and which will be suitably planted and cultivated.

The Mayors and Deputy Mayors of the Canton of Geneva, Switzerland, have protested most energetically against the rigor of the new law which presumes to impose on them a State religion which is essentially schismatical and subversive of every Catholic principle, and whose avowed object is to subject the Church to the omnipotence of the Government.

Bishop Rosecrans administered confirmation at Circleville, Ohio, to sixty persons, among whom were four converts. Among the priests present was Very Rev. Father Young, O.S.D., the oldest priest in the United States. He is the nephew of Bishop Fenwick, first bishop of Cincinnati, Ohio, and was ordained priest in 1817.

Bishop Cummins, the Episcopal Bishop of Kentucky, has withdrawn from the ordination and friends leading a schism by cooperating with Presbyterian, while Cox, the Episcopalian Bishop of New York, sends his letters of greeting to Reformed Old Catholic Bishop of Germany. All this is but history repeating itself among the heretics.

Died, at the Mercy Hospital in Pittsburg, in the fifty-second year of his age, Rev. John H. Brazil, pastor of the Church of Monongahela city. He was the nephew of Very Rev. John J. Brazil, Vicar-General of Iowa, and was ordained for that diocese, but transferred for the benefit of his health. He was a native of the county Clare, Ireland.

Bishop Borgess, of Detroit, Michigan, assisted by Bishop Davenger, of Fort Wayne, Ind., Bishop Gilmore, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Bishop Walsh, of London, Ont., consecrated a magnificent Gothic church for the Germans of Detroit on the 16th November. The church is 200 feet long, 80 feet wide and 80 feet high. This makes the tenth church in Detroit.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The value of freight shipped from this city to the Eastern States during the month of November was $1,100,804.

The summer Great Republic, which sailed for China last Monday, took off $300,410 in gold and silver.

Mayor Alvord, on retiring from office, says the reduction of the pay of the Police and the increase of their numbers

Twenty-one persons were examined for lunacy during the month of November, and sixteen of those were committed to the asylum at Stockton.

The Independent Defender, popularly known as through one of the "crescents" in A. O. F. language as where the wayward lambs from trouble and the weary are not at rest.

The house carpenters of this city are moving for the erection of drinking fountains throughout the city. It would be the best move ever made in the cause of temperance.

Tomatoes, green peas, cauliflower and other varieties of fresh vegetables are being shipped from here to Chicago daily. They are out of season in that city and must have that the trade may become established.

The sales of real estate in this city during the month of November was unusually large. They amounted to $1,280,607. Of this sum, $1,000,000 was in the purchase of speculative property, and the remainder of small purchasers who have bought for the purpose of homes.

The fine rain of Wednesday was accompanied with a gusty shading of snow, which fell in the depth of several inches on the hills of the north and south of the city, and in many places where no snow had been seen for twenty years. Before the rain was the first since the middle of April last.

During November there were delivered by the postal carriers in this city 142,050 mail letters, 4,000 mail cards, 16,852 local letters, 1,827 local postal cards, and 41,167 newspapers. The letters collected numbered 102,000, and postal cards 26,315.

James Denman, the new Superintendent of Public Schools, knows from experience that he cannot be a lawyer, and will not be a lawyer. This will save the department $3,000 a year. Mr. Denman succeeds Superintendent John Swett, whose tendency of the Democratic Legislature.

The old Board of Five Commissioners refuse to surrender to the new Board, and both Boards met and transacted business in the Board room of the latter on Tuesday last. It is said that the Board is guilty of felony in refusing to surrender, for retaining possession of the records, keys and other Government property.

The members of the Police force presented their retiring Chief Crowley with a handsome watch and chain from which they had contributed for the purpose on Monday evening. The presentation was made by Lieutenant Ryan, to which he paid the ex-Chief many high compliments for the faithful and able manner in which he discharged the duties of the office for years faithful services to the city.

The supervising architect of the Treasury Department, has called for and received the various Federal buildings in this city, recommending the erection of a Postoffice building on Washington locality, so as to allow the present floors of the new Postoffice building to be used for the purpose of furnishing the public with rooms and accommodations. Building will be erected for a mail depot at Montgomery and Bush streets as a transfer of the mails can be effected.

Our new municipal officers entered upon their duties on Monday. A new Mayor and Board of Supervisors, a new Fire Department, a new Police Department, a new Board of Education, a new Superintendent and Board of Health, a new Fire Warden, a new Assistant and clerks, a new Sheriff, Secretary, Treasurer and Chief of Police, all of which will legitimately follow a new political campaign, and which will be productive of results whether for the good of the public time only will determine. We hope for the best.

All preliminary arrangements are made for the erection of one of the largest hotels in the world on the block bounded by Fulton, Larkin and Cathedral streets, and will be the rendezvous of Mercantile and Commercial interests in this city. It will front 200 feet on Fulton and Larkin streets, and on Market 275 feet, on Annie 200 feet and on Jessie 275 feet, covering a space of 55,000 feet, and will be seven stories high. Will. H. Sharon, President of the Bank of California, is the chief owner and the heart of progress. Leonard Assistant, has inspected all the large hotels of Europe and will be a new one for the grand structure. It will be known as the Palace Hotel.

Rev. Thomas Hughes, Assistant of the Loyola Scientific Academy of St. Ignatius College was held on the 30th ultimo, and was a very interesting institution. Among the various exercises of a very interesting nature, the most interesting was the reading of their researches on the consumption and supply of the water, and the quantity of water which will be required in the future, and the general properties of the atmosphere of San Francisco. Rev. Father Hughes, S.J., Professor, has inspected all the large hotels of Europe with a view to the plan and grand structure. It will be known as the Palace Hotel.

Rev. Thomas Hughes, Assistant of the Loyola Scientific Academy of St. Ignatius College was held on the 30th ultimo, and was a very interesting institution. Among the various exercises of a very interesting nature, the most interesting was the reading of their researches on the consumption and supply of the water, and the general properties of the atmosphere of San Francisco. Rev. Father Hughes, S.J., Professor, has inspected all the large hotels of Europe with a view to the plan and grand structure. It will be known as the Palace Hotel.

The Catholic Union Inauguration and Festival at Boston was attended by six bishops, one hundred priests and an immense assemblage of laity. A congratulatory brief was read from the Holy Father, and among the many eloquent speakers, including the Bishop of Boston, was the Rev. Charles F. Stone, of the Order of St. Paul the Apostle. His subject was, "The duty of American Catholics."

A Sound of Health.

An edition of fifteen million one and ten million of copies of a very useful work is now ready for gratuitous distribution, and will be sent to any one in any part of the United States, the Canadian Colonies, Spanish America or Brazil. The work referred to is Hostetter's Almanac for 1874. This medical portion of it treats of the various ailments to which the human system is subject, and sets forth the peculiar properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—the purest and best tonic at present known—as a preservative of health and a remedy for the cure of fever and ague, dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, debility, kidney complaint, and all other diseases of which malaria is the source. The Almanac is printed in all the principal languages of the civilized world, and contains a large number of facilities and individuals that have been restored to health by the use of this unrivalled medicine. No man or woman who has a due regard for the enjoyment of heaven's blessings, bodily or mental, should fail to read the plain, simple and comprehensive advice this 132d powerful preventive and remedy. The miscellaneous matter is varied, interesting and amusing, and the reader experiences copious and comprehensive. Hostetter's Almanac for 1874 is, in short, a valuable contribution to the science of life, for the use of all classes and callings, the mechanic, the planter, the miner, the merchant, the steel-ill, and the laborer, the professional man, and the invalid, all of whom will find it to be a publication of which it is quite necessary. The medicine referred to has been in use many years, and has long been regarded as a standard preparation, which needs no commendation to the general reader, save been carefully described in the pamphlet. All if clear, explicit, forcible, and accurate. Those who have not received a copy can obtain one from druggists, grocers, Hostetter & Smith, proprietors, Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two cent stamp, will be forwarded a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in their neighborhood.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mayfield—P. Dunn | $ 00 |
| " P. Hennessy | 1 00 |
| " Thomas McMahon | 1 00 |
| Santa Clara—Jas. Dwyer | 1 00 |
| " J. Isaacson | 1 00 |
| " E. C. Pipes | 1 00 |
| Thomas Scully | 1 00 |
| " S. Cummings | 1 00 |
| " H. W. Fabing | 1 00 |
| " John Hoover | 1 00 |
| " John H. Campbell | 1 00 |
| " Santa Clara College | 1 00 |
| " P. H. Doyle | 1 00 |
| " J. Hamilton | 1 00 |
| " T. Smith | 1 00 |
| " Wm. Riley | 1 00 |
| San José—R. M. Pyle | 1 00 |
| " John Mcgrade | 1 00 |
| " Wm. Mcgrade | 1 00 |
| " M. McLaughlin | 1 00 |
| " Thos. D. Bell | 1 00 |
| " Martin Corcoran | 1 00 |
| " Nottingham Lace | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Mcgrade | 1 00 |
| Milpitas—John Cassidy | 1 00 |
| Centreville—Hugh Dunlop | 1 00 |
| Irish Hill—George Bidwell | 1 00 |
| " Thomas Smith | 1 00 |
| Redwood City—James P. Dunn | 1 00 |
| Valley Ford—William Fitzgerald | 1 00 |
| Santa Cruz—Rev. Anthony Steinhauer | 1 00 |
| Petaluma—H. Pandel | 1 00 |

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, December 27, 1873.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been up to average. We quote—Extra at $6 @ $6 25; and superfine at $5 25@5 75, in sacks $ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has ruled quiet and at advanced rates since our last report. At the close the market is quotable at $1 50@2 55 $ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range at $1 @$1 85 $ 100 lbs.

OATS—There has ruled a fair demand, at advanced rates during the past week. Quotable at the close at $1 @$1 75 $ 100 lbs.

RYE—The receipts have been fair during the past week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at 1@1 85 $ 100 lbs.

CORN—Quotable at $1 80@1 85 $ bushel.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayo, $2 75; Pea, $3 00; Pink and Red, $2 50, and Small White, $2 75; Small Butter $1 50 @ 1 90.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free with a fair demand. We quote the range at 50 @ 1 00 $ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 50@ 1 00 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $20 @ 21 $ ton from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $30 @ 32 $ ton from mill.

HAY—Wheat—Quotable at $12 @ 16 $ ton.

BARLEY—Quotable at $13@15 $ ton.

OATS—Quotable at $14@16 $ ton.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayo, $2 75; Pea, $3 00; Pink and Red, $2 50, and Small White, $2 75; Small Butter $1 50 @ 1 90.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free with a fair demand. We quote the range at 50 @ 1 00 $ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 50@ 1 00 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $20 @ 21 $ ton from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $30 @ 32 $ ton from mill.

HAY—Wheat—Quotable at $12 @ 16 $ ton.

BARLEY—Quotable at $13@15 $ ton.

OATS—Quotable at $14@16 $ ton.

BEANS—Quotable at $2 @ 3 $ ton from mill.

FEED—Barley—Quotable at $1 @ 1 25 $ 100 lbs.

CHICKEN FEED—Quotable at $2 @ 2 50 $ 100 lbs.

CORN MEAL—Quotable at $2 @ 2 50 $ ton from mill.

WOOL—There has been no increasing inquiry in the market. We quote—Fall clip—Superior grades at Hollow, Burry, 18@20 c.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh roll, good to choice, 37½ @ 40c; do. do. Eastern, 30@35c; do. ordinary to fair, 25@30c; cheese, 20@22c.

EGGS—California, 45@50c; Eastern, 37½@40c; do. Oregon, 40@45c; do. Mendocino, 40@45c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California at 12½ @ 13½c; Oregon, none; Eastern do. 16@17c.

BACON—California, at 10@11c; Eastern sugar-cured Breakfast, 13@13½c; do. clear, 12@12½c; do. California, 11@12c; do. Eastern, 10@10½c; do. in the market; Eastern, in tcs, 11@11½c; do. in cases, 12½c; do. in bags, 11½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 7@8c; second quality, 5@6½ c.

MUTTON—at 6@7c ₱ lb.

VEAL—at 7@8c ₱ lb.

PORK—at 7@8c ₱ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Live, per doz, $6 00@8 00; Roosters, $4 00@ 5 00; Young Roosters, $5@6 00; Broilers, $3 50@4 00; Fryers, $5@6 00; Hens, $4 00@5 00; Small, $3 50@4 00; Geese, $1 50@2 00; Goslings, $1 50@2 00; Ducks, $4 00@5 00; Young Ducks, $3@4 00; Turkeys—Live, 15@16c ₱ lb.

GAME—Hare, $1 50@2 00 each; Rabbits, $1 50@2 00 each; Quail, $1 50@2 00 ₱ doz; Pheasants, $3 00@4 00 each; Deer, 5@6c ₱ lb.

WILD FOWL—Brant, $1 50@2 00 each; Mallard, 75@$1 00; Canvas Back, $2 00@2 50; Small Ducks, 50c.

HARE—25c each.

RABBITS—Diamond, 50c each.

PIGEONS—Tame, $2 00@3 00 doz.

SQUABS—$3 00@4 00 doz.

TURKEYS—Live, 15@16c ₱ lb.

QUAIL—$2 50@3 00 ₱ doz.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY,
O'NEILL &
BRENNAN,
IMPORTERS OF
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
DRY GOODS,
112 and 114 Third Street,
CORNER OF MISSION, SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

LAMPERT, [illegible] & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
French, English and American
FANCY AND STAPLE
DRY GOODS,
New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.
NO. 4 THIRD STREET,
Near Market Street, SAN FRANCISCO.

A NOBLE RECORD.
THE GREATEST
TRIUMPHS OF THE AGE
HAVE BEEN ACHIEVED BY THE PIANOS

OF HALLET, DAVIS & CO.,
(Boston),
Over Twenty Thousand of which are now in use, and daily receiving the unqualified indorsement
OF
THE LEADING PIANISTS IN THE WORLD.
OF EXQUISITE FINISH, BEAUTY OF DESIGN, SWEETNESS OF TONE, DELIBERTUL TOUCH and WONDERFUL DURABILITY, are among the features which cause all competent judges to proclaim the noble Instruments of
HALLET, DAVIS & CO.
Superior to all Others Manufactured either in America or Europe.
Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere.
W. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,
No. 13 Sansome Street,
NEAR SUTTER SAN FRANCISCO

DRY GOODS, ETC.
$50,000 WORTH
OF
BLACK SILKS
Bought for Cash
IN NEW YORK
DURING THE LATE FAILURES,
JUST RECEIVED
AND
NOW OFFERED FOR SALE AT
AT
THE WHITE HOUSE!
BEAUTIFUL
NEW GOODS
ARE NOW OFFERED AT
606 MARKET STREET,
25 Per Cent. Less
Than Old Shop worn and Bankrupt Stocks are Selling for Elsewhere.
A Visit to the Store, an Inspection of the Stock, and a Fair Comparison of Prices, etc., will certainly convince any person that J. J. O'BRIEN'S is the Bon Marche of San Francisco.
Beautiful French SERGES, 45 cents a yard; reduced from 75 cents.
Beautiful EMPRESS CLOTHS in all colors; reduced to 37½ cents.
French CASHMERES, 62½ cents; reduced from $1.
Beautiful PLAIDS, ALPACAS, 25 cents a yard; reduced from 40 cents.
French CREPONNES, 50 cents a yard, reduced from $1.
Beautiful PLAIN ALPACAS, all colors, 25 cents a yard.
Full lines of all materials.
FRENCH MERINOES, 50 cents a yard; reduced from $1.
FRENCH POPLINS, from New York auction, $1.25; regular price $2.
SHAWLS.
100 BROCHE SHAWLS (from auction), less than cost prices.
100 PRINTED SHAWLS, from $1 to upward.
MOURNING GOODS.
Silks, French serges, 37½ cents a yard.
Black and white checks, 25 cents a yard.
Black Cashmeres, 25 cents a yard.
Black Alpacas, 25 cents a yard.
Black Empress Cloths, 37½ cents a yard.
Black Crapes, 25 cents a yard.
Mourning Veils, 50 cents each.
DOMESTIC GOODS.
150 WHITE BLANKETS, $2 50 A PAIR.
150 GREY BLANKETS, $2 50 A PAIR.
Best Mission BLANKETS, $3 a pair.
Best Marysville BLANKETS, $3 50 a pair.
Best Horse BLANKETS, assorted sizes, $2 50 a pair.
50 Army and California Blankets.
WHITE FLANNELS, 50 cents per yard.
MARSEILLES QUILTS, $1 25 upward.
500 Heavy English COUNTERPANES (colored), $1 25 each.
Heavy Scotch TABLE LINEN, 37½ cents a yard.
Hand-loom TABLE LINEN, 50 cents a yard.
All Linen TOWELS, $1 a dozen.
All Linen NAPKINS, $1 a dozen.
Damask white SHEETINGS, 25 cents a yard.
MUSLINS sold at actual cost.
Good Heavy Cotton FLANNEL, 18 cents a yard.
All-Wool Scotch FLANNELS, 25 cents a yard.
All-Wool White FLANNEL, 25 cents a yard.
Ladies' English Merino VESTS, 75 cents each.
Men's Merino VESTS, 50 cents each.
500 pairs C. P. CORSETS, 50 cents each.
Ladies' Hemmed and Stitched HANDKERCHIEFS, 12½ cents each.
Gents' Hemmed HANDKERCHIEFS, 12½ cents each.
500 dozen French KID GLOVES, just received, from 75 cents a pair.
Ladies' English Iron Frame HOSIERY, 12½ cents a pair.
Ladies' English Iron Frame HOSIERY, 18¾ cents a pair.
Ladies and Misses' Woolen HOSIERY, just received.
NOTTINGHAM LACE, new pattern, from 25 cents a yard.
Heavy Scotch CRASH, 12 yards for $1.
INITIAL HANDKERCHIEFS.
LACES AND FANCY GOODS
In great variety
A call respectfully solicited at
J. J. O'BRIEN'S,
606 MARKET STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY SAN FRANCISCO

DRY GOODS, ETC.

RESOLVED,
THAT
J. J. O'BRIEN,
No. 606
Market Street,
CANNOT BE
UNDERSOLD.
BEAUTIFUL
NEW GOODS
ARE NOW OFFERED AT
606 MARKET STREET,
25 Per Cent. Less
Than Old Shop worn and Bankrupt Stocks are Selling for Elsewhere.
A Visit to the Store, an Inspection of the Stock, and a Fair Comparison of Prices, etc., will certainly convince any person that J. J. O'BRIEN'S is the Bon Marche of San Francisco.
Beautiful French SERGES, 45 cents a yard; reduced from 75 cents.
Beautiful EMPRESS CLOTHS in all colors; reduced to 37½ cents.
French CASHMERES, 62½ cents; reduced from $1.
Beautiful PLAIDS, ALPACAS, 25 cents a yard; reduced from 40 cents.
French CREPONNES, 50 cents a yard, reduced from $1.
Beautiful PLAIN ALPACAS, all colors, 25 cents a yard.
Full lines of all materials.
FRENCH MERINOES, 50 cents a yard; reduced from $1.
FRENCH POPLINS, from New York auction, $1.25; regular price $2.
SHAWLS.
100 BROCHE SHAWLS (from auction), less than cost prices.
100 PRINTED SHAWLS, from $1 to upward.
MOURNING GOODS.
Silks, French serges, 37½ cents a yard.
Black and white checks, 25 cents a yard.
Black Cashmeres, 25 cents a yard.
Black Alpacas, 25 cents a yard.
Black Empress Cloths, 37½ cents a yard.
Black Crapes, 25 cents a yard.
Mourning Veils, 50 cents each.
DOMESTIC GOODS.
150 WHITE BLANKETS, $2 50 A PAIR.
150 GREY BLANKETS, $2 50 A PAIR.
Best Mission BLANKETS, $3 a pair.
Best Marysville BLANKETS, $3 50 a pair.
Best Horse BLANKETS, assorted sizes, $2 50 a pair.
50 Army and California Blankets.
WHITE FLANNELS, 50 cents per yard.
MARSEILLES QUILTS, $1 25 upward.
500 Heavy English COUNTERPANES (colored), $1 25 each.
Heavy Scotch TABLE LINEN, 37½ cents a yard.
Hand-loom TABLE LINEN, 50 cents a yard.
All Linen TOWELS, $1 a dozen.
All Linen NAPKINS, $1 a dozen.
Damask white SHEETINGS, 25 cents a yard.
MUSLINS sold at actual cost.
Good Heavy Cotton FLANNEL, 18 cents a yard.
All-Wool Scotch FLANNELS, 25 cents a yard.
All-Wool White FLANNEL, 25 cents a yard.
Ladies' English Merino VESTS, 75 cents each.
Men's Merino VESTS, 50 cents each.
500 pairs C. P. CORSETS, 50 cents each.
Ladies' Hemmed and Stitched HANDKERCHIEFS, 12½ cents each.
Gents' Hemmed HANDKERCHIEFS, 12½ cents each.
500 dozen French KID GLOVES, just received, from 75 cents a pair.
Ladies' English Iron Frame HOSIERY, 12½ cents a pair.
Ladies' English Iron Frame HOSIERY, 18¾ cents a pair.
Ladies and Misses' Woolen HOSIERY, just received.
NOTTINGHAM LACE, new pattern, from 25 cents a yard.
Heavy Scotch CRASH, 12 yards for $1.
INITIAL HANDKERCHIEFS.
LACES AND FANCY GOODS
In great variety
A call respectfully solicited at
J. J. O'BRIEN'S,
606 MARKET STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY SAN FRANCISCO

DRY GOODS, ETC.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF
DRY GOODS!
Complete in Every Department,
We are now prepared to supply our customers with
The Best and Cheapest Goods
in the City. Among which are—
Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Cretons,
Cashmeres,
Merinos,
Sorges, Reps, Etc.
A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF
SHAWLS.
RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.
IRISH TATTING sold to the trade at a fifth and discount.
Thankful for Friends and the public for the liberal patronize heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
706 MARKET STREET,
OPPOSITE THIRD SAN FRANCISCO.
FALL IPORTATION!
Woolen Hosiery,
NEW DESIGNS.
GENT'S FURNSHING GOODS,
LATEST STYLES.
RIBBONS and MILLINERY GOODS.
LACES
AND EMBROIDERIES.
LINEN HANDERCHIEFS
AND WHITE GOODS.
FOR SALE BY TOBIN DAVISSN & CO.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIPIFAX
It is with confidence that the present proprietors of the famous IONIC PIPIFAX, now offered to the public, feeling assured that it is an article of extraordinary merit, and only needs to be tested to be appreciated. It physicians and Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is decidedly used in hospitals of Germany, and well known throughout Europe.
It has received the following TESTIMONIALS from PROMINENT PHYSICIANS of SAN FRANCISCO:
This is to certify that the formula used in the manufacture of PIPIFAX has been submitted to me, and I cheerfully state that it contains the same medicinal properties as that used during a illness which will no doubt prove a healthful Tonic and PURIFYING AGENT.
O. HOLLAND, M. D.
Member of the Board of Health of the City and County of San Francisco.
DEAR SIR:—I have examined the sample of PIPIFAX presented, and find it to correspond in every respect with the formula
H. H. TOLAND, M. D.
Of Toland's Medical College, San Francisco.
THE CRADLE HYMN.
HUSH, MY BABE, LIE STILL AND SLUMBER
HOLY ANGELS GUARD THY BED
HEAVENLY BLESSINGS WITHOUT NUMBER
GENTLY FALL ON THEE INFANT HEAD
At my knee before thee,
Shall I kneel before thee,
Gently pressing prayer,
Thou shalt hear,
Mother's fondest prayer,
Thou shalt hear,
And before thy throne of splendor
Constant watch and ward keep,
Thy dear angels will defend me,
Lest I fall into sleep.
Thus I'll say my prayer,
Thus I'll say my prayer,
And before my throne of splendor
Constant watch and ward keep,
Thy dear angels will defend me,
Lest I fall into sleep.
Hush my love; for here no danger
Can disturb thy slumbers light,
O'er the cradle and wretched manger
Holy angels watch and keep.
Forget thou those sounds that wound
Till with harmony they greet thee
Thy lullabies by man that greet thee
King, that God is mortal gone.
Thus to them on high He gives
His proclamation at midnight birth,
Glory be to God in heaven,
And to good men peace on earth."
Forget thou the arms that press thee?
They are but thy mother, dear;
The lips that now caress thee,
And her voice that lulls thee near.
At thy cradle, at thy head,
And my arms the softest cradle
Where to lay thy weary head;
For a fallen man in prayer
To accept that in Christ,
And thy tears now softly fall me
That my mother shed for me.
Heavenly babe, now I adore thee,
Now to prayer I softly bend,
Shall I humbly kneel before thee,
If I make you three in my child.
Catholic Magazine.
THE UNDELIVERED LECTURE.
We give below the account of the scene attending the opening appointed for the delivery of Father DUDGEON'S lecture on what the Council of the Vatican, as it appeared in the columns of the Chronicle of October 27th. It is written in a racy style, and the readers cannot fail to appreciate and enjoy. The lack of sympathy with Rev. JOHN HEMPHILL (who seems to be the only guilty party) in the matter of Father DUDGEON'S non-delivery of the lecture, is remarkable. He would depend upon the young priest's generosity for any recompense for this disinterested counsel; and if the committee of arrangements were not liberal enough to be the easiest thing in the world to spread the report, that he had been kidnapped by the Jesuits!
For the truth of this story we cannot of course vouch, but we have reason to believe that Mr. MACKERETT knew of Father DUDGEON'S visits to The Monitor office. He was a bigoted gentleman of the most reformed kind, and seldom allowed an opportunity to pass of denouncing Romanism and Romanists. He had been a leading member of the Committee of Arrangements, and was probably responsible for the selection of the lecture. Under the circumstances, it is not unlikely that he would have been glad to see the lecture fall flat, and would have done his best to bring about that result. Whether he did so or not, it is certain that the lecture was not delivered, and that Father DUDGEON was extremely anxious to relieve himself from the more than unpleasant predicament in which his own foolhardiness had placed him, and expressed unfeigned sorrow for the scandal which his conduct had given. All he wanted was to leave the city, and to place himself in communion with friends through whose kind offices he hoped to get a chance of retrieving his position in the Church. Any reparation that might be demanded of him by his ecclesiastical superiors, here or elsewhere, he, according to his own reiterated statements, was quite willing to give. He avowed that his behavior had been such as merited the severest censure and condemnation. With the clergy of this diocese he never had the least intercourse or communication, directly or indirectly, since the public announcement of his intention to abandon Catholicity. So they could not have exerted any influence over his actions or brought about his change of mind. In short, his refusal to apostatize and his "withdrawal from the lecture business" were both the work of his own free will guided by his conscience.
We may state that Father DUDGAN was not highly impressed with the sense of honor prevailing among some of the Presbyterian celebrities with whom he came into contact. They were, he asserted, untrue to themselves. In illustration of this fact, he told Mr. O'SULLIVAN the following circumstances. When the letter for him, from Lonisiana, was advertised in the MONITOR, his new-found patrons believed that the announcement was only a device to lure him to this office for the purpose of buying him off. Mr. Geo. B. MACKNETT, at whose residence he was stopping, was of this opinion and urged Father DUDGAN to go for the letter and see what was meant. His encouraged him by declaring that a good thing might be made out of abandoning the lecture. He had himself, he said, at one time been a Catholic, but had forged Protestant as a speculation. The bad succeeded so poorly with him that there were times when he really believed he would have done better remaining a Catholic." Mr. MACKNETT hinted that a very large sum might be expected from the Catholic clergy if Father DUDGAN "went back." In the hope of securing this "sweet back" he would depend upon the young priest's generosity for any recompensation for this disinterested counsel; and if the committee of arrangements were not liberal enough to be the easiest thing in the world to spread the report, that he had been kidnapped by the Jesuits!
For the truth of this story we cannot of course vouch, but we have reason to believe that Mr. MACKNETT knew of Father DUDGAN'S visits to The Monitor office. He was a bigoted gentleman of the most reformed kind, and seldom allowed an opportunity to pass of denouncing Romanism and Romanists. He had been a leading member of the Committee of Arrangements, and was probably responsible for the selection of the lecture. Under the circumstances, it is not unlikely that he would have been glad to see the lecture fall flat, and would have done his best to bring about that result. Whether he did so or not, it is certain that the lecture was not delivered, and that Father DUDGAN was extremely anxious to relieve himself from the more than unpleasant predicament in which his own foolhardiness had placed him, and expressed unfeigned sorrow for the scandal which his conduct had given. All he wanted was to leave the city, and to place himself in communion with friends through whose kind offices he hoped to get a chance
THE FIRST MEDAL
VIENNA EXPOSITION
GIVEN THE HIGHEST RECOGNIZE
AND
MASON & HAMLIN
Cabinet Organs
BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE
Special Jury, International Jury, and
Two Sub-Juries,
Including the most Eminent Artists and Experts from different countries, AND
FROM ALL COUNTRIES HAS BEEN AWARDED THE SHAWLS.

THE MONITOR:
A Catholic and Catholic Journal
Published in California.
JOHN V. BARRY, - - - - Publishers.
JOHN V. BARRY.....EDITOR.
RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
JAMES LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.
OFFICE—No. 9 JAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny and Branch No. 7, up-stairs.
All communications should be addressed to the Publishers.
Terms (in Advance):
One Year.....$ 4 00
Six Months.....2 00
Three Months.....1 00
Single Copies.....10
Specimen Copies sent free on application.
Rates of Advertising:
One square, 4 months.....$10 00
" 8 months.....12 00
" 12 months.....18 00
Each additional square, per month.....2 00
Business Cards, per year.....10 00
Liberal Deductions to Clubs.
Advertisements to be strictly adhered to.
Job Printing executed Neatly and Cheaply.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1873. NO. 9.

DUGGAN'S LECTURE.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

On a hot and dusty day in September, when shade seemed more precious even than food, two wayfarers stood before the door of a small wood. One of them bore the full habit of the order of charity; the other was simply arrayed in sober black, with the exception of a white band on her arm, bearing the device of the Red Cross. The contrast of the nun was striking. Without being absolutely beautiful, it had that clearness of tint and that serenity of expression which no condition of life seems to lower, and which the nearest approach to perpetual youth that the world knows. Her companion we need not describe; it was Annette Beaune.
The wood by the side of which they were standing, but was itself of considerable dimensions, and partly surrounded the village of Brevans in the valley of the Marne. It was some nine miles from Paris, but from a neighboring height, that of Mont Meli, the dome of the Invalides, the towers of Notre Dame, and other elevated points of the great city were visible.
"Are you impatient to see Paris?" asked the sister; "young people like you are always anxious to behold the world in its commands."
"I will endeavor to act up to what you tell me," was Annette's meek response.
"But come, our voiture—if I may so call it—ought be round by this, and there is a good distance yet from the city."
As she spoke they moved towards the edge of the wood, and passing through the trees a poor conveyance drawn by a miserable-looking, lame animal. The man in charge was a peasant clad in the usual blouse and gaiters, and armed with a cartwhip. In the rear of the vehicle, as soon as the women appeared, and assisted them into the vehicle.
"I do not know how to thank you, monsieur, for your kindness in bringing me so far. I think I will reward you charity."
"Madame, I cannot do much for my poor country, and it is a little thing to bring a few leagues on their way the wives of men who have risked our brave fellows when wounded."
"Ah!" exclaimed Annette, who could hardly suppress a little shriek, as the man, who had been speaking in a loud report, a crashing in the dull earth. "What is that?"
"What is that!" repeated the peasant, while the man smiled.
"Yes, do tell me."
"What is that, you want to know. Well in my opinion," said he slowly, "

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Catholic population of the diocese of Richmond, Va., is 15,000

The Sisters of Mercy whose Mother house is at Manchester, N. H., have established at Portland, Maine.

A Roman paper says that Prince Torlonio has offered the expelled Jesuits his great farm house at Castelgandolfo.

The Germans of Dubuque have one of the finest churches in the West, and are now building a school house at a cost of $15,000.

A Catholic Order of Odd Fellows is established in England, and consists at present of nine lodges. It takes no oath in the dark.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Mirror is very severe, and justly so, on the illustrations in the Catholic Family Almanac for 1874.

The Sydney Freeman's Journal says that the progress of the Catholic Church in the colony during the the past ten years has been truly wonderful.

Bishop Wadham of Ogdensburg, New York, has administered Confirmation to five hundred persons in St. Andrew's Church, City Hall Place, in that city.

The Rev. Felix Mestinn, pastor of St. Patrick's church at Albany, N. Y., died at his residence in that city recently, in the fortieth year of his age.

Three Sisters of Charity from the House of Providence, Montreal, Canada, have arrived at Portland on their way to Vancouver, Washington Territory.

Bishop Heamessy, of Ireland, has forbidden dancing at the close of fairs and festivals. This puts an end to dances and so-called called parties at fairs in the dioceses of Iowa.

A lack of cotton, donated by Reed Taylor to the Sisters of St. Dominic at Memphis, was sold at auction on the 16th November, and brought $1,500.

At Berwick, Ohio, a fine school-house was lately blessed and the pleasant news was given by the pastor that nearly every child within a distance of four miles attended school.

Bishop Gross of Savannah, Ga., did not go to Florida for the benefit of his health, as reported last week. He came North, and is sojourning in his native city of Baltimore.

The Cathedral of Boston will be consecrated November 7th. It is proposed to invite every bishop in the country and from the British provinces, and every priest in New England, with many outside of it.

A beautiful marble bust of Father Tom Burke has been completed by Foley, the Irish sculptor, and now awaits transference from his studio to its destined place in the Reform Club.

There are eighty-eight societies of the Irish Catholic Temperance and Benevolent Union in Pennsylvania. In Virginia the President of the Union is said by the Richmond papers to be the most eloquent Democratic speaker in the State.

The Catholic Union of St. Paul, Min., has taken measures and adopted a plan for a Catholic Proctotory and Industrial School for boys. They say it is a fixed fact that it will be completed and the Christian Brothers in charge of it within a year.

Father Dausch of Baltimore, Md., maintains that the brethren of the priesthood are inclined to criticise too severely the work of Catholic journalists, and that they should first establish a right to criticise by aiding with their voices, their purses and their pens.

There are now in Germany nine hundred Catholic parishes in Germany without parish priests, and of these being kept destitute of their legitimate pastors through the persecutions of Bismarck. This causes many Protestant ministers to rejoice. They pray for York, Jew and heathen to a so-called papist.

The mother of the great historian Swainham, when on her death-bed, implored her son to tell her whether the Irish were in the Catholic Church or in Protestantism, and he replied, «Mother, Protestantism is quite conceivable in reason, but the Catholic Church is the safest to die in."

When Father Keckel took charge of the parish of Canajoharie, in the diocese of Albany, there were but fifteen Catholic families in the whole county, now there are fifty or more, with a membership of 2,000. They have a flourishing convent school, and are preparing to build a new church.

There are five Catholic missions now in progress in different churches in the city of New York, of which the Church of Saint Paul, at St. Stephen's, is one; they are expected to inculcate the doctrine of the Catholic and the law of the Church in regard to the holding of Catholic children.

The Rev. P. Du Roe, direct from Antwerp, Belgium, has arrived at Portland, on a tour of labor on the mission of that Archdiocese. Father Orth, hitherto attached to the original Portland, has been assigned to the Umatilla Reservation. His departure is much regretted by the vicinity Catholics.

The Diocesan Seminary of Birmingham, England, was formally opened by the Bishop and the Clergy of Clifton, some months ago, at Wonersh, in Warwickshire. The session was delivered by Very Rev. Dr. Newman. The building is erected on forty-two acres of land which have been secured for the purpose, and which will be suitably planted and ornamented.

The Mayors and Deputy Mayors of the Canton of Geneva, Switzerland, have protested formally against the rigor of the new law which presumes to impose on them a function which is essentially Anti-ecclesiastical and subversive of every Catholic principle, and whose avowed object is to subject the Church to the omnipotence of the Government.

Bishop Rosecrans administered confirmation at Circleville, Ohio, to sixty persons, among whom were four converts. Among the priests present was Very Rev. Father Young, O.S.D., the oldest priest in the United States. He is the nephew of Bishop Fenwick, first bishop of Cincinnati, Ohio, and was ordained priest in 1817.

Bishop Cummins, the Episcopal Bishop of Kentucky, has withdrawn from the organization and intends leading a schism by organizing and ordaining a bishop who, after consulting with Presbyterian, will be the Episcopalian Bishop of New York, sends his letters of greeting to Reunion, the Old Catholic Bishop of Germany. All this is but bungry repeating itself among the heretics.

Idid, at the Mercy Hospital of this city, Rev. John M. Brazil, pastor of the Church of Moonsgabria city. He was the nephew of Very Rev. John F. Brazil, Vicar-General of Iowa, and was ordained for that diocese, but transferred for the benefit of his health. He was a native of the county Clare, Ireland.

Bishop Borgess, of Detroit, Michigan, assisted by Bishop Davenger, of Fort Wayne, Ind., Bishop Gilmore, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Bishop Walsh, of London, Ont., consecrated a magnificent Gothic church for the Germans of Detroit on the 16th November. The church is 200 feet long, 80 feet wide and 80 feet high. This makes the tenth church in Detroit.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The value of freight shipped from this city to the Eastern States during the month of November was $1,000,000.

The steamer Great Republic, which sailed for China last Sunday, took 75 tons in gold and silver.

Mayor Alvord, on retiring from office, says he has paid out of the city fund $1,000 in excess of his salary.

Twenty nine genuine were examined for pilotage during the month of November and sixteen of them were commissioned by the Board of Examiners.

The Independent Democrat, popularly known as the organ of the Democratic Ring, has ceased to exist, and the Ring is now without a newspaper organ. Such is life.

The fifteen cathedrals of this city are moving for the erection of bells to proclaim the coming of Christmas.

Tomatoes, green peas, cauliflower and other varieties of fresh vegetables are brought into this city daily. They are grown in the open air, and are as fine and tender as those of the summer season.

The sales of real estate in this city during the month of November were very large. Many of the purchases have been made for the purpose of speculation, and the purchasers have bought in the expectation of realizing a handsome profit.

The fine rain of Wednesday was acceptable to a great many people. It settled the dust and cleared the air, and a hundred times as much of it would have been welcomed. Many wells are dry, and the water supply is very scanty.

During November three were delivered by the postal carriers in the city limits and suburbs. Of these one was to a person in Oakland, one to a person in Alameda, and the third to a person in San Francisco. The last mentioned was the largest.

James Denman, the new superintendent of Public Schools, knows from experience that he has not been a friend of the public schools. His wife was the proprietress of a private academy. This will save the department $1,000 a year. Mr. Denman will appoint Mrs. Denman to the position of teacher in the Girls' Grammar School.

The Board of Fire Commissioners refuse to surrender to the new Board, and their headquarters remain in the building on Sansome street, the same there are formally set. It is said that the Board's staff of officers will be ready to-day for retaining possession of the records, keys and other departmental property.

The members of the Police force presented their resignations to the Commissioners to-day, which were accepted, and their places filled by the appointment of their respective successors. Judge Lansdale, to whom he paid the highest compliment by appointing him Chief of Police, is the only one of the old force who has been retained in the city service.

The supervising architect of the Treasury Department, having visited and inspected the various Federal buildings now under construction on the Pacific Coast, is now engaged in making a careful estimate of the amount of money necessary to complete the same. The appropriations for the Federal buildings in this city, the upper floors of the new Post-office and the Appraiser's Store, will be required for the good of the public they will be completed at the earliest day.

All preliminary arrangements are made for a grand vocal concert, to be given at Platt's Hall on the night of the 9th. Professor Lunt and Mme. Montague, assisted by the best local talent, will render a very choice selection of vocal and instrumental music. The proceeds are for the benefit of the Ladies' Protection and Relief Society, which is doing a noble work in behalf of the poor and needy. Tickets can be had at the door, or at the office of the Society, on Bush street, between Dupont and Kearny.

Mr. Jonathan Fox, M.P., of Ireland, has received from Archbishop Manning an invitation sent him to join the negotiations for the forthcoming Conference on Education. Mr. Fox addressed the House of Commons, as at present constituted, is physically unable to give proper consideration to Irish subjects, but the various questions are deferred from year to year, and that the legislation which at length takes place is defective, illiberal, slavish, and was generally to be amended, but is unable to assent to the principle on which the Home Rule movement is based.

The Catholic Union inauguration and festival at Boston was attended by six bishops, one hundred priests and an immense assembly of the laity. A congratulatory letter was read from the Holy Father, and stirring speeches were delivered especially that by the Bishop of Boston, was the Rev. Charles F. Stone, of the order of St. Paul the Apostle, the subject was, "The duty of American Catholics."

A Sound of Health.

An edition of between nine and ten millions of copies of a very useful work is now ready for distribution, and can be had free of the leading druggists and country storekeepers throughout the United States, the British Colonies, Spanish America and Europe. The work referred to is Hostetter's Almanac for 1874. The medicinal portion of it treats of the various ailments to which the human system is subject, and sets forth the genuine properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—the purest and best elixir at present known—as a specific for all forms of disease arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs, and as a remedy for fever and ague, kidney complaints, rheumatism, &c. Its sale in the past has reached a larger number of families and individuals than any other medicine that has ever been made from the press. No man or woman who has a due regard for the preservation of health and the prolongation of vigor, should fail to read the pamphlet which is published in connection with the several publications of the proprietors. The miscellaneous matter includes the calendar department, interesting and comprehensive astronomical calculations, explanations, comparisons, adapted to the use of all classes of persons, and a large variety of other matter, including facetiæ, anecdotes, &c., and in fact in its literary, typographical and pictorial features there is not a publication of the day which can surpass it. The medical department is devoted exclusively to the consideration of those ailments for which medical treatise intended for popular use is required. In the general matter, however, there is a fund of information for the million. All of these, especially the latter, are treated in a plain, unvarnished manner, and in such a way as to command the confidence of every reader. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., will send a copy, postage prepaid, free of charge, by mail to any person who may forward a request for the same.

Subscriptions Received.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mayfield—P. Dowd | $1 00 |
| " Hennessy | 1 00 |
| " Thomas McHugh | 1 00 |
| Santa Clara—J. Cleland | 1 00 |
| " M. Dawson | 1 00 |
| " E. C. Flynn | 1 00 |
| " Thomas Neilly | 1 00 |
| " P. Cummins | 1 00 |
| " H. W. Fleming | 1 00 |
| " John Hanchett | 1 00 |
| " John H. Lewis | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Ellen Lewis | 1 00 |
| San Jose—Mrs. Bridget Kelly | 1 00 |
| " Patrick Riley | 1 00 |
| " John O. Briscoe | 1 00 |
| " John McGrath | 1 00 |
| " E. McLaughlin | 1 00 |
| " John C. Bland | 1 00 |
| " Martin Corcoran | 1 00 |
| " Mrs. Mary Corcoran | 1 00 |
| " William Lewis | 1 00 |
| Milpitas—John Hennessy | 1 00 |
| Gilroy—Thomas Tobin | 1 00 |
| Redwood City—Mrs. Mary Tobin | 1 00 |
| " Thomas Tobin, jr | 1 00 |
| Valley Ford—William Walsh | 1 00 |
| Lakeville—William Walsh | 1 00 |
| Petaluma—H. Pauler | 1 00 |

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO,
Thursday, December 4, 1873.

The demand for local consumption has continued light with few exceptions, and prices generally have ruled steady. We quote Extra at $5 [illegible] and superfine at [illegible] per barrel.

WHEAT.—The market has ruled quiet and at extreme rates since our last report. At the close the market is quotable at $1 [illegible] to 1 37½.

BARLEY.—The demand has been very small at former rates. We quote the range of [illegible] to 1 [illegible].

OATS.—There has been a fair demand for seed oats during the past week. Quotable at [illegible] to [illegible] per ctl.

CORN.—Quotable at [illegible] per ctl.

RYE.—No transactions reported during the past week. We quote a good demand quotable at the range of [illegible] per ctl.

BUCKWHEAT.—Quotable at [illegible] per ctl.

BEANS.—The trade are in fair demand at unchanged prices. We quote Bayos at 3 [illegible] to 3 50; Pinks at [illegible] to [illegible]; Whites at [illegible] to [illegible]; Reds at [illegible] to [illegible]; Lima at [illegible] to [illegible]; Pea at [illegible] to [illegible]; Blacks at [illegible] to [illegible] per ctl.

POTATOES.—We quote at $1 per ctl. from sort.

ONIONS.—We quote at 1 50 to 2 per ctl. from sort.

BUTTER.—We quote fair to good at [illegible] to [illegible] per lb.

CHEESE.—We quote fair to good at [illegible] to [illegible] per lb.

EGGS.—We quote fair to good at [illegible] to [illegible] per dozen.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Butter—Fresh roll, [illegible] to [illegible]; Pickled roll, [illegible] to [illegible]; Firkin, [illegible] to [illegible]; Pickled firkin, [illegible] to [illegible]; Cheese—California, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eggs, [illegible] to [illegible] per dozen.

CURED MEATS.

Hams—In fair demand at [illegible] to [illegible] per lb. Eastern do [illegible].

Bacon—In fair demand at [illegible] to [illegible] per lb. Eastern sugar-cured Breakfast Bacon, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern sugar-cured Shoulders, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Sides, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Dry Sides, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Smoked Sides, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Clear Sides, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Backs, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Mess Pork, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Prime Pork, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Mess Beef, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Prime Beef, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Tongues, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Pigs' Feet, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Lard, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Tierces, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Kegs, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Pails, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Tubs, [illegible] to [illegible]; Eastern Compound, [illegible] to [illegible].

FRESH MEATS.

Beef—In fair demand at [illegible] to [illegible] per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Poultry—Fair supply and demand. Chickens, [illegible] to [illegible]; Young Roosters, [illegible] to [illegible]; Old Roosters, [illegible] to [illegible]; Ducks, [illegible] to [illegible]; Geese, [illegible] to [illegible]; Turkeys, [illegible] to [illegible]; Gobblers, [illegible] to [illegible]; Pigeons, [illegible] to [illegible]; Rabbits, [illegible] to [illegible]; Hares, [illegible] to [illegible]; Quail, [illegible] to [illegible]; Venison, [illegible] to [illegible]; Wild Geese, [illegible] to [illegible]; Wild Ducks, [illegible] to [illegible]; Snipe, [illegible] to [illegible]; Plover, [illegible] to [illegible]; Teal, [illegible] to [illegible]; Canvas Back, [illegible] to [illegible]; Sprig Tail, [illegible] to [illegible]; Widgeon, [illegible] to [illegible]; Mallard, [illegible] to [illegible]; Black Duck, [illegible] to [illegible]; Brant, [illegible] to [illegible]; Gray Duck, [illegible] to [illegible]; Spoonbill, [illegible] to [illegible]; Curlew, [illegible] to [illegible]; Pelican, [illegible] to [illegible].

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

HENS—Large, [illegible] each.

CHICKENS—Large, [illegible] each.

DUCKS—Tame, [illegible] each; Mallard, [illegible] each; Canvas Back, [illegible] each.

HARE—[illegible] each.

RABBITS—Tame, [illegible] each; Wild, [illegible] each.

QUAIL—[illegible] per dozen.

PIGEONS—[illegible] each.

TURKEYS—[illegible] each.

GEESE—[illegible] each.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

$50,000 WORTH

OF

BLACK SILKS

Bought for Cash

IN NEW YORK

DURING THE LATE FAILURES,

JUST RECEIVED

AND

NOW OFFERED FOR SALE AT

THE WHITE HOUSE!

3,000 yards at $1 25 per yard;
Worth $2 00 per yard;
1,000 yards at $1 00 per yard;
Usual price $1 50;
3,000 yards at $1 75 per yard;
Regular price, $2 00;
5,000 yards at $2 per yard;
Good value at $2 50;
3,000 yards at $2 25 per yard;
Cost to Import, $3.

THE ABOVE GOODS

ARE WITHOUT EXCEPTION,

The Cheapest Lot

OF

BLACK SILKS

EVER OFFERED

IN

San Francisco.

J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,

N. W. Cor. Kearny and Post Sts.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY,
O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

IMPORTERS AND JOBBERS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

112 and 116 Third Street,

Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

[illegible] & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

French, English and American

FANCY AND STAPLE

DRY GOODS.

New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.

NO. 4 THIRD STREET,

Near Market Street.....SAN FRANCISCO

A NOBLE RECORD.

THE GREATEST

TRIUMPHS OF THE AGE

HAVE BEEN ACHIEVED BY THE PIANOS

OF

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.,

BOSTON

Over Twenty Thousand of which are now in use, and daily receiving the unqualified indorsement

OF

THE LEADING PIANISTS IN THE WORLD.

EXQUISITE FINISH, BEAUTY OF DESIGN, SWEETNESS OF TONE, DELIGHTFUL TOUCH and WONDERFUL DURABILITY are among the features which cause all competent judges to proclaim the noble Instruments of

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.

Superior to all Others Manufactured either in America or Europe.

Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere.

W. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,

No. 13 Sansome Street,

NEAR SUTTER.....SAN FRANCISCO

DRY GOODS, ETC.

RESOLVED,

THAT

J. J. O'BRIEN,

606

Market Street,

CANNOT BE

UNDERSOLD.

BEAUTIFUL

NEW GOODS

ARE NOW OFFERED AT

606 MARKET STREET,

25 Per Cent. Less

Than Old Shop worn and Bankrupt Stocks are Selling for Elsewhere.

A Visit to the Store, an Inspection of the Stock, and a Fair Comparison of Prices, etc., will effectually convince any person that J. J. O'BRIEN'S is the Best Marche of San Francisco.

SHAWLS

SHAWLS, from auction, less than [illegible]

SHAWLS, from [illegible] to $1 50 apiece.

MOURNING GOODS.

DOMESTIC GOODS.

MASON & HAMLIN

Cabinet Organs

BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE

Special Jury, International Jury, and

Two Sub-Juries.

KOHLER, CHASE & CO., Agents,

631 and 633 Clay Street.

BACON & COMPANY'S

PIONEER

PRINTERS

PRINTING

Paper Ruling and Binding,

Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply, and Tastefully Executed.

Bacon & Company,

Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.

TOYS CHEAP!

F. Gibson,

446 Third street, between Brannan and Bryant.

BRASH STORE.

125 Second st., corner of Howard, SAN FRANCISCO.

SITUATION WANTED.—A YOUNG MAN, 21 years of age, from the old country, desires a situation in a wholesale office or store. Has had a fair education and can furnish the best of references. Address "SITUATION," Monitor office.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIPIFAX

is hereby evidence that the public's progressive [illegible] of the genuine DOCTOR PIPIFAX, [illegible] the public from [illegible] and [illegible] that is an author of extraordinary [illegible] every part will only [illegible] to be termed [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

all; it is only faith. I am not the least a heroine. I remember when I was a grown up girl I would not but faint at the sight of blood, and cry out with fear if I saw a rat."

"And you are so brave now," said Annette admiringly.

"Not a bit brave, only trustful. I put myself unreservedly into the hands of my Maker, to be disposed of as it shall please Him. You, child, will do the same, I have no doubt, and then fear will be cast from you."

As they spoke a loud artillery fire burst out, but no new shell came near them. And now the rattle of musketry came up the valley, and other sounds which indicated that the scene of strife was not far off. They stood uncertain what course they should take, when along the road they saw approaching a litter covered with white, and over it a small flag bearing on it a red cross.

"Ah," exclaimed the nun, "I now know well enough what we have to do. Thanks, monsieur," said she turning to the passers, "we shall not need your services longer. I fear our duty has begun already, for yonder evidently are wounded, and it is but too probable there may be many more. For your charitable aid to us count on a higher reward than any we can offer you, but be sure of our prayers."

"Sister," said the old man, "I will go readily with you to Paris."

"No, no. We shall probably be wanted here; if not we can make our own way on foot owing to your kindness."

"Well, then, madame, adieu. Adieu, petite."

As the old peasant departed, the ambulances they had seen down the road approached them slowly, but before it reached the spot where they were standing another was seen coming in the same direction and then another.

"Here is an opportunity sonnette than you expected to commence your work," said the nun quietly to Annette.

Ann the fell a complete sinking of the heart. But with an internal ejaculation, in the spirit the Sister of Charity had commended to her, she endeavored to brace up her nerves to the task which lay before her. The first ambulance was brought to a halt within a few yards of where they stood, and a conference seemed to be proceeding among the guides.

"We must be out of range here," said one, shouting the horse.

"Ah, I do not know," said another, "those infernal Prussians fire far."

The women heard the altercation, and Sister Agnes, coming forward, stated that a shot had already struck the wood which bordered the road. Presently a horseman rode up, who was seen to be a surgeon, and on the statement of Sister Agnes being conveyed to him, he directed the ambulances to be moved on higher. While they were talking Annette had glanced into the wagon, and the sight she there encountered shook, though but for a moment, the resolution she had formed to devote herself to the aid of the wounded. Already she had encountered and tended one victim of the war, but his condition had before been partially assuaged, and though pitiable was not terrible. Now she had to behold the laceration of the human frame in all its raw reality. Hasty bandages seemed only to render the blood that oozed through them more startlingly palpable; the torn stump appeared to her to stare through the rough linen; the cadaverous face preserved expression enough to be more terrible than death; there were groans, but neither so loud nor so numerous as she anticipated; but there was worse in the quiver of the whole body, when the slightest motion of the rough vehicle seemed literally to rack the wretch's every nerve. This manifestation, that patience could not prevent nor fortitude conceal, sent an answering vibration through Annette's own frame. As she looked into the wagon some heavy eyes, whitening as if in the agony of dissolution, were turned slowly towards her. It was with absolute pleasure she heard the murmur "water!" from several lips. It gave her at once an occupation. A rough tin vessel hung beside the cart. She snatched it down and hastily plunged into the wood, where she remembered the first sight of a pure little stream at which half an hour before she and her companion had quenched their thirst.

"Who is that?" questioned the doctor.

"An hospital nurse whom I am taking with me to Paris."

"She is very young."

"Yes, but she is spirited and intelligent, and will become a very useful nurse."

"Ha! there is something which confirms your statement about this spot being within range."

A shell burst into the wood not very far from where they were speaking. A tree splinter was flung upon the doctor's coat. He brushed it coolly off with his handkerchief. It struck a branch that overhung the little spring towards which Annette's steps were bent, but it did not check her speed for a moment, and she went on and filled the vessel as if nothing had occurred.

"You are right," said the doctor, "that girl will do."

The ambulance moved slowly up the hill, but Annette soon overtook it. As she went with the vessel in her hand towards the wagon the doctor said with a smile:

"Petite, you are acting without orders."

Annette blushed and looked dismayed.

"Never mind, child, you cannot do much harm as long as you confine yourself to a drink of water. But remember the first business of a nurse is to carry out the views of the doctor."

"I shall remember, monsieur." And Annette, availing herself of the permission accorded, ran hastily with her can. The sufferers drank greedily; all but one, who lay to the corner of the ambulance, without motion, and only gave a sign of life now and then by a feeble moan. While thus engaged Annette all but forgot her previous shrinking from the terrors by which she was placed.

"I perceive," said Sister Agnes, when the task was accomplished and they were walking alongside the ambulance, "that you have already engaged in your duty."

"It is so little I could do," sighed Annette.

"You appear to have got over your fear of the wounded very quickly," remarked the nun.

"I felt a dreadful disposition at first to run away, but, when I came back with the water I almost forgot my terror."

"My child, you have found the exact way to get rid of the sense of repugnance that one feels at the sight of misery. Begin to help and your loathing soon vanishes. Did you give water to all?"

"There is one man who seems quite insensible, and did not lift his head while I was giving it around."

"Ah," said the doctor, who rode by their side, "that fellow in the corner has had a severe internal hurt. The wheel of an artillery wagon passed over him. It is a situation he wants. Here," and he called to one of the guides, "some brandy."

The guide produced a flask from which the doctor poured a quantity into a glass.

"Here," he said to Annette, "complete your round of the patients by administering this. And keep the flask by you."

Annette went at once as directed. She had a difficulty in performing her task as the man lay on his side, and with his face inclined downwards. In the attitude in which he was it was impossible to get him to drink, so she dipped her finger in the glass, and applied a few or three times to his lips. On the third application the stimulant had the effect of causing a slight movement, and he turned so far that she was able to put the vessel to his mouth. Carefully putting it between his lips, the effects soon became visible in the increasing sensibility of the patient. At last he slowly opened his eyes and stared heavily at her. Annette had up to this been so absorbed in the excitement of her new duty and the gravity of her task that she had never dreamed of considering the individuality of the patient. But now, as his dark eyes glared on her from the corner of the ambulance, she recognized him and trembled.

It was Marc Rapp.

CHAPTER XXXV.

PASSING UNCONSCIOUS.

The shock Annette received at the sight of a man who had caused so much pain and unhappiness to herself, and so much misery to one she loved, was very severe. She recoiled from his sight as if she had suddenly encountered a poisonous reptile. Yet she had no reason to fear. This man lay powerless—indebted to her for such slight restoration of his strength as enabled him even to open his eyes. Did he recognize her? was the first question that she tremblingly asked herself. She could not tell. The dark eyes had once more closed, the lids falling heavily upon them, and the man almost as speechless as the unconscious state. While Annette was engaged in her mission she had not been unobserved. The Sister of Charity, who had taken a nurse's place in her youth and her high-hearted resignation, was curious to note how she demeaned herself in her first encounter with those whose care she proposed to undertake. Pleased with the self-forgetfulness Annette had shown, she watched her attendance on the wounded man, and saw the start and the look of horror with which she first beheld him with loathing. She found herself face to face with realities of which she had never dreamed, when the first enticed the idea of undertaking the duties of a nurse. But the very shrinking together of the horror helped in some degree to deaden their effect. She performed the task assigned her in a state of extraordinary analogous to that which carries a soldier bravely through a battle. When that period had passed she had achieved the most important stage of her apprenticeship.

But now a new change of position was necessitated. It was no longer ambulances only that came past, but troops, and the engines of war were heard sounding in front. First came dropping irregularly men in twos and threes, then, in larger bodies, and finally columns of companies. Behind them were artillery, and lastly cavalry, scattered squadrons, and then a number of irregular skirmishers, who aided to cover the retreat, a task of little difficulty, as there was no ardor of pursuit. Though the German force was strong enough to have swallowed up the feeble French army—or rather remnant of a corps—that had made the attack, it was not part of the Prussian military policy to press for victory to the city. They were merely on the look out for ground for investment, and they had found it.

"They are not coming farther, I think," said Mme Sonnette to her companion.

"No, apparently they do not wish to press on too far."

"Then I am in a murder that we haven't, just for once, something like a fair match with them!"

"It is a pity, but we are not ourselves free from blame."

"I suppose that's not Count Bismarck over there on the yellow horse?"

"Bismarck! Is the count here? Is he not? But I'm sorry that's not the Count."

"Why so?"

"Because I'm going to get rid of him, and a blessed riddance the world will have."

"It is more than thirteen hundred metres."

"Well, sure if I miss him it's only a bullet lost." "Ha! the jockey it's the yellow horse I've hit. Try you."

"Give it to him, Mike, to have seven hit the horse at the distance. I shall try as you wish it, but I do not suppose, Parbleu!—hit the horse again."

"Well you see that animal has his horse back made up for him without a vet. But I'd rather hit the rider than the innocent beast. My only hope is that with his rearing he may upset the rider, and then I can back broken may be Count Bismarck's."

"Peh, Jack, you are a savage. I think more like Bismarck who set the world by the ears up where they may meet stray bullets. No, my plan is to say and look like a gent to him and me and those wretched German soldiers over there."

"Pish—!" said Mike with a whistle, "are you coming out as a politician?"

"No," responded Michel abruptly, "my duty is to fight as a soldier, and not discuss State matters. Allons—there is the bugle sounding."

"Well, of course its our duty to retreat when the bugle sounds retreat, but, 'pon my word, with the delicate way you have of putting it you'd begin to have that tune—I beat the tattoo, No letter or sign of a letter from home, I suppose?"

"No," responded Michel gloomily. "It is time I should be off." He had quitted one of Annette's Mont does one think of us! Does she suppose one false or dead? I would rather she mourned me as a corpse than believe I could forget her, dear girl!"

"I never had the satisfaction of seeing Miss Annette, Michel, though I hope to try a real Irish jig at her wedding one of these days, but I am quite sure, from what you tell me, she is too honest-hearted herself to believe you false, and too brave to mope and moon, and fancy the worst."

"I am quite sure you are right; but I am myself so foolish that I am ever picturing new sorrows and new dangers for her."

"From that scoundrel Rapp, for instance?"

"Aye," said Michel with a stern expression.

"Do you know, Michel, I'd give a few monies' pay to be alone in a room with that fellow, and give a weapon in the hands of either of us."

"Jon!, for God's sake, Mike. My heart grows with hatred and thirst for vengeance when I think of him, and I am scarcely able to demean myself like a sober man."

"Indeed, then I will not mention his ugly name again. It was like my stupidity to be bringing him into the conversation. It is a deal better to be talking of that beautiful, brave girl who loves you so dearly, and who, trust me, Michel, will one day, when these cruel battles are at an end, be Madame Vine. But who are those women over there?"

Michel looked and saw the ambulances. They were about a furlong distant. Two female figures in black were seen flitting about, "just to litter in assiduous devotion to the wounded."

"Perhaps Sœurs de la Charité, no doubt," he answered. "They are straight into heaven, the wounded."

"Ah, the darling creatures," said Mike, "if they don't walk straight into heaven. But wonder how could they by any possibility ever be in the same place with that villain Rapp."

"Mike, ——"

"Tell you the shape! Ha, I see you have some sense, and don't imagine that one bandage is as good as another as some of the fools they send us here seem to think."

Following clear and explicit directions, Annette had the bandage ready when the doctor was prepared to use it.

"Now, you little goose, I attract the sun I gave you for sense. Do you know that a bandage is as important a part of a surgeon's art as a knife or the lancet? And now you think you could at your less easy make the case for what I must call this really artistic piece of work of mine?"

Never resting for a second while he spoke, he had the bandage in a few seconds wound around the head of the patient.

"Are you wise enough to have some brandy with you?"

Annette was in possession of the flask she had been entrusted with for Marc Rapp.

"Here is some."

"You improve on acquaintance. Now give that to the patient, and that we are done with him for the present. But observe, his case is a very critical one. Nerves aren't shattered as his have been without serious peril. Keep your eyes particularly on that patient. You will let him sink if you can. You ought have some enough to be able to employ a stimulant with moderation and judgment. I should particularly like to keep him alive, because I think, considering the circumstances, the base and the sort of assistance I have had—poor Annette wissed—it is as achievement to do the patient."

"I will watch him carefully, monsieur."

"And now, some, there is abundance of work for us here. Let us leave the wounded we have sutured this piece of ground."

For two hours the ambulances were occupied in the bidding of her rough but skilful guide. She was compelled to tasks that nearly to her of would have filled her with loathing. She found herself face to face with realities of which she had never dreamed, when the first entered the idea of undertaking the duties of a nurse. But in the very shrinking together the horror helped in some degree to deaden their effect. She performed the task assigned her in a state of extraordinary analogous to that which carries a soldier bravely through a battle. When that period had passed she had achieved the most important stage of her apprenticeship.

But now a new change of position was necessitated. It was no longer ambulances only that came past, but troops, and the engines of war were heard sounding in front. First came dropping irregularly men in twos and threes, then, in larger bodies, and finally columns of companies. Behind them were artillery, and lastly cavalry, scattered squadrons, and then a number of irregular skirmishers, who aided to cover the retreat, a task of little difficulty, as there was no ardor of pursuit. Though the German force was strong enough to have swallowed up the feeble French army—or rather remnant of a corps—that had made the attack, it was not part of the Prussian military policy to press for victory to the city. They were merely on the look out for ground for investment, and they had found it.

"They are not coming farther, I think," said Mme Sonnette to her companion.

"No, apparently they do not wish to press on too far."

"Then I am in a murder that we haven't, just for once, something like a fair match with them!"

"It is a pity, but we are not ourselves free from blame."

"I suppose that's not Count Bismarck over there on the yellow horse?"

"Bismarck! Is the count here? Is he not? But I'm sorry that's not the Count."

"Why so?"

"Because I'm going to get rid of him, and a blessed riddance the world will have."

"It is more than thirteen hundred metres."

"Well, sure if I miss him it's only a bullet lost." "Ha! the jockey it's the yellow horse I've hit. Try you."

"Give it to him, Mike, to have seven hit the horse at the distance. I shall try as you wish it, but I do not suppose, Parbleu!—hit the horse again."

"Well you see that animal has his horse back made up for him without a vet. But I'd rather hit the rider than the innocent beast. My only hope is that with his rearing he may upset the rider, and then I can back broken may be Count Bismarck's."

"Peh, Jack, you are a savage. I think more like Bismarck who set the world by the ears up where they may meet stray bullets. No, my plan is to say and look like a gent to him and me and those wretched German soldiers over there."

"Pish—!" said Mike with a whistle, "are you coming out as a politician?"

"No," responded Michel abruptly, "my duty is to fight as a soldier, and not discuss State matters. Allons—there is the bugle sounding."

"Well, of course its our duty to retreat when the bugle sounds retreat, but, 'pon my word, with the delicate way you have of putting it you'd begin to have that tune—I beat the tattoo, No letter or sign of a letter from home, I suppose?"

"No," responded Michel gloomily. "It is time I should be off." He had quitted one of Annette's Mont does one think of us! Does she suppose one false or dead? I would rather she mourned me as a corpse than believe I could forget her, dear girl!"

"I never had the satisfaction of seeing Miss Annette, Michel, though I hope to try a real Irish jig at her wedding one of these days, but I am quite sure, from what you tell me, she is too honest-hearted herself to believe you false, and too brave to mope and moon, and fancy the worst."

"I am quite sure you are right; but I am myself so foolish that I am ever picturing new sorrows and new dangers for her."

"From that scoundrel Rapp, for instance?"

"Aye," said Michel with a stern expression.

"Do you know, Michel, I'd give a few monies' pay to be alone in a room with that fellow, and give a weapon in the hands of either of us."

"Jon!, for God's sake, Mike. My heart grows with hatred and thirst for vengeance when I think of him, and I am scarcely able to demean myself like a sober man."

"Indeed, then I will not mention his ugly name again. It was like my stupidity to be bringing him into the conversation. It is a deal better to be talking of that beautiful, brave girl who loves you so dearly, and who, trust me, Michel, will one day, when these cruel battles are at an end, be Madame Vine. But who are those women over there?"

Michel looked and saw the ambulances. They were about a furlong distant. Two female figures in black were seen flitting about, "just to litter in assiduous devotion to the wounded."

"Perhaps Sœurs de la Charité, no doubt," he answered. "They are straight into heaven, the wounded."

"Ah, the darling creatures," said Mike, "if they don't walk straight into heaven. But wonder how could they by any possibility ever be in the same place with that villain Rapp."

"Mike, ——"

"Ah—I know. Excuse me, Michel," said Mike hastily; and then lit in the tone of apologetic humility in which he occasionally indulged, he observed, "Mr. Michael Mahony, you are are what I call a pretty fellow to be training in the same breath three two heavenly creatures over there and that double-dyed blackguard Rapp, as if anything could bring them together in the next world, or in this, for that matter."

And so Michael Mike, during their retreat towards Paris, passed the ambulances where Annette was resulting her first lesson as an attendant upon the wounded.

(To be Continued.)

WITHIN THE SOUL

THE MONITOR.

Oh! throng me thick to fearful crowds
Around my wayward soul to-day,
Or else, ye thoughts, be still as clouds
That motionless lie, fleecy, in the sky!
Still and up, with working laugh,
The wanton corpse of my dead past
Not weeping among holy flowers.
Oh! strive, ye hot fancies, to be cool—
Roll, tired busy pity! bending fast
Whilst your sleeping arise of flame;
The wounds ye gave her gaping wide,
And on a blackened soil only scarce,
Each fearful name, ye hear, set down.
Oh! be still, ye thoughts, be still!
What is a maddening sigh?
And for my soul, what is it? Fear not for it, my soul!
Tell from the thought, I hold with her I love it,
Unto the thought, I hold with her I fear it,
Cease trembling with the sense of dread.
And join in Penance's brilliant hope.

THE MONITOR.

No, once that sinful soul is lost past,
And that sad story of my sin,
Cause for doubt, and fear, and prayer
Bittersweetness's lone garden is,
Then, my soul, shall I be bound down
To agony, and—sorrowful
Remembrance? Oh! no, not that!
Because for those who spurned His rule,
Christ died upon the accursed tree,
Not that to meet it, fellow-ill,
Life is made sacred—Christ died—to
Upon that garden's balanced ground,
Dear God! with Thee I am not safe,
And let me hide my longest pain
In Thee.
From Penance's face, oh! let me turn,
To feel with Thee, to pray, to weep;
And—when I hear to Thy king-dominion,
Bend my head, and—I pray.
Philadelphia Catholic Herald.

THE HOME RULE CONFERENCE.

A RETROSPECT.

At 11 o'clock to-day the National Conference will have assembled in the Rotunda, and entered upon the solemn labor of considering and pronouncing the sense of government they deem essential to the salvation of the country. If ever men had a heavy responsibility to discharge, they are the members of the Conference. If ever men had a noble cause to maintain they have it. The fate of a nation is a topic sacred and awful, and in a reverent and conscious spirit should that topic be discussed. It ought to inspire the speakers of to-day to feel that they are re-enacting the national history in a sense whose eloquent air still breathes of the unforgotten dead. They will gather in the very place where nearly a century ago their fathers gathered to declare in words which have since become the shibboleth of Irish patriotism the right of freedom to make laws for Ireland. The struggles and the failure of those who fought the good fight in this place ought to rise fresh to mind, and for all practical aims, their finality, in the hall which millions regard as the cradle of their liberties. Over three hundred men will assemble to-day, and those who had the power to learn by examples, the men who seek Home Rule for Ireland, will know how to reverse on the spot where it was consummated the fatal blunders which led to the destruction and persecution of the year 1798.

The Rotunda is so intimately associated with all efforts made in recent times to secure the constitutional independence of Ireland, that it will be appropriate and instructive to briefly note the circumstances and suggestive resemblance between what has been and what is being attempted under the roof. Nearly a century ago, upon a lowering November day, 100 delegates, representing 40,000 Irish Volunteers, met in this building to consider the political condition of Ireland. Grattan, Flood, Charlemont, and their colleagues were there. Of the 100 delegates, 60 were lords or members of the Irish Parliament, and 40 were commoners, but the latter were the most powerful men in the assembly. Grattan was the leader of the Opposition in the Irish House of Commons, and Flood was the most eloquent man in Ireland. Charlemont was the nominal head of the Volunteers, and was the most popular man in Ireland. The Volunteers were the armed force of the country, and they were the only power which could compel the English Government to grant the concessions which Ireland demanded. The Volunteers were organized in every county, and were under the command of officers who were appointed by the Lord Lieutenant. The Volunteers were the armed force of the country, and they were the only power which could compel the English Government to grant the concessions which Ireland demanded. The Volunteers were organized in every county, and were under the command of officers who were appointed by the Lord Lieutenant. The Volunteers were the armed force of the country, and they were the only power which could compel the English Government to grant the concessions which Ireland demanded. The Volunteers were organized in every county, and were under the command of officers who were appointed by the Lord Lieutenant.

The O'Keeffe Controversy.

The O'Keeffe controversy has advanced a very critical stage. It appears that Mr. Gladstone promised the House of Commons that he would not allow O'Keeffe to be only to apply to the Commissioners of Education in order to be reinstated in the emolument of the Callan Schools, the Commissioners have declined to interfere on the point from which the majority of the Irish missionary were prepared to plead for the restoration of the emoluments, and according to the London correspondent of the Freeman, say that they were deceived by the statement of Mr. Gladstone, and that they had never understood that it was to be said that the complication had been removed by the Government, and that they had no power to interfere. The Commissioners, and must impose upon O'Keeffe the duty of applying to them. The inquiry was a solemn and imposing spectacle; it combined the significant observances of a political display with the livelier occasions of the festival. But the guests assembled where the delegates had congregated, and did not yield to the spell of their predecessors. Only a few simple words do utter on the occasion. The floor of the Round Room was at this time thronged by the Irish Parliamentary Party, and the body of gentlemen who had come from all parts of the country to speak and see, for themselves alone, but as embassies of the popular will on the question of Home Rule. To look at them for a moment is to be enthusiastic because, for a moment, forgetful of the ordinary calmness of their bearing, they are all on fire with the spirit of the assembly might naturally suppose that in Dublin, as in London, the Irish Parliament the seventeenth century was the only one worthy of the name. The men sitting ranged in semicircle round the Secretaries' table and in front of the Chairman's seat, and in the body of the floor, had an aspect of earnestness, of intelligence, and of social cultivation that no observer could possibly mistake. There were many whose gray hairs and air of quiet experience, and of long familiarity with every relation that has ever taken place in Ireland, because they were the men who had made it, and who were now learning its rule by force, or, in other words, by the government at all. Mr. Disraeli was redeeming a pledge he had given when he assembled a Parliament in Dublin. Mr. Butt, the chief orator, has made many a noble speech in his time and has been a priceless tribute of gratitude to the men from the people whose name he has made famous, but he has never spoken with more power than he did to-day. He was the first to speak, and he was followed by Mr. Isaac Butt, who, in a speech of great power, showed how seriously a sense of his great and solemn duty was present before his mind. But as he went on from point to point of that historic retrospect on which alone our demand for independence may find a firm foundation; as he laid bare the fraud of English policy.

The Irish Parliament of the Irish people, of the people who made it, who lived in it, and were content to die for it, was the only one which could be called a Parliament. Mr. Butt's speech was a masterly exposition of this country's wrongs, and of the means by which its people can obtain redress. Mr. Butt brought his speech to a close at a little before two o'clock by moving the first resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Blake, and supported in a few words by Mr. Martin, who said all the members of the Conference were prepared to speak and see, for themselves alone, but as embassies of the popular will on the question of Home Rule. To look at them for a moment is to be enthusiastic because, for a moment, forgetful of the ordinary calmness of their bearing, they are all on fire with the spirit of the assembly might naturally suppose that in Dublin, as in London, the Irish Parliament the seventeenth century was the only one worthy of the name. The men sitting ranged in semicircle round the Secretaries' table and in front of the Chairman's seat, and in the body of the floor, had an aspect of earnestness, of intelligence, and of social cultivation that no observer could possibly mistake. There were many whose gray hairs and air of quiet experience, and of long familiarity with every relation that has ever taken place in Ireland, because they were the men who had made it, and who were now learning its rule by force, or, in other words, by the government at all. Mr. Disraeli was redeeming a pledge he had given when he assembled a Parliament in Dublin. Mr. Butt, the chief orator, has made many a noble speech in his time and has been a priceless tribute of gratitude to the men from the people whose name he has made famous, but he has never spoken with more power than he did to-day. He was the first to speak, and he was followed by Mr. Isaac Butt, who, in a speech of great power, showed how seriously a sense of his great and solemn duty was present before his mind. But as he went on from point to point of that historic retrospect on which alone our demand for independence may find a firm foundation; as he laid bare the fraud of English policy.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE HOME RULE CONFERENCE IN DUBLIN.

There are times in the life of a nation when the Genius of History, instead of looking upon her page the various occurrences that go to constitute the public life of a people, faces her gaze upon one of magnificent importance, and examines all others from her chronicle for the time. This is now the case in France, where, in coming days, the history of the present time will be but another name for the report of the proceedings in the National Assembly on the question of a Republic or Empire. This, too, is the case in Ireland, where the history of this week is forever to be bound in the record of what was done by the National Home Rule Conference. The spirit of the great National Assembly in a measure draped around, as one may say, the bright memories of unfading glory in the very same Round Room where Grattan and the Volunteers flung forth their proud demand, that rang out in the tones of the waves. She is an ancient nation, an ancient, historic people. Mr. Smith's powerful plea against the Conference and the nations against the danger of venturing off historic ground in the presence of a host of adversaries who are eager to take advantage of any and every pretext to throw obstacles in the way of our demand for self-government, was the speech of the assembly. Mr. Butt's speech was a masterly one, and was fully satisfied with the discussion it had promised. The third resolution—the claim for the right peacefully to agitate—was moved and composed of the sovereign, the Lords and Commons of Ireland, in the name of the nation, by the unanimous voice; and with this the first sitting of the National Conference closed.

In the sitting of Wednesday, the fourth, or federal resolution—defining the supremacy of the Irish Parliament over all Irish local Irish affairs, and reserving Imperial and foreign transactions to the Parliament of the Empire—was moved by Professor Galbraith with his accustomed vigor and ability, and was seconded by Professor Father Tom O'Shea, fully considered in a discussion which lasted from eleven o'clock in the morning till after dusk, and unanimously adopted.

The second of the day was sustained with memorable ability. The great point about upon was the superiority of Federalism to Imperial rule, and the confidence in which liberty and security none security than that of Ireland. The resolution was moved by Mr. Butt and Mr. A. M. Sullivan, and was one of the most remarkable utterances to support of the resolution were Mr. Isaac Butt, Mr. Martin, Mr. P. J. Smyth, Mr. Ferguson, of Glasgow; Isaac O'Brien, and Mr. Gray, of the Freeman's Journal. The O'Connor Don made a felicitous hit to do away with the effect produced by his former speech. Isaac Butt, in moving the Federal principle was so nicely and supplemented by Mr. Sullivan, who, in a speech of much say yes or no; and by declining to decline to dress down upon himself the whole artillery of the opposition, and by declining to do either he drew down upon himself the concentrated fire of the opposition, and by declining to do either he drew down upon himself the concentrated fire of the opposition, and by declining to do either he drew down upon himself the concentrated fire

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 27, 1873.
Inclusive
21—Sunday—Fourth Sunday in Advent.
22—Monday—St. Thomas, Apostle.
23—Tuesday—Feria.
24—Wednesday—Vigil. Fast.
25—Thursday—Nativity of our Lord. Christmas Day.
26—Friday—St. Stephen, First Martyr.
27—Saturday—St. John, Apostle and Evangelist.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....DECEMBER 20, 1873.

A HUMILIATING FIASCO.

The prophecy which we hazarded in our last issue was realized to the very letter. The Rev. JOHN B. DUDOAN did not deliver the lecture on "The Church in Council and the Jesuits at Work," from which so many piquant revelations were expected by all the bigots in San Francisco. On the evening of Thursday, December 11th, Platt's Hall was crowded—a godly array of Calvanistic ministers was present. Rev. JOHN HEMPHILL was there in all his glory, as master of ceremonies; but, terrible to relate, the distinguished convert did not put in an appearance! Everybody was on the hand scrape, the individual most ardently desired—the man without whom the evening's entertainment could not take place. The reason of Father DUDOAN'S non-appearance is not very difficult to surmise. He had an invincible repugnance to figuring as a convert to Presbyterianism which all the inducements held out to him, and they were many, were powerless to overcome. It is true he had been guilty, in one instance at least, of ungentlemanly conduct; it is true that, yielding to the pressure of necessities from which he saw no escape, he put himself in communication with a heretical sect and offered to abjure his faith.

For all these wicked proceedings there is no excuse whatever to be made; they are perfectly indefensible. The misguided young priest himself never made the slightest attempt even to palliate them, but freely and sincerely acknowledged their heinousness. To those who would be inclined to pass the severest judgment upon him we would say that the weakness of human nature makes all people to fall into temptation, and that Christian charity should impel us to deal leniently with him and with his family. It must be admitted, moreover, that Father DUDOAN has made to the Catholic community which he so grievously scandalized every reparation possible under the circumstances. Of his sincerity there can hardly be a reasonable doubt. A young man of fine education, more than ordinary abilities, graceful address and attractive personal appearance, if he had delivered that lecture he would have become actually the idol of a large section of the Protestant denomination. He would have been the most presentable "convert" it has been their good fortune to lay hold of for a very long time. In fact, once having delivered his address and made his own terms to his Calvinistic patrons, he could have dictated his own terms to his Calvinistic patrons. No, from a pecuniary point of view, as far as success in this world is concerned, he had everything to gain by completing his apostasy and everything to lose by retracing his steps. His reputed failing—indulgence in strong drink—allowing it to be fully as bad as was represented, would not have stood in the way of his success. Even for his new co-religionists would have only been too happy to get the chance of concealing it from the world. They would have been highly delighted to have Father DUDOAN exactly as he stood, with all his imperfections, little or great, real or imaginary, for the purpose of parading him here and elsewhere as "a convert from Romanism."

But grace had not utterly departed from the erring priest. When the moment came for taking the decisive step he recoiled in horror. He made up his mind at every risk to return to the bosom of the Church in which he was reared and in which alone he believed, notwithstanding all his protences to the contrary. He had a rugged path to pursue, but, to his credit be it said, he never faltered. He had to confess himself a hypocrite before the world; he had to trample self-love under foot, and pen a recantation of his disedifying conduct. All this he did, of his own free and unfettered will, without pressure, solicitation or inducement of any kind, direct or indirect, from any human being. It was to punish and humiliate the narrow-minded bigots, he played that practical joke which culminated in the intensely ludicrous tumult in Platt's Hall on the evening of the intended lecture.

Few, even among Protestants, have any compassion for Rev. JOHN HEMPHILL and his partners in the lecture enterprise. To gratify their own vanity, to indulge their feelings of hatred against Catholicity, they did not hesitate to trample on the sanctity ments and necessities of Father DUDOAN. In this they showed the spirit of the Evangelical proselytizers who, during the great famine in Ireland, would feed the starving only on condition of their "abjuring Romanism." As for the unfortunate and misguided young priest himself, his future is in his own hands, and he alone is responsible for it. If he wish to be received again into the ranks of the sacred ministry which he dishonored, he will have to undergo a long probation of penance and mortification. This, of course, will be trying to his self-love, but if the grace of God be within him, he will be happy to endure it. Should he give way to his failing, which has been charged against him—whether truly or falsely we know not—and refuse to submit to ecclesiastical discipline, he may go headlong to temporal and eternal ruin, but he can never again figure with any success as a dishing cabbed "convert from Popery."!

MARKED PROGRESS.

On many occasions it has been pointed out in these pages that no illustrate the rapid strides with which the Catholic Church is advancing in America we need not travel any great distance from our own doors. If we give a moment's consideration to what is going on around us, we shall be deeply impressed by the fact that the onward march of Catholicism has been more rapid and better assured than its most sanguine propagandists would some years ago have ventured to predict. Taking even the low standards of materialism, or judging the progress of the Church by the measure of real estate, the result must be satisfactory and gratifying. The Catholic buildings which have risen among the sandhills of San Francisco during the last few years tell a very plain story. Every year, too, adds to their number. Last year saw the last touches given to the pile of buildings in South San Francisco, which the Sisters of Charity have devoted to the use of the orphans. This year has left its mark in the erection and completion of Sacred Heart College, a magnificent testimonial to the generosity of our citizens, to their love of learning, and to their confidence in the zeal, ability and experience of the Christian Brothers.

In other places, also, something of the same kind though different of course in degree, has been going on. Crossing the ferry to Oakland, we find that twenty years ago it was considered an important step to put up there a little church building, forty feet by twenty. In the course of time this area was multiplied by addition, and still the increase in the congregation demanded more room. As one of the results of this increase we have that cathedral-like church on which, through the indefatigable zeal of Father HEPPNER, $40,000 have already been expended without; at all completing it. Its towers are conspicuous points of sight from every side of Oakland, and induce many a query as to what the position of any denomination could want with such a Gothic pile, and where they raise the money to build it. The old church is now used as a day school, which is conducted by Sisters of the Convent of the Sacred Heart. To mention that fact is equivalent to saying that it is admirably managed, and that the hundred children attending it receive an excellent education. In San Antonio, or East Oakland, the improvements observable in the church building, and the large increase in the number of church-goers, speak well for both pastor and people.

Three years ago last summer the President of St. Mary's College tried the experiment of establishing a Catholic Academy in Oakland. Time has amply justified his expectations that it would prove eminently successful. The class-rooms have been constantly filled, and the progress of the students has been such to be most creditable to themselves, satisfactory to their parents and gratifying to their instructors. Such successful examinations, the last of which took place on Wednesday last, has furnished additional evidences of marked progress and increasing utility on the part of St. Joseph's Academy, and it has therefore taken rank as one of the first-class educational establishments of which Alameda county is justly proud. The Christian Brothers set about their work unassumingly, but the splendid results which are evinced in the rapid advancement and solid acquisitions of their pupils have already earned, for them, even among the non-Catholics of Oakland, a high reputation as successful teachers. A great part of their success may, no doubt, be ascribed to natural talent and to the literary achievements of that studious life to which the rule of their Order binds them; but a great part also must be set down to the credit of that religious zeal which separates them from the world and to the excellence of that system of teaching which was designed by the Venerable De La SALLE. To practically carry out the idea of their founder, keeping with the progress of the times, avail themselves fully of new inventions and improvements, and, in short, send forth efficient instructors, they provide normal schools for the practical training of the young men who enter the novitiate with the view of becoming in due course professed Brothers. These normal schools do not exist for the attainment of the noisy they make; but, nevertheless, like the dew which falls unseen and unfelt, and yet fertilizes the parched and withered places of the earth, they do their work well and thoroughly, and the beneficent results of that work are manifest all over the earth, wherever the children of the Christian Schools are to be encountered.

Such a normal school has been in existence for some time in Oakland, doing its high duty quietly but effectively. As progress seems the order of the day, it would not be a matter of surprise to say to find this school extending its operations and enlarging the sphere of its utility. Even then it would be generally known rather by the remote effects which it produces than by the work in which it may actually be engaged, inasmuch as religious life instinctively recoils from unnecessary publicity. While considering the degree of Catholic progress which Oakland well illustrates, it would be an unpardonable oversight to omit mention of the good work effected by the Convent of the Sacred Heart. Having, to begin with, secured a delightful location in the shadow of hills and bordering on Lake Merritt, the convent commenced their labors by causing the erection of a seminary and dwelling-house, large enough for themselves and the young ladies whose education was their care. In a short time, however, it was evident that to accommodate the large number of young ladies who sought the advantages of that refined and superior education for which this Convent soon became noted, it would be necessary to call the builders' services again into requisition. We have accordingly the new and beautiful Convent of the Sacred Heart, with full classes and a foundation that betokens a future full of promise. The building itself is an ornament to the landscape, a monument of the onward march of religious education, and of striking index of that marked progress which Catholicism is happily making among us.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

Christmas Day will be upon us before we have an opportunity of again addressing our friends and readers. It therefore now becomes our pleasing duty to offer them, one and all, the compliments of this happy season. We wish them a truly and really merry Christmas! There have been a good many changes passed over the world since we uttered our felicitations for the year of grace 1872; and it is probable that others more startling will have to be recorded before we undertake the same agreeable task in the year of grace 1874. But these come from the providence of Almighty God, and whether in their outward appearance they are sad or joyful, we know they can be turned into blessings if we will only accept them in a proper spirit. Christmas is a time when all are anxious to forget, at least for a while, the cares and anxieties of this life, and give themselves up to enjoyment. Families long separated come together to spend its holidays, friends long estranged forget their differences and exchange kindly greetings. There is no roof so humble but that under it some attempt is made to honor that Christmas which, as every one knows, is pre-eminently a Catholic feast. Among Catholics at all events, this general display of rejoicing is not confined to mere social reunions or to convivial feasting. Christmas is pre-eminently a holy season, a season of prayer and thanksgiving, and it is best honored by honoring Him whose birth it commemorates. For this reason our churches are crowded during the holidays by the pious and faithful. For this reason our altars are decked in splendor and the anthems sung by our choirs speak the words of joy and gladness.

It must not be forgotten that Christmas brings always with it its peculiar duties. Charity, regard for the poor and afflicted, should of course not be confined to any season—it should be displayed all the year round by the Christian; yet it is specially required now, and its appeals should be listened to with more than usual readiness. Those whom God has blessed with wealth, or with comfortable circumstances, should remember their fellow-creatures who have to struggle against poverty or who are dependant upon public generosity for their support. The hospitals, asylums and refuges which have been established by Catholic piety have all inmates who can be made something the happier, who can be made to enjoy Christmas more thoroughly, by the bestowal of assistance commensurate with the means of the giver. Those who have much should bear in mind that they owe it to the Lord, who has declared that He will regard as done to Himself what is given to the poor. Christmas can hardly be enjoyed by those who are so engrossed up in selfishness as to have no consideration for their less fortunate brethren.

But we are sure that it is a work of supererogation to preach the duty of Catholic charity to the readers of THE MONITOR, for they have on all occasions, no matter what was the appeal, proved themselves possessed of the traditional generosity and kindliness of their race—of that sympathy with human suffering which has been throughout ages a prominent characteristic of their fathers in the old land, which is dear to them. No we shall conclude by once more, from our heart, wishing them

A MERRY CHRISTMAS!

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE.

The semi-annual public examination of the various classes in this College commenced on Monday last and has not yet been completed. The fruits of diligence, skilled cultivation and a subsoil of sturdy Californian talent are apparent to the dullest observer. We have had on so many occasions to express our feelings of admiration at the progress made by the pupils and of satisfaction at the manner in which they were instructed, that we feel almost at a loss for words to express our sentiments on the present occasion. Suffice it to say that the examinations have been conducted in the most thorough manner, and that the pupils have given evidence of the most careful training and of the most diligent application to study. The Rev. President, Rev. Director, Professors and Teachers have reason to be proud of the success which has attended their efforts, and we feel sure that the parents of the pupils will be highly gratified at the result of the examinations. The Rev. President, Rev. Director, Professors and Teachers have reason to be proud of the success which has attended their efforts, and we feel sure that the parents of the pupils will be highly gratified at the result of the examinations.

CHRISTMAS DAY.—At St. Mary's Cathedral, Masses will be celebrated at 7 a. m. Christmas morning, and every half hour thereafter until half past 10, when Pontifical High Mass (MOZART'S Twelfth, with a full choir) will be celebrated. At this service Papal Benediction will be given by the Most Rev. Archbishop.

At St. Patrick's Church, Masses will be celebrated at 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 o'clock, and every half hour thereafter until half past 10 o'clock, when MOZART'S Twelfth, with a full orchestra, will be celebrated.

At St. Francis' Church, Vallejo street, first Mass will be celebrated at 5 o'clock A. M. Masses will continue at intervals until 10½ o'clock, when a Solemn High Mass with full orchestra, will be celebrated.

NEW CARDINALS.—We find the following among the telegrams in the daily papers. It is not a good place to get reliable Catholic information, so we give the intelligence just for what it is worth:

ROME, December 17.—The Papal Nuncio at Paris has been notified that Archbishops of Paris, Cambria and Valence have been elevated to the College of Cardinals.

CUTLERY FOR THE HOLIDAYS.—It will, we feel sure, be universally admitted that no special attention is required to induce the public to buy cutlery and wastes his time to frantic endeavors to coerce a piece of dismembered a turkey with a badly-edged knife. We can safely state that whoever secures a set of Rodgers' razors will never run the risk of spoiling the temper of the family by the use of blunt carving knives. Rodgers' razors, we believe, have been ordered by some of the leading men in the city of London, who, one would think, could procure the best workmanship in the world at their own doors. Rodgers' razors, scissors, pocket knives and Price's cutlery is said by all competent judges of such matters.

EVERY housekeeper, at this festive season, with either ample or limited means, will furnish themselves with the choicest luxuries for their Christmas enjoyment. As where to find them may not be so well known, we call their attention to the choice and unexceptionable assortment kept by Messrs. M. T. S. Wall, where they will find Wall's celebrated whiskey, pure Bourbon, unadulterated porter from Guinness, of Dublin, and the finest brands of English and Scotch ales, all imported direct by himself, and can be had at the lowest prices by bottle, gallon or demijohn. A trial is all that is needed to satisfy the most skeptic of their superior quality.

J. A SMALL, Esq., will in future act as agent for THE MONITOR in Hollister. He will receive subscription moneys due to us, and receipt for the same.

St. Joseph's Academy, Oakland.

The Christmas examinations in this admirably conducted institution came to a close on Wednesday last, and were followed by a public exhibition in the Academy of Music. The ready and correct answering of the pupils and the wide range of subjects with which they proved themselves familiar are alike creditable to their industry and talent and to the ability and zeal of their instructors, the Christian Brothers. From the satisfactory results of preceding years, the people of Oakland were led to expect a great deal indeed from the Academy on this occasion, nor have they been disappointed. The mode of conducting the examination was, as usual, impartial and rigid—gentlemen having not any connection with the establishment being invited to ask questions on the subject before the class; and yet this searching ordeal but served to bring out in stronger light the merits of the pupils. They have completed the first half of the academic year with considerable credit to themselves, and come out what must have been to them a great trial with flying colors. We compliment them upon the fact and, indeed, feel assured that many of them will yet make their mark distinguished in the world as one of the rising generation of talented Californians.

The popularity which St. Joseph's has acquired by the progress it has effected during the past three years, brought on Wednesday evening a select and fashionable audience to the literary exercises held in the Academy of Music. Besides a score of clergymen, there were present many of the most prominent representatives of the wealth, intelligence and education of Alameda county; and in fact many could scarcely find standing room. The audience was, on the occasion, favored with entertainment provided for them—namely, that it was excellent, enjoyable, as well as a proof of talent and versatility. In short, the high reputation which the pupils of the Christian Brothers have already won has been fully sustained on this occasion, and promise given of greater triumphs yet to come.

Appended we give the programme, the admirable carrying out of which so delighted the Oaklanders on Wednesday evening:

Saint Bernard's Young Men's Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society, Academy of Music, Wednesday, December 17, 1873. Programme. Part I. Declamation, Thomas Hayes. Declamation, Joseph Lawless. Declamation, Edward J. Tobin. Declamation, Thomas Hayes. Dialogue, "Scene in Parliament," with Chorus, Class. A. A. Sheridan, Declamation, Joseph Lawless. Declamation, Edward J. Tobin. Declamation, Thomas Hayes. Declamation, Edward Fanning, John F. and Vincent Buckley. Declamation, Joseph Lawless. Declamation, Edward J. Tobin. Dialogue, "Uncle Sam, Miss Columbia and Master Britannia," Class. Declamation, Thomas Hayes. Declamation, Joseph Lawless. Declamation, Edward J. Tobin. Declamation, Thomas Hayes. Declamation, Edward Fanning, John F. and Vincent Buckley

A SONG FOR CHRISTMAS EVE.

The mighty God, the Prince of Peace,
Took flesh in virgin's womb;
And He, whose name is wonderful,
To this dark world is come.
The government is His, and all
The nations own His sway;
His ransomed shall prosperity fail,
And vanish each away.

A brighter star than ever before
To-night in heaven appears;
To show the Saviour's sacred cradle,
Where lowly shepherds prayed.
The angels sweet their happy strains
From the deep blue sky,
With songs proclaimed the boundless joy
That filled the world on high.

In a stable's lowly manger
Was the infant laid to rest;
But the Virgin Mother mild Him
Nestled and took Him to her breast.
Thus the Eastern Magi found Him,
And, bending at His feet,
Offered gifts of hidden meaning,
Gold, and myrrh, and incense sweet.

The gold they gave Him as their king,
To signify to men mortal grief and care;
To tell the owner's name as well,
And sign of faith and prayer.
Ado-rable Jesus! Blessed Mary!
Raised as a sin-pleasing love!
Guard our souls from sin forever—
Take us to the world above.

British Suicidling.

There are certain capacities in which we must own ourselves decidedly inferior to our English neighbor. The pains of superiority may, however, be considered without damage to our national amour propre, or our moral reputation as a people. We are so much for our brethren across the Channel in the subtleties and finesses of dishonesty. Not long since a series of swindles were perpetrated at Sheffield by a man who personated the Lord Chancellor; and the week after wards, though the imposture was descried, and warning spread thereof, another gifted sharper succeeded in passing himself off upon credulous tradesmen of the same town, whom he relieved of a large amount of property. A third enterprising genius has just turned up at Wolverhampton, representing himself as the Lord Chancellor of England, but the Premier, On Saturday afternoon a man called at the residence of a woman named Cromidge who is the widow of a man who was, it appears, at one time in the service of Mr. Gladstone. The woman is now a Government annuitant, enjoying the comfortable pension of £53 a year. The stranger said he was Mr. Allen, a London solicitor, and told the widow he had brought her the good news that there was £500 awaiting her at his office in London. He said the money had been placed in his hands by Mr. Gladstone, who had received Wafer from a relative of hers who had died in India. There was a stipulation, however, to be decided before the bequest could be enjoyed. Mr. Allen told the widow she must pay £10, after which she was to set out for London to receive the legacy. The old lady, after some demur, handed over £5, and then placing £5 10s. in her clasp-bag for traveling expenses, set out, in company of the "solicitor" for London. Mr. Allen was polite, so became gentleman-attorney. He insisted on carrying her bag and her umbrella as far as the railway station.

Ultimately the fallow got his victim seated in a first-class refreshment room at the London and Northwestern station. With that national instinct which prompts the Great Briton, male or female, to celebrate every event with more or less of a feast, Mrs. Cromdice determined to change a half sovereign out of her £5 10s., to obtain some refreshment. But upon upon opening her bag she found her gold attracted and its place occupied by three pence-ha'-penny. The old woman was not altogether a simpleton. It struck her that she had been tricked out of £5 1 0s. Unfortunately she made this discovery too late, for "Mr. Allen, solicitor," had disappeared, and the police are after him at present upon the clue furnished by the old lady's very inconclusive description. This is a bad business enough; but it seems that it is no safer for a young man in crowded bell-room than for an elderly lady alone in her dwelling. At Blackburn Borough Sessions, on Saturday, a well-dressed young man, named Francis Williams, who said he was a bootmaker, was charged with stealing a £50 and a £20 note, the property of a Mr. Blackburn. This latter gentleman had attended a publican ball at the Golden Lion Hotel, on the next morning missed the money out of his pocket. It was found that the prisoner had changed a £20 note, and on being questioned he stated that he had found the money on the ball-room floor. Mr. Wilkinson was remanded for a week, and so far his case is rather doubtful. But the moral remains the same, and it is evident that the political sympathies of the Blackburn people are not always of a purity and fortitude to preserve them from an overdose of the fumes of political backsliding.—Dublin Freeman.

The European Situation.

While France is agitated and threatened every day with civil war, Europe is anything but in a settled state. The speeches from the throne in Austria, Prussia and Bavaria are of a nature to cause great fears in those countries. The King of Bavaria expressed his regret to see the feelings of his confrers becoming more Prussian than Bavarian. The King of Saxony forgot to mention the Emperor of Germany's name, and those two are at the head of the Servian signs have caused Prince Bismarck to address two diplomatic messages to those Courts, which have caused some uneasiness. The insurrection in Cuba, on the part of the United States in Cuba, and other incidents of less importance in Belgium and Switzerland, without speaking of the fearful conflict in Spain, are combustible matter sufficient to cause a general conflagration while the first spark caused by some trifling event in Europe. Such is the state of things while all flattering that the year 1874, if they will not become more complicated still during the few weeks that remain of the present year. The financial crisis, which has not seriously affected France, is making things still worse, and discontent is not confined to the French people alone. Religious persecution and socialistic doctrines proclaimed everywhere are more serious elements in the political earthquake now threatening, not only the Old, but the New World. Great historians, like Thiers, Guizot, Louis Blanc and Michaud, are to find and study carefully in the pages of the past, and are as capable of fathoming the future as the most ignorant of us all. They differ as much in progressing coming events as they do about the remedy to be applied to this wait general, which extends almost to every country, and under every kind of Government. Some a revolutionary outbreak, or some war between different States, will most probably be the signal for a bonnie bus general, in which the Eastern question, is likely also to be brought to the surface. The commercial world are waiting with great anxiety the result of the debates either to withhold their orders and restrict their speculations, or to venture on their usual purchases for the new year, on which so much depends.

They sacrificed, and begin to lose faith in all the fine promises made to them, and distrust the great orators they admired so much for their unstotuus in other times. —Dublin Freeman.

Land Statistics.

Dr. Hancock's recent volume of statistics contains some curious particulars with reference to the Irish land question. It will be remembered that at the time of the passing of the Land Act serious fears were entertained that the result of that measure would be to injure the value of real property in Ireland. How baseless and absurd these fears were is strikingly shown. In 1870 the Land Act was passed, and the rental was £16,269; in '71 it was £53,-754; in '72 it had touched £70,289. The purchase money increased during the same period at a similar rate, touching £757,218 in 1870; £1,068,524 in 1871; £1,451,988 in 1872. The average price for five years ending 1867 was 17½ years; in '68 it rose to 18½ years; in '69 which was the year in which the Land Act was expected) it fell to 17½ years; in '70 the year in which the Act passed) it touched 16½ years; while the moment the Act came into operation the price rose to 19½ years in 1871, and 19 years' purchase in 1872. The improvidence of Irish landlords is evinced by the fact that in 324 petitions for sale under the Act 29 per cent. of the sales were three times more frequent in the case of Ulster than in the case of Leinster, while Ireland is to retain her present representation, the power of dealing with questions affecting the foreign affairs, the government of the colonies, imperial taxation, the military and naval forces, and the relations of peace and war. The resolutions further demanded for Ireland a separate military organization to the Irish Parliament, and it was also proposed to insert in the Federal Constitution articles supplying the simple guarantees that no change shall be made by the Parliament in the present settlement of property in the land, and that no legislation shall be adopted to establish any religious ascendency in Ireland, or to subject any person to disabilities on account of his religious opinions. The only point on which any controversy can arise was whether the Irish Parliament form part of the new legislature, and the Conference decided on leaving the question regarding the composition of the Parliament stand in the form proposed.—York Examiner, November 19.

On November 18 the Religious Equality League held a crowded meeting in St. James' Hall, London, to hear Mr. Mason Jones deliver an address advocating the disestablishment and disendowment of the English Church. He contended that to endow one Church at the expense of others was an injury to the rigi ts of citizens.

The Murderers of London.

The following appears in the Pall Mall Gazette, over the signature of "A Retired Murderer":

"SIR: You were good enough on a former occasion to permit me through your columns to protest against a practice indulged in by young and inexperienced murderers of cutting and mutilating the remains of their victims, and thus naturally exciting in the breasts of the public a disgust not generally awakened by a simple assassination artistically effected without undue violence and with a proper regard for the feelings of survivors. I venture, therefore, as a behalf of a growing and important class—the murderers of London, in whose reputation I shall ever feel the deepest interest, having spent some of the happiest days of my life in their society—to trespass again on your kindness while I beg the public to believe they have no hand whatever in a practice, which it appears from certain remarks made by Dr. Lankester at an inquest held by him on Monday, prevails in the neighborhood of the Regent's Canal, of taking out of that convenient receptacle the bodies of murdered persons, or suicides, or rubbing them, and depositing them again in the water. A more contemptible form of crime cannot be conceived than that which was referred to; and I would inquire the public to believe that no murderer worthy of the name would so far demean himself as to rob the remains of one in whose removal to a better world he had taken part. So far from the London murderers, as a rule, approving this practice, they would, I feel assured, willingly aid the police whom they cordially admire, and for whom indeed they are frequently at a loss, a sincere affection) every assistance in bringing to justice the low scoundrels who thus disgrace the criminal classes. It is only point to the neat and peaceful manner in which, before the police arrived, all their bodies packed in lime deposited under the nose of the police, to prove that they not only know how to perform disagreeable duties in an orderly fashion, but that there is an openness in their proceedings which speaks volumes for the nobility of their nature."

Extraordinary scene in a Chapel.

A most extraordinary scene took place the other evening in a dissenting chapel on the outskirts of Preston. It seems that a man connected with the Irish trade—who had, it was understood, undergone the most quisite conversion—was announced to hold forth at the chapel of the evening, and he invited some of his fellow-workmen to attend the service. In due course he gave the service, went through it and preached a sermon. At the close of the service a prayer meeting was held in the chapel, and the preacher was invited to join in it. But the proceedings were about half gone through a change came over the spirit of the whole affair, creating quite a sensation, for, at the point named, a woman about forty years of age, a young woman and a young man suddenly jumped upon the preacher, gave him a sound thrashing, then dragged him out of the place by the hair of the head, and afterwards rescued him from his upon him, and then left him to look after himself. The meaning of it all appeared to be that the preacher was a married man, and that his wife and family had been left for some time—that latterly he had been courting a young woman, with whom, how ever, he was not living in criminal love, and afterwards the young woman, who somehow found out that he was a married person, began stopping with the young man; that by and by they became acquainted with the preacher's wife, by whom the story of the courtship with him and the deceptiveness of his character was told; that the three—the wife, the young woman and the young man—determined, on the first opportunity to thrash him, and they did so.—Manchester Courier.

A Precious Letter.

The Pope has just addressed a benediction written entirely in his own hand, to Madame Mutier, the wife of the Lieutenant-Colonel of Zouaves, who has given a refuge to the exiled Bishop of Basle, Mgr. Lachat, owing to him her entire conversion to Catholicism. Real and sincere is the gratitude of the pontiff for the generous devotedness of the noble lady. The following is the letter, which is addressed to Madame Mutier, the wife of the Lieutenant-Colonel of Zouaves, who has given a refuge to the exiled Bishop of Basle, Mgr. Lachat, owing to him her

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

There is a movement on foot to establish a Catholic Union at Portland, Oregon.

Within the last three years nine new Catholic churches have been opened or commenced in New Orleans.

Fifteen converts were baptized at the close of the mission given by the Lazarist Fathers at St. Patrick's church, Washington City.

The gifted and indefatigable Nun of Kenmare is about to establish a Home, to be attached to her convent, for poor girls who intend emigrating to America.

One hundred and sixty news boys are now in St. Vincent's Home, Warren street, New York, under the charge of Rev. Father Drumgoole.

The Leaguers of St. Sebastian number 1,250, of whom 507 are resident in Ireland. Mr. Charles Tracy of Albany, New York, is the American Secretary.

The Rev. Father Xabel, D. D., for nine years pastor of East St. Louis, has been removed by his Bishop to Cairo, and Rev. Father O'Sullivan, of Cairo, becomes pastor of East St. Louis.

The memoirs of Father Rapin, S. J. (1644 to 1640) the well-known author of a very valuable history of England, have just been issued by the great Parisian publishing house of Gaume & Co.

Subscriptions have been started at St. Louis, Mo., for the benefit of the family of Captain Fry, the commander of the "Virginius," who are reported to be in want at New Orleans.

One hundred and fifty aged people, without distinction of race or creed, are supported and cared for by the Little Sisters of the Poor on West Fifteenth street, New York.

The Catholic congregation of the Gate of Heaven Church on Fourth street, Boston, has purchased extensive and valuable property nearly opposite the church, and will probably erect a new edifice thereon.

The Paris Univers reports that as soon as his health will permit, the Archbishop of Posen will be transported to the fortress of Glogau, and there confined. There is a strong guard at his door awaiting his recovery.

Two Carmelite nuns have left Rome, at the request of Cardinal Barnabo, for Jerusalem, to establish a nunnery of their Order in a new convent recently founded by the famous Catholic traveler, the Princess de la Tour d'Auvergne.

As soon as the spring opens the Bishop of Hartford intends to commence his new episcopal residence. The plans are yet in the hands of the architect who designed the new convent. It is to be a large and convenient building.

On the 23d of November Miss Phoebe Ripley, daughter of the Rev. Samuel Ripley of Boston, Mass., took the veil in the Convent of the Visitation at Georgetown, D. C. The Rev. Father Fulton, S. J., the Rector of Boston College, officiated.

A Catholic daily paper is to be started in the Island of Ceylon, off the south coast of India, where the Catholics number thousands of souls, while the Catholics of America, who are counted by millions, are only sinking of up.

Rev. Dr. P. F. Quigley, who has been performing missionary duties in the valley of the Upper Mississippi for some years, and who is reputed to be filled with a true apostolic spirit, is now Professor of Theology at the seminary of St. Mary's College, Cleveland, Ohio.

The Catholic Review recommends that the consecration of the Province of New York to the Sacred Heart of Jesus should be commemorated by some joint act of all the dioceses, one which our children's children to the remotest generation might find a reminder."

A volume of great interest has been formed out of the "Special Correspondence" from Lourdes to the Paris Univers. It contains the most complete history hitherto published of the wonderful manifestations which have taken place at this great sanctuary of Mary within the last few years.

A pilgrimage starts on January 25th for the Holy Land from Nice, France. The price of the journey is only 1,600 francs there and back. The pilgrims will visit Rome, Naples, Alexandria, Cairo, Jaffa, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, the Dead Sea, Damascus, etc.

A previously unknown book, by the most beautiful poet and illustrious Jesuit martyr, Father Southwell, has been discovered in England. It is entitled "A fourfold meditation of the four last things—namely, Hour of Death, Day of Judgment, Pains of Hell and Joys of Heaven: showing the state of the elect and the reprobate, composed in a Divine poem by R. S."

Daniel Walsh, who recently died in St. Louis, bequeathed $500 to the parish of Ballingarry, county Tipperary, Ireland, to be used as the parish priest may think proper. The balance of the proceeds arising from the sale of his estate he bequeaths to the Archbishop of St. Louis, to be distributed among the most needy of the charitable institutions of that city.

Miss Sarah M. Brownson, the authoress, and daughter of Doctor Orestes A. Brownson, of Brownson's Review, was married on the 25th ult., at Elizabethtown, N. J., by Bishop Corrigan, to Mr. William J. Tunney, a convert to the Catholic faith, well known in literary circles, and at one time editor of the New York Evening Post.

Among the many curious things collected by Count Plater in the Polish Museum of Rapperaville, Switzerland, is a rosary made of bread crumbs by Father Romiczowice, a Polish priest and patriot, who was imprisoned at Rufstein early in this century. Each bead is covered with exquisite designs, and the bread is now as hard as a stone.

The New York Catholic Foundling Asylum has rescued 3,000 infants from an unnatural death, and has enabled 1,000 women to rise from misery and degradation worse than death; and although all this has been done in a very few years, the State of New York, to its shame, refuses to aid in the meritorious work, for no other reason than that the conductors of the asylum are Catholics.

A new sect has sprung up in Germany called "The State Catholics." It was founded by the ex-members of the Order of Malta. They condemn the Old Catholics, believe in Papal infallibility, profess to admire the persecution of the German Bishops, and advocate the separation of Church and State.

The London Tablet and Catholic Opinion are to be published in unison from the same office—the latter on Wednesday and the former on Saturday of each week. The papers will be independent of each other, but by this bi-weekly publication the Catholic public will be furnished with Catholic news without having to wait a whole week.

There are over one hundred Catholic Temperance Societies in New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City, and perhaps over one hundred more around the harbor of New York. As a part of the work of the Union they propose to save the newly-arrived emigrants as soon as they land, and to keep them from boarding-houses where liquor is sold.

Mrs. Admiral Fishbgren is devoting all her time and energies to literary work for the benefit of the poor. She has just completed a translation of a work on "The Power of the Executive," by the Marquis de Chemitrun, from which she expects to realize $1,000 for the Little Sisters of the Poor of Washington, D. C.

The corner-stone of the chapel connected with the house of the Little Sisters of the Poor at St. Louis, was laid on Sunday, November 30, with much ceremony. All the Catholic societies (and they are very numerous in that city) attended in large numbers and in full regalia. The cost of this chapel will be $25,000.

The Knights of St. Patrick of St. Louis donated the proceeds of Father Burke's lecture, amounting to nearly $4,000, to the Little Sisters of the Poor. These Sisters gave their note to Mrs. Patterson for $3,000 without interest, and when it became due their great anxiety was relieved by finding the note canceled at the foot of the statue of St. Joseph.

The rationalistic Westminster Review, October number, says: "Nothing is further from the truth than the common Protestant idea that the encouragement held out by the Roman Catholic Church to a celibate life is an example of Papal corruptions. It is a legitimate deduction from the spirit of Christianity, as set forth by its founder, and is, indeed, based on His own utterances. His immediate followers insisted no doubts on the subject."

Hoegters broke into St. Vincent de Paul's Church in Germantown, Penn., on the night of the 21st of November, with the view of stealing the valuable altar service of solid silver, but as they were safely beyond their reach, they rifled the poor box of its contents, the amount of which is not known.

The Buffalo Catholic Union calls attention to the grave spiritual dangers surrounding Catholic soldiers in the United States army, which a correspondent calls "a demoralized mob." The records, it says, learn bad language, beastly, filthy conversation, and nearly an incurable habit of intemperance. Young men should not enlist with such a mob.

Three Sisters of Mercy from the Kingston (Canada) House of Providence are now comfortably quartered in the pastor's house at South Hadley Falls, Mass. The house has been thoroughly refitted for their use under the direction of Father Harkness of Holyoke. They have already ten orphans, and will receive all who may need their assistance.

The late Father De Smet is said to have collected in European different times during his long missionary life the sum of $500,000, all of which was devoted to the support of the Indians of the missions of the United States. Fifty thousand dollars of this sum was given by the members of his own immediate family in Belgium. It is said that a nephew of his is now engaged in editing and publishing a valuable work written by the venerable Father.

At the close of a mission given by the Dominican Fathers at the Church of the Sacred Heart at Newark, N. J., the Society of the Holy Name was established as a preventative against breaking the second commandment, and four hundred persons became members. Twelve hundred persons joined the Holy Rosary Society.

The Fifteenth Amendment enacted by the Catholic Church for the benefit of the freedmen fifteen hundred years ago, is being put into practical operation in St. Louis, Mo. A conference of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, composed of colored men, has been organized there, and hereafter there will be colored members on the Upper Council and a colored representation at all the general meetings of the Society.

The President of the Catholic Protectory at West Farms, Chester county, N. Y., has received a letter from Cardinal Antonelli conveying the thanks of the Pope for a present sent him by the children of the Protectory, the gift being paid out of their earnings. The offering consisted of a medal of St. Peter's Church, at Home, in silver, resting on a rock represented in gold. There was a pedestal of Carrara marble, on which was an inscription.

The Catholics of Hartford celebrated their Thanksgiving Day by the dedication of the new convent of St. Joseph and the pro-cathedral connected with it. Four Bishops and fifty priests were present. The convent is designed to be the Mother house of the Sisterhood of the diocese, and for a Catholic seminary and boarding school. The sum of $17,457 75 have been collected for this purpose, and five parishes yet to be heard from.

The Rev. Frederick Donner, formerly pastor of St. John's Protestant church of Baltimore, was received into the Catholic fold after the usual solemn profession of faith, at the church of St. John the Baptist, West Thirtieth street, New York, on Sunday, the 30th of November. The motives leading to his change of religion will be given to the public in a few months in pamphlet form.

Mr. Kelly, the Mayor of Richmond, Va., is President of the Irish Benevolent Catholic Union of the United States. The Public School question was debated at the last general meeting of the Union at St. Louis, and Mr. Kelly has lately written a letter in defense of these schools. Many of the best men say they will withdraw from the Union on account of the President's letter.

Subscriptions Received.

Brooklyn—O. C. Kirk ..... $1 00
Tarlee—P. Gilooly ..... 2 00
Ultoy—Nelson Johnson ..... 6 00
Charles Vreeland ..... 2 25
R. Lasee ..... 2 25
Hanna Hynes ..... 2 25
James Pierce ..... 2 25
Peter Cordova ..... 2 25
Thomas Kirkham ..... 2 25
Lieutenant Hall ..... 4 00
Patrick Hughes ..... 4 00
John D. Sullivan ..... 4 00
Patrick Rogan ..... 10 00
Philip Meinerth ..... 5 75
James Meinerth ..... 4 00
Mr. Oberdeener ..... 5 00
E. Uhlich ..... 4 00
J. Koevil ..... 4 00
Stockton—M. J. Harris ..... 10 00
Ravena—Rev. James J. Hynes ..... 4 00
Rio Vista—Joseph Brading ..... 4 00
Tree Plains—E. B. Murphy ..... 4 00
Santa Clara—P. J. Walsh ..... 4 00
Edward Hanrahan ..... 4 00
Patrick Hanrahan ..... 4 00
Thomas Walsh ..... 4 00
Daniel Gleason ..... 4 00
San José—James Hagan ..... 4 00
E. Mahony ..... 4 00
Folsom—F. Fitzpatrick ..... 4 00
Mission San José—D. Sweeny ..... 4 00
Richard Byrne ..... 4 00
Mottinger—H. Fleming ..... 2 25
James Herbert ..... 2 25
Thomas Mahony ..... 4 00
John Murphy ..... 4 00
John McKeown ..... 12 00
Michael Healy ..... 4 00
John Wright ..... 2 25
J. J. Donahue ..... 2 25
Unity—Thomas Kearney ..... 4 00

Father O'Dwyer, who has been acting as curate to Father O'Keeffe, at Callan, has resigned his office. He deeply regrets his opposition to the Catholic Church, and announces his intention of journeying to Rome to pray for pardon from the Pope.

Written for THE MONITOR.

MY HOME IN FERMOY.

There's a spot far away over the wide spreading ocean,
A spot where this fond heart can never forget,
For memories cling round it so pure and so tender
That even its name brings a throb of regret;
Regret for the long-vanished days of my childhood,
When earth was all pleasure and life knew but joy!
Oh! could I recall them, those bright, golden hours
I spent long ago in my home in Fermoy.

There grand old Blackwater sweeps down through the meadows,
Passing quietly, swiftly by green castle-girdled—
Gliding on 'neath the hoary-tried bridge over its bosom,
Where peaceful and fair stands the town by its side.
Now only in dreams can I hear the sweet pealing
Of the bells from the hill, with their cadence of joy
Ringing mellow and clear, at the Angelus hour
Over the mountains and woodlands round dear old Fermoy.

And only in dreams can I gaze on dark Cairn,
That frowns tall and grim on the town at its feet,
How oft have I rambled far up to its summit,
And gathered green shamrocks and wild meadow sweet!

Oh! memory, your chain binds my heart to old Erin
With links time nor distance can ever destroy;
They comfort and brighten my life's dreary pathway,
And oft take me back to my home in Fermoy.

They mind me again of the sit I venture evenings
When I stood on the bridge spanning Funchean's dark stream,
And watched the sun set on the distant blue mountain side,
Or gazed through the trees on the silver moon beams.

Then friends, happy friends and true-hearted were near me,
To soothe every sorrow and share every joy!
But where are they now? for their places are vacant,
And their voices are silenced from their home in Fermoy.

The sun shines as bright on the square and the river
The moon smiles as fair on the green covered hill;
But they shine on that home now deserted and blighted,
Though some of the loved ones still round its hearth still;
They shine on green graves where warm hearts now slumber—
Whose laugh rang with mirth in youth's careless joy
When we strayed, long ago, by the banks of Blackwater,
Or roamed through the dark woods and vales round Fermoy.

Some have wandered away o'er the Atlantic's broad billow,
And toil in the cities and plains of the West;
But memory, memory, their thoughts turn ever
To the home and the friends which their hearts love the best;
And one, who so proudly looked up to green Erin
When he roamed over her mountains a light-hearted boy,
And dreamed glowing dreams of the bright old ruined castles,
Now sleeps far away from his home in Fermoy.

Farewell, dear old home!—but I won't say forever,
For deep in my heart a strong hope still clings
That one day again I will gaze on Blackwater,
And watch the moon rise over the hill of St. John;
But glad though that hour be, and joyous the welcome,
Its light will be darkened by one sad alloy,
For many a loved one who last roamed there with me
Will never again see their home in Fermoy.

K. D.

Wanted to be Heard From.

If anybody has ever used the thorough and scientific course of treatment recommended by the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for the cure of Catarrh and has not been perfectly cured, the proprietor, Dr. R. V. Pierce, would like to hear from that person, and by addressing him at the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., such person, if there be one, will hear of something to his or her advantage. As the Doctor is in earnest when he says he will pay for a case of catarrh he cannot cure, and is perfectly able to pay for what he says, he should receive a large number of replies to this inquiry. The thorough course of treatment referred to and recommended by Dr. Pierce consists in the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, which are the only means by which the fluid can be carried high up and applied to all parts of the nasal passages and the chambers connected therewith, in which ulcers exist and from which the discharge proceeds. In addition to this thorough application of the Remedy at the seat of the disease, by means of the Nasal Douche, Improved Medical Discovery should be taken carefully as the constitutional treatment, without which no case can be cured, as the disease is always constitutional, and must be treated accordingly. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has no equal—it destroys the worst cases, and has the confidence of thousands who have used it for years, as their only safeguard against the ravages of the worst, most irritating and loathsome of human maladies.

PEARL PAPER.

FRANCFORT, Mich., Sept. 18, 1873.—A year ago I had a bad cough from the catarrh which had got in my throat. I tried a good many things, and was getting to be one my good until I used your medicine, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Pellets. They cured me in three months, for which I am very thankful.

JOHN FISHER.

A Manual of Health.

An edition of between nine and ten millions of copies of a very useful work is now ready for gratuitous distribution, and can be had for the asking at any drug store in the United States, the British Colonies, Spanish America or Brazil. The work referred to is Hostetter's Almanac for 1874. The medical portion of it treats of the various ailments to which the human system is subject, and sets forth the peculiar properties of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—the purest and best tonic at present known—as a remedy for debility and disease. The Almanac is printed in all the principal languages of the civilized world, and reaches a larger number of families and individuals than any other medical treatise that ever issued from the press. No man or woman who has a due regard for that choicest of heaven's blessings, health, should fail to read the plain, simple and convincing articles which the Almanac contains on this subject. The science of life is rather a varied, intricate and complex one, and the calendar department requires and comprehensive. Hostetter's Almanac, however, a household convenience, adapted to the use of all classes and callings. The farmer, the planter, the miner, the merchant, the mechanic, the laborer, the professional man, all need it, and in details of both are it is literally an article of prime necessity. The medical peculiarities which render so many medical treatise intended for popular use unintelligible to the general reader, have been carefully avoided in this pamphlet. All clear, explicit, forcible, and remarkable with reason and common sense. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

MESSRS. CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa.—Gentlemen: Please send me another assorted 25 box of Cannabis Indica. It has done me a great deal of good. My cough is much better; appetite greatly improved. I was quite low, but the pills have regulated me, and the functions of life are performed with ease. Almost as soon as it was ordered, pain, my whole system has undergone a very improved change. Respectfully, JAMES STEVENS, Varna, Marshall county, Ill., October 30, 1873.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL SOCIETY.—The following names were inadvertently omitted in the list which appeared in our issue of the 6th instant:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| H. H. Williams | $1 00 | James Cahill | $2 00 |
| Owen Flaherty | 1 00 | Stephen Hall | 1 00 |
| Daniel Sing | 2 00 | Mrs. A. Harrington | 3 00 |
| P. C. Gallagher | 1 00 | Louis Hoppe | 3 00 |
| James Mooney | 2 00 | John O'Neil, Sr. | 1 00 |
| E. K. Murphy | 1 00 | John Doyle | 1 00 |
| David D. Jones | 1 00 | Thos. J. Murphy | 1 00 |
| Cornelius O'Hanlon | 1 00 | Charles M. Joyce | 1 00 |
| John O'Connell | 1 00 | | |

SENATOR CASSERLY.—The Irish American of December 6th thus speaks of Senator Casserly:

"No man in the American Senate stood higher than Eugene Casserly, whose worth, integrity and unsullied reputation, as a public man, are admitted even by those who differ from him in political ideas. Ireland may well be proud of such a son."

☞ Newsdealers desiring THE MONITOR on Saturday evening or Sunday morning, can obtain copies, at regular office rates, at the store of J. N. CROTHERS, 116 Second street.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, San Francisco, }
THURSDAY, December 18, 1873. }

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been up to average. We quote—Extra at $7 47½@$7, and superfine at $5 25@5 75, in sacks @ 100 lbs.

WHEAT—The market has ruled quiet and at lower rates since our last report. At the close the market is quotable at $2 25@2 30 @ 100 lbs.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range for ordinary feed to choice brewing at $1 10@$1 40@100 lbs.

OATS—There was a fair demand, at unchanged rates, during the past week. Quotable at the close at $1 40@$1 50 @ 100 lbs.

HAY—The receipts have been light during the past week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $15@20 for ordinary to choice @ ton.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $18@19 @ ton.

BRAN—The following are the jobbing rates: Bags, $2 75; Pen, $1 00; Pink and Red, $2 50, and Small White, $2 75; small Butter, $1 50 @ 100 lbs.

POTATOES—The receipts have been free, with a fair demand. We quote the range at 70@$1 10 @ Sweet, $2@2 25 @ 100 lbs.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 50@1 75 @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $20 @ ton from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $30@35 @ ton from the mill.

RYE—Quotable at $1 70@1 80 @ 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2 25@2 50 @ 100 lbs.

CORN—We quote Yellow at $2 @ cental; Mixed, $1 90@2; Whites, $1 85@2.

HIDES—We quote California dry at 15@16c, and salted at 7@8c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6½@7c @ lb.

GILT EDGE MEAL—Quotable at $2 50 @ ton from mill.

WOOL—We quote good to choice shipping grades at 19@20c. Burry, inferior @ lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh roll, good to choice, 45@50c; grain, 40@45c; Eastern Brain, ordinary to fair, 16@20c; choice, 30@35c.

CHEESE—California, 12½@13c @ lb; Oregon, none; Eastern do, 16@17c.

EGGS—California, at 40@45c @ lb; Eastern unquestioned Breakfast, 1 dozen, 40c; do clear, 35@37½c.

LARD—California in bulk, 12½@13c @ lb; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, in tcs, 11@13½c; do in cases, 14@15c; do in kegs, 11@c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 7@8c; second quality, table @ lb.

VEAL—5@7½c @ lb.

MUTTON—At 8@9c @ lb.

LAMB—10@12c @ lb.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 5@7c; corn fed or fattened, 4@5c @ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Alive, 19@19½c; dressed, 18c @ lb.

HENS—Large, 75@$1 each.

CHICKENS—Large, 62½@75c each.

DUCKS—Tame, 75@$1 each; Mallard, 75@$1; Wild Ducks, Small to Small Ducks, 50c.

GEESE—Tame, $1 50 each.

RABBITS—10c each.

PIGEONS—Tame, $1 50@1 @ doz.

QUAIL—$1 75@2 @ dozen.

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

HENS—Large, 75@$1 each.

CHICKENS—Large, 62½@75c each.

DUCKS—Tame, 75@$1 each; Mallard, 75@$1; Wild Ducks, Small to Small Ducks, 50c.

GEESE—Tame, $1 50 each.

RABBITS—10c each.

PIGEONS—Tame, $1 50@1 @ doz.

QUAIL—$1 75@2 @ dozen.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,
DIRECT IMPORTERS OF
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
DRY GOODS,
116 and 118 Third Street,
Corner of Minna ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ ONE PRICE ONLY. ☜
au 17

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
French, English and American
FANCY AND STAPLE
DRY GOODS.
New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.
NO. 4 THIRD STREET,
Near Market Street ..... SAN FRANCISCO
au

A NOBLE RECORD.
THE GREATEST TRIUMPHS OF THE AGE HAVE BEEN ACHIEVED BY THE PIANOS

OF HALLET, DAVIS & CO.,
(Boston),
Over Twenty Thousand of which are now in use, and daily receiving the unqualified indorsement
OF
THE LEADING PIANISTS IN THE WORLD.
☞ EXQUISITE FINISH, BEAUTY OF DESIGN, SWEETNESS OF TONE, DELIGHTFUL TOUCH and WONDERFUL DURABILITY, are among the features which cause all competent judges to proclaim the noble Instruments of
HALLET, DAVIS & CO.
Superior to all Others Manufactured either in America or Europe.
☞ Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere.
W. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,
No. 13 Sansome Street,
NEAR SUTTER ..... SAN FRANCISCO.

DRY GOODS, ETC.

$50,000 WORTH
OF
BLACK SILKS
Bought for Cash
IN NEW YORK
DURING THE LATE FAILURES,
JUST RECEIVED
AND
NOW OFFERED FOR SALE AT
AT
THE WHITE HOUSE!
3,000 yards at $1 25 per yard;
Worth $2 50 per yard.
1,000 yards at $1 50 per yard;
Usual price $2 75.
3,000 yards at $1 75 per yard;
Regular price, $3 00.
3,000 yards at $2 per yard;
Good value at $3 50.
5,000 yards at $2 25 per yard;
Cost to import, $3 75.
THE ABOVE GOODS
ARE, WITHOUT EXCEPTION,
The Cheapest Lot
OF
BLACK SILKS
EVER OFFERED
IN
San Francisco.
J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,
N. W. Cor. Kearny and Post Sts.
oc 4-tf

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF
DRY GOODS!
Complete in Every Department,
We are now prepared to supply our customers with
The Best and Cheapest Goods
In the City. Among which are—
Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Cretons,
Cashmeres,
Merinos,
Serges, Repe, Etc.
A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF
SHAWLS.
RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.
☞ IRISH TATTING sold to the trade at a liberal discount.
Thankful to our friends and the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
706 MARKET STREET,
OPPOSITE THIRD ..... SAN FRANCISCO.
au11

FALL IMPORTATION!
Woolen Hosiery,
NEW DESIGNS.
GENT'S FURNISHING GOODS,
LATEST STYLES.
RIBBONS AND MILLINERY GOODS.
LACES
AND EMBROIDERIES.
ALSO
LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
AND WHITE GOODS.
FOR SALE BY
TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.
oc7-3m

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIPIFAX

PERPETUAL YOUTH WAS THE FOUNTAIN WHICH INDUCE DE LEON AND THE CHIVALROUS SPANIARDS SOUGHT, THAT THERE IS MORE YOUTH FOR THE HUMAN FAMILY THAN IS ENJOYED, THERE IS NO DOUBT. IT IS NO FABLE THAT MEN HAVE LIVED TO OVER A CENTURY AND A HALF. THE TRUE SECRET OF PHYSICAL AND MENTAL POWER IS VITAL ELECTRICITY IN THE NERVES, WHICH IS IMPARTED BY THE DYNAMIC AND PSYCHOLOGIC FORCE OF HERBS CONTAINED IN
PIPIFAX.
IT ESTABLISHES THE MAGNETIC AVARM FORCES IN THE SYSTEM, AND DRIVES VITAL ELECTRICITY ON THE BRAIN AND THE CEREBRAL NERVES.
PIPIFAX
IMPROVES THE COMPLEXION AND GENERAL APPEARANCE, AND RELIEVES FATIGUE. PARTIES USING IT SELDOM LOOK SO OLD AS THEY REALLY ARE, AND ARE PECULIARLY EXEMPT FROM MALARIOUS DISEASES.
PIPIFAX
Passes through the blood, carries off by perspiration and other ordinary channels the effete and injurious materials of the body. It is soothing, alterative and deliberative. Used systematically and regularly, it will prevent any serious disorder arising from the presence of impurities or obstructions in the system, and thoroughly tones the constitution of diseases, and removes vitiated matter which has become noxious but injurious. No other remedy has ever been introduced which combines in such extraordinary degree the principles of medicine and tonic. Try it, and be convinced. The wondrous transformation in appearance and health will astonish you.
PIPIFAX
Adds magnetism to the gastric juice and gives energy to the brain through the sympathetic nerves, and corrects the evil tendencies of the stomach and liver, and purifies the blood.
PIPIFAX
Does your food imperfectly digest? Are you troubled with headache? Are you debilitated and languid? Is your liver torpid?
USE PIPIFAX.
This famous tonic is used always as beverage, and is very refreshing and delightful to the taste. Sold by all druggists and dealers.

THE FIRST MEDAL
AT THE
VIENNA EXPOSITION,
BRING THE HIGHEST RECOMPENSE FOR REED ORGANS OF ANY CLASS, AND FROM ALL COUNTRIES, HAS BEEN AWARDED THE

MASON & HAMLIN
Cabinet Organs,
BY THE CONCURRENCE OF THE Special Jury, International Jury, and two Sub-Juries, including the most Eminent Artists and Experts from different countries. It is significant that in competition with these, other American organs were not found worthy of even a diploma.
KOHLER, CHASE & CO., Agents.
833 and 835 Clay Street.
oc spit

BACON & COMPANY'S BOOK & JOB PRINTERS SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
PRINTING
Paper Ruling and Book Binding,
Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply,
PERFORMED BY
Bacon & Company,
Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.
☞ Country Orders will receive equal promptness and attention as those from our city patrons. ☜

TOYS CHEAP!
F. Golson,
836 Third street ..... Between Silver and Tyler
BRANCH STORE,
106 Second Street, corner of Howard.
☞ GREENBACKS taken at par.
oc10

SITUATION WANTED.—A YOUNG IRISH man, lately arrived from the old country, would like a situation in some office or store; has had a good classical and English education, and is not afraid of work of any kind where he can be useful; would take charge of a school, or give private lessons in Latin (Greek or French. Address "HIBERNICUS," this office.

THE MONITOR.

The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

LYONS & BARRY, - - - - Publishers.

DENIS LYONS. JOHN V. BARRY.

RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—626 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Rooms 2, 3 and 4, up-stairs.

☞ All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

Served by Carriers, per week..... 10c
Mail subscribers, per year..... $4 00
Six months..... 2 25
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year..... $ 7 00
" " " Godey's Lady's Book..... 7 25
" " " Demorest's Fashion Magazine 6 50
" " " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine.... 5 00

ADVERTISING RATES:

Square, 1 time.....$1 50 | 1 square, 3 months..$10 00
" 1 month.....4 00 | 3 months..12 00
" 2 months.....7 00 | 6 months..24 00
" 3 months.....9 00 | 1 year.....35 00

☞ The above rates will be strictly adhered to.☜

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

Written for THE MONITOR.

THE "MATER MISERICORDIÆ"

The world doth rear its stately domes,
Its palaces of pride,
Where wit and beauty find their homes,
And pomp and power reside—
There rank and wealth fall proudly reign,
There pleasure keeps its state—
There gathers oft a goodly train.
The lofty and the great.

But I have seen a grander hall,
A humble shelter far,
Where holiness beauty decks the wall
And rarest treasures are.
'Tis "Mater Misericordiæ's" Home—
The Mercy's hall of state—
Where rule and pride the courting dame,
The rulers truly great.

The lowly handmaids of the King,
The Spouses of the Lamb,
Their sweet dominion blither bring,
Their easy reign and calm.
Sisters of Mercy—sisters sweet—
Your gentle realm is here,
Where Virtue findeth safe retreat
From peril and from fear.

Aye, here the precious charge ye take,
The tender watch and ward,
And fondly, for the Master's sake,
His treasures here ye guard.
Hands for the homeless!—kind repose
For weary pilgrim feet—
Safe shelter where the desert blows
With dewless noonday heat.

Sweet words of comfort, teachings kind,
To guide through Life's dark way—
Blest stores of the rest beyond,
The bright, eternal day.
There sits the precious boon ye bring,
The treasures ye bestow,
O gentle handmaids of the King,
His mission'd love to show!

Ah! richest bestows shall fall,
In softest manna rain,
On Mercy's Hiram—grateful hall—
On Mercy's subject-train.
'Neath "Mater Misericordiæ's" love
Your realm shall e'er be blest,
And Peace shall brood, as snowy dove,
Within her quiet nest.

MARIE.

"The Mater Misericordiæ" is the beautiful and appropriate name for the Home for females of good character who are out of employment or deprived of a safe shelter at home. The sole institution is under the charge of the Sisters of Mercy, and is situated between the St. Mary's Hospital and the Home for Aged and Infirm Females," corner of Fell and Bryant streets. The above lines were written with the object of aiding, as far as the writer's humble ability will permit, this truly noble and benevolent undertaking of the devoted Sisters of Mercy. The House is a spacious building, containing many rooms, dormitories, dining rooms, kitchen, &c. Here the inmates are taught dress making, also sewing (both by hand and machines), knowledge of indeed all kinds of housework. A quantity of ready-made clothing and articles of needlework is put constantly on hand, and offered for sale at very reasonable prices. Orders for work are earnestly solicited, and must be this noble institution will be most sufficiently interesting to repay the journey thither; and the least assistance, either by purchasing articles, bringing work, or inducing others by a word to extend to it their orders for work, and thus encourage the industry of the inmates, will be rendered most gratefully by the good Sisters, and ill merit the rich recompense promised by the Divine Master in those who give even the widow's mite, "the cup of cold water" in His name.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 28, 1873. MARIE.

TRIBUTE OF AFFECTION TO THE LATE MARY MANNERSON.

another form is added to the glittering choir above, another angel revels in the Saviour's tender love;
unsullied is he from our view has closed its leaden bright.
o bloom in fadeless beauty in the Virgin's crown of he was too pure, too beautiful, to linger longer here, herth's cankers may not keep the grass in heaven fair

and dear;
her spirit, like the prison'd bird, was pining to be free,
n soar amid the seraph bands and praise the glorious
Three.

nd when the dark death angel came, to waft her soul away,
he, smiling, trod the shadow-vale that leads to realms of day;
ah, ah! true grief was none when they told us she was dead—
ur Eden-home was desolate, its light and joy had fled.

let, when we stood beside the bier whereon our day
ling slept,
her smile clustered with mystic light the tears that pursue kept;
nd while those wondrous beams were shed upon the angel's halo,
peace hung her bright unfolding bow upon the clouds
of pain.

Earth! to thee we give the clay that hid our fly-
bloom;
hard fondly, then, its casket fair, O dark and silent
tomb!
ay Heaven's bright, unclouded rays forever gild her grave,
Where fragrant blossoms of the vale in fairest beauty
wave;
et the cypress chant her requiem, the violet
mourners be,
or we must cherish our bitter grief and bow, O God,
to Thee.

farewell, then, darling Mary! To the Saviour's will we bow,
or at His sacred feet, we feel, thou'rt pleading for us
now;
y lustrous crown was early won—tried folds thine to
His breast;
h! may we share thy perfect joy, thy glad, eternal rest.

CHILDREN OF NOTRE DAME.
MARYSVILLE, December 29, 1873.

A BEAUTIFUL PREMIUM.

—We will furnish THE MONITOR and DEMOREST'S MAGAZINE for $3 50. This will include the magnificent premium, "Old Oaken Bucket," after Jerome Thompson, the retail price of which is about $10. It is 17½ by 24 inches in size. The money must in each case accompany the order, else no head will be paid to it.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1874. NO. 11.

COLLEGE OF THE SACRED HEART.

Its Dedication Last Sunday Afternoon.

The dedication of the Sacred Heart College on Eddy street, corner of Larkin, took place on Sunday, December 28th, with imposing ceremonies. At an early hour in the afternoon the building was thronged with people who occupied themselves variously in examining the facilities it affords respecting rooms and light and ventilation, and the conclusion arrived at justified the promises that had been made by the Christian Brothers that they would erect a Catholic school building which would be a credit to the community.

Although the edifice has been described in THE MONITOR on a former occasion, yet it may not be amiss at the present time and in this connection, to repeat a brief description. The building is in the shape of an "L," with a frontage of 133 feet 4 inches on Eddy street, and 134 feet 5 inches on Larkin street. It is situated a few blocks from the New City Hall. It is a four-story frame structure, with two entrances from Eddy street. The architecture is mostly of the Corinthian order, and from the middle of the front corridor an arched moulding has been erected, the center surmounted by a large cross. In the rear of each story, overlooking a yard, there is a broad piazza, extending the entire length of the building, on both sides of the "L." The lower story contains the kitchen, refectory, bathrooms, storehouses, etc. In the Larkin street wing there are five large class rooms, 50x35, in each of the upper stories. The class rooms are connected by a door, and each room communicates directly with the hall, so that they may be used separately. At every landing there is a coil of two-inch hose, connected with a faucet, so that in case of fire the building may be flooded with water in three minutes.

At half past three the College was delicately by Archbishop Alemany (assisted by the Very Rev. Father Croke and Father Harrington and Prendergast), with the solemn rites of the Catholic Church. The procession of priests, acolytes and Christian Brothers then proceeded to the main hall of the building. The following named clergymen and laymen were present: Archbishop Alemany, Rev. Fathers Croke, Harrington, Northwood, Gallagher, Scanlan, Gallagher, Cullen, Caldwell, Durham, Coyle, Vincent, Gleason, Rev. Fathers Nattini and Maraina of the Society of Jesus, Brother Justin, Hon. Eugene Casserly, ex Governor Peter H. Burnett, D. J. Oliver, Judges Ryland and Rankin, of San José, John Kelly, Jr., Michel O'Connor, Daniel T. Murphy, and ex-Sheriff P. J. White.

The Archbishop made a few remarks expressing his pleasure at beholding such a large attendance, as it proved that the doctrine of religious education had many firm adherents in these days of religious indifferentism and infidelity. He referred with pride to the alacrity with which the Catholics of San Francisco had responded to his appeal for aid on behalf of the noble undertaking, the second Christian Brother's College in the diocese.

Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, then delivered the following address:

Address of Rev. Brother Justin.

Most Rev. Archbishop, Rev. Fathers, Ladies and Gentlemen: Let me congratulate you on what we have just witnessed, the blessing of God on the accomplishment of a good work, a peculiarly great need, indeed, necessary work in our day. The march of intellect, the developments of science, the unearthing of hidden treasures, are but things that attract much attention in this generation. If they are attended in such a way as to elevate man and bring him nearer to God, they are worthy of all praise: if not, they are no indication of real advancement, true greatness or lasting prosperity. But, my friends, the work before us,

THIS BEAUTIFUL TEMPLE, DEDICATED TO RELIGION

And science, to the education of the whole man—this is your work, a monument of your faith and devotedness. Truly, nobly, have you contributed for its erection. It was my privilege to accompany his Grace the Most Rev. Archbishop and several of the reverend clergy present, to solicit your sub scriptions; and it is with the most sincere sentiments of admiration and gratitude that I bear testimony to your generosity. Everywhere, I may say, were we received with a kindness and heartiness that gave evidence of your liberal and enlightened zeal in the cause of Christian education.

The work of the collector for religious purposes is anything but agreeable. In these utilitarian days money is looked upon as a great power. Few realize that it is a gift of God. When the collector meets with rich men who realize the fact that they are God's agents for the good of their fellow-men, and who, in consequence, not only give freely, but love to give according to their means, he is cheered in his work. He feels that charity sheds her golden rays around, brightening the pathway of life. His Grace will bear witness that such was the character of nearly all those in collecting for this institution. Thank God, and thank the generous contributors, the work is completed. True, there is some debt remaining, but that is owing to the collectors being discontinued, not to any want of liberality on your part. In a short time I believe there will not be a cent due on the Sacred Heart College.

Some may ask, and indeed have asked, "What is the use of such a school as this? Have we not schools enough, and filled up with all modern improvements?" We have fine schools and an admirable system, and to those who are satisfied with the schools and the system, as at present constituted, I have nothing to say. We, however, believe that God has spoken to man—has given him a law, a religion; has clearly defined its principles, has established a supreme tribunal—an infallible Church whose decisions are final on all questions that may arise as to the proper understanding of His law. He has made it obligatory on parents and pastors either to teach it to their children or have it taught to them. As the Emanuel, He submitted to it at His circumcision; He taught it on the hill-tops and in the valleys of Judea, on the sea-shore and in the basket, in the synagogues and in the temples; and, finally, on Calvary, where He sealed it with His blood. He declared that those who do not believe it and practice it, too, shall be condemned. This law is hard—it is difficult to live up to it at all times and on all occasions, for it requires the highest purity and the most stern fidelity in the discharge of our duty to God and our fellow-man. It knows of no equivocation, and will admit of no excuse for its violation. It is, then, evident that a law so established, so clearly defined, so solemnly sealed, must not be taught as an opinion—as a something good and useful, but not necessary. As till lately else God could not have so acted were it a matter of little consequence. We bend it to be

A MATTER OF ETERNAL LIFE OR ETERNAL DEATH.

The highest authority for us on earth in all matters appertaining to salvation has decided that this law, our holy religion, cannot with safety be separated from education. This is the reason we are not, and, without some modifications, never can be, satisfied with the present school system. Some of our fellow citizens may say, "We are [illegible] much attached to our religion as you are to yours. We are fully as conscientious as you are, and yet we are satisfied that there is religion enough in the schools as they now exist." Exactly so; there is religion enough in the schools, as they now exist, for some. I believe the people who hold this language are honest, honorable and well-meaning. They would have a uniform system. They think it is the best way of preserving and perpetuating our free institutions. We don't think so. All the religion they want is taught in the schools. We have no fight, and, indeed, no intimation to interfere with them in the education they think proper to give their children. This other business. Nor they have no right to interfere with us in the education we want to give ours. They have no right to compel us to support a system repugnant to our right to worship God according to the dictates of our conscience. God has given us this right, the Constitution of our country guarantees us this right, and no man of body of men can justly take this right from us. We are all equal before the law. The State has no right to teach religion. Indeed, it does not presume to teach it. It guarantees freedom of conscience to all its citizens. This is its profession—the principle on which our Revolutionary fathers fought and won the battle of Independence. "No taxation without representation" was their motto. We are taxed against our will to support a system which is in direct violation of our dearest rights, the inalienable right of the parent to educate his child in his own religion.

I know very well some will say we are narrow-minded. They may say worse; but they are mistaken. Whether we are right or wrong—whether our religion is true or false, that is our own business. We alone are responsible, and as long as it does not cause us to violate the law, it is entitled to the same respect as any other professed in the land. Let us look at

THE QUESTION FROM A BUSINESS POINT OF VIEW.

And see how it will appear. If one of these people should call at your store and tell you he wanted some woolen goods, and you should say, "I will give you something better than woolen goods, sir; here are some first class linen goods." "Linen goods! I don't want linen goods, sir." "Nonsense, man! you don't know what's good for you. I and my family and friends have always used linen goods, and I tell you they are the best." "That may be, sir, as far as you are concerned; but my doctor, in whom I have the most implicit confidence, says they would ruin my family." "Get out, sir! your doctor is a quack, and you are a fool. You are opposed to our free institutions if you do not buy my linen goods."

But at least we are narrow-minded on this question of education? No, not in the least. We are liberal-minded! Then were the fathers of the Constitution narrow-minded; then is God himself narrow-minded! But we are opposed to education! We are opposed to education! We have expended on this coast within the last twenty years over $4,000,000 in the glorious cause of Christian education. It is my happiness to belong to a society established two hundred years ago by a French priest. The sole object of this society is education. It numbers 10,000 members. No one can obtain full membership in it unless he takes a solemn oath, a vow that he will devote himself for life to this noble work. He is to receive no salary—merely a support. I need not say there are many such societies in the Church. Does this look as if we were opposed to education? No, we love education. We have ever loved it, and ever will love it. But we hold there is no true education separated from religion. We hold that man has no right to sunder what God has put together. If you separate the soul from the body, you inevitably cause death; if you separate religion from education, you as inevitably cause spiritual death, and sooner or later bring about a state of society too horrible to contemplate.

When other objections fail, then it is our religion that is at fault. It is, we are told,

INCOMPATIBLE WITH FREE INSTITUTIONS.

Our religion needs no defense. It is not of yesterday. It arose with creation, and will exist only when time is no more. It is the parent of poets, orators, statesmen and warriors. Some of the greatest geniuses the world has ever seen have bowed down most submissively and reverently before it. It lay in the fires of liberty throughout the Christian world; it has stricken the shackles from the slave; it has given us our civilization; it has preserved the arts and sciences, and blessed us with innumerable other gifts. Yet we are told that it is opposed to free institutions; that it is, in fact, un-American. O! holy religion! lovely creation of God, thou art opposed to anything that is good. Like thy Author, thou art for all climes, times and peoples. It was an appeal to thy hallowing influence that brought America into civil existence; and it is to thy principles that America owes her freedom, prosperity and grandeur. We will be told this is false. What of that. It is like telling me our faith is false and that we are idolators; but we are as firm in our belief of those things as are the rocks in their eternal fastnesses.

Finally, we are unpatriotic; we would build up a foreign system in this beautiful land. Build up a foreign system in our own country! I would indignantly answer whoever would dare make so base and villainous a charge, that it is foully and utterly false. The history of the country answers for our fidelity to principle and for our loyalty and heroism in the hour of peril. "It is both foolish and wicked," says Guerra Smith in his late statesman-like letter, "to tax Catholics with bad motives in regard to the school question. It is the old story of the wolf's complaint of the lamb roiling the stream. He ashamed," he continued, "consider who they are whom you persecute. They are your country-men, as patriotic as yourselves. On many a field they have mingled their blood with yours."

During our late, unhappy civil war I lived in Utica, N. Y. Just after the close of the contest a minister called on one of our wealthy citizens. "Mr. B——," said he, "we must start an association to put down those Catholics; they are growing quite numerous." "I grant you, sir," said Mr. B——, "that they are growing quite numerous; but if you count on me to persecute them, you are very much mistaken. Whether the Catholics go to heaven or hell is none of my business; but this I know, that during the war the Catholics did their duty, their whole duty, to the country; and that when and while certain ministers preached partisan politics and sectionalism in their pulpits, the Catholic clergy, to their credit, never [illegible] and faithfully before any intelligent, good man, without at least commanding his respect. Fair play is our national characteristic. We are and have been misunderstood by many really good men on this very important question of education. Frequently on telling some of our friends that we've in

FAVOR OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS,

They appeared to be surprised. They could scarcely realize the fact that we are both willing and anxious to put our schools under State control; that we want no breaking up of the present school system or school fund; that the same superintendent, the same inspectors, the same examiners, would still control our schools; and that we are ready to comply with the law in every particular, stipulating only that we teach our own children the principles of our religion. Simply this, and nothing more. I am quite sure the great mass of our non-Catholic fellow citizens can find nothing objectionable in this. Mr. Smith, whom I have already quoted, says on this subject "All admit the paramount right of parents to control the education of their children. The meddling of the State with the school is an impertinence little less than meddling with the Church. It is not extravagant to say that the Government is no more entitled to a voice in the school than in the Church. Both are, or ought to be, religious institutions, and in the one particular that the average scholar is more plastic and docile than the average church member, the school has greatly the advantage over the church. When Catholics in Ireland were compelled to support the Church of England, all Americans sympathized with them; but is not the oppression of our school system the same in principle?"

Let me suppose, for a moment, that we were in a majority in this country and that we taxed our fellow-citizens of all and denominations to support a school system in which the principles of our religion were taught, and that to those who would say "This is not fair; we don't want our children schooled in your religion," we should say, "the system is good; the schools suit us. If they don't suit you, send your children to private schools." Would our fellow-citizens feel that was right? Certainly not.

We will be told there is no religion taught in the common schools. It is not of religion in the schools that we complain. It is its absence. We hold that any religion is better than no religion. That the system as at present conducted is injurious to us, and that it is so regarded by a certain class, I need only refer to what has been boastingly said by some ministers at late public meetings on the school question in the East. "Our public school system," says one, "has liberated 6,000,000 Catholics from Rome." This I do not believe, but that it has destroyed the faith of great numbers of our children is, I am sorry to say, but too true; still I must confess I was extremely surprised to hear of ministers boasting of this fact. They knew, if they knew anything, that these children became infidels, and as such were really the most dangerous members of society. Would the great mass of our non-Catholic fellow-citizens indorse the position of these men? I believe they would not, for I have an abiding faith in the honor and honesty of our fellow-citizens. We, my friends, are

NOT ALONE IN OUR VIEWS

Of education without religion. Very many distinguished men, both lay and clerical, agree with us. Mr. Disraeli, in his address when installed, a few weeks ago, as Lord Rector of the Glasgow University, said, "The spiritual nature of man is stronger than laws or constitutions. No Government can last that does not recognize that principle, and no legislation endures which does not flow from this fountain; nor is there, as some would teach you, anything in religious convictions that tends to contract intelligence or our sympathies; on the contrary, religion invigorates the intellect and expands the heart. He who has a due sense of his relation to his God is best qualified to fulfill his duties to his fellow-man."

Some suppose that mere intellectual culture makes one moral. There are few men living who have given more thought to the science of the mind than Herbert Spencer, and he tells us that intellectual development does not tend to make men moral. Guizot says religious instruction should never be separated from secular education. I might cite in support of this view several distinguished Protestant divines, and prominently among them Bishop Porter, but time will not permit. I cite these authorities, not to show our cause was right. On that point we have no misgivings. Our Holy Father, the illustrious Pius IX., has settled the question for us. I merely cite them to show what statesmen, scientists and philanthropists say on the subject.

It may be asked what are the advantages to society from the religious system of education? Security of person and property, good government and the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions. How is this to be effected? Let the child be taught that he is destined to live a life of eternal happiness; that the grandest prospects are before him; that his fondest hopes will be more than realized; that he will enjoy the utmost liberty and the most absolute security in the possession of all he can possibly desire, and that the object of life in this world is to prepare for the happiness to come; that God, who is infinitely good and powerful, has promised all this, and is most anxious to give it. The title to this, and the only title for the reasoning being, is the observance of the law of God. Let the law be explained to him by proper authority and its observance enjoined, not as a matter of little or no importance, but as the one thing necessary, the great object of his life. Let religious impressions penetrate his entire being. Let him know that God has absolute dominion over him, and that no excuse will be taken for his non compliance with the part he has to play in the drama of life.

SIN IS INDEED THE GREATEST OF ALL EVILS!

That it is the vilest of all things, the absence of every principle of justice and religion; that it alone can blight all his glorious prospects, wither his noble aspirations, deprive him of his heaven-born inheritance and send him forth a degraded outcast from the face of his God forever. May not this be going too far? Is not such a system calculated to corrupt the mind and to destroy freedom of thought? Not at all. Thought, or Reason as we will call it in this case, is the light that God has given us; and when not clouded or swayed by passion, recognizes its author and submits most respectfully to his decrees. The Eternal, seeing His likeness unsullied, smiles upon it, encourages it and acknowledges it as his own. For to those who believe in Him, He gives power to become His sons. Can the child of such a Father be a slave, a coward or a traitor? His thoughts are higher than the heavens and broader than the universe. He has the vastest fields for enterprise and progress. He is, if faithful to the principles of his religion, unselfish, generous and brave. Naturally patriotic, he is ready to give his life for his country at the call of duty; and what a country my friends! It is because we desire to see its grand institutions perpetuated, as well as for the higher motives of eternal salvation, that, like Hannibal, we would take our young Hannibals to the altar of religion and there make them swear fidelity to God and their country. How can they do this without faith and morality? And how can they have faith and morality unless they are taught?

"Pshaw!" says a large body of honest, liberal-minded men, "that morality is necessary—and religion, too, if you please—but let us have it on a broad basis on which we can all agree; let us have a few general principles." General principles mean all things and mean nothing in religion. They lead first to indifference, and then insensibly to infidelity. Too law of God changes not; it is, like Himself, immutable. We hold that it requires a religious system, which is a positive system. It starts with a fixed object; it has well-defined ideas, and it knows that it can and does carry them out. It expands the mind, it expands the heart and gives to the will the firmness necessary to control passion, and thus enable it to overcome

THE OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF ITS ETERNAL DESTINY.

Its mission begins at the baptismal font, regenerating the babe in Christ; it watches over the first development of his reason and directs him heavenward; in manhood it moderates him in prosperity and cheers him in adversity; it keeps vigil by his side when friends have abandoned him; it is the sure refuge of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

Will we or will we not educate our children in this way? Will we neglect to open to them the fountains of eternal truth? Will we not try every means in our power to impress upon their youthful hearts the absolute necessity of living up to their religion? All their hopes in life and death depend upon it; and, I repeat, will we, through a false view of liberty, prove traitors alike to our God, our children and our country? No! A thousand times No! We have but begun. In a few years, with the help of God, we will have a thoroughly complete system of Christian education from California to Maine, and from the Polar Sea to the Gulf of Mexico.

A. WALDTEUFEL,

BAY MUSIC HALL,

FIRST STREET.....SAN JOSE.

Importer, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

CATHOLIC BOOKS

PICTURES AND ORNAMENTS,

Miscellaneous Books and Stationery.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS;
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS;
HAYNES BROS. PIANOS;
HERDEFF CELEST ORGANS;
MASON & HARLIN'S ORGANS.

Always on hand a large assortment of the above named celebrated Instruments.

☞ Liberal discount to the Rev. Clergy and Catholic Schools. Orders promptly attended to. myl9-17

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

SENTINELS ON DUTY.

It was four o'clock when the French party reached the fortress. They were admitted and received with much interest. Through the silence of the night the sound of mastekry had reached the fort in a fitful manner, and the consciousness that comrades were actually engaged so short a distance produced deep anxiety in the breasts of the guard. As the little band entered they were assailed with questions and remarks.

"What has happened?" "You are all pter mud." "Any wounded?" "What has become of the Prussians?"

These and a thousand other questions were poured into the ears of the expeditionary party. Their appearance was certainly calculated to excite surprise, if not admiration. Most of them even to their faces were covered with mud; they bore an air of extreme fatigue; two had slight wounds, one with a cheek grazed and the other an arm hurt. But there was through all an evident consciousness of achievement which took from them the forlorn look that so often goes with soldiers in their condition.

"Well, gentlemen," said Mike Mahony, who was perfectly ready to answer any questions, "the supper was spoiled but the investment was commenced. Some of them Prussians will remember it as long as they live."

Michel had commenced a more precise account, when the commandant himself appeared in the guard-room. The brave officer was restless and uneasy until he had heard the result of the nocturnal raid. Michel gave him a detailed and formal report of their proceedings, and as the commandant listened his joy sparkled, and unconsciously was indulged in regard military enthusiasm in rather a cynical respect. When told of Michel's adventure and the commission required of him, he bluntly said to the commandant that he thought it was sending him on a fool's errand. He was, however, too thorough a soldier to dream of really disobeying the command.

"Hallos, Sergeant Munchausen, are you there?" he cried as Michel knocked at the door. "Have you a balloon ready to transport us to the scene of this battle in the clouds?"

Michel smiled good humoredly. "Walking will suit me better, monsieur."

"I'm afraid it has been found practicable by a lot of those fellows you slew this morning."

"Many of the Prussians, I know, went away, monsieur, last enough, but I think a good many of them, if they are gone, did not go without help."

"Then you think they are all departed, dead and alive?"

"The Prussians always carry off their dead and wounded at the first opportunity."

"Taen I am, I suppose, to go and see the place where a lot of Prussians might have been slain?"

"Monsieur, I am at your orders."

"Good-bowled it, is I who is effet am at yours."

"Pardon, monsieur—"

"Come along, and let me have the details of the romance by lighten the way."

Michel now was pretty nearly the same the party traversed during the night, the actual distance being increased by the detour made to avoid the village of Nogent. It was already broad day when they approached Brie. With habitual caution, Michel listened for any sound that might indicate the presence of the enemy. None was heard save the whinnying of a horse. Taking advantage of some inequalities and projections he soon succeeded up to the scene of combat, followed by the officer.

An ejaculation escaped the latter. "What the deuce has all these horses?" he exclaimed, pointing to the carcasses which, dead and dying, filled the road way.

"Then friends have abandoned him; it is always of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

"Parbleu! And where are the men?"

"As I said, monsieur is Capsiene, the Prussians always carry off their dead and wounded at the first opportunity."

"Well, no doubt, the horses could not be slain and the men not."

"I think so, monsieur."

"And, in the name of heavse, how many horses are there? Twenty, twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five, forty—why there are fifty at least?"

"Quite that, monsieur."

"That staggers me! Sergeant, I will not call you Munchausen any more, but a very brave and capable fellow."

"I am very grateful to you, monsieur."

"I shall report to the commandant what I have seen, and express my opinion that the tale of your exploits has not been in the smallest degree exaggerated."

Michel bowed his acknowledgments, and

THE MONITOR:

The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

LYONS & BARRY, - - - - Publishers.

DENIS LYONS. JOHN V. BARRY.

RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—620 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Booths 2, 7 and 8, up-stairs.

☞ All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

Served by Carriers, per week.....10c
Mail Subscribers, per year.....$4 00
Six months.....2 25
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year.....$ 7 75
" " " Lindsey's Lady's Book.....8 75
" " " Demorest's Fashion Magazine 8 50
" " " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine.....8 00

ADVERTISING RATES:

Square, 1 Day.....$1 50 | 1 square, 6 months.....$10 00
" 1 month.....4 00 | " 9 months.....12 00
" 2 months.....7 00 | " 6 months.....14 00
" 3 months.....9 00 | " 1 year.....15 00

☞ The above rates will be strictly adhered to.☜

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

Written for THE MONITOR.

THE "MATER MISERICORDIÆ."*

The world doth rear its stately domes,
In pomp of pride,
Where sin and beauty find their homes,
And pomp and power abide;
There rank and wealth full proudly reign,
There Pleasure has perfumed her fane,
There gathers oft a goodly train,
The lofty and the great.

But I have seen a grander hall,
A mansion fairer far,
Where infinite beauty decks the wall
And rarer treasures are.
'Tis "Mater Misericordiæ" Home—
The Mercy's hall of state—
Where reign, beneath its soothing dome,
The rulers truly great.

The lowly handmaids of the King,
The spouses of the Lamb,
Their sweet dominion hither bring,
Their way-worn forms and calm.
Sisters of Mercy—rulers sweet—
Your gentle realm is here,
Where Virtue finds its safe retreat,
From peril and from fear.

Aye, here the precious charge ye take,
The tender waifs and wan!
And fondly, for the Master's sake,
His orphans nay ye guard.
Home for the homeless!—blest repose
For weary pilgrim feet—
Safe shelter when the desert glows
With fiercest noontide heat.

Sweet words of comforts, teaching kind,
To guide through Life's rare way—
Blest glimpses of the rest beyond,
The bright, eternal day.
Thence are the priceless hopes ye bring,
The treasures ye bestow,
O gentle handmaids of the King,
His ministers below.

Ah! richest bestions shall fall,
In softest manna rain,
On Mercy's Hiaven—guarded hall—
On Mercy's subject train.
"Neath "Mater Misericordiæ" hire
Your realm shall ever be blest,
And Peace shall brood, as snowy dove,
Within her quiet nest.

MAGIE.

*"The Mater Misericordiæ" is the beautiful and appropriate name for the Home for females of good character who are out of employment or deprived of the safe shelter of home. This noble mansion refers to the charity of the mystery of Mercy, and is situated between the St. Mary's Hospital building and the Home for Aged and Infirm Females," corner of First and Bryant streets. The above lines were written with the object of aiding, as far as the writer's humble ability will permit, this truly noble and benevolent institution of the devoted Sisters of Mercy. The Home is a spacious building, containing many rooms, dormitories, dining rooms, kitchen, &c. Here the inmates are taught or drew making, fine sewing (both by hand and machines), ironing, and indeed all kinds of household work. A quantity of well-made clothing and articles of needlework is for constantly on hand, and offered for sale at very reasonable prices. Orders for work are earnestly solicited. A visit to this noble institution will be found sufficiently interesting to repay the journey either; and the kind assistance, either by purchasing articles, bringing work, or inducing others by a "word in season" to give orders for work, and thus lightens the industry of the inmates, will be entertained most gratefully by the good Sisters, and it surely the rich recompense promised by the tender Master to those who give even the "widow's mite," the "cup of cold water" in His name.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 29, 1873.

MAGIE.

BIBUTE OF AFFECTION TO THE LATE MARY MASTERSON.

Mother form is added to the glittering choir above,
Her angel revels in the Saviour's tender love;
Bright shines bliss from our view has closed its fearful
bright.
Bloom in fadeless beauty in the Virgin's crown of light.

e was too pure, too beautiful, to linger longer here,
rth's caress may not keep the gems to heaven fair
and dear;
r spirit, like the prison'd bird, was pining to be free,
now amid the seraph bands and praise the glorious
Three.

d when the dark death angel came, to waft her soul away,
smiling, trod the shadow-vale that leads to
realms of day;
ad what grief was ours when they told us she
was dead!
r Redeemer was desolate, its light and joy had fled.

, when we stood beside the bier wherein our dear
one slept,
r souls inundated with mystic light the tears that sorrow wept!
e white those wondrous beams were shed upon the anguish rain,
do long her bright unfading bow upon the clouds
of pain.

earth! to thee we give the clay that hid our lily-
bloom;
ad hostly, thou, its casket fair, O dark and silent
tomb!
Heaven's bright, enclouded rays forever gild
her grave,
are fragrant blossoms of the vale to fairest beauty
wave;
the seraphs chant her requiem, the wholes mourners to,
we most check our bitter grief and bow, O God,
to Thee.

well, then, darling Mary! To the Saviour's will
we bow,
at His sacred feet, we feel, thou'rt pleading for us
now;
fadeless crown was early won—God folds thee in
His breast!
may we share thy perfect joy, thy glad, eternal
rest.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME, }
OAKLAND, December 29, 1873. }

BEAUTIFUL PREMIUM.—We will furnish THE MONITOR and DEMOREST'S MAGAZINE for one year for $4 50. This will include the magnificent premium, "THE CHROMO BOOKLET," after Jerome Thompson, the retail price of which is about $10. It is true as to size. The money must in each case accompany the order, else no heed will be paid to it.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1874. NO. 11.

COLLEGE OF THE SACRED HEART.

Its Dedication Last Sunday Afternoon.

The dedication of the Sacred Heart College on Eddy street, corner of Larkin, took place on Sunday, December 28th, with imposing ceremonies. At an early hour in the afternoon the building was thronged with people who occupied themselves with examining the facilities it affords respecting rooms and light and ventilation, and the conclusion arrived at justified the promises that had been made by the Christian Brothers that they would erect a Catholic school building which would be a credit to the community.

Although the edifice has been described in THE MONITOR on a former occasion, yet it may not be amiss at the present time and in this connection, to repeat a brief description. The building is in the shape of an "L," with a frontage of 133 feet 4 inches on Eddy street, and 134 feet 5 inches on Larkin street. It is situated a few blocks from the New City Hall. It is a four-story frame structure, with two entrances from Eddy street. The architecture is mostly of the Corinthian order, and from the middle of the front cornice an arched moulding has been erected, the center surmounted by a large cross. In the rear of each story, overlooking a yard, there is a broad plaza, extending the entire length of the building, on both sides of the "L." The lower story contains the kitchen, refectory, bathrooms, storehouses, etc. In the Larkin street wing there are five large class rooms, 26x35, in each of the upper stories. The class rooms are connected by a door, and each room communicates directly with the hall, so that they may be used separately. At every landing there is a coil of two-inch hose, connected with a faucet, so that in case of fire the building may be flooded with water in three minutes.

At half past three the College was dedicated by Archbishop Alemany (assisted by the Very Rev. Father Croke and Fathers Harrington and Prendergast), with the solemn rites of the Catholic Church. The procession of priests, acolytes and Christian Brothers then proceeded to the main hall of the building. The following named clergymen and laymen were present: Archbishop Alemany, Rev. Fathers Croke, Harrington, Prendergast, Gilmary, O'Neill, Larkin, Morrissey, Gariga, H. P. Gallagher, Cullen, Caldwell, Berlaun, Coyle, Vincent, Gleason, Rev. Fathers Nathini and Massuia of the Society of Jesus, Brothers Justin, Leo, Eugene Casserly, ex-Governor Weller, Hon. Peter H. Burnett, D. C. Oliver, John Sullivan, C. B. O'Sullivan, J. B. Oliver, Judges Hyland and Rankin, of San José, John Kelly, Jr., Michel O'Connor, Daniel T. Murphy, and ex-Sheriff P. J. White.

The Archbishop made a few remarks expressing his pleasure at beholding such a large attendance, as it proved that the doctrine of religious education had many firm adherents in these days of religious unbelief and infidelity. He referred with pride to the sincerity with which the Christian Brothers of San Francisco had responded to his appeal for aid on behalf of this noble undertaking, the second Christian Brother's College in the diocese.

Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, then delivered the following address:

Address of Rev. Brother Justin.

Most Rev. Archbishop, Rev. Fathers, Ladies and Gentlemen: Let me congratulate you on what we have just witnessed, the blessing of God on the accomplishment of a good work, a peculiarly great and, indeed, necessary work in our day. The march of intellect, the developments of science, the unearthing of hidden treasures, are matters that attract much attention in this generation. If they are attended to in such a way as to elevate man and bring him nearer to God, they are worthy of all praise; if not, they are no indication of real advancement, true greatness or lasting prosperity. But, my friends, the work before us,

THIS BEAUTIFUL TEMPLE, DEDICATED TO RELIGION

And science, to the education of the whole man—this your work, a monument of your faith and devotedness. Truly, nobly, have you contributed for its erection. It was my privilege to accompany his Grace the Most Rev. Archbishop and several of the reverend clergy present to solicit your sub scriptions; and it is with timose sincere sentiments of admiration and gratitude that I bear testimony to your generosity. Everywhere, I may say, were we received with a kindness and heartiness that gave evidence of your liberal and enlightened zeal in the cause of Christian education.

The work of the collector for religious purposes is anything but agreeable. In these utilitarian days money is looked upon as a great power. Few realize that it is a gift of God. When the collector meets with rich men who realize the fact that they are God's agents for the good of their fellow-men, and, who, in consequence, not only give freely, but love to give according to their means, he is cheered in his work. He feels that charity sheds her golden rays around, brightening the pathway of life. His grace will bear witness that such was the character of nearly all we met in collecting for this institution. Thank God, and thank the generous contributors, the work is completed. True, there is some debt remaining, but that is owing in the collections being discontinued, not to any want of liberality on your part. In a short time I believe there will not be a cent due on the Sacred Heart College.

Some may ask, and indeed have asked: "What is the use of such a school as this? Have we not schools enough, and fitted up with all modern improvements?" We have fine schools and an admirable system, and to those who are satisfied with the schools and the system, as at present constituted, I have nothing to say. We, however, believe that God has spoken to man—has given him a law, a religion; has clearly defined its principles, has established a supreme tribunal—an infallible Church whose decisions are final on all questions that may arise as to the proper understanding of His law. He has made it obligatory on parents and pastors either to teach it to their children or have it taught to them. As the Emanuel, He submitted to it at His circumcision; He taught it on the hill-tops and in the valleys of Judea, on the seashore and in the hamlet, in the synagogues and in the temple; and, finally, on Calvary, where He sealed it with His blood. He declared that those who do not believe it and practice it, too, shall be condemned. This law is hard—it is difficult to live up to it at all times and on all occasions, for it requires the highest purity and the most exact fidelity in the discharge of our duty to God and our fellow-man. It knows of no equivocation, and will admit of no excuse for its violation. It is, then, evident that a law so established, so clearly defined, so solemnly sealed, must not be taught as an opinion—as a something good and useful, but not necessary. An infinitely-wise God could not have so acted were it a matter of little consequence. We hold it to be

A MATTER OF ETERNAL LIFE OR ETERNAL DEATH.

The highest authority for us on earth in matters appertaining to salvation has decided that this law, our holy religion, cannot with safety be separated from education. This is the reason we are not, and, without some modifications, never can be, satisfied with the present school system. Some of our fellow-citizens may say, "We are just as much attached to our religion as you are to yours. We are fully as conscientious as you are, and yet we are satisfied that these religion enough in the schools, as they now exist, for some. I believe the people who hold this language are honest, honorable and well-meaning. They would have a uniform system. They think it is the best way of preserving and perpetuating our free institutions. We don't think so. All the religion they want is taught in the schools. We have no right, and, indeed, no inclination to interfere with them in the education they think proper to give their children. That is their business. Nor have they any right to interfere with us in the education we want to give ours. They have no right to compel us to support a system which we believe to be subversive of—not even one of our children's highest interest. We have a right to worship God according to the dictates of our conscience. God has given us this right, the Constitution of our country guarantees us this right, and no man or body of men can justly take this right from us. We are all equal before the law. The State has no right to teach religion. Indeed, it does not pretend to teach it. It guarantees freedom of conscience to all its citizens. This is its profession—the principle on which our Revolutionary fathers fought and won the battle of independence. "No taxation without representation" was their motto. We are taxed against our will to support a system which is in direct violation of our dearest rights, the inalienable right of the parent to educate his child in his own religion.

I know very well some will say we are narrow-minded. They may say worse; but they are mistaken. Whether we are right or wrong—whether our religion is true or false, that is our own business. We alone are responsible, and as long as it does not cause us to violate the law, it is entitled to the same respect as any other professed in the land. Let us look at

THE QUESTION FROM A BUSINESS POINT OF VIEW,

And see how it will appear. If one of these people should call at your store and tell you he wanted some woolen goods, and you should say, "I will give you something better than woolen goods, sir; here are some first class linen goods." "Listen goods! I don't want linen goods, sir." "Nonsense, man! you don't know what's good for you. I and my family and friends have always used linen goods, and I tell you they are the best." "That may be, sir, as far as you are concerned; but my doctor, in whom I have the most implicit confidence, says they would ruin my family." "Get out, sir! your doctor is a quack, and you are a fool. You are opposed to our free institutions if you do not buy my linen goods."

But at least we are narrow-minded on this question of education? No, not in the least. We narrow-minded! Then were the fathers of the Constitution narrow-minded; then is God himself narrow-minded! But we are opposed to education! We opposed to education! We have expended on this coast within the last twenty years over $4 000,000 in the glorious cause of Christian education. It is my happiness to belong to a society established two hundred years ago by a French priest. The sole object of this society is education. It numbers 10,000 members. No one can attain full membership in it unless he takes a solemn oath, a vow that he will devote himself for life to this noble work. He is to receive no salary—merely a support. I need not say there are many such societies in the Church. Does this look as if we were opposed to education? No, we love education. We have ever loved it, and ever will love it. But we hold there is no true education separated from religion. We hold that man has no right to sunder what God has put together. If you separate the soul from the body, you inevitably cause death; if you separate religion from education, you as inevitably cause spiritual death, and sooner or later bring about a state of society too horrible to contemplate.

When other objections fail, then it is our religion that is at fault. It is, we are told,

INCOMPATIBLE WITH FREE INSTITUTIONS.

Our religion needs no defense. It is not of yesterday. It arose with creation, and will set only when time is no more. It is the parent of poets, orators, statesmen and warriors. Some of the grandest geniuses the world has ever seen have bowed down most submissively and reverently before it. It has lit the fires of liberty throughout the Christian world; it has stricken the shackles from the slave; it has given us our civilization; it has preserved the arts and sciences, and blessed us with innumerable other gifts. Yet we are told that it is opposed to free institutions; that it is, in fact, tyrannical. (1) holy religion! lovely creation of God, thou art opposed to nothing that is good. Like thy Author, thou art for all climes, times and peoples. It was an appeal to thy hallowing influences that brought America into civil existence; and it is to thy principles that America owes her freedom, prosperity and grandeur. We will be told this is false. What of that. It is like telling us our faith is false and that we are idolators; but we are as firm in our belief of these things as are the rocks in their eternal fastnesses.

Finally, we are superior; we would build up a foreign system in this beautiful land. Build up a foreign system in our own country! I would indignantly answer whoever would dare make so base and villanous a charge, that it is foully and utterly false. The history of the country answers for our fidelity to principle and for our loyalty and heroism in the hour of peril. "It is both foolish and wicked," says Garra Smith in his late statesman-like letter, "to tax Catholics with bad motives in regard to the school question. It is the old story of the wolf's complaint of the lamb, roiling the stream. Be ashamed," he continued, "consider who they are whom you persecute. They are your countrymen, as patriotic as yourselves. On many a field they have mingled their blood with yours."

During our late, unhappy civil war I lived in Utica, N. Y. Just after the close of the contest a minister called on one of our wealthy citizens. "Mr. B——," said he, "we must start an association to put down these Catholics; they are growing quite numerous." "I grant you, sir," said Mr. B——, "that they are growing quite numerous; but if you count on me to persecute them, you are very much mistaken. Whether the Catholics go to heaven or hell is none of my business; but this I know, that during the war the Catholics did their duty, their whole duty, to the country; and that when and while certain ministers preached partisan politics and sedition in their pulpits, the Catholic clergy, to their credit, never disgraced religion by bringing in into the arena of political strife."

I am convinced that it is impossible to put these matters clearly and candidly before any intelligent, good man, without at least commanding his respect. Fair play is our national characteristic. We are not here misunderstood by many really good men on this very important question of education. Frequently on telling some of our friends that we are in

FAVOR OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS,

They appeared to be surprised. They could scarcely realize the fact that we are both willing and anxious to put our schools under State control; that we want no breaking up of the system, no division of the school fund; that the same superintendent, the same inspectors, the same examiners, the same school board would suit us; and that we are ready to comply with the law in every particular, stipulating only that we teach our own children the principles of our religion. Simply this, and nothing more. I am quite sure the great mass of our non-Catholic fellow citizens can find nothing objectionable in this. Mr. Smith, whom I have already quoted, says on this subject: "All admit the paramount right of parents to control the education of their children. The meddling of the State with the school is an impertinence little less than meddling with the Church. It is not extravagant to say that the Government is no more entitled to a voice in the school than in the Church. Both are, or ought to be, religious institutions, and in the one particular that the average scholar is more plastic and docile than the average church member, the school has greatly the advantage over the church. When Catholics in Ireland were compelled to support the Church of England, Americans sympathized with them; but is not the oppression of our school system the same in principle?"

Let me suppose, for a moment, that we were in a majority in this country and that we taxed our fellow-citizens of all and no denominations to support a school system in which the principles of our religion were taught, and that to those who would say "This is not fair; we don't want our children educated in your religion," we should say, "the system is good; the schools suit us. If you don't suit you, send your children to private schools." Would our fellow-citizens feel that was right? Certainly not.

We will be told there is no religion taught in the common schools. It is not of religion in the schools that we complain. It is of its absence." We hold that any religion is better than no religion. That the system as at present conducted is injurious to us, and that it is so regarded by a certain class. I need only refer to what has been boastingly said by some ministers at the late public meetings on the school question in the East. "Our public school system," says one, "has liberated 6,000,000 Catholics from Rome." This I do not believe, but that it has destroyed the faith of great numbers of our children is, I am sorry to say, but too true; still I must confess I was extremely surprised to hear of ministers boasting of this fact. They knew, if they knew anything, that these children became infidels, and as such were really the most dangerous members of society. Would the great mass of our non-Catholic fellow-citizens indorse the position of these men? I believe they would not, for I have an abiding faith in the honor and honesty of our fellow-citizens. We, my friends, are

NOT ALONE IN OUR VIEWS

Of education without religion. Very many distinguished men, both lay and clerical, agree with us. Mr. Disraeli, in his address when installed, a few weeks ago, as Lord Rector of the Glasgow University, said, "The spiritual nature of man is stronger than laws or constitutions. No Government can last that does not recognize that principle, and no legislation endure which does not flow from this fountain; nor is there, as some would teach you, anything in religious convictions that leads to contracted intelligence or our sympathies; on the contrary, religion invigorates the intellect and expands the heart. He who has a due sense of his relation to his God is best qualified to fulfill his duties to his fellow-man."

None suppose that mere intellectual culture makes men moral. There are few men living who have given more thought to the science of the mind than Herbert Spencer, and he tells us that in intellectual development does not tend to make men moral. Guizot says religious instruction should never be separated from moral education. I might cite in support of this view several distinguished Protestant divines, and prominently among them Bishop Porter, but time will not permit. I cite these authorities, not to show we are right. On that point we have no misgivings. Our Holy Father, the illustrious Pius IX., has settled the question for us. I merely cite them to show what statesmen, scientists and philanthropists say on the subject.

It may be asked what are the advantages to society from the religious system of education? Security of person and property, good government and the preservation and perpetuation of our free institutions. How is this to be effected? Let the child be taught that he is destined to live a life of eternal happiness; that the grandest prospects are before him; that his fondest hopes will be more than realized; that he will enjoy the utmost liberty and the most absolute security in the possession of all he can possibly desire, and that the object of life in this world is to prepare for the happiness to come; that God, who is infinitely good and powerful, has promised all this, and is most anxious to give it to us. The life to this, and the only this for the reasoning being, is the observance of the law of God. Let the law be explained to him by proper authority and its observance enjoined, not as a matter of little or no importance, but as the one thing necessary, the great object of his life. A religious impression penetrates the entire being. Let him know that God has absolute dominion over him, and that no sincere will be taken for his non compliance with the part he has to play in the plan. Let that God's threats are as certain as His promises are unequivocal, and both equally dear. Then it will be easy to

IMPRESS UPON HIS MIND

That it is the vilest of all things, the abasement of every principle of justice and religion; that it alone can blight all his glorious prospects, whither his not-le aspirations, deprive him of his heaven-born inheritance and send him forth a degraded outcast from the face of his God forever. May not this be going too far? Is not such a system calculated to stunt the mind and to destroy freedom of thought? Not at all. Taought, or Reason as we will call it in the sense, is the light that God has given us; and when not clouded or swayed by passion, recognizes its author and submits mind-respectfully to its decrees. The Eternal, seeing His likeness unsullied, smiles upon it, encourages it and acknowledges it as his own. For to those who believe in Him, He gives power to become His sons. Can the child of such a Father be a slave, a coward or a traitor? His thoughts are higher than the heavens and broader than the universe. He has the vastest fields for enterprise and progress. He is, if faithful to the principles of his religion, unselfish, generous and brave. Naturally patriotic, he is ready to give his life for his country at the call of duty; and what a country my friends! It is because we desire to see its grand institutions perpetuated, as well as for the higher motives of eternal salvation, that, like the sacrificer, we would take our young Hannibals to the altar of religion and there make them swear fidelity to God and their country. How can they do this without faith and morality? And how can they have faith and morality unless they are taught?

"Grant," says a large body of honest, liberal-minded men, "that morality is necessary—and religion, too, if you please—but it is not in a broad basis on which we can all agree; let us have a few general principles." General principles mean all things and mean nothing in religion. They lead first to indifference, and then immorality to infidelity. The law of God changes not; it is, like Himself, immutable. We hold that it requires a religious system, which is a positive system. It starts with a fixed object; it has well-defined ideas, and it knows that it can and does carry them out. It expands the mind, captivates the heart and gives to the will the firmness necessary to control passion, and thus enable it to overcome

THE OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF ITS ETERNAL DESTINY.

Its mission begins at the baptismal font, regenerating the babe in Christ; it watches over the first development of his reason and directs him heavenward; in manhood it moderates him in prosperity and cheers him in adversity; it keeps vigil by his side when friends have abandoned him; it whispers of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

Will we or will we not educate our children in this way? Will we neglect to open to them the fountains of eternal truth? Will we not try every means in our power to impress upon their youthful hearts the absolute necessity of living up to their religion? All their hopes in life and death depend upon it; and, I repeat, will we, through a false view of liberty, prove traitors alike to our God, our children and our country? No! A thousand times No! We have but begun. In a few years, with the help of God, we will have a thoroughly complete system of Christian education from California to Maine, and from the Polar Sea to the Gulf of Mexico.

A. WALDTEUFEL,

HOT MUSIC HALL,

FIRST STREET.....SAN JOSE.

Importer, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

CATHOLIC BOOKS

PICTURES AND ORNAMENTS,

Miscellaneous Books and Stationery.

AGENT FOR

STEINWAY & SONS' PIANOS;
CHICKERING & SONS' PIANOS;
HAYNES BROS. PIANOS;
HERBERT CELEST ORGANS;
MASON & HAMLIN'S ORGANS.

Always on hand a large assortment of the above named celebrated instruments.

☞ Liberal discount to the Rev. Clergy and Catholic Schools. Orders promptly attended to. my16-1y

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

SENTINELS ON DUTY.

It was four o'clock when the French party reached the fortress. They were admitted and received with much interest. Through the silence of the night the sound of musketry had reached the fort in a fitful manner, and the consciousness that comrades were actually engaged at so short a distance produced deep anxiety in the breasts of the guard. As the little band entered they were assailed with questions and remarks.

"What has happened?" "You are all pree mud." "Any wounded?" "What has become of the Prussians?"

These and a thousand other questions were poured into the ears of the expeditionary party. Their appearance was certainly calculated to excite surprise, if not admiration. Most of them owed to their faces were covered with mud; they bore an air of extreme fatigue; two had slight wounds, one with a cheek grazed and the other an arm hurt. But there was through all an evident consciousness of achievement which took from them the grandest prospects are before him; that his fondest hopes will be more than realized; that he will enjoy the utmost liberty and the most absolute security in the possession of all he can possibly desire, and that the object of life in this world is to prepare for the happiness to come; that God, who is infinitely good and powerful, has promised all this, and is most anxious to give it to us. The life to this, and the only this for the reasoning being, is the observance of the law of God. Let the law be explained to him by proper authority and its observance enjoined, not as a matter of little or no importance, but as the one thing necessary, the great object of his life. A religious impression penetrates the entire being. Let him know that God has absolute dominion over him, and that no sincere will be taken for his non compliance with the part he has to play in the plan. Let that God's threats are as certain as His promises are unequivocal, and both equally dear. Then it will be easy to

IMPRESS UPON HIS MIND

That it is the vilest of all things, the abasement of every principle of justice and religion; that it alone can blight all his glorious prospects, whither his not-le aspirations, deprive him of his heaven-born inheritance and send him forth a degraded outcast from the face of his God forever. May not this be going too far? Is not such a system calculated to stunt the mind and to destroy freedom of thought? Not at all. Taought, or Reason as we will call it in the sense, is the light that God has given us; and when not clouded or swayed by passion, recognizes its author and submits mind-respectfully to its decrees. The Eternal, seeing His likeness unsullied, smiles upon it, encourages it and acknowledges it as his own. For to those who believe in Him, He gives power to become His sons. Can the child of such a Father be a slave, a coward or a traitor? His thoughts are higher than the heavens and broader than the universe. He has the vastest fields for enterprise and progress. He is, if faithful to the principles of his religion, unselfish, generous and brave. Naturally patriotic, he is ready to give his life for his country at the call of duty; and what a country my friends! It is because we desire to see its grand institutions perpetuated, as well as for the higher motives of eternal salvation, that, like the sacrificer, we would take our young Hannibals to the altar of religion and there make them swear fidelity to God and their country. How can they do this without faith and morality? And how can they have faith and morality unless they are taught?

"Grant," says a large body of honest, liberal-minded men, "that morality is necessary—and religion, too, if you please—but it is not in a broad basis on which we can all agree; let us have a few general principles." General principles mean all things and mean nothing in religion. They lead first to indifference, and then immorality to infidelity. The law of God changes not; it is, like Himself, immutable. We hold that it requires a religious system, which is a positive system. It starts with a fixed object; it has well-defined ideas, and it knows that it can and does carry them out. It expands the mind, captivates the heart and gives to the will the firmness necessary to control passion, and thus enable it to overcome

THE OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF ITS ETERNAL DESTINY.

Its mission begins at the baptismal font, regenerating the babe in Christ; it watches over the first development of his reason and directs him heavenward; in manhood it moderates him in prosperity and cheers him in adversity; it keeps vigil by his side when friends have abandoned him; it whispers of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

Will we or will we not educate our children in this way? Will we neglect to open to them the fountains of eternal truth? Will we not try every means in our power to impress upon their youthful hearts the absolute necessity of living up to their religion? All their hopes in life and death depend upon it; and, I repeat, will we, through a false view of liberty, prove traitors alike to our God, our children and our country? No! A thousand times No! We have but begun. In a few years, with the help of God, we will have a thoroughly complete system of Christian education from California to Maine, and from the Polar Sea to the Gulf of Mexico.

---

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

SENTINELS ON DUTY.

It was four o'clock when the French party reached the fortress. They were admitted and received with much interest. Through the silence of the night the sound of musketry had reached the fort in a fitful manner, and the consciousness that comrades were actually engaged at so short a distance produced deep anxiety in the breasts of the guard. As the little band entered they were assailed with questions and remarks.

"What has happened?" "You are all pree mud." "Any wounded?" "What has become of the Prussians?"

These and a thousand other questions were poured into the ears of the expeditionary party. Their appearance was certainly calculated to excite surprise, if not admiration. Most of them owed to their faces were covered with mud; they bore an air of extreme fatigue; two had slight wounds, one with a cheek grazed and the other an arm hurt. But there was through all an evident consciousness of achievement which took from them the grandest prospects before them; that his fondest hopes will be more than realized; that he will enjoy the utmost liberty and the most absolute security in the possession of all he can possibly desire, and that the object of life in this world is to prepare for the happiness to come; that God, who is infinitely good and powerful, has promised all this, and is most anxious to give it to us. The life to this, and the only this for the reasoning being, is the observance of the law of God. Let the law be explained to him by proper authority and its observance enjoined, not as a matter of little or no importance, but as the one thing necessary, the great object of his life. A religious impression penetrates the entire being. Let him know that God has absolute dominion over him, and that no sincere will be taken for his non compliance with the part he has to play in the plan. Let that God's threats are as certain as His promises are unequivocal, and both equally dear. Then it will be easy to

IMPRESS UPON HIS MIND

That it is the vilest of all things, the abasement of every principle of justice and religion; that it alone can blight all his glorious prospects, whither his not-le aspirations, deprive him of his heaven-born inheritance and send him forth a degraded outcast from the face of his God forever. May not this be going too far? Is not such a system calculated to stunt the mind and to destroy freedom of thought? Not at all. Taought, or Reason as we will call it in the sense, is the light that God has given us; and when not clouded or swayed by passion, recognizes its author and submits mind-respectfully to its decrees. The Eternal, seeing His likeness unsullied, smiles upon it, encourages it and acknowledges it as his own. For to those who believe in Him, He gives power to become His sons. Can the child of such a Father be a slave, a coward or a traitor? His thoughts are higher than the heavens and broader than the universe. He has the vastest fields for enterprise and progress. He is, if faithful to the principles of his religion, unselfish, generous and brave. Naturally patriotic, he is ready to give his life for his country at the call of duty; and what a country my friends! It is because we desire to see its grand institutions perpetuated, as well as for the higher motives of eternal salvation, that, like the sacrificer, we would take our young Hannibals to the altar of religion and there make them swear fidelity to God and their country. How can they do this without faith and morality? And how can they have faith and morality unless they are taught?

"Grant," says a large body of honest, liberal-minded men, "that morality is necessary—and religion, too, if you please—but it is not in a broad basis on which we can all agree; let us have a few general principles." General principles mean all things and mean nothing in religion. They lead first to indifference, and then immorality to infidelity. The law of God changes not; it is, like Himself, immutable. We hold that it requires a religious system, which is a positive system. It starts with a fixed object; it has well-defined ideas, and it knows that it can and does carry them out. It expands the mind, captivates the heart and gives to the will the firmness necessary to control passion, and thus enable it to overcome

THE OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF ITS ETERNAL DESTINY.

Its mission begins at the baptismal font, regenerating the babe in Christ; it watches over the first development of his reason and directs him heavenward; in manhood it moderates him in prosperity and cheers him in adversity; it keeps vigil by his side when friends have abandoned him; it whispers of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

Will we or will we not educate our children in this way? Will we neglect to open to them the fountains of eternal truth? Will we not try every means in our power to impress upon their youthful hearts the absolute necessity of living up to their religion? All their hopes in life and death depend upon it; and, I repeat, will we, through a false view of liberty, prove traitors alike to our God, our children and our country? No! A thousand times No! We have but begun. In a few years, with the help of God, we will have a thoroughly complete system of Christian education from California to Maine, and from the Polar Sea to the Gulf of Mexico.

---

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

SENTINELS ON DUTY.

It was four o'clock when the French party reached the fortress. They were admitted and received with much interest. Through the silence of the night the sound of musketry had reached the fort in a fitful manner, and the consciousness that comrades were actually engaged at so short a distance produced deep anxiety in the breasts of the guard. As the little band entered they were assailed with questions and remarks.

"What has happened?" "You are all pree mud." "Any wounded?" "What has become of the Prussians?"

These and a thousand other questions were poured into the ears of the expeditionary party. Their appearance was certainly calculated to excite surprise, if not admiration. Most of them owed to their faces were covered with mud; they bore an air of extreme fatigue; two had slight wounds, one with a cheek grazed and the other an arm hurt. But there was through all an evident consciousness of achievement which took from them the grandest prospects before them; that his fondest hopes will be more than realized; that he will enjoy the utmost liberty and the most absolute security in the possession of all he can possibly desire, and that the object of life in this world is to prepare for the happiness to come; that God, who is infinitely good and powerful, has promised all this, and is most anxious to give it to us. The life to this, and the only this for the reasoning being, is the observance of the law of God. Let the law be explained to him by proper authority and its observance enjoined, not as a matter of little or no importance, but as the one thing necessary, the great object of his life. A religious impression penetrates the entire being. Let him know that God has absolute dominion over him, and that no sincere will be taken for his non compliance with the part he has to play in the plan. Let that God's threats are as certain as His promises are unequivocal, and both equally dear. Then it will be easy to

IMPRESS UPON HIS MIND

That it is the vilest of all things, the abasement of every principle of justice and religion; that it alone can blight all his glorious prospects, whither his not-le aspirations, deprive him of his heaven-born inheritance and send him forth a degraded outcast from the face of his God forever. May not this be going too far? Is not such a system calculated to stunt the mind and to destroy freedom of thought? Not at all. Taought, or Reason as we will call it in the sense, is the light that God has given us; and when not clouded or swayed by passion, recognizes its author and submits mind-respectfully to its decrees. The Eternal, seeing His likeness unsullied, smiles upon it, encourages it and acknowledges it as his own. For to those who believe in Him, He gives power to become His sons. Can the child of such a Father be a slave, a coward or a traitor? His thoughts are higher than the heavens and broader than the universe. He has the vastest fields for enterprise and progress. He is, if faithful to the principles of his religion, unselfish, generous and brave. Naturally patriotic, he is ready to give his life for his country at the call of duty; and what a country my friends! It is because we desire to see its grand institutions perpetuated, as well as for the higher motives of eternal salvation, that, like the sacrificer, we would take our young Hannibals to the altar of religion and there make them swear fidelity to God and their country. How can they do this without faith and morality? And how can they have faith and morality unless they are taught?

"Grant," says a large body of honest, liberal-minded men, "that morality is necessary—and religion, too, if you please—but it is not in a broad basis on which we can all agree; let us have a few general principles." General principles mean all things and mean nothing in religion. They lead first to indifference, and then immorality to infidelity. The law of God changes not; it is, like Himself, immutable. We hold that it requires a religious system, which is a positive system. It starts with a fixed object; it has well-defined ideas, and it knows that it can and does carry them out. It expands the mind, captivates the heart and gives to the will the firmness necessary to control passion, and thus enable it to overcome

THE OBSTACLES IN THE WAY OF ITS ETERNAL DESTINY.

Its mission begins at the baptismal font, regenerating the babe in Christ; it watches over the first development of his reason and directs him heavenward; in manhood it moderates him in prosperity and cheers him in adversity; it keeps vigil by his side when friends have abandoned him; it whispers of a bright future when the shadows of night are lowering over life's journey; it soothes him in his last moments and accompanies him to his heavenly Father's house, and there leaves him in the enjoyment of eternal bliss.

Will we or will we not educate our children in this way? Will we neglect to open to them the fountains of eternal truth? Will we not try every means in our power to impress upon their youthful hearts the absolute necessity of living up to their religion? All their hopes in life and death depend upon it; and, I repeat, will we, through a false view of liberty, prove traitors alike to our God, our children and our country? No! A thousand times No! We have but begun. In a few years, with the help of God, we will have a thoroughly complete system of Christian education from California to Maine, and from the Polar Sea to the Gulf of Mexico.

asked, "Has monsieur le Capitaine occasion for my attendance?"

"Ha, I do not wonder you should be anxious to get to repose."

"Well, it is not precisely for repose I ask monsieur's permission to leave him."

"For what then?"

"Last night I observed that while we were engaged with the Prussian there were several musket shots fired at us from our own side of the river, as if the enemy had established a malcontent there, and I wished to investigate it."

"Have you not had enough work for one night?"

"I am not tired, monsieur; and this post may be in no way in future."

"And suppose you find it, what do you propose to do?"

"On that I have not made up my mind yet. It must depend on what I discover."

"My impression is that you would do better to rest and refresh yourself, that you might then be in fitter condition for adventure, if you will persist in seeking them."

"Monsieur, I could not rest with this on my mind. Have I your permission."

"Well, if you will persist, go; but be careful. After all, you are a useful man, and it would be a pity to waste your life without a reasonable prospect of advantage."

"Monsieur is very good. I will be careful. Adieu, monsieur."

"Parawi."

The Captain with his long stride soon disappeared, and Michel was left alone. He examined cautiously, and displaying his person as little as possible, the ground, when his attention was attracted by the sound of oars. In the gray light he saw a boat, and could plainly distinguish the forms that occupied it. There were four sitters, and two who pulled. The boat was pushed from a point at the farther end of the village, and crossed the stream towards the broken arches of the bridge which had been destroyed in anticipation of the siege.

"Ha," thought Michel to himself, "they have made a post of the ruins, and have established themselves therefore half-a-mile nearer to us than we thought. That arrangement cannot be left undisturbed."

As he watched, he saw the boat land and four men get out. In a few minutes four men returned. At the distance he could not be quite sure of their appearance, but he made no doubt that one was the same who had left the boat—the Sergeant in fact —and that the others were three soldiers who had been relieved.

"There are, then," he thought, "three on guard."

He looked to the breech of his gun; he examined the chambers of his revolver. By his side hung the sword-bayonet, which he had thrust into his belt when he waked, that the After of the sentinel might not make a noise. His way to the ruins lay over fields and through ditches, now running, now hiding, until at last he came within earshot of the sentries. Two of them were on beat in sight of each other; the third was concealed from his comrades by one of the abutments of the bridge. As the sentries met upon their march they usually interchanged a few words—they seemed even at first to Michel's ear to be unusually earnest. Drawing yet closer, he could distinguish the words, which, from his Asiatic knowledge of German, he easily comprehended.

Over fifty dragoons killed and wounded and three foot soldiers, I heard the Hauptmann say."

"Der Teufel!"

There was silence. The sentries had again parted, each to his beat, Michel watching attentively. Once more the footsteps met, the words were heard, and the engagement was renewed.

"How many of them?"

"Nobody can tell: it was dark. Hundreds I suppose. It takes a good many of them together to have courage to fire on a German."

Again a pause as the sentries parted, and once more the footsteps tended towards each other.

"Was he there?"

"Der Franc-Tieurr?"

"Yes."

"I do not know. Of course, the scoundrel was."

Silence again except for the echoing footsteps, and conversation once more renewed.

"I have an idea."

"Mein Gott."

"No, I will kill that Franc-Tieurr. I will find him out myself and kill him."

"So gut."

And so parted. Michel, who had held himself in readiness for the moment when the sentries were turned back to back, sprang upon the man who said he would kill him, and with a blow of the naked sword laid him low. The slight noise caused his comrade to turn and level his musket, but before he could fire he dropped, struck by a bullet from Michel's rifle. The third sentry, aroused by the report, rushed from his post, behind the abutment. Michel was already in the act of re loading his rifle. The Prussian put his gun to his shoulder. There were but fifty paces between them. Michel, perfectly undisturbed, looked steadily in the face of the sentry while he continued to put the charge into his musket, and then, even with the facilities offered by the chassepot, occupied some precious seconds.

"It is a duel," he said in German, "and you have the first fire."

As he spoke the Prussian discharged his piece. The shot whistled by Michel's ear. Michel fired and the third sentry fell.

"I think," he said to himself, as he made his way back to the fortress, "they will draw back that post for the future."

CHAPTER XXXIX.

THE TWO CULANS.

There was, perhaps, no feature of the Franco-Prussian war more peculiar than "the two Ulans." Everywhere before the German army was seen this ubiquitous pair. Miles ahead of the main body on every possible road were the lancers reconnoitering. The Germans -from love or love to tell wonderful stories of the adventures of these scouts, and the captures they made. There is no doubt that these amazing incidents—spread in every direction over the line of march of the German army warning of difficulties, discovering weak points, bringing to light objects of plunder, intimating where the largest resources could be found—contributed much to the ultimate success of its campaign. Among Frenchmen naturally the facility and impunity with which this weapon was employed against them awakened intense indigestion. It seemed not only a humiliation but an injury, and among the soldiers who talked thoughtfully of the war it was a source of frequent conversation.

An old soldier of the Imperial Guard was speaking on the subject with our friends Michel and Mike. Taking the pipe from his mouth, he remarked sententiously, "An army which allows another to clench its fist in its face cannot be expected to do much good."

"What do you mean?" asked Michel.

"I mean that to have a couple of Prussian horsemen riding within shot of the guns of the fort here, spying and peering and bringing back information of what we are doing, is so shameful that the army which endures it must come to trouble."

"I have heard of these horsemen going reconnoitering in twos through the open country, but it is not possible they do it here?"

The veteran took his pipe from his mouth, slowly emitted a puff, and said, "I had a letter the other day from my nephew, who is a Sergeant at St. Denis. He saw two horsemen coming up to within a mile of the fort.. I know two were seen from fort de Noisy, and one of our Hussards who had a glass, saw them from the Redoute de Nogent."

"Oh, I know you managed a clever trap for those fellows at Bric; but, my son, it is easier to catch a squirrel napping than a couple of advanced videttes."

"No doubt, but it is worth trying."

"Have you any plan in your head?" asked Mike, who had been listening to the conversation with attention.

"No, it would be impossible to form any. Their movements are directed by chance, or at all events by motives that we cannot divine, and we must only look to chance to fall in with them."

"Well; suppose if we try for it we try together, I suppose?"

"I think it would be better we should separate. I should like to take the Strasbourg road between Nogent and Neuilly."

"And you leave me to kill a Hessian for myself!"

"I do not understand."

"Oh, no matter. What post do you assign to me?"

"Well, if they are very daring they only try the cross-road, past the Chateau de Montfaux, and the village of Neuilly. It is not a thousand metres from the Fort of Nogent, but they seem to be under the impression that we sleep eighteen hours a day."

"And what, my lads, will you do, suppose you meet two Uhlans piece?"

"Will them," answered Michel shortly.

"Try, at all events," said Mike Mahoney, with a capital aim to the head and heart."

The veteran laughed loud. "Well, my children, I think you have plenty of audacity, but audacity is a good thing in war, providing there be not too much of it."

"And shaking the ashes out of his pipe, the honest soldier departed.

Michel had now acquired the freedom of the camp and ground on which he could parade unchecked, and he was able to secure the same privilege for his comrade. There was no need, therefore, for any delay to interfere between the conception and execution of a project which depended on themselves. A demand for volunteers was said to have been by this time easily exceeded; but the project in hand was not one to which Michel thought it advisable to bring the aid of thumbscrews. The preparations of the comrades were soon made, and at midday they had passed out of the fort, the sergeant of the guard heartily remarking with a laugh, "Out for sport to day!"

"Not only to try and spoil some," answered Mike, gaily.

The companions proceeded through the wood of Vincennes, at the skirts of which they took the road lying under Fort Nogent, leaving the village on their right.

"What would you think of trying the village?" asked Mike.

"We should have a considerable disadvantage there if they had any soldiers in the village."

About a mile after quitting the wood they had reached the open country, when they departed, as Michel intimated to his friend.

"Adieu, mon camarade," said Mike.

"Good-bye, and good luck," answered Mike, with a hearty shake of the hand.

"Look here, mon," said Michel to himself, "there can be no possible danger in the direction I have sent him."

"If one could be angry," said Mike in soliloquy, "it would be a good fellow, it would be for the way he spoke to keep me on the ground for himself and to keep me out of it. Its being tracked like a hare in arms—an! I a soldier in arms."—And Mike laughed loud, perhaps, as indulging in the luxury of a burst with empty saddles.

The creatures looked wild and scared, and they scampered about in a mad fashion for a while. But there was a little stream just at the edge of the trees, and along the border of it the loveliest bit of green grass you ever saw. Now to see these two horses—twas a doubtful matter as to which was the greater brute—so gradually did they get tamed down, so slowly did they border round upon the grass, so fast did they begin to eat disciplined and the German sense of duty, and waited their opportunity. They go to the sweet bite by the stream. "My beauty' said I to myself, 'if I don't ride you that way you may run yourself down.' went walking home on crutches!" The horses were not long in finding out that a few feet—but my lad's head was towards me. I daren't snow until I had a hold of him, or he would be off and good-by to my chance. His eyes was still wild, and very little I knew would answer, but this time I thought he was unsteady and kept shifting about, it seemed as if he would never turn the way I wanted him, with his head towards me. I watched and watched, and waited.

At last I thought I must risk it and do something. He still had his head to me, but now and then he would turn it a little the way. I considered that with a spring I could catch his mane, and once with a hold of that—why, I felt sure I could get on so at last I made a jump and caught the mane with one hand, and luckily hit off the saddle with the other. He reared a little, but not so high but that I was able to swing my right leg, and to my delight I was in the seat. The bridle was my great difficulty; but we in the county Limerick, know quite as much about a horse. Though it was every where—under his legs, about his head, frightening him as if I was a fly, still somehow by was wheedling him with "—I got hold of enough of it to teach him its meaning could be found for him and the side of the Prussian riding-school and before I was ten minutes in the back—and he never shook me off—I was not afraid to get down and set his head—best all straight. The other thing was my difficulty; but here the bridle stood to me. At first he took the rein and galloped furiously away; but he soon stood a sack still about two hundred yards off. Then he made a plunge and threw his heels up in the air, and prepared for a buck jump, but by this time he had got the stride so much in his legs that he was fairly puzzled. The difficulty of mounting bothered him, and he began to consider, and while he was considering I was on and the grass came up under his nose; and faith he forgot all about his hurry home to bolt off, and snuffed at every. Seeing how it was, I let my animal drop down his head and have a bite, still keeping hold of the rein. Now if you ever saw two burnt nuts in a basin of water on a snap-apple night come together, you will have a notion of what two horses in a field will do. I waited and waited, and at last, sure enough, little by little and never looking at each other, my two nags came so close that I was able to get hold of the reins of my shy friend as well as of my own beast. It took as much trouble, I can tell you, to get him out of the tangle he had worked himself into as it does a parlied to wriggle out of the promises he makes in his countryman; but the county Limerick, glory be to God, gives a fellow a good education in horses at all events, and—you see," said Mike, pointing to the two steeds.

A chorus of "bravos!" greeted the end of Mike's narrative.

"Mes-sieurs," he added, "a grand armie of Le Vesse of Mahony has routed the enemy. The right wing has put them to the sword, and the left wing has brought home the prisoners."

(To be Continued.)

ENCYCLICAL LETTER OF HIS HOLINESS POPE PIUS IX.

[Translation of the London Weekly Register.]

PIUS P. P. IX.

VENERABLE BRETHREN, HEALTH AND APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION.

Although many grievous and bitter sufferings, from the beginning of our long Pontificate, have fallen to our lot through various causes which we have unfolded in our Encyclical Letters from time to time, yet in these last years the number of our sorrows has so increased that we should be almost overwhelmed by them, were we not upheld by the mercy of God.

Of late, indeed, matters have reached such a pass that death itself seems better than life amid such storms, and with eyes lifted up to Heaven we are fain to cry, "It is better for us to die than to see the evils of the Saints." (Macab. iii. 59). Ever since our city of Rome, by the act of God, has been taken away by force of arms, and has passed under the sway of men who despise law, who are enemies of religion, who confound all things, both human and divine, in a deplorable manner without inflicting some new wounds on our heart already suffering from repeated injuries and wrongs. There ring still in our ears the cries of religious orders driven out from their homes, and from their homes in poverty and scattered hither by hostile hands, as is done where revolution triumphs; just as, according to the prediction of Jesus Christ, the house taken away by force of arms, and has passed under the sway of men who despise law, who are enemies of religion, who confound all things, both human and divine, in a deplorable manner without inflicting some new wounds on our heart already suffering from repeated injuries and wrongs. There ring still in our ears the cries of religious orders driven out from their homes, and from their homes in poverty and scattered hither by hostile hands, as is done where revolution triumphs; just as, according to the prediction of Jesus Christ, the house of God is

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 10.
January
4—Sunday—Octave of Holy Innocents.
5—Monday—Vigil of the Epiphany. St. Telesphorus, Pope and Martyr.
6—Tuesday—Epiphany of our Lord. Holiday of Obligation.
7—Wednesday—Octave Comm.

day, is a document of such high importance that no apology is necessary for our devoting so much space to it. His Holiness reviews in it the relations maintained with the great powers of the earth towards Catholicity, and deplores them in language remarkable for vigor and pathos. As might naturally be expected, he begins with a reprobation of the evil state of affairs which the rapacity and dishonesty of the Piedmontese Government have brought about in Italy. And, truly, insensible to the sufferings of humanity, lost to all those of honor and justice, must be the heart which could withhold emotion contemplate the disorders which effect that beautiful and once happy land! More than the present seem bad as they are, are those which every intelligent man can see in the not distant future. The moral sentiment, antagonistic to God and His Holy Church, which has been at work for so many years, with the tacit approval of the Government, cannot possibly disappear and pass away before causing a social disturbance which will place the lives and fortunes of the best men in Italy, lay and clerical, in the hands of fanatical Communists. The monarchy which deliberately made use of these diabolical associations for the purpose of its own territorial aggrandizement, will in its turn fall a victim and perish ignominiously.

There seems to be a great law of Divine Providence which ordains that the wicked agencies availed of to oppress the Church by secular authorities and by building among about the utter ruin of those who encouraged them. Therefore it may be regarded as a thing predestined that the revolution which Victor Emanuel and made use of to destroy the Pope's temporal sovereignty, and to impede him in the exercise of his ecclesiastical functions as Supreme Pastor of the faithful, will deprive his family of every vestige of power. The final consecution of the ministers of God which, in contravention of the common laws of justice, the irreligious authorities of Switzerland—more particularly those of the Canton of Geneva—are carrying on, is deplored by by the Holy Father in the strongest terms. We have kept our readers, as far as possible, conversant with the progress of a system that misnamed "republic," and they are not ignorant of the excesses to which hatred of Catholicity has driven statesmen who prate loudly about liberty, equality and fraternity. Of course his Holiness could not pass unnoticed the violations of the rights of conscience daily perpetrated in Germany through the enforcement of the iniquitous ecclesiastical laws framed by FALK, indorsed by BISMARCK, and finally approved by Emperor WILHELM. These statutes revive the spirit of the English penal laws, and they are, even according to the judgment of the most bigoted knpgs the British and American journals, equivalent to a legal prohibition of the exercise of the Catholic religion. That they really were intended to crush it, no reasonable doubt can be entertained by any impartial and right-minded man. In the we know they must fail—indeed, they could not but fail if the Catholics of Germany were not one tenth as powerful as they are and VON BISMARCK were ten times stronger politically than he is; yet it cannot be denied that they will work a great deal of harm, and cause much suffering both to pastors and people.

It is believed that the promulgation of those anti-Christian enactments is a return made by the Emperor to the heads of the Prussian revolutionary societies for their support of him and their cooperation with him during the Franco-German war. The fact is, that wherever the Church is assailed now-a-days, no matter what may be the form of Government, the secret societies are the instigators and prime movers in the persecution. In these pressing emergencies Catholics must have almost incessant recourse to prayer, which has ever been the surge, the sure defense and the invincible support of the suffering faithful. Prayers for the intentions of the Sovereign Pontiff, for the welfare of the Church, for the conversion of sinners, for the frustration of the schemes of the enemies of God's law, when a sincere heart must avail with those who have pretended to men of up and audaciously deny slyer, and blasphemously in Divine Mercy, which is stholics, it is certainly the the only the inestimable ing to the One Saving Fold, he faith that in this and sitions to Almighty God, solation in these sad times, if we were better to die e sufferings of the saints."

ATION QUESTION.

Education Question is as importance and grander eed it is no exaggeration r Catholics it has become questions, the problem s of which depends the poral welfare of millions must be remembered that confined to this country ld, every civilized ety on the face of the is being waged, believe in God and those lerce struggle for the pow train up and educate the ossible for an intelligent s the immensity of the the generation now liv, t be extinct in what are, aking, a few years, and children and under tu ers the world of courr loss, moral, social and s impressed upon their l dominate all nations in ress as a mathematical de ist as the children of to will the men of the fu ples and foes of religion ter conflicts. Their complete ognition of the fact accounts for the stubbornness and audacity with which they are defending and advocating the secular system. They look to the future and they work for the future. They think they have done all that is possible to corrupt and degrade those who have reached man's estate, and they now want to seize upon the little children. If they can prevent them from receiving proper religious instruction, they succeed in securing them for atheism and in making them fit instruments to carry out the principles of "social regeneration," which the minds of the anti-Catholic theorists have already originated. In short, the question of whether the world is to continue Christian or to return to Paganism, altogether depends upon the educational system generally adopted. If the Bismarck system be adopted in all countries, nations still enjoy the blessings of faith, and advance in true civilization; but if on the contrary, it be secular, then, must assuredly, shall mankind retrograde into barbarism and ignorance.

Wars and bloodshed are the inevitable consequences of irreligion; they grow out of it as naturally as the fruit out of the blossom; and war and bloodshed, as all history testifies, destroy prosperity, enlightenment, morality, justice and everything that distinguishes the civilized men from the savage. The apostles of infidelity make no secret of their intentions. They tell us openly, plainly every day that we shall have those wars, and that the land shall run red with the blood of thousands murdered in the social disruptions they are now preparing. First, religion is to be destroyed, then property is to be abolished; next, all restrictions imposed upon the indulgence of human passion by the laws of morality are to be removed; and then, when diabolism shall be everywhere triumphant, we shall have "liberty, equality and fraternity," as understood by modern revolutionists. Some of the leaders in the movement may not realize the full force of the Christian friends, the limit allotted to man endurance is sufficiently adequate to do justice to a subject fraught with so serious consequences. Suffice it to say that, if we take it at all, for mercy sake take it straight."

ST. MARY'S CONGREGATION

Has lost the services of the Rev. Father Spellman, who, during his brief sojourn here, has made a warm friend in the person of every one who has had an opportunity of forming his acquaintance. The good people of San José have sufficient reason to rejoice that a clergyman so kind, genial, and withal so devoted to his sacred calling as Father Spellman, has been placed among them. Rev. Father O'Connor is laboring hard and successfully in building up the interests of St. Mary's. When he took charge the church was encumbered with debt; but he is quietly carrying out a system which will no doubt ere long relieve the parishioners of the burden. The manner in which he conducts his affairs is exactly as well to here note for the benefit of your readers that, notwithstanding the very illiberal prizes prevailing all through the past season, many parties are clinging to the hope of still higher figures, and our immense grain warehouses contain large quantities waiting for that rise.

RAILROADS.

Our street railroad, now being built by Messrs. Smith, Crow and Bennett, has been temporarily suspended on account of unfavorable weather for the prosecution of the work. The Newton and Tuscalosa Railroad may now be considered a gone from our gaze like a beautiful dream." Our local capitalists are making money fast enough in other directions, and therefore do not seem to be in love with railroad building, at least in the direction above indicated. In the Spring, however, it is regarded as a fixed fact that a railroad will be built from this place to Valley Creek.

THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT

Of this community is quite pronounced We have fifteen churches for the spiritual and moral consolation of sinners, and seven saloons. We have, also, a scientific society growing finely, and largely supported by men of considerable ability and influence. This society does not estimate at a high figure the services rendered to mankind by the above-mentioned fifteen churches. The annual report of which we have just had a petition in their meeting last Sunday evening for a repeal of the law exempting church property from taxation. Sunday in Stockton bears a strong resemblance to the quiet and orderly scenes of a New England village.

LETTER FROM STOCKTON.

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE MONITOR.]

STOCKTON, December 30, 1873.

Apart from the religious aspect of the great festival now at hand, the "holidays" serve many other purposes—the renewal of old friendships, the strengthening of social ties and the interchange of those sentiments of kindness and good-will which contribute so much to the pleasure of friendly intercourse. Your correspondent, being in a gossipy mood, proposes to have a social chat with the readers of THE MONITOR. The first subject in point of importance is

THE PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS.

In this vicinity the farming interests are paramount to all others, and affect all other pursuits. This branch of industry is being conducted on a more extended scale throughout this valley than has ever been known before. The volunteer crop gives promise of a large yield. The generous figures that wheat commanded during the past season stimulate the farmers to greater efforts for the coming year. It might be as well to here note for the benefit of your readers that, notwithstanding the very illiberal prizes prevailing all through the past season, many parties are clinging to the hope of still higher figures, and our immense grain warehouses contain large quantities waiting for that rise.

RAILROADS.

Our street railroad, now being built by Messrs. Smith, Crow and Bennett, has been temporarily suspended on account of unfavorable weather for the prosecution of the work. The Newton and Tuscalosa Railroad may now be considered a gone from our gaze like a beautiful dream." Our local capitalists are making money fast enough in other directions, and therefore do not seem to be in love with railroad building, at least in the direction above indicated. In the Spring, however, it is regarded as a fixed fact that a railroad will be built from this place to Valley Creek.

THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT

Of this community is quite pronounced We have fifteen churches for the spiritual and moral consolation of sinners, and seven saloons. We have, also, a scientific society growing finely, and largely supported by men of considerable ability and influence. This society does not estimate at a high figure the services rendered to mankind by the above-mentioned fifteen churches. The annual report of which we have just had a petition in their meeting last Sunday evening for a repeal of the law exempting church property from taxation. Sunday in Stockton bears a strong resemblance to the quiet and orderly scenes of a New England village.

THE WEAKEST INTEREST

Is finely represented here. Our saloons have contributed to the city revenue during the past eleven months the sum of $67 65, the receipts for the month of December 53, the remainder of the year. Stockton has taken that "fraternal solace" with remarkable regularity. There are but few low-grade saloons here. They receive but little countenance in this community, and it is well; for if people will drink whisky, it is better that they should get it in respectable places and of a good quality. But there is really one step from the sublime to the ridiculous." I cannot but call attention in this connection to a few remarks made by a very popular Presbyterian divine of this city (Stockton), in the winter of 1868, delivered a sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association, in which, interwoven with the thread of his discourse, he gave the property to Horticulturist, Jr., and that only because the Horticulturist, Jr., was a member of his church. The gentleman who attended for many years, and who is now living in New York city, and is very much respected.

Laurrell will, after the holidays, introduce a bill providing for the removal of the seat of California to somewhere a railway reaches it. Sacramento, Stockton, Marysville and San Jose, as rivals, Manhattan county and Alcatraz island, as the seat of the new State. Let Nature decide, by interposing the waste fresh at its mouth, and the Legislature will be relieved of the responsibility.

A wife in Yuba City, by advertisement in the newspapers there, forbids saloon-keepers trusting her husband with liquor.

The Sacramento beet sugar factory has suspended operations for want of material. The farmers will sow it in the Spring.

Rawlog is going ahead rapidly in Livermore Valley and other parts of Alameda county. The saloon keepers are all getting rich and happy.

Norman Porter, of San José, has been fined a thousand dollars for two pain items, to be removed at the risk and expense of the purchaser, and has refused to accept.

A jewelry store was broken into by an expert burglar at Napa on Saturday night, and robbed of five thousand seven hundred dollars worth of jewelry.

Professor Tomlinson, teacher of mathematics at the Santa Barbara Seminary, has been lecturing to the people of Santa Barbara on Wood and Science.

The Tulare Times is authority for the statement that the Pacific and Visalia Railroad Company will promptly disincorporate after a meeting to be held next month.

The total number of shares subscribed to the stock and bonds of the Napa Valley Railroad is as follows: San Joaquin, 547; Fresno, 180; Merced, 1; Napa, 1,000; Solano, 1,000; Sonoma, 1,000.

The Napa Independent says: "We are glad to see that all over up the county that the sentiment of cattle-growing is on the increase, and the farmers are getting down to business."

The Placer Herald of the 27th of December speaks well of the Lincoln coal mine, which is now being worked by a company that are organized and a large force of men at work.

Mr. Thomas Maloney of Hollister recently sold a hundred acres in Monterey county with wheat. The grain is now growing finely, and the purchaser will realize a handsome profit from his magnificent speculation.

The County Judge of El Dorado county has issued a proclamation offering a reward of one hundred dollars for the arrest of Jesse Fraser, who is charged with the murder of Mrs. Fraser on a ranch in that county, and previously been declared elected to the Assembly.

A new wagon and carriage road is to be built on the Sonoma side from Napa to the Lick-ins mercantile grounds, and from thence to Tahoe City. The distance is about seventy miles, and when completed the road will furnish a delightful carriage drive for tourists.

The Quincy National says the storms of the past week or two have done more damage to the roads than any other in the history of the county, and that before the next year's rains set in, the roads must be put in better condition. The interest is good water and a good quality. But there is really one step from the sublime to the ridiculous." I cannot but call attention in this connection to a few remarks made by a very popular Presbyterian divine of this city (Stockton), in the winter of 1868, delivered a sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association, in which, interwoven with the thread of his discourse, he gave the property to Horticulturist, Jr., and that only because the Horticulturist, Jr., was a member of his church. The gentleman who attended for many years, and who is now living in New York city, and is very much respected.

The Placer Herald says: "Since the great hydraulic mines have been stopped by the courts, and the miners have been driven from their claims, the population of Placer county has been greatly reduced, and many of the miners have left the county altogether. Many of those who have remained have turned their attention to farming, and are now engaged in putting in crops. Many of the farmers are not aware of that property ground will produce as much as it will, and in other words, destroy its productiveness entirely. In other words, destroy its productiveness entirely. In other words, destroy its productiveness entirely. In

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

The Catholic Union.

The annual meeting of the Catholic Union of Ireland was held in the Chapel of St. Kevin, December 3d, under every condition which could lend dignity and gathering with weight, importance and prestige. The chair was occupied by a nobleman whom Ireland with good reason regards with confidence and respect. His Eminence the Cardinal Archbishop, his brace the Primate, the Archbishop of Cashel, and several other Prelates honored the meeting with their presence. The Irish laity were represented by a great number of gentlemen of position and influence, and the Irish clergy was equally well represented. From the eloquent addresses delivered, and from the resolutions adopted, an accurate idea of the objects which the Catholic Union proposes for itself and of the ends which it pursues may be gathered. The Union fulfills a twofold function—it has, so to speak, a home and a foreign policy. In one respect it forms a link by which the Catholics of Ireland are bound in the closest union to the Catholics of the Continent. In the other, it is a watchful guardian over Catholic interests in our own country. It was only natural that in the proceedings yesterday peculiar prominence should have been given to the foreign relations of the Union. Events of absorbing interest and incalculable importance are now being transacted on the Continent of Europe. The Pope is a prisoner in his own Eternal City. The Infidel has come from his home to the patrimony of St. Peter, has flooded Rome with the raffinery of Italy, and has set up a licentious court in the Palace of the Quirinal. Through Italy—from the Alps to the Adriatic, from Sicily to Lombardy—the work of demoniac spoliation goes on. Churches are being plundered; pious ladies driven from their convents with every circumstance of unmanly cruelty; episcopal funds stolen; religious edifices famous for their beauty or their history converted into barracks for the troops of Il Re Galantuomo. In Germany, and in Switzerland also, a fierce prosecution rages. In both countries the State is making desperate efforts to crush out Religious Freedom and Catholic Rights. Switzerland has driven Mgr. Mermillod into exile. Prussia has expelled the Jesuits and has deposed the Archbishop of Posen.

Need we say that of such events as these the Catholic Union speaks in tones of burning indignation? By the lips of the speakers and by formal resolutions it yesterday laid at the feet of the prisoner of the Vatican a dutiful and filial tribute of sympathy, an unshaken loyalty, a fervent aspiration for the complete liberation of the Holy Father, and the speedy restoration of his plundered inheritance. Expression was also given to the profound affection with which not alone all Catholics, but all honest men, must see the recent spoliations in Italy. Last, but not least, the sad meeting placed on record its admiration and gratitude for the heroic zeal, the distinguished ability, the indomitable constancy with which the Swiss and German prelates are maintaining a contest which is now alone a combat for Catholic liberties, but a struggle for intellectual freedom, threatened by a soul-blighting despotism. The Union, then, has done all things and unto God nothing. Passing from foreign to home to mistake, the Union adopted a resolution pledging itself to support the principles of the Catholic education recently declared by the Bishops, and another protesting against the manner in which Catholic interests are neglected in the administration of the Poor Law, and notably in the appointments of dispensary officers by Dispensary Boards. No one who knows anything of rural Ireland will regard this as a small matter. Boards of Guardians and Dispensary Boards are too often the last refuge of Ascendency, and in districts of the island where nine-tenths out of every twenty of the inhabitants are Catholic "no Catholic need apply" is the rule when a medical office falls vacant. In these and kindred matters the Catholic Union will find an ample scope for good and useful work. Though the great strongholds of Ascendency have been swept away, the evil spirit still lurks in dark places, and one of the functions which the Union is well fitted to discharge is to depict it forever.—Dublin Freeman.

Orange Blasphemers.

A meeting was held in the Rotunda on the evening of December 3d, at which, according to the Daily Express, "Home Rule received its quietus." At the momentous meeting Richard Caldbeck, M.P., presided, and the speakers were the chairman, Mr. Johnson, M.P., Mr. T. O. Peel, an Armagh coroner, a "Professor" from Glasgow, and two or three clergymen, whose names, we are ashamed to say, are not very familiar to our ears. One of the resolutions reiterated condemnation of the Home Rule movement, and declared it to be the unanimous determination of the meeting "to resist with the whole force of the institution any attempt to disorganize the British Empire." Why one who recollects how a similar determination was come to in the case of the establishment of the Protestant Church, will feel convinced that the Rotundo Orangemen are thoroughly in earnest. Other resolutions were passed, "expressing gratification at the attitude assumed by those parties who assisted during the recent revision of Parliament the attempts of the Ultramontane party to get control of education in Ireland, protesting against further concessions to the party, and denouncing the "organized conduct of the Irish Executive established in the Odd-Island and Portadown cases," and, on the whole, the demonstration in the Rotundo, if it does not overturn the Gladstone administration and put an end to the hopes of the Home Rulers at once and forever, cannot be far from achieving both those objects.—Dublin Nation, December 6.

Testimonial to one of the "O'Hara Family."

We take the following from the Irish Times of Monday, December 1st: "A numerously attended meeting, composed of the leading citizens and many of the country gentry, including the High Sheriff, John Murphy, Esq., was held on Saturday at the Athenæum, Kilkenny, to initiate a movement for raising a subscription to present a suitable testimonial to Michael Hanlon, Esq., late postmaster, on the occasion of his approaching departure from his native city. The meeting was presided over by James Sullivan, Jr., Esq. Several gentlemen spoke of the many claims which Mr. Hanlon possessed on the gratitude of his townsmen, and of Irishmen generally, in consequence of his vast literary talents, which, in conjunction with those of his brother John, had accomplished so much for the reputation of his country and its people by the "Tales of the O'Hara Family." Allusion was also made to Mr. Hanlon's claims by his long life of usefulness as an author of Kilkenny, and for the admirable manner in which he had discharged the duties of such a position as mayor, and also those of his late appointment. The necessary steps to make the movement a successful one having been taken, the meeting adjourned."

ENGLAND.

An Hour with Thomas Moore.

The Rev. Peter Gallagher, S.J., last evening gave a very interesting and instructive lecture on the eminent lyric poet of Ireland, in St. Mary's street Hall, Edinburgh. It was evident that the lecturer had the intention of giving a brief account of the poet's life from birth to death. He ended, however, with his marriage, reserving the remainder of the poet's life for some probable future occasion. The lecturer said truly that the fame of Moore will be immortal, more because of the melodies to which he welded thoughts that glow and words that burn," than as the author of "Lalla Rookh." Moore was not born to be the writer of an epic poem. There is no nation that has given birth to more than one such writer, and no doubt Milton will be our epic poet of all time. He then briefly sketched the boyhood and youth of Moore until he went to London, where he soon became the favorite of the aristocratic noblemen and high-born dames of fashionable life. He told how he came to publish his translation of the odes attributed to Anacreon, and so gained the reputation of being among the first literati of the day. Of course the celebrated Memoirs could be but briefly touched. The lustrious countryman Francis Jeffrey was mentioned, considerably dwelt on and ably handled. Lastly, mention was made of Moore's to be true the fact of the wild melodies of Ireland being the great instigator of Moore's poetry, and that these have been so national airs, we should never have seen or read the praises sung that were ever written in any language. The lecture was illustrated by reading two or three of the melodies which are applicable to some of Ireland's worthy sons, and the reverend gentleman closed by stating that the Moore by his songs had done much to awaken the feelings of Irishmen to rise up and vindicate the rights of which they had been deprived throughout so many generations of men. It was on this that the lecturer had taken great pains to make his words plain enough to be understood by the youngest and least educated of his auditory. For ourselves we own that we were much interested in it, and we think such lectures calculated to raise up in the minds of the people a laudable desire of information about the illustrious men who have adorned our literature by their talents and writings. A new feature graced the proceedings—namely, the introduction of a musical lunatics. The ball was well filled by a most sympathetic audience, who showed their appreciation of the intellectual treat they were receiving by frequent and discriminating plaudits. The Rev. E. J. Hanlon occupied the chair, and in brief and well chosen remarks introduced the lecturer. The chairman also made a few remarks at the end complimentary to the Rev. Father Williams, in which the audience appeared entirely to concur.—Edinburgh Courant.

The African War.

The Ashantees continue to fly away the moment the British approach. The Ashantees were to fly away the moment Sir Garnet Wolsey arrived at Cape Coast Castle, and the capture and utter demolition of Coomassie were immediately to follow, as a matter of course. But early last month the Britishers were acutely defeated in a severe battle at Dunqua, with the loss of one officer and some men killed and three or four other officers and forty men wounded; and a few days after they were attacked, with astonishing pluck and boldness, in their camp at Abrakampa. In this latter encounter, however, the Ashantees were the defeated party and were forced to beat a retreat; and the correspondent of the Times considers the circumstance of the latter the result of the affair at Dunqua. But men that would dare attempt, with seven-and-six-penny rifles, to take by assault a fortified place defended by a sufficient force of splendidly armed men, are not, one would suppose, like to be thoroughly cowed by one defeat, however disastrous.—Dublin Nation, December 6.

A Great Picture.

Holman Hunt's great picture, at which he has been laboring for the last three years, is now on view in Old Bond street, and is certainly a marvelously grand production. It represents the interior of the House of the Holy Family at Nazareth. A carpenter's bench is in the foreground, and about the apartment are scattered tools, ships and odds and ends of furniture, while through the window is seen the distant hills and vineyards, stands our Lord, vested in a white tunic, loosely confined at the waist, His arms are reached out, and the horizontal lights throw His shadow on a beam in such a manner as to suggest a crucifix. Joseph is at the left hand of the Blessed Virgin is on her knees before a coffer containing the gifts offered by the wise men from the divine Sun. She holds a crown in her hands, and in that attitude her eyes are caught by the terribly suggestive shadow. The painter has elaborated every detail of the picture with infinite pains and has evidently spared neither time nor study in making it delicious. The head of our Lord is a noble study, with nothing of the academy about it. The picture will be on view in Dublin next year.—Dublin Nation, December 6.

London Policemen.

Who would be a London policeman now? Toil force is getting up its name for a storm devotion to practices of violence and perdevotion to practices of violence and perdisorderly, is in luminous danger of a speedy end of involuntary seclusion. Nay, we hear it is said that Mr. Lowe will have a prosecution set on foot against the constables who took possession of Colonel Fraser and his leash of officers in the lobby of the Argyle Rooms. The Duke of Cambridge wanted to have no mote about it. Indeed, assured for the police may ask very troublesome questions in that ugly style that cross-examining counsels have; let Mr. Lowe is not a man so regardful as he ought to be of the refined and sensitive feelings of the army. One way or another, their worships the police have fallen on troublous times in London.—Weekly News, December 6.

GERMANY.

The Duello.

Observe the duello as an agency for redressing grievances. How admirably it works! The other day, according to a rumor now current in Berlin, and circulated by the press of Europe, Count Goeben, a German General, sent Field-Marshal Manteuffel a challenge to come out and fight him. The cause of quarrel was that the official report of the Marshal concerning the battle of Amiens, in the recent war with France, contained some observations displeasing to Count Goeben, who had borne a prominent part in the battle. The Count wanted satisfaction. He asked, as we have said, for that kind of satisfaction declared by the voice of an immemorial tradition to be specially value to a gentleman." Well, the Marshal, if we may say so without the suspicion of irreverence, proved himself a plucky old fellow. He can fire off a pistol as well as write a report, so he took his ground, and by his expressed opinions about the battle of Amiens, hustled his pistol, emptied it, and went back again, safe and sound, to Berlin. Not so with Count Goeben. He went back to Berlin with a bullet in his bowels. This annoys him a little, no doubt; but then he wanted satisfaction, and he must be delighted to have got so much of it. The enjoyment he has managed to knock out of the code of honor, and the sense of the justice of the trifling circumstance that the official report on the battle of Amiens reached the ground, would, as it did before the satisfying bullet sped. Having the pistol in his hand, Count Goeben thinks no more of the battle. True or false, the story certainly points a moral.—Dublin Nation, December 6.

Persecutions.

BERLIN, December 2.—It appears that the state of things in the Polish provinces—and particularly Posen—is worse than ever. Symptoms of the same kind are beginning to show themselves in Silesia. The Archbishop of Breslau has been fined 3,000 thalers for the illegal appointment of eighteen priests. The Bishop of Paderborn—one of the ablest in Catholic Germany—has incurred fines to the amount of 2,500 thalers; and other cases might be cited. The Archbishop of Cologne, Dr. Melchowski has already received the summons to appear before the ecclesiastical court here, as up to last night he had taken no notice of the intimation to resign his see.

It is not improbable that within ten days or so the province of Posen will be declared in a state of siege, on account of the disaffection which the priests are believed to be exercising in the carrying out of the measures that have been taken against Archbishop Ledochowski.

The Government has also to persuade the Government that no extraordinary military precautions are necessary to preserve order, but the Government are resolved notwithstanding to act with vigor.

The Emperor Francis Joseph celebrated on Monday the twenty-fifth anniversary of his accession to the throne of Austro-Hungary. In receiving the deputations from the country his Majesty said he sincerely hoped that the blessing of God would attend the labors of the clergy, and added that he was convinced their zeal and disinterestedness would not be wanting to the cooperation which their influence enabled them to lend. He warmly acknowledged the loyalty which the Catholic clergy had always shown.

No extra charge for Drawing, Embroidery, Painting, or other languages.

Address Mother Superior, for the Sisters.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY, FOR YOUNG LADIES,

BENICIA ..... CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education embraces the various branches of instruction usually taught in the most approved seminaries for young ladies. Pupils of any religious denomination will be received, but, for the sake of uniformity, all are required to be present at the regular religious services of the Institution.

The scholastic year, comprising ten months, opens on the first of August, and ends about the middle of June. No deduction will be made if the pupil is withdrawn during the session, except in case of sickness. Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from date of reception.

TERMS

Per annum (payable half yearly in advance):

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, use of library, and stationery.....$250 00

Entrance Fee.....10 00

Use of Instrument, per month.....4 00

Drawing, Painting and Music from extra charges. There is no extra charge for the French of Spanish languages, nor for the Use of Globes.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress.

Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the SISTER SUPERIOR.

1736

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,

Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.

Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:

(Payable half yearly in advance.)

For board, bedding, washing, and mending, including library.....$225 00

Entrance fee, to be paid only once.....10 00

Vacation at College.....40 00

DAY PUPILS.

Senior class.....$40 00

Junior class.....30 00

Vocal and instrumental music, drawing and modern languages, are for all Extras. Payments are required at the scholastic year commence respectively on the first of August and the first of January.

For further information address the Secretary,

FATHER ANASTASIUS,

Very Rev. P. HENNEBERY, Superior.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State and empowered to confer scholastic honors, will open on the Twenty-third Monday of August (24th), and continue in session forty weeks.

TERMS:

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$15

Boarding and Tuition, per session.....72 50

Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to employ one's own) per session.....5 00

Instrumental Music, Painting and Painting Flowers on Velvet, Wax Flowers, Wax Fruit, Drawing, Crayon Drawing, French, Spanish or German Languages, use for Piano and Harp, per session.....40 00

Payments are required to be made half a session in advance. Pupils will be received at any time, but are to be present at the opening of the session.

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY,

MISSION DOLORES, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS ACADEMY IS A BRANCH OF THE Notre Dame Institution, San Jose, and the course of instruction, which embraces the Primary as well as the Academic and Higher departments, is the same in all the branches, both useful and ornamental, taught in the Mother House, and in all the Institutions of the Sisters of Notre Dame.

The first term of the Eighth Annual Session will commence August 5, 1874.

Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the first session.

TERMS:

Boarding.....$150

Per quarter (session payments in advance.)

Board, tuition, washing, with use of bedding.....$40 00

Music and use of instrument.....15 00

Vocal Music.....5 00

Drawing and Painting.....5 00

Vacation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Terms per month in advance.

Select (or Scholastic) Class.....$2 50

Elementary and Senior, per month.....1 50

Tuition on Piano, " .....2 00

French, " .....1 00

No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, French and Ornamental Needlework, nor for the Spanish language.

N.B.—The above establishment is also the novitiate of the Order.

For Prospectuses and further particulars apply to the SISTER SUPERIOR.

SISTER RAYMUNDA CHENAULT,

Superioress.

sold

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed upon every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. Reading, Writing, Grammar, Rhetoric, Composition and Elocution are publicly taught and constantly practiced.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00

Physician's Fee and Medicines.....5 00

Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00

Modern Languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 5th of August.

For further particulars apply to BROTHER PATRICK, Director.

1736

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,

SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, under the charge of the Friars Minor of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday, 9 August.

The object of the Institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical Education, at as low a rate as possible. The climate of California—and thereby hangs its advantages—stands in the reach of all.

TERMS.

Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10 00

Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of about ten months.....200 00

Music Lessons and German form extra charges.

Those who pass creditable at the College will be charged $50.

Payments must be made semi-annually in advance.

Parents will pay for medical attendance, and supply bed and bedding, etc.

Money will not be advanced by the College; for the purchase of pocket articles, a sufficient sum must be given.

For further particulars apply to

REV. J. J. O'KEEFE, O. S. F.

1p9

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEGREES CONFERRED

Rev. JAMES McGILL, C. M.,

1636-tf President.

SAN JOSE ADVERTISEMENTS.

WILLIAM ABEL. J. CARMICHAEL. M. S. SULLIVAN

ABEL, CARMICHAEL & SULLIVAN,

No. 241 MARKET STREET,

SAN JOSE.....CALIFORNIA.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Groceries, Liquors and Provisions,

ALSO.....

Patent Medicines and General Merchandise.

nly

EDWARD MAHONEY,

Corner Market and Santa Clara Streets,

SAN JOSE.

DRY GOODS, CLOTHING, BOOTS, SHOES, Etc.

BF TAILORING.—Clothing cut and made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. n22tf

L. CHOPARD,

WATCH AND MAKER JEWELER,

No. 259 Santa Clara street,

Auzerais Block.....SAN JOSE.

n18

NEW YORK EXCHANGE,

First Street, bet. Santa Clara and St. John streets,

SAN JOSE, CAL.

BARKER & TOWNE.....Proprietors.

BF Coach and Carriages attend all trains. n22

C. WALSH'S

LIVERY STABLE,

Mal First Street (opp. N. Y. Exchange Hotel),

SAN JOSE.

n22

SAN JOSE MARBLE WORKS.

E. POWER,

WAREHOUSE, 630 SECOND STREET

(Opposite North Methodist Church.)

MANUFACTORY:

SEVENTH STREET.....North of Julian,

WEST SAN JOSE.

Postoffice Box, 558.

STATUARY TOMBS, HANTEL-PIECES, HEAD-STONES, FOUNTAINS

And every description of

MARBLE WORK.

DESIGNING, MOULDING, Etc.

And every style Wood and Stone Carving. n30

MISCELLANEOUS.

PIPIFAX

Mankind are easily impressed by climatic changes and magnetic disturbances in certain conditions of atmosphere, which causes

PIPIFAX

Keeps the skin in a supple condition, the cuticle pliant, the pores open, and brings the blood to the surface, thereby enabling the effects of the counteract three baneful atmospheric influences.

PIPIFAX

Strengthens the living vital nervaurie principle. It gives tone to the nerves, nerves, filaments membranes, and all tissues of the internal organs. As a cure for habitual drunkenness.

PIPIFAX

Acts as a tonic and stimulant, and so partly supplies the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevents that sensible physical prostration that follows the sudden breaking off from the use of intoxicating poisons.

Persons in whom the passion for strong drink has grown powerful than the will, after using

PIPIFAX

Soon recover their self-control and lose all desire for drink. PIPIFAX obviates such a great nuisance throughout Germany on account of its marvelous medicinal virtue, that it was styled the

MAGIC BITTERS.

The Trade Mark of a Red Devil was adopted because that during the Middle Ages every discovery in arts, sciences and medicine was attributed to Satanic influence. The present proprietors have adopted a new Trade Mark, it consist of a CUPID AND BASKET OF FLOWERS, with the words, "Restores Youth and Health" underneath.

PIPIFAX

Promotes the separation of bile, which is then passed through the blood, preventing fevers and diseases peculiar to the climate. It improves the healthy condition of the stomach and bowels.

PIPIFAX

Is an enemy to all corruption, and assists and fortifies nature. Its manner of operation is to drive in the extreme parts, and through all emunctories of the body, all the bad humors which molest it.

sold by all Druggists, Grocers and Liquor Dealers. all-3m

A MAN OF A THOUSAND.

A CONSUMPTIVE CURED.

WHEN DEATH WAS HOURLY EXPECTED from Consumption, all remedies having failed, accident led to a discovery whereby Dr. H. James cured his only child with a preparation of Cannabis Indica. He now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expense. Prate is not a single symptom of consumption that it does not disappear in the beautiful art of making Fellner, which is a perfect representative of the natural leaf, and made without smoke or scissors. Price only 25 Cents. These packages can be had from the author, DAVID HERMAN, No. 112 West Forty-first street, New York, or from the office of this paper. n13

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION OF HARTLY GOLDEN will be thankfully received by MAY. HEALY, 24 FRENCH STREET, 26 N. Mary's Cathedral. He was last heard of in Virginia City, Nevada. dc26

INFORMATION WANTED—OF MICHAEL HEALY, a native of county Kilmore, Ireland, who left Boston, New Jersey, for California in 1849. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his cousin, MICHAEL HEALY, of this city. Mercury remedy, Cal., or by MARY HEALY, of the Mountain House, Orange, N. J. 1p-16

INFORMATION WANTED—OF CATHARINE RYAN, who came to California about the year 1857. When last heard from—in 1869—she was living in Sacramento. Any information of her will be thankfully received by THOMAS BURKE, Sacramento, Cal. 1p-16

INFORMATION WANTED—OF THE present residences of MRS. MARY J. BYRNE, widow of James Byrne, who left the South Archfield city in Amador county about ten years ago. When last heard from she was living in the same county. Direct to THE MONITOR Office, 413 Clay street, San Francisco.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF DENIS MOLONEY, who emigrated from Dublin fifteen years ago. He is supposed to have two brothers and one sister in this city. Also, of RICHARD MAHONY, a native of Schoorbeery, Limerick; supposed to be at San Jose, in this county. Any information regarding will please address: Rev. J. PRENDERGAST, St. Mary's Cathedral, San Francisco.

CANDIES! CANDIES!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

Of all descriptions and of the best materials, freshly manufactured every day.

CANTY & WAGNER

Wholesale and Retail

Confectioners

167 MONTGOMERY ST.,

Between Bush and Sutter.....SAN FRANCISCO

The attention of the trade is called to our immense assortment of Candies and other goods, which we are warranted to keep in all climates. Prices low and terms liberal. Orders from the country carefully attended to $10 ANY LADY OR CHILD OVER EIGHT years of age can earn ten new hats. Machine Hat, Cloth and Trimming for making Wax Flowers for only $1 50 by purchasing the new book of instruction and an entire set of models. Or her book of instruction in the beautiful art of making Feltner, which is a perfect representative of the natural leaf, and made without models or scissors. Price only 25. These books can be had from the author, ADAM HERMAN, No. 112 West Forty-first street, New York, or from the office of this paper.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,

MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer scholastic honors. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION,

(Payable in advance):

Board, Tuition, Washing.....$125 00

Music, with use of instrument.....40 00

Drawing and Painting.....15 00

No charge for the French, Spanish and German languages, nor for Plain Needle-work and Fancy Needlework.

The first term of the eighteenth annual session will commence August 29, 1873.

Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the formation of classes.

TERMS:

Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$10

Per quarter (session payments in advance.)

Board, tuition, washing, with use of bedding.....$40 00

Music and use of Instrument.....15 00

Vocal Music.....5 00

Drawing and Painting.....5 00

Vacation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Terms per month in advance.

Select (or Scholastic) Class.....$2 50

Elementary and Senior, per month.....1 50

Tuition on Piano, " .....2 00

French, " .....1 00

No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, French and Ornamental Needlework, nor for the Spanish language.

N.B.—The above establishment is also the novitiate of the Order.

For Prospectuses and further particulars apply to the SISTER RAYMUNDA CHENAULT, Superioress.

sold

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL.

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN HANford, Tulare County, twenty miles from the railroad depot, and twenty-four from the city. The grounds are extensive, and the building is large and well arranged.

The course of instruction embraces the various branches of a thorough English education. Music is also taught.

TERMS

(Invariably half yearly in advance).

Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, use of library, per annum.....$200 00

Use of Instrument, per month.....$4 00

Drawing, per month.....1 00

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences on the first Monday in August, and ends on the Thursday in June.

For further particulars apply to

SISTERS OF CHARITY,

Saint Vincent's School,

Santa Barbara, Cal.

1736

STOCKTON ADVERTISEMENTS.

GARVIN & NUNAN,

Corner Main and Sutter streets.....STOCKTON.

DEALERS IN.....

Books, Periodicals, Magazine PICTURES, Etc.

News Agents—Advertising Agents and

IN BUSINESS AGAIN.

New Grocery and New Liquor Store.

GEORGE NATT INFORMS HIS OLD FRIENDS and PATRONS, and the public generally, that he has opened a new and

Fashionable Boots and Shoes,

At lower rates than any other house in the city.

Ladies' and Children's Shoes made to order.

Gents' Boots and Shoes made occasionally of the best material and workmanship. The most leader Post Blind with care. In all cases a perfect fit guaranteed.

1m15 tf No. 24 Third Street.

MUSICAL PRESENTS.

Finely Bound! Useful! Entertaining!

BEETHOVEN'S LETTERS.....

LIFE OF GOTTSCHALK.....

LIFE OF HAYDN.....

LIFE OF CHOPIN.....

LIFE OF MOZART.....

LIFE OF MENDELSSOHN.....

LIFE OF WEBER.....

LIFE OF VON WEBER, TWO vols.....

LIFE OF BEETHOVEN.....

LIFE OF MEYERBEER.....

SCHARFS LETTERS.....

MENDELSSOHN'S LETTERS.....

PULSKY'S LETTERS.....

ROBERT'S LETTERS ON MUSIC.....

RITTER'S HISTORY OF MUSIC.....

SCHUMANN'S MUSICAL CRITICISMS.....

GARDINER'S MUSIC OF NATURE.....

THE MASTER AND HIS PUPIL.....

GEMS OF SONGS.....Cloth, $1; Gilt.....$2 00

GEMS OF BALLADS.....

GEMS OF TRIUMPH.....

WREATH OF GEMS.....

GEMS OF SACRED SONG.....

100 SEE OF GERMAN SONG.....

GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG.....

SILVER CHORD.....

GEMS OF SACRED MELODY.....

PIANOFORTE HEMS.....

Any of the above sent, C. O. D., or P. O. Box.

Address, C. H. PEIRCE & CO.,

Publishers,

Boston.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER FOR 1874

IN ADDITION TO THE LEADING STORY to be published

BRAVE BOYS OF FRANCE;

A Tale of the Late War in Europe

By Mrs. Prentiss (author of "Stepping Heavenward"), the publishers of the YOUNG CRUSADER have made arrangements for the publication of a number of MARKABLE EVENTS OF HISTORY; interesting Stories of BRAVE BOYS; PAPERS ON THE RISE OF ERIE; incidents of TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE; Articles on Natural History, Science, Earth, Sea and Air; curious facts in NATURE; SCIENCE AND ART; papers with a great variety of amusing and instructive PARLOR and other reading for the family circle.

The volume begins with the year, ADDING ONE AND ONE MAKE TWO, and closes with the REV. WILLIAM BURNS,

Famous Scotch Evangelist, and Companion of Moody and Sankey.

Bound volumes of the "Young Crusader" of previous years, while they last, may be obtained of the publishers at the old stand.

Specimen Numbers Sent Free.....1

Terms—Single Copies.....1

10 Copies to one address.....8

Postage, 24 cents per year.

Address, JOHN L. SHOREY,

Publisher,

No. 36 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

Send volumes of the "Young Crusader" of previous years, while they last, may be obtained of the publishers at the old stand.

Specimen Numbers Sent Free.....1

Terms—Single Copies.....1

10 Copies to one address.....8

Postage, 24 cents per year.

Address, JOHN L. SHOREY,

Publisher,

No. 36 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

GIANT CEMENT!

A MOST EXTRAORDINARY AND ENTIRE novelty! A self-polishing cement for mending Fine Crockery, Glassware, Marble, Meerschaum Pipe Ornaments, Bric-a-brac, Ivory, Bone, Horn, Tortoise shell and parlor Ornaments, Wood, Leather, Boots and Shoes, and parlor Ornaments and Rooms, Wood, Leather, Boots and Shoes, and parlor Ornaments and Rooms. This Cement possesses the following qualities: It will mend any article. Every one is its own testimonial. ADHERES FIRMLY. Will not injure the finest fabric. Stains, Soiling, Coats and Hose without soiling. Many articles are spoiled for want of a little cement. Every one should have a package put up in convenient form for the pocket. Every package is warranted with full directions. Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of 25 cents. Liberal discount to the trade. Sold by Druggists and Dealers throughout the country. Dealers can be supplied by addressing orders from any house here or in Sacramento with the factory, or by sending direct to us. Send for Agents' Circulars and Price List, to Giant Cement Manufactory at Co., 419 Washington street, San Francisco.

MINERS' RUBBER CEMENT.

ap16,

THE MONITOR. 7

AGENTS FOR "THE MONITOR."

Alameda—W. H. Wright.
Alameda—Jas. Walsh.
Amador City—M. G. Mooney.
Auburn—James Walsh.
Austin, Nev.—Martin Ian.
Auburn—T. Griffin.
Benicia—Bishop—Thomas Mackey.
Ben Ellis, Alameda County—M. Sullivan.
Byrnes' Store—P. Tarpey.
Bodie—Martin Quirk.
Buena Vista Amador County—Thomas Cole.
Benton—J. C. O'Brien.
Cloverdale—Thomas Cahill.
Columbia—Thomas Walsh.
Canada—F. Maguire.
Chemeketa—M. Brosnan.
Columbia—Mich. Reedy.
Carson City—Thos Burke.
Castroville—Wm. Curtin.
Cayucos—Thos. McDonough.
Chicken Flat—Dr. Powell.
Chicken Ranch—Robt. Peel.
Downieville—Hugh Gallagher.
Dixon—Thos. Grant.
Dutch Flat—Jas. Cunningham.
Ellis Ranch—M. Ball.
Eureka—Wm. Wilson.
Entiat Creek—P. Fogan.
Elko—Andrew F. Hamerson.
Fresno—M. J. Garvin.
St. Louis—D. Usullin.
Gilroy—Patrick Ryan.
Gonzales—Rev. Father Nugent.
Grass Valley—Rev. Father Nugent.
Hollister—J. A. Small.
Hot Springs—Rev. Father Nugent.
Hot Springs—Rev. Father Nugent.
Jackson—H. Muldoon.
Jackson—Rev. Father Nugent.
Jamestown—H. O'Donnell.
Jamestown—H. O'Donnell.
Knight's Ferry—Thos. Loyalton and Sierraville—P. McCarthy.
Livermore—Frank Mc Gowan.
Los Angeles—Broderick & Co.
Marysville—T. J. Power.
Marysville—Rev. Father Nugent.
Milpitas—John Sinnot.
Mission San Jose—J. Murphy.
Murphy's Camp—James Walsh.
Mayfield—J. Isaac.
Monte Cristo—Rev. Father Nugent.
Nevada—Rev. Father Nugent.
Oakland—
Oroville—Rev. Father Nugent.
Placerville—James Patton.
Petaluma—Jeff Tyler.
Petaluma—D. Doherty.
Pescadero—J. Lane.
Phoenix—Owen McGuffey.
Point Reyes Station—
Redwood City—J. Crowley.
San Mateo—Peter Dunn.
San José—A. Waldstein.
San Margarita—William Parrell.
San Luis Obispo—Capt. Thos. Moore.
Santa Barbara—T. Hope.
San Buenaventura—Wm. Brown.
San Diego—Judge Hayes.
Santa Cruz—M. Ball.
Santa Rosa—P. Wilson.
Sutter Creek—P. Fogan.
San Andreas—F. Hamerson.
Stockton—M. J. Garvin.
St. Louis—D. Usullin.
Salinas—Father Ed. Connolly.
Sonora—John Barry.
Sonoma—Rev. Father Nugent.
Tuolumne—Rev. Father Nugent.
Truckee—
Virginia City—Rev. Father Nugent.
Vallejo—P. McGinley.
Watsonville—S. Cooke.
Washington—Rev. Father Nugent.

Postmasters will save a dollar by remitting and announce if they promptly pay their indebtedness to any agents or transmit the same directly to the publication office. Any person acting as agent and neglecting to forward money collected for subscriptions or arrears, and we require and must have the money.

LYONS & BARRY.

PACIFIC TEA COMPANY.

TREMENDOUS REDUCTION IN THE PRICE OF CROCERIES

THE STORE CROWDED DAILY.

9 Pounds Best Out Loaf Sugar, $1

All our TEAS are warranted to give satisfaction, or the money will be refunded. The facilities possessed by this Establishment for securing TEAS enables us to undersell any other House in the city. Our Goods are all chosen with a view to their intrinsic worth and good drinking qualities, rather than low prices.

300 Chests Extra Choice New Crop JAPAN TEA 68 cents per pound—Pleases everybody.

5,000 boxes new crop Japan Tea at from 15 to 18 per box.

We are now introducing our New Brand of TEA, FLOWERY FLAVOUR, at 60 cents per Pound.

12 Pounds Best Mixed Tea.....$1 00

COFFEES.

Old Government Java, 3 lbs.....$1 00

Finest French Breakfast, do.....1 00

Fresh Ground Coffees, do.....1 00

All other goods accordingly low.

Call and see us and save 25 per cent.

Remember, a dollar saved is a dollar earned.

This is the only place in the city where you can get pure Spices. Remember that, as the holidays are coming.

MURPHY BROS.,

Proprietors Continental Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,

759 and 761 Market Street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

a6-tf

Premium Cutlery.

First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1871
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1872
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1869
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1870
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1869
First Premium in Bay District Society in 1869
First Premium in New Orleans, 1870.

M. PRICE

FOR HOME-MADE CUTLERY,

STORE: 616 KEARNY ST., bet. Pine and Bush.

FACTORY: 10 STEVENSON STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BF Razors, Knives, Shears, etc., made to order and warranted. Particular attention paid to Scissors. Damaged Cutlery polished equal to new. Cutlery orders promptly attended to.

WORKING CLASS Male and Female, $10 a day. Agents wanted. All or spare time. Business honorable. Particulars free. Address G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

INSURANCE.

THE STATE INVESTMENT Insurance Company.

FIRE AND MARINE.

Assets.....$325 000

409 CALIFORNIA STREET.

PETER DONOHOE, President.
A. J. BRYANT, Vice-President.
C. H. CUSHING, S

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

One hundred and nine Cardinals have died since the accession of Pius IX.

Bishop McCloskey, of Louisville, Ky., consecrated the Church of Notre Dame in Porte at Portland on the 14th November.

Bishop Foley, of Chicago, blessed a 1,400-pound bell for the church of the Sacred Heart in that city last week.

The Sisters of Charity of the B. V. M. have from fifteen to sixteen hundred scholars under their care in one building in Chicago.

An intelligent Irish paper of New York says "Father Duggan lectured at the Catholic church, Platt's Hall, San Francisco, on the 11th instant."

The Catholic church at the village of Williston Mills, East Hampton, Mass., was burned on the evening of December 8th. It was insured for $14,000.

The Western Catholic says that two young clergymen from the archdiocese of Cashel, Ireland, passed through Chicago on their way to the Bishop of Dubuque. Their respective names were Moore and Duggan.

A colony of Sisters of the Order of St. Francis from Mount Olivet, near New Haven, Ky., recently purchased a house in Shelbyville, where they intend to open a school immediately.

Father Sargere, formerly of the church of the Holy Family at Chicago, has just returned from Europe, accompanied by three young Jesuit priests for the province of St. Louis, Mo.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Index says that Rev. J. F. Carroll received three converts into the Church last Sunday afternoon, and that this is now a matter of common occurrence in Cleveland.

Archbishop Perche, of New Orleans, administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to 2,000 persons in the last three and a half years. The number confirmed by him during the past year was 6,467.

The Rev. A. J. Wallace, for several years a priest at St. Pancras' Catholic Church, Ipswich, England, has accepted the appointment of Catholic Chaplain to the force engaged in the Gold Coast expedition.

Hon. Louis V. Bogy, of St. Louis, Mo., is now the only Catholic in the United States Senate. He is a native of the State he represents, very probably, as his father was before him. His name is pronounced Bojee.

Henry, the eldest son of Sir Allan Bellingham, of the county Louth, Ireland, has renounced the Protestant religion and entered the Order Church. What he renounces his father he will inherit one of the grandest properties in the country.

A very interesting ceremony took place on Sunday, December 28th, at the Redemptorist church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, at Boston Highlands, Mass. The solemn translation of the body of St. Nazarius, martyr (lately arrived from Rome), was celebrated.

On Tuesday, December 9th, Archbishop Bayley conferred Tonsure and Minor Orders on nineteen clerical scholastics of Woodstock College, Md., and on Thursday following he ordained six subdeacons and seven priests, all of the Jesuit Order.

Right Rev. Dr. McCloskey, Coadjutor Bishop of Albany, has conferred the order of priesthood on Rev. William Gillick, late of St. Joseph's College, Dublin, for the diocese of Albany, and on Rev. John Costigan, late of St. Mary's College, Emmetsburg, Md., for the diocese of New York.

The Catholic aristocracy of Rome, through the Roman Catholic Italian Times, have placed at the disposal of the Vatican many of their palaces, villas and houses for the benefit of the expropriated religious. The Pope has accepted the offer with great thanks.

The Archbishop of Paris has issued a pastoral in which he orders that no Roman ritual shall replace the Gallican throughout his diocese. The Roman ritual was observed throughout France upto 1735, when it was abolished, but the difficulty to replace those rituals is imperceptible to the majority of the people.

Ten of the thirty-five Sisters of Mercy now in Hartford are to be transferred to the new convent on Asylum street, to establish a normal seminary and boarding school. Four young ladies are to take the white veil during the present week, and three are to make their profession and take the black veil.

The St. Louis Watchman says that a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union will soon be held to take action in a resolution published by the President of that Society (Mr. Kelly, Mayor of Richmond, Va.), in advocacy of anti-Catholic principles.

The editor of the Louisville Catholic Advocate is authorized by his Bishop to say that any interpretation of the Bishop's card withdrawing his official recognition from the Advocate as his organ, does not imply dissatisfaction or discouragement of it as an independent Catholic newspaper.

In a pastoral from the Bishop of Vincennes, Ind., he says, "Duty compels me to instruct the pastors of our churches to refuse absolution to parents who, having the facilities and means of educating their children in a Christian manner, do, from worldly motives, expose them to the danger of losing their faith in public schools."

Mr. Arnold, assistant superintendent of the Western District Railroad, and Mr. A. E. Bean, the road master, finding the tract of the road between Sandy Hook and the Yankee farmers, employed Irishmen in their place, and made it a condition that they and the men in their employ should go to Mass on Sundays, as a partial guarantee to their good conduct.

The Catholic Advocate says, "A Chinese, sojourning in the guest house of the Trappist Monastery of Gethsemane Abbey, Nelson county, Ky., employs his time in printing for the monks. We have seen some of the specimens of his typography which are exactly executed." If he were to visit San Francisco he would find Chinamen at much more artistic work than that.

The late Michael Maher, of Boston, bequeathed $500 to Bishop Williams for the new cathedral, $500 for the St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, $500 for the Little Sisters of the Poor, and $500 for the Home of the Good Shepherd. The Association for the Protection of Catholic Children are made his residuary legatees.

The venerable Dr. Richard Mayberry, Sr., of Martinsburg, died in Baltimore on the 2d of December, aged eighty years. He was educated at Georgetown College when that institution was in its infancy; studied medicine in Philadelphia; served as medical officer during the war with England, and ever since 1810 he practiced in the home of his birth. He was always a firm Catholic and strong Democrat. His nephew, Mr. Mayberry, has written a valuable history of Maryland.

The Board of Supervisors of the Albany, N. Y., penitentiary have passed a resolution allowing each priest as the Bishop of Albany may direct every facility for holding services for the benefit of the Catholic inmates of the prison, at least one Sunday in each month, and that said priest may visit the prison at such other times as may be designated by the superintendent of said prison, for the purpose of giving religious instruction to prisoners of the Catholic faith.

The ex-Inspector of public educational institutions in France has sent a petition to the Assembly asking that the crime of blasphemy in the public streets be made a matter for punishment. He says that blasphemy and profaneness is fearfully on the increase throughout the country.

Archbishop Bayley has appointed the Rev. L. J. Mullay, formerly pastor of St. Joseph's, in Texas, to collect funds for the building of a church, commemorative of the great event of our Holy Father Pius IX. having passed the days of Peter. The church is to be dedicated to St. Pius V., patron of our present Pope. It will also be a tribute of respect to the late Archbishop who inaugurated the idea.

When the Church of St. Germain, in Geneva, was taken away from the Catholics, they brought the Masonic flag and Catholic worship, and every one of the congregation, after first protesting against the outrage, took away their seats and cushions and all private property to which they were legally entitled. The Masonic Hall was dedicated to the Sacred Heart, and contains all the private property recovered from St. Germain.

Rev. Father Deuterlings, the oldest priest in the West except Father St. Cyr of Carondelet, Mo., died on the 11th ult., at St. Vincent's presbytery, St. Louis. He was a priest of the Order of St. Vincent; eighty years of age, forty-seven a priest and forty-five years in the West. Louis' place was not worth $100 an acre when he came there; it is now worth a million. At his death his breviary and his cassock made up his entire fortune.

After three hundred and fifty tickets had been given away at the Fair of the Catholics to occupy the palaces, villas and houses of the country aristocracy, many persons of distinguished rank in the city of Rome have opened their doors and welcomed the poor people who have been driven from their homes out of their convents. All Catholics throughout the world should help these poor persecuted people.

The New York Herald says that Miss Phœbe Ripley, daughter of Rev. Samuel Ripley, recently became a Sister of the Visitation at Georgetown, D. C., was "a near descendant" of Madame Ripley. Mrs. Ripley, was a lady of fine culture. Professor Hedge, of Cambridge, pronounced her the most intellectual woman in New England." Miss Phœbe is an accomplished musician and linguist.

Bismarck is not as great a favorite with the Protestants of the United States as he was before the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. The temper of their German confreres on that occasion made it apparent that Osborder Protestantism was only awaiting its day to meet with the same persecutions which the Catholic Church does now.

The Bishop of Savannah, Ga., dedicated the church of the Immaculate Conception at Atlanta on the 11th December. He was assisted by Rev. Fathers Bassan, of Tuscumbia; Prendergast, Gross and MalinglY, McAnfferty, McCarthy and Caini, the latter from Rome. The sermon was preached by Very Rev. W. J. Hamilton, V.G. The church is Gothic, 100 feet by 60 outside the sanctuary, and has a seating capacity of one thousand.

The prospects of the Catholic Church in Georgia are very bright under the new Bishop of Savannah. The religious force of that jur..dt the Lord's vineyard is being rein.. ced. In this day the population is increasing in numbers, and educational and charitable institutions are being increased more rapidly than at any former period of her history. The Catholic population of Georgia is now estimated at one hundred in ten years to reach one hundred thousand.

The Duchess de Chevreuse, widow of the heroic Duke of that name, and mother of two young men who died so gallantly fighting for France in 1870, has written a letter from Paris to the Duke de Nemours in which she will never permit the tricolored flag to float over the graves of her dear ones. She says, "My sons fought for France and died for their country, but the flag which had been their standard was that of kings." shall not float over their remains."

The German-speaking residents of Chicago number about 100,000, one hundred thousand. Of these, the Roman Catholics claim forty-five thousand, for the religious accommodation of which there are provided eight church edifices and thirty priests. Forty-five thousand are found in the several Protestant sects and societies, for every one half of which no church buildings are provided.

The mission given at the church of the Immaculate Conception, Baltimore, has been very fruitful, upward of one hundred converts being received. The mission was conducted by the Redemptorist Fathers Burke, Hackley, Cook, Reid and Cook. A mission given in the same city at the colored church resulted in seventy converts being received. Over two hundred were confirmed.

The equipage presided over by Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, embracing the whole State of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and the northern portions of Lake Michigan, will be consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus on New Year's Day. This is to be beneficial to which each Archbishop and nine Bishops bestow on their people as a New Year's gift—glory to God in the highest and peace on earth to men of good will.

Bishop Whelan of Wheeling, W. V., has issued a pastoral to the clergy and laity of his diocese, in connection with the third provincial council to be held in the 30th of October, in which he eloquently treats of the marriage contract and its impediments, mixed marriages, education, Catholic schools, seminaries, the support of the clergy and the burial of the dead.

The Rev. Isidore Draper, in his letters from Germany to the New York Methodist, says, "As Rationalism is a spot in Orthodoxy, so Romanism acts beneficially on Protestantism in the matter of observing. The Catholics are everywhere faithful attendants upon the sanctuary, and this is one reason why the churches are so less numerically attended in northern than in southern Germany. Rationalism not sufficiently counteracts in the north to inspire a healthful emulation."

The Jesuit College of Woodstock, Maryland, has a number of some of the most subtle philosophers, far-reaching theologians, cultured academicians and linguistics, accurate mathematicians and scientists, who adorn the present age. There are men at Woodstock who have instructed Europe in sacred and profane learning, and Europe has cast them out. Thanks to Bismarck and Victor Emmanuel, this new college has gathered about it as much of what is venerable in history, renowned in letters, mighty in works and fragrant in virtue, as any other domicile in America. It is the architecture of the Jesuits and that's enough.

The Rev. Father Fitton of East Boston is the oldest among the first ordained priests in New England. He has erected many churches in years gone by, and calls on the faithful to assist him in erecting one more in honor of the Sacred Heart, before bidding them a final farewell. The foundations of this church is laid, and weekly Masses will be offered for the spiritual welfare of his benefactors.

A dispatch of December 26th, from Louisville, Ky., says that Hon. Shake-speare Caldwell, formerly member of Congress from that city, turned over to the poor of Louisville on Christmas Day a handsome building for hospital purposes, whom he has had erected at a cost of eight thousand dollars. It is to be called the Hospital of St. Mary and St. Elizabeth, and will be under the charge of the Sisters of Charity of the Nazareth (Ky.) Community.

THE MISSIONER.

The volunteer student has newly ordained
Permission to visit his friends has obtained.
In green his kin shall greet and friends will unite,
But the heart of the mother swells with delight;
Her home by will bring her back to the joy
That filled her young heart's first love boy.
And pleasure at dwelling its yet tiny frame,
Long, long are he ventured to stop her fond name;
And many small incidents, fell to mind
Shall fondly recall of his juvenile years.
When forward bounding the bridge's his young whim
And all her afternoons were centered in him.

In manhood she sees him progressing in grace,
The chosen of Him who had no resting place;
Oh, may he win wisdom that office to fill!
How now 'mid the ills where he first breath'd the air—

He's now 'mong his own native valleys so fair;
Where his mother's heart first learned to pray
The cause and the pathway that leads to the sky,
Death his breviary and his cassock made up his entire fortune.

After three hundred and fifty tickets had been given away at the Fair of the Catholics to occupy the palaces, villas and houses of the country aristocracy, many persons of distinguished rank in the city of Rome have opened their doors and welcomed the poor people who have been driven from their homes out of their convents. All Catholics throughout the world should help these poor persecuted people.

The New York Herald says that Miss Phœbe Ripley, daughter of Rev. Samuel Ripley, recently became a Sister of the Visitation at Georgetown, D. C., was "a near descendant" of Madame Ripley. Mrs. Ripley, was a lady of fine culture. Professor Hedge, of Cambridge, pronounced her the most intellectual woman in New England." Miss Phœbe is an accomplished musician and linguist.

Bismarck is not as great a favorite with the Protestants of the United States as he was before the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. The temper of their German confreres on that occasion made it apparent that Osborder Protestantism was only awaiting its day to meet with the same persecutions which the Catholic Church does now.

The Bishop of Savannah, Ga., dedicated the church of the Immaculate Conception at Atlanta on the 11th December. He was assisted by Rev. Fathers Bassan, of Tuscumbia; Prendergast, Gross and MalinglY, McAnfferty, McCarthy and Caini, the latter from Rome. The sermon was preached by Very Rev. W. J. Hamilton, V.G. The church is Gothic, 100 feet by 60 outside the sanctuary, and has a seating capacity of one thousand.

The prospects of the Catholic Church in Georgia are very bright under the new Bishop of Savannah. The religious force of that jur..dt the Lord's vineyard is being rein.. ced. In this day the population is increasing in numbers, and educational and charitable institutions are being increased more rapidly than at any former period of her history. The Catholic population of Georgia is now estimated at one hundred in ten years to reach one hundred thousand.

The Duchess de Chevreuse, widow of the heroic Duke of that name, and mother of two young men who died so gallantly fighting for France in 1870, has written a letter from Paris to the Duke de Nemours in which she will never permit the tricolored flag to float over the graves of her dear ones. She says, "My sons fought for France and died for their country, but the flag which had been their standard was that of kings." shall not float over their remains."

The German-speaking residents of Chicago number about 100,000, one hundred thousand. Of these, the Roman Catholics claim forty-five thousand, for the religious accommodation of which there are provided eight church edifices and thirty priests. Forty-five thousand are found in the several Protestant sects and societies, for every one half of which no church buildings are provided.

The mission given at the church of the Immaculate Conception, Baltimore, has been very fruitful, upward of one hundred converts being received. The mission was conducted by the Redemptorist Fathers Burke, Hackley, Cook, Reid and Cook. A mission given in the same city at the colored church resulted in seventy converts being received. Over two hundred were confirmed.

The equipage presided over by Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, embracing the whole State of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and the northern portions of Lake Michigan, will be consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus on New Year's Day. This is to be beneficial to which each Archbishop and nine Bishops bestow on their people as a New Year's gift—glory to God in the highest and peace on earth to men of good will.

Bishop Whelan of Wheeling, W. V., has issued a pastoral to the clergy and laity of his diocese, in connection with the third provincial council to be held in the 30th of October, in which he eloquently treats of the marriage contract and its impediments, mixed marriages, education, Catholic schools, seminaries, the support of the clergy and the burial of the dead.

The Rev. Isidore Draper, in his letters from Germany to the New York Methodist, says, "As Rationalism is a spot in Orthodoxy, so Romanism acts beneficially on Protestantism in the matter of observing. The Catholics are everywhere faithful attendants upon the sanctuary, and this is one reason why the churches are so less numerically attended in northern than in southern Germany. Rationalism not sufficiently counteracts in the north to inspire a healthful emulation."

The Jesuit College of Woodstock, Maryland, has a number of some of the most subtle philosophers, far-reaching theologians, cultured academicians and linguistics, accurate mathematicians and scientists, who adorn the present age. There are men at Woodstock who have instructed Europe in sacred and profane learning, and Europe has cast them out. Thanks to Bismarck and Victor Emmanuel, this new college has gathered about it as much of what is venerable in history, renowned in letters, mighty in works and fragrant in virtue, as any other domicile in America. It is the architecture of the Jesuits and that's enough.

The Rev. Father Fitton of East Boston is the oldest among the first ordained priests in New England. He has erected many churches in years gone by, and calls on the

A PROBLEM SOLVED.

BY HILARY JANE.

Said Sarah Ann to Miss Jane,
"Do tell me now, I pray,
Where's your marriage day,
So grand your late, and so pleased
The parts of each guest,
Concerning which such praises were
With one accord expressed?"

Said Miss Jane, in a great surprise,
"Why, have you never heard
That celebrated Bakery
For all things good?
'Tis No. 7 on Main street,
At WENTON'S, where you'll find
The cheapest bread and cakes and pies,
All of the choicest kind."

"And furthermore," said Miss Jane, (Grand parties they supply,
Not only with the staff of life,
And with the Cake and Pie,
But with Ice Cream and Coffee, too,
The best that's made in town;
At prices that astonish all!
And hence their great renown."

So now good people, rich and poor,
To Miss Jane give heed,
And her counsel, that you
May never come to need—
Go then to BAKER, WENTON'S,
In STOCKTON STREET, you'll find
The cheapest Bread and Cakes and pies,
All of the choicest kind.

Two Feet of Health.

Cold and damp are inimical to health, and we generally have an unwholesome combination of the two at this season. They penetrate the skin and lungs-tissue and affect the muscular, glandular and nervous organizations, causing rheumatism, neuralgia, chills and fever, and where there is a tendency to dyspepsia or consumption, producing an attack of indigestion or biliousness. The best advice that can be given under such circumstances is to keep the external surface of the body properly clothed, and to keep the internal organs in vigorous action. For this purpose there is no more genial and certain tonic than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Gradually but surely it overcomes the effects of exposure to malaria, and by its use the system is rendered unassailable by miasmatic and corrosive influences. In all parts of the United States it will be found a safeguard against disease, and in every locality where this purely vegetable stimulant and corrective is in general use, fevers and bilious complaints are of rare occurrence. Those who have been prostrated by a cold, model with sphere, and it is invariably particularly necessary for those who are afflicted with attacks of bile, acidity, sick headache, constipation, or any other disorder or cause of sickness such as a biliousness, a dislike. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the best remedy that can be had. It is also unsurpassed as a remedy for diseases of the kidneys, and for weakness in the stomach. Whole regions covered with healthwards grown. Regardless of labor, of heat or of cold,
Regardless of danger, of sickness or pain,
Regardless of glory, of honor or fame,
Regardless of country, of kindred or home;
Preferring to teach in the name of the Lord,
Than all the delights that this world can afford;
Let others be famous for eloquence and for gain,
For the glory of God and salvation of men,
May God in His wisdom our missioner guide
And crown his deserts with a blissful reward.
—London Universe. ROSSICUS.

Marshal MacMahon and the Irish People.

Dr. Molbwitt, Bishop of Rephoe, in a letter from Paris to a friend in this city, says the Dublin Freeman of December 9th, received a few days ago, gives a most interesting account of an interview which his Lordship and the Bishop of Ardagh (Dr. Conroy) had with Marshal MacMahon. The Marshal was very kind to the Irish prelates and that he felt proud of his connection with Ireland, and in the course of the interview warmly returned thanks, in the name of France, to the Irish people for the sympathy and assistance extended to her in her recent calamities. Knowing how straitly the Irish people were circumstanced, he said he would not ask them to do more than they could afford, but would be content if they would only show by their sympathy and assistance that they were not unmindful of the services of the French soldiers who, during the penal days, found a refuge in the ranks of the French army. He would, however, like to see them with a chorus of rejoicing; and now one of the leaders among them has raised a cry that they must be up and doing. Ireland is wasted in Ireland.

"The same spectacle was in the Germans assembled, "writes the Daily Express, "will have to be taken up again in the United Kingdom, and it is time. Upon the enemy's English Liberals are safe, and that where Church and State are separated, as in Ireland, Ultram inanism is not the case. And the Re-

DRY GOODS, ETC.

$50,000 WORTH

—OF—

BLACK SILKS

Bought for Cash

IN NEW YORK

DURING THE LATE FAILURES,

JUST RECEIVED

—AND—

NOW OFFERED FOR SALE AT

—AT—

THE WHITE HOUSE!

3,000 yards at $1 25 per yard;
Worth $2 50 per yard.
4,000 yards at $1 50 per yard;
Usual price $2 75.
8,000 yards at $1 75 per yard;
Regular price, $3 00.
8,000 yards at $2 per yard;
Good value at $3 50.
5,000 yards at $2 25 per yard;
Cost to import, $3 75.

THE ABOVE GOODS

ARE, WITHOUT EXCEPTION,

The Cheapest Lot

—OF—

BLACK SILKS

EVER OFFERED

—IN—

San Francisco

J. W. DAVIDSON & CO.,

N. W. Cor. Kearny and Post Sts.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF

DRY GOODS!

Complete in Every Department,

We are now prepared to supply our customers with

The Best and Cheapest Goods

In the City. Among which are—

Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Cretons,
Cashmeres,
Merinos,
Serges, Reps, Etc.

A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF

SHAWLS.

RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.

10 per cent IRISH TATTING sold to the trade at a liberal discount.

Thankful to our friends and the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

706 MARKET STREET,

OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.

DAY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

—DIRECT IMPORTERS OF—

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

116 and 118 Third Street,

Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

LANDERS, BYRNE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

French, English and American

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS.

New Goods Received by Railroad and Steamer.

NO. 4 THIRD STREET,

Near Market Street.....SAN FRANCISCO.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A NOBLE RECORD.

THE GREATEST

TRIUMPHS OF THE AGE

HAVE BEEN ACHIEVED BY THE

PIANOS

—OF—

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.,

(Boston)

Over Twenty Thousand of which are now in use, and daily receiving the unqualified indorsement

—OF—

THE LEADING PIANISTS IN THE WORLD

EXQUISITE FINISH, BEAUTY OF DESIGN, PERFECTION OF TONE, DELIGHTFUL TOUCH AND WONDERFUL DURABILITY, are among the features which cause all competent Judges to proclaim the above Instruments

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.

Superior to all Others Manufactured either in America or Europe.

Call and see them before purchasing elsewhere.

W. G. BADGER, Sole Agent,

No. 13 Sansome Street,

NEAR SUTTER.....SAN FRANCISCO.

PRINTING

Paper Ruling and Book Binding.

Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply,

PERFORMED BY

Bacon & Company,

Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.

Country Orders will receive equal care and attention as those from our city patrons.

TOYS CHEAP!

F. Geison,

416 Third street.....Between Bryant and Brannan

BRANCH STORE,

196 Second Street, corner of Howard.

GREENBACKS taken at par.

RUST AND OLDEST FAMILY MEDICINE.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely vegetable cathartic and tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Bilious attacks, and all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your druggist for it. Beware of imitations. 26 26-1yr

CURED MEATS.

Hams—California, 13½@15c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern do, 16@17c.
Bacon—California, 13½@15c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 16@17c.
Dried Beef—California, 15@16c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 18@19c.
Pickled Pork—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c.

FRESH MEATS.

Beef—For first quality, 10@12c; second quality, 8@9c per lb.
Veal—All grades, 9@10c per lb.
Mutton—All grades, 9@10c per lb.
Lamb—None in the market.
Pork—Dressed, grain-fed, 10@11c; corn fed, grain-fed, 8@9c per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Fowls—Hens, large, $7 50@8 00; Roosters, $4 00@5 00; Young Roosters, large, $5 @6 00.
Ducks—Tame, $5 @6 per dozen; Mallard, $3 50@4; Teal, $2 50@3; Small Ducks, $1 50.
Geese—Tame, $3 @4 per pair.
Turkeys—Alive, 18@20c; dressed, 22@25c per lb.
Quail—$1 50@2 per dozen.
Rabbits—Marsh, $1 50@2; Tame, $1 50@2 per pair.

DRIED FRUITS AND PRODUCE.

Butter—California fresh roll, good to choice, 40@45c; do fair to good, 35@40c; do pickled roll, 30@35c; Eastern, 40@45c; cheese, 20@22c.
Eggs—California, 35@40c; Eastern, 12½@15c.
Beans—California, 4c; Oregon, none; Eastern do, 10@12c.
Potatoes—California, 1@1½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 1½@2c per lb.
Onions—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.
Dried Apples—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.
Dried Peaches—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.
Dried Pears—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.
Dried Plums—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.
Dried Grapes—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.
Raisins—California, $2 50@3 per box; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, $3 50@4 per box.
Figs—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.
Prunes—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.
Nuts—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.
Honey—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.
Wax—California, 25@30c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 30@35c per lb.
Hides—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.
Tallow—California, 4@5c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 6@7c per lb.
Wool—California, 20@25c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 30@35c per lb.
Hops—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.
Barley—California, 1@1½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2@2½c per lb.
Oats—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.
Rye—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.
Corn—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.
Wheat—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, }
THURSDAY, January 1, 1874. }

FLOUR—The demand has been light during the past week, and the market has ruled quiet and steady at $7 50@8 00 per bbl.

WHEAT—The market has ruled quiet and steady at $1 70@1 75 per ctl.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote feed—Chevalier, $1 60@1 70; Brewing, $1 70@1 80 per ctl.

OATS—There are no changes to report, and the market has ruled quiet and steady at $2 50@3 00 per ctl.

CORN—Yellow, $1 70@1 75; White, $1 70@1 75 per ctl.

BRAN—Quotable at $15 @ 16 per ton.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $20@22 per ton.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Pinks, $3 50@3 75; Bayos, $3 50@3 75; Lima, $5 @5 50; small White, $3 50@small Butter, $3 50@3 75.

POTATOES—Sales at $1 @1 25 per ctl.

ONIONS—Sales at $2 @2 50 per ctl.

BUTTER—The receipts have been free with a fair demand. We quote as the range at No. 1 @ 47½@50c; No. 2 @ 40@45c.

CHEESE—Quotable at 21½ @ 22½c per lb.

EGGS—Quotable at 50@55c per dozen.

HAY—The receipts have been light with a fair demand. We quote as the range at No. 1 @ 1 75@2 00; No. 2 @ 1 50@1 75.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2 25 @ 2 50 lb.

BEESWAX—Quotable at 30@32½c per lb.

HIDES—Quotable at 8@9c per lb.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6@6½c lb.

WOOL—Quotable at 25@30c per lb for fine; 20@22½c for coarse; 30@35c per lb for mountain.

HOPS—We quote good to choice shipping growth at 15@20c; Buyers, 10@12½ per lb.

CURED MEATS.

Hams—California, 13½@15c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern do, 16@17c.

Bacon—California, 13½@15c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 16@17c.

FRESH MEATS.

Beef—For first quality, 10@12c; second quality, 8@9c per lb.

Veal—All grades, 9@10c per lb.

Mutton—All grades, 9@10c per lb.

Lamb—None in the market.

Pork—Dressed, grain-fed, 10@11c; corn fed, grain-fed, 8@9c per lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Fowls—Hens, large, $7 50@8 00; Roosters, $4 00@5 00; Young Roosters, large, $5 @6 00.

Ducks—Tame, $5 @6 per dozen; Mallard, $3 50@4; Teal, $2 50@3; Small Ducks, $1 50.

Geese—Tame, $3 @4 per pair.

Turkeys—Alive, 18@20c; dressed, 22@25c per lb.

Quail—$1 50@2 per dozen.

Rabbits—Marsh, $1 50@2; Tame, $1 50@2 per pair.

DRIED FRUITS AND PRODUCE.

Butter—California fresh roll, good to choice, 40@45c; do fair to good, 35@40c; do pickled roll, 30@35c; Eastern, 40@45c; cheese, 20@22c.

Eggs—California, 35@40c; Eastern, 12½@15c.

Beans—California, 4c; Oregon, none; Eastern do, 10@12c.

Potatoes—California, 1@1½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 1½@2c per lb.

Onions—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Dried Apples—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.

Dried Peaches—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.

Dried Pears—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.

Dried Plums—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.

Dried Grapes—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.

Raisins—California, $2 50@3 per box; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, $3 50@4 per box.

Figs—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.

Prunes—California, 6@7c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 8@9c per lb.

Nuts—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.

Honey—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.

Wax—California, 25@30c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 30@35c per lb.

Hides—California, 8@9c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 10@11c per lb.

Tallow—California, 4@5c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 6@7c per lb.

Wool—California, 20@25c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 30@35c per lb.

Hops—California, 10@12½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 15@18c per lb.

Barley—California, 1@1½c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2@2½c per lb.

Oats—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Rye—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Corn—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Wheat—California, 1½@2c; S. F. Oregon, none; Eastern, 2½@3c per lb.

Subscriptions Received.

Mills Station—John O'Brien.....$1 00
John Dougherty.....1 00
Miss Sawyer.....1 00
J. H. Carroll.....1 00
Joseph Hart.....1 00
William Kyle.....1 00
City—St. Francis Church.....1 00
San José—Chris Walsh.....1 00
J. M. Keenny.....1 00
James McAdam.....1 00
Mountain View—T. Crowley.....1 00
New Almaden—Thomas Fitzgerald.....1 00
Alviso—James Dougherty.....1 00
Fulton—John Dunigan.....1 00
Vallejo—P. Cassin.....1 00
Portlandville—William Barry.....1 00
Brooklyn, Alameda—J. H. Kinsley.....1 00
Ignacio M. Vallejo.....2 00
Lourville, Santa county—James McLaughlin.....1 00
Idaho City—Jean T. Bisbee.....1 00
Prairie City (Oregon)—J. Daly.....1 00
M. Byrne.....1 00
Byrnes Store—Michael Tarpey.....1 00
San Lorenzo—William Hogan.....1 00
Mission San José—.....1 00
Fisherman's Bay—J. J. Riordan.....1 00
Santa Cruz—Thomas Tierney.....1 00
Patrick Neary.....1 00
Myrtle Creek (Oregon)—Edward Maloney.....1 00

CONSUMPTION.

The scourge of the human family, may in most cases be prevented, and cured in every case recently cured.

HAYTOWN'S (W. Va.), Oct. 29, 1873.—Dr. R. V. Pierce—Sir: For the last year I have been using your Golden Medical Discovery, and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, and I am happy to say that I was before I was benefited; at that time I was very ill, and able to sit up but little. I was troubled with my throat; was getting blind, had a dry cough, and more pain in my lungs. I have used seven bottles of the Discovery, and am almost well.

Yours truly, ANNA T. VERNON.

A son of Mr. J. Mosely, of Chatham Four Corners, N. Y., has been cured of consumption by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.—See pamphlet. Mrs. C. R. Lane, editor of our Daily Paper, Buffalo, N. Y., says: Dr. Sigler, druggist, of West Salem, Ohio, writes that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has cured a hard-cased wonderful cure of consumption in his neighborhood.

SURE AND OLDEST FAMILY MEDICINE.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely vegetable cathartic and tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Bilious attacks, and all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your druggist for it. Beware of imitations. 26 26-1yr

FALL IMPORTATION!

Woolen Hosiery,

NEW DESIGNS.

GENT'S FURNISHING GOODS,

LATEST STYLES.

RIBBONS AND MILLINERY GOODS.

LACES

AND EMBROIDERIES.

LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS

AND WHITE GOODS.

FOR SALE BY

TOBIN DAVISSON & CO.

THE MONITOR!

The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

LYONS & BARRY, - - - Publishers.
DENIS LYONS. JOHN V. BARRY.

RICHARD O'MULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
DENIS LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—658 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Second floor.)

All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

| | |
|---|---|
| Served by Carriers, per week | 10c |
| Mail subscribers, per year | $4 00 |
| " " six months | 2 25 |
| " " three months | 1 25 |

The Monitor and Catholic World, one year.....$ 7 50
" " Godey's Lady's Book.....4 25
" " Irishman's Parlor Companion.....4 25
" " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine.....4 50

ADVERTISING RATES:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 square, 1 time | $1 00 | 1 square, 1 month | $10 00 |
| " 1 month | 1 00 | " 3 months | 25 00 |
| " 3 months | 2 50 | " 6 months | 45 00 |
| " 6 months | 4 00 | " 1 year | 75 00 |

The above rates will be strictly adhered to.

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

One hundred and nine Cardinals have died since the accession of Pius IX.

Bishop McCloskey, of Louisville, Ky., consecrated the Church of Notre Dame de Porte at Portland on the 14th November.

Bishop Foley, of Chicago, blessed a 1,400-pound bell for the charity of the Sacred Heart in that city last week.

The Sisters of Charity of the B. V. M. have from fifteen to sixteen hundred scholars under their care in one building in Chicago.

An intelligent flesh paper of New York says "Father Duggan lectured at the Catholic church, Pine's Hall, San Francisco, on the 11th instant."

The Catholic church at the village of Williston Mills, East Hampton, Mass., was burned on the evening of December 8th. It was insured for $14,000.

The Boston Catholic says that two young clergymen from the archdiocese of Cashel, Ireland, passed through Chicago on their way to the Bishop of Dubuque. Their respective names were Moore and Duggan.

A colony of Sisters of the Order of St. Francis from Mount Olivet, near New Haven, Ky., recently purchased a house in Shelbyville, where they intend to open a school immediately.

Father Seagers, formerly of the church of the Holy Family at Chicago, has just returned from Europe, accompanied by three young Jesuit priests for the province of St. Louis, Mo.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Index says that Rev. J. F. Carroll received three converts into the Church on Sunday afternoon, and that this is now a matter of common occurrence in Cleveland.

Archbishop Perche, of New Orleans, administered the sacrament of Confirmation to 20,419 persons in the last three and a half years. The number confirmed by him during the past year was 6,407.

The Rev. A. J. Wallace, for several years a priest at St. Pancreas' Catholic Church, Ipswich, England, has accepted the appointment of Catholic Chaplain to the forces engaged in the Gold Coast expedition.

Hon. Louis V. Bogy, of St. Louis, Mo., is now the only Catholic in the United States Senate. He is a native of the State he represents, a well preserved man of what was before him. His name is pronounced Bojee.

Hegley, the eldest son of Sir Allan Bellingham, of the county Louth, Ireland, has renounced the Protestant religion and entered the Catholic Church. By his act he succeeds his father he will inherit one of the grandest properties in the county.

A very interesting ceremony took place on Sunday, December 28th, at the Redemptorist church of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, at Boston Highlands, Mass. The solemn translation of the body of St. Nazarius, martyr, lately arrived from Rome), was celebrated.

On Tuesday, December 9th, Archbishop Bayley conferred Tonsure and Minor Orders on nineteen clerical scholastics of Woodstock College, Md. And on Thursday following he ordained six subdeacons and seven priests, all of the Jesuit Order.

Right Rev. Dr. McCloskey, Coadjutor Bishop of Albany, has conferred the order of priesthood on Rev. William Gillick, late of All Hallows College, Dublin, for the diocese of Albany, and on Rev. John Costigan, late of St. Mary's College, Emmetsburg, Md., for the diocese of New York.

The Catholic aristocracy of Rome, through the Society for Catholic Interests, have placed at the disposal of the Vatican one of their palaces, villas and houses for the benefit of the expropriated religious. The Pope has accepted the offer with gratitude.

The Archbishop of Paris has issued a pastoral in which he orders that no Roman ritual shall replace the Gallican throughout his diocese. The Roman ritual was observed throughout France upto 1735, when it was abolished. The difference between these rituals is imperceptible to the majority of the people.

Ten of the thirty-five Sisters of Mercy now in Hartford are to be transferred to the new convent in Stamford. Young ladies' seminary and boarding school. Four young ladies are to take the white veil during the present month, and three are to make their profession and take the black veil.

The St. Louis Watchman says that a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union will soon be held to take action in a resolution published by the President of that Society (Mr. Kelly, Mayor of Richmond, Va.), in advocacy of anti-Catholic principles.

The editor of the Louisville Catholic Advocate is authorized by his Bishop to say that any interpolation of the Bishop's card withdrawing his official recognition from the Advocate as his organ, does not imply dissatisfaction or discouragement of it as an independent Catholic newspaper.

In a pastoral from the Bishop of Vincennes, Ind., he says, "Duty compels us to instruct the pastors of our churches to refuse absolution to parents who, having the facilities and means of educating their children in a Christian manner, do, from love of worldly ease, expose them to the danger of losing their faith in public schools."

Mr. Arnold, assistant superintendent of the Warsaw Central Railroad, and Mr. A. E. Bean, the road master, finding the tract of land on the place of the late Judge Van Yankee forsmen, employed Irishmen in their place, and made it a condition that they and the men in their employ should go to Mass on Sundays, as a partial guarantee to their good conduct.

The Catholic Advocate says, "A Chinese, sojourning in the guest house of the Trappist Monastery at Gethsemane Abbey, Nelson county, Ky., employs his time in preparing for the monks. We have seen some of the specimens of his typography which are neatly executed." If he were to visit San Francisco he would find Chinamen at much more artistic work than that.

The late Michael Maher, of Boston, bequeathed $500 to Bishop Williams for the new cathedral, $500 for the St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, $500 for the Little Sisters of the Poor, and $500 for the Home of the Good Shepherd. The Association for the Protection of Catholic Children are made his residuary legatees.

The venerable Dr. Richard Mosberry, Sr., of Martinsburg, died in Baltimore on the 2d of December, aged eighty years. He was educated at Georgetown College when that institution was in its infancy; studied medicine in Philadelphia; served as medical officer during the war with England, and ever since 1816 he practiced in the home of his birth. He was always a firm and unpretentious Catholic. His son, the physician, has written a valuable history of Maryland.

The Board of Supervisors of the Albany, N. Y., penitentiary have passed a resolution allowing such priest as the Bishop of Albany may direct every facility for holding services for the benefit of the Catholic inmates of the prison, at least one Sunday in each month, and that said priest may visit the prison at such other times as may be designated by the superintendent of said prison, for the purpose of giving religious instruction to prisoners of the Catholic faith.

The ex-Inspector of public educational institutions in France has sent a petition to the Assembly asking that the refusal of Christianity in the public streets be made a matter for punishment. He says that blasphemy and profaneness is fearfully on the increase throughout the country.

Archbishop Bayley has appointed the Rev. L. J. Mathey, formerly pastor of St. Joseph's, in Texas, to collect funds for the building of a church, commemorative of the great event of our Holy Father Pius IX. having passed the days of Peter. The church is to be dedicated to St. Pius V., patron of our present Pope. It will also be a tribute of respect to the late Archbishop who inaugurated the idea.

When the Church of St. Germain, in Geneva, was taken away from the Catholics, they bought the Masonic Hall for Catholic worship, and every one of the congregation, after first protesting against the outrage, took away their seats and cushions and all private property to which they were legally entitled. The Masonic Hall was dedicated to the Sacred Heart, and contains all the private property received from St. Germain.

Rev. Father Deuterlinge, the oldest priest in the West except Father St. Cyr of Carondelet, Mo., died on the 11th ult., at St. Vincent's presbytery, St. Louis. He was a priest of the Order of St. Vincent; eighty years of age, forty-seven a priest and thirty-six years in the West. Lorain's grave was not worth $100 an acre when he came there; it is now worth a million. At his death his property and his cassock made up his entire fortune.

After three hundred and fifty tickets had been given out at the Patten Free Library to occupy the palaces, villas and houses of the county sewerage, many persons of the distinguished rank in this city have been opened their doors and welcomed the poor to their homes, while others have been turned out of their convents. All Catholics throughout the world should help these poor persecuted people.

The New York Herald says that Miss Phœbe Ripley, daughter of Rev. Samuel Ripley, who recently became a Sister of the Visitation at Georgetown, D.C., was "a near of society." Her father, Rev. Samuel Ripley, was a lady of fine culture. Professor Hedge, of Cambridge, pronounced her the most intellectual woman in New England." Miss Phœbe is an accomplished musician and linguist.

Bismarck is not as great a favorite with the Protestants of the United States as he was before the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. The temper of their German conferees on that occasion made it apparent that Odenbrok Protestantism was only awaiting its day to meet with the same persecutions which the Catholic Church does now.

The Bishop of Savannah, Ga., dedicated the church of the Immaculate Conception at Atlanta on the 11th December. He was assisted by Rev. Fathers Bessan, of Tuscumbia; Prendergast, Gaffney; Mattingly, McCafferty, McCarthy and Cahill, the latter from Rome. The sermon was preached by Very Rev. W. G. Hamilton, D.D. The church is Gothic, 100 feet by 60 outside the sanctuary, and has a seating capacity of one thousand.

The prospects of the Catholic Church in Georgia are very bright under the new Bishop of Savannah. The religious forces of that part of the Lord's vineyard is being increased. All this the population is increasing in numbers, and educational facilities for the training of youth are increased more rapidly than at any former period of her history. The Catholic population of Georgia is now estimated to be expected in ten years to nearly one hundred thousand.

The Duchess de Chevreuse, widow of the heroic Duke of that name, and mother of two young gentlemen who did so gallantly fighting for France in 1870, has written a letter to the Bishop of Nantes, in which she says with never permit the tricolored flag to float over the graves of her dear ones. She says, "My sons fought for the white flag, and died for their country, but the flag which had once protected their cradle and their kings' shall not float over their remains."

The German-speaking residents of Chicago number nearly, or quite, one hundred thousand. Of these, the Roman Catholics claim forty-five thousand, for the religious accommodations of which there are provided eight church edifices and thirty priests. Forty-five thousand are found in the several Protestant sects and societies, for over one-half of which no church buildings are provided.

The mission given at the church of the Immaculate Conception, Baltimore, has been very fruitful, upward of one hundred converts being received. The mission was conducted by the Redemptorist Fathers Burke, Hafkes, Cook, Reitz and Cook. A mission given in the same city at the colored church resulted in seventy converts being received. Over two hundred were confirmed.

The province presided over by Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, embracing the whole State of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and the territory northwest of Lake Michigan, will be consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus on New Year's day. This is the beneficition which one Archbishop and nine Bishops bestow on their flocks as a New Year's gift. May it to God to bless the highest and peace on earth to men of good will.

Bishop Whelan of Wheeling, W. V., has issued a pastoral to the clergy and laity of his diocese, in connection with the third synod which terminated on the 20th of October, in which he eloquently treats of the marriage contract and the impediments, mixed marriages, education, Catholic schools, seminaries, the support of the clergy and the burial of the dead.

The Rev. Gideon Brayer, in his Mass Pivese Higley, daughter of Rev. Samuel Higley, who recently became a Sister of the Visitation at Georgetown, D.C., was "a near of society." Her father, Rev. Samuel Ripley, was a lady of fine culture. Professor Hedge, of Cambridge, pronounced her the most intellectual woman in New England." Miss Phœbe is an accomplished musician and linguist.

Bismarck is not as great a favorite with the Protestants of the United States as he was before the late meeting of the Evangelical Alliance. The temper of their German conferees on that occasion made it apparent that Odenbrok Protestantism was only awaiting its day to meet with the same persecutions which the Catholic Church does now.

The Bishop of Savannah, Ga., dedicated the church of the Immaculate Conception at Atlanta on the 11th December. He was assisted by Rev. Fathers Bessan, of Tuscumbia; Prendergast, Gaffney; Mattingly, McCafferty, McCarthy and Cahill, the latter from Rome. The sermon was preached by Very Rev. W. G. Hamilton, D.D. The church is Gothic, 100 feet by 60 outside the sanctuary, and has a seating capacity of one thousand.

The prospects of the Catholic Church in Georgia are very bright under the new Bishop of Savannah. The religious forces of that part of the Lord's vineyard is being increased. All this the population is increasing in numbers, and educational facilities for the training of youth are increased more rapidly than at any former period of her history. The Catholic population of Georgia is now estimated to be expected in ten years to nearly one hundred thousand.

The Duchess de Chevreuse, widow of the heroic Duke of that name, and mother of two young gentlemen who did so gallantly fighting for France in 1870, has written a letter to the Bishop of Nantes, in which she says with never permit the tricolored flag to float over the graves of her dear ones. She says, "My sons fought for the white flag, and died for their country, but the flag which had once protected their cradle and their kings' shall not float over their remains."

The German-speaking residents of Chicago number nearly, or quite, one hundred thousand. Of these, the Roman Catholics claim forty-five thousand, for the religious accommodations of which there are provided eight church edifices and thirty priests. Forty-five thousand are found in the several Protestant sects and societies, for over one-half of which no church buildings are provided.

The mission given at the church of the Immaculate Conception, Baltimore, has been very fruitful, upward of one hundred converts being received. The mission was conducted by the Redemptorist Fathers Burke, Hafkes, Cook, Reitz and Cook. A mission given in the same city at the colored church resulted in seventy converts being received. Over two hundred were confirmed.

The province presided over by Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, embracing the whole State of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky and the territory northwest of Lake Michigan, will be consecrated to the Sacred Heart of Jesus on New Year's day. This is the beneficition which one Archbishop and nine Bishops bestow on their flocks as a New Year's gift. May it to God to bless the highest and peace on earth to men of good will.

Bishop Whelan of Wheeling, W. V., has issued a pastoral to the clergy and laity of his diocese, in connection with the third synod which terminated on the 20th of October, in which he eloquently treats of the marriage contract and the impediments, mixed marriages, education, Catholic schools, seminaries, the support of the clergy and the burial of the dead.

The Rev. Gideon Brayer, in his Mass Pivese Higley, daughter of Rev. Samuel Rip

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XLII.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER.

"Well, Voss, you seem to bear a charmed life," said one of the group of soldiers and sous officers, who were discussing some of the events in which he had been concerned.

"Not more so than most of my comrades, who expose themselves as much as I do."

"Ah, that can hardly be."

"But you are so rash," said an admiring veteran of eighteen. "And then these Prussians seem such fools that you can do what you like with them."

"Fools!" said Michel. "Do you really believe that fools could have defeated French armies in the field, and have so hemmed us up here?"

"My young friend," interposed Sergeant Mahouy, "did you ever ride a steeple chase?"

"Qu'est ce que cela?"

"Well, there it is, you see. A youth that hasn't as much as seen Limberlck races has a deal of wisdom to learn. But I hope you can understand this. If a race-horse—you know what that is, I hope—"

"Parbleu, yes."

"Well, if a race-horse beats a cart-horse over a four-mile course, is it much for him to take a mile out of?"

"Assuredly not."

"Well, if my friend Sergeant Michel Voss has been only circumventing fools, you see it is no mighty credit for him."

Applause greeted Mike's reasoning.

As the two men walked together that same afternoon, Michel observed to his friend, "You are quite right, Mike, in entertaining that these Prussians we have to deal with are no fools. Hilarero we have been very fortunate, but the enemy is everywhere on the alert, and will play us a trick if possible."

"I never suspected him of good intentions," remarked Mike.

"No doubt. But it will not do to relax a single precaution. In fact, the farther we go on, and the more successful we have been, the more needed it will be that we should have an eye of perpetual watchfulness."

"In fact, one eye up the chimney—for fear of the soot—and another eye skimming the pot for fear of the grease."

"Exactly," answered Michel, who had a vague notion that his comrade meant to signify some very peculiar and even excessive caution.

That evening they left the fort with about the same number and nearly the same men as had accompanied them in the expedition to Neuilly. This time, immediately after starting, Michel repeated his injunctions to caution. Their intention was to cross the river near Bris, where their first serious encounter with the Prussian cavalry had taken place. They advanced, as usual, silently, Michel leading. The light had completely disappeared, but stars shone in the sky, and there was no difficulty in discovering objects at a moderate distance. Close by the river there runs a long hedge which is used to shelter the growth of a young plantation. As they approached this Michel cast a rapid glance at it. "A nice place for an ambuscade," he thought. He had scarcely formed the idea in his head when a ball came whizzing by him; a second drew blood from his ear, and a third struck the peak of his kepi. Without a moment's hesitation, he flung himself on his face and thought. "There must be, from the number of shots, at least fifty men, and from the direction in which the balls go, they must have a rifle-pit there."

"Down," he called in a low tone to his comrades.

"There is no necessity for saying that to poor Jean Stross," muttered Mike in his comrade's ear, "the has done it as natural as—death."

"Draw back quietly off the road," said Michel, "the causeway will afford you a shelter, and then we can see what is the best to be done."

They moved, still on face and hands, backwards, a new volley flying over their heads.

"If the beggars would only show up," blessed the Corporal in Mike's ear.

"They understand the consequences as well as you, mon ami."

When they had got to the light shelter which the inequality between the roadway and the tilled ground offered, it became apparent that three of their number were missing. This left but eleven rifles available.

"There is no chance of fighting them on those terms, but we must not be driven off. It is only standing up to have every chance of hitting them. Rise up when I give the word, aim low, then drop down."

The movement was executed with promptness, and was successful in so far as the return fire did no damage, although it consisted of a heavy volley. In a moment the little party had divided, and delivered a fire as if from the flanks of their previous position, and again they had separated and fired again. By this means they left the enemy in uncertainty as to their strength. Once again they closed opposite the rifle-pit.

"Michel," said Mike, "our poor little mobiot is one of the lying on the roadway."

"Ah, I am sorry for the brave little man."

"He is alive. I have heard him groaning. We must get him to—"

"How is it to be done? Tell I have it. I will get to the end of their pit, and fire down it. That will draw their attention on me. While they are firing you may make a dash to carry him off."

"Right. That's the thing."

The last been in many a perilous adventure together, yet the gravity of this impressed them so seriously that they spontaneously put out their hands and grasped each in a farewell clasp. But they made no further sign of the solemnity in which they held it.

"My shots away to the right—rifle first, revolver then—if possible—shall be your signal," said Michel, as he crawled away.

From the pit the fire had not slackened. It seemed as if the enemy was waiting for a further development. Mike fanned in the darkness of the night that he saw a face popping through the hedge. In this chance he fired. In all probability he had deceived himself, but the shot drew forth a renewal fire from the enemy, and kept them still within the protection of their pit. Meanwhile Michel had gone upon his toilsome journey. The irregularities of the ground, the obstacles which stood in his way were carefully availed of to avoid the possibility of discovery on the part of the foe and of the failure of his plans, and he was at least a hundred yards from where he started before he ventured to cross the road. This he did upon all fours. Arrived at the other side he examined the ground closely. The hedge which protected the rifle-pit ran in at right angles, so that it formed almost a fortification for the enemy. It grew thick and solid to a height of more than five feet. It would have been easy to scale a wall considerably higher, but this was an awkward obstacle. Looking closely, however, he perceived that near the ground the hedge was not perfect, and that there were openings here and there. While he was calculating the possibility of lightning the thought came into his head of a movement at the other side. Quick as lightning the thought came into his head that the enemy were trying the converse of his movement, and intended to take his party in flank. The cracking of branches proved the truth of his conjecture, and presently, himself thoroughly concealed by an overhanging bush, he saw the helmet of a German soldier thrust through, to be followed by the body.

"Hindurch?" (through) questioned a voice inside.

"Ja. Komm." (Yes. Come.)

And the first man stood erect, while his comrade crept into the hedge.

"Now," thought Michel, and the naked blade was lifted, and the German struck down. Immediately the clasped-out barrel was thrust under the hedge and fired down in the direction of the enemy. A shot from the revolver settled the man creeping through, and the discharge of its five other chambers served to carry the notion to numbers. There was a momentary hesitation on the rifle-pit, and then the ramshackly blazed out in sharp and rapid volleys.

"Now," thought Mike to himself, as the fire of the Uhlans's last shot reached his ear, and with a rapid step he rushed upon the road, and swinging the body of the little mobiot on his shoulder, darted off. The confusion among the enemy at the supposed flank attack lasted long enough, and he had a few seconds' grace after it was perceived. But the foe were prompt after all, and several shots were fired in his direction.

"But the nerves of the ruffians were shook," said he to his load, as with his burden on the grass, "for the devil a ball of them has touched me. I wish to God, though, that we had got safe off. Are you poorly below? Let me see."

Examining the mobiote he found he had fainted. "Now I've got him," he muttered, "I wonder what on earth I'm to do wi it. Hum."

There was no time, however, to consider. From the rifle-pit the firing still continued heavy, but comparatively harmless, the small party of assailants contriving to make their number appear more formidable than in reality it was. Mike took his share in the game, and was just on the ground with his mutakin in the hand reloading, when he felt a hand on his shoulder.

"Mike!"

"Michel!"

"Thank God!"

"Thank God!"

"You have got the mobile?"

"I have."

"There is nothing further to be done—we must draw off. Our dead we must leave, but we can save the poor wounded."

With great circumspection the party drew from the deadly spot, the wounded man being carried between them. They were for on their road to the fortress before the enemy ventured from his cover.

"Well, Michel," remarked Mike, "them Prussians did play us a trick, as you were expecting."

"They did."

"Where was you?"

"That is what I am considering."

"What, right or wrong for formal mention."

"So it was. We must think of something to spoil it on them."

"No chance of escaping it before them?"

"That rifle-pit was an informal invention."

"We must think of something to spoil it on them."

"Well now, wouldn't it be a good thing to ascend balloon?"

"What do you mean?"

"They are pretty well used to bullets—why not try fireworks?"

"Ha, we must do something. It seems to me that we have been very lucky in getting our poor fellow-to in there unburied."

When they got to the fortress the wound of the mobiote was examined, and was found to be severe. Mike, who had taken a friendly interest in him since he was first placed under his charge, and as a seaman while the surgeon extracted the bullet from his lung, and as a willing if not over skillful nurse when he came to be tended. Such was his gay chat, too, he helped the poor fellow to forget his pain.

"Where were you last night from me?" said the wounded man next morning in father and friend tones.

"Well, I was experimenting on the effects of pepper."

"What do you mean?"

"I suppose you haven't forgotten our friends at the rifle-pit?"

"Of course I haven't."

"To be sure. Well, though the sergeant took away that little memorandum they inserted in your leg, I suppose you'd still not be insensible to their attentions."

"I mean—go on."

"Well, they were to be got out of that infernal rifle-pit. This time, though, we did not go passing by at the hall door, as we did the night you were there, but first the kitchen, just as if we were members of the force with a weakness for the cook."

"You mean you didn't take the high road."

"Exactly. Michel took the back, and I the side opposite to the one where he started the night before. We weren't such fools, though, as to suppose they wouldn't be on the lookout. They were, and ready for us. That is they thought they were, but they made one mistake. They—load with buckshot," said Michel, loud enough. "All right, but with good aim, though—now." We fired, twenty of us. If you heard the buckshot rattling, 'twas as good as a shower of stones on a tent at Cappagh fair. It made a row among the bushes, it glanced off the trees, it whistled through the rifle-pit in a way that made them fellows dance to a new tune. 'Do mitrailleuse!' they roared out. 'Give it to them again,' called out Michel. At the second charge, par la gele mortelle, they cleared out of the rifle-pit, and we had it," said Mike, sending his narrative with a burst of laughter.

"Michel is a wonderful man," said the little mobile, with a sigh of admiration.

"He has brains and pluck and a good heart. Cheer up, mon petit, you will soon be able to put that leg of yours on the ground again," and Mike, and father Mike, and find out the scoundrel who interfered with your marching."

CHAPTER XLIII.

THE CAPTURE OF AN ISLAND.

"Three volunteers to fill the places of less than a sou! Edmond Moray dead, and Faix Richard wounded."

"Here! Here!" Thirty voices at least answered.

"Guillaume Pale—no, you are by big. A giant like you couldn't be hidden."

"Faith, right it was the formal intention."

"So it was. We must think of something to spoil it on them."

"No chance of escaping it before them?"

"What do you mean?"

"They are pretty well used to bullets—why not try fireworks?"

"Ha, we must do something. It seems to me that we have been very lucky in getting our poor fellow-to in there unburied."

When they got to the fortress the wound of the mobiote was examined, and was found to be severe. Mike, who had taken a friendly interest in him since he was first placed under his charge, and as a seaman while the surgeon extracted the bullet from his lung, and as a willing if not over skillful nurse when he came to be tended. Such was his gay chat, too, he helped the poor fellow to forget his pain.

"Where were you last night from me?" said the wounded man next morning in father and friend tones.

"Well, I was experimenting on the effects of pepper."

"What do you mean?"

"I suppose you haven't forgotten our friends at the rifle-pit?"

"Of course I haven't."

"To be sure. Well, though the sergeant took away that little memorandum they inserted in your leg, I suppose you'd still not be insensible to their attentions."

"I mean—go on."

"Well, they were to be got out of that infernal rifle-pit. This time, though, we did not go passing by at the hall door, as we did the night you were there, but first the kitchen, just as if we were members of the force with a weakness for the cook."

"You mean you didn't take the high road."

"Exactly. Michel took the back, and I the side opposite to the one where he started the night before. We weren't such fools, though, as to suppose they wouldn't be on the lookout. They were, and ready for us. That is they thought they were, but they made one mistake. They—load with buckshot," said Michel, loud enough. "All right, but with good aim, though—now." We fired, twenty of us. If you heard the buckshot rattling, 'twas as good as a shower of stones on a tent at Cappagh fair. It made a row among the bushes, it glanced off the trees, it whistled through the rifle-pit in a way that made them fellows dance to a new tune. 'Do mitrailleuse!' they roared out. 'Give it to them again,' called out Michel. At the second charge, par la gele mortelle, they cleared out of the rifle-pit, and we had it," said Mike, sending his narrative with a burst of laughter.

"Michel is a wonderful man," said the little mobile, with a sigh of admiration.

"He has brains and pluck and a good heart. Cheer up, mon petit, you will soon be able to put that leg of yours on the ground again," and father Mike, and find out the scoundrel who interfered with your marching."

CHAPTER XLIII.

THE CAPTURE OF AN ISLAND.

"Three volunteers to fill the places of less than a sou! Edmond Moray dead, and Faix Richard wounded."

"Here! Here!" Thirty voices at least answered.

"Guillaume Pale—no, you are by big. A giant like you couldn't be hidden."

"Ah, Sergeant, when it comes to fighting you would not find my size and strength mountenient."

"We have so much more to do than fighting, you know. For the present I fe r we must lose your services."

The tall soldier turned away with an air of discontent.

"I want good swimmers. Can you swim, Charles Marteau?"

The mobile laughed. "I have been," he said, "three years an attendant on the baths at Boppe."

"Good; then you fall in. And you, Barbet?"

Barbet shook his head. "I cannot swim, but I will go where will go on solid ground."

"That is right enough, and I have no doubt of your ardor. By-and bye your turn will come, I dare say, as we cannot hope there shall not be gaps in our ranks; but for the present, comrade, I must have others."

With such a spirit prevailing, the only difficulty being in selection, it is needless to say the other vacancies were quickly filled.

"I'm rather fond of bathing myself," remarked Mike Mahony after search confidentially to his friend, "Many's the time I'm sinny the Liffeyin caught me jumping to dry myself on the bank of the Shannon, and helped to save me from catching cold by tickling my back with a tidy little cane he used to carry. I am fond of a dive and a float and a spatter, and, indeed, of all the diversions that one has in the water. And it's very thoughtful of you, Michel, to dream of providing such an innocent recreation as a bathing school for us poor fellows in this dull siege time. But isn't it late in the season for that sort of thing? Don't you think there ought be a kettle or two of hot water poured into the river there to make swimming a pleasure at this season of the year?"

"Of course, Mike, I understand your meaning. Yes, I have an idea in my brain."

"And my long speech, with all its twists and turns, is a sort of corkscrew, I suppose, to draw it out of your head."

"Mike, I want to capture an island."

"By japers, if it was a peninsula here goes!"

"It will be probably a long job, and I think it better that we should be concealed from observation."

"I could handle a pen and ink as well as I can—Da be—hath may be interpreted I'd be. Merry a hand I got into writing, ing too well educated that way."

Mike's manner went as quick as his tongue, and before long the men had laid aside not a respectable rifle pit facing the road, but a very fair one facing the river. It was a blunt end like a tiger's mouth. On it three arches of the railway bridge were visible over the low meadows. Behind these two islands were then in the possession of the Prussians, and formed a desperately advanced post. It was opposite these along the bank of the river that Michel and his party were to land, and from his words, while he explained to his comrades the plan of his attack, it had also been intended that their watch there is not very effective. On the whole I am not sorry that I did not start a swimming bath. There is no use, and I should not have known what to do with it. Perhaps else would have drifted away down the stream and been lost on us."

They returned to the fortress. Michel communicated his ideas to the commandant, and not only received a warm permission to employ his own volunteers for the task he proposed, but also the promise that a considerable covering force would be in readiness to land if necessary in his operations. Without loss of time the expedition proceeded to the spot Michel and Mike had left a short time before.

"Would not your object be more safely achieved at night?" asked the Corporal.

"The darkness will favor us, no doubt, once we have got on the land, but it will not some light to manage to get at it."

The twilight had begun to descend. Michel, who had, I had not been trusted by his arrangements, the moment he arrived at the river bank plunged without hesitation into the water, and began to swim in the direction of the island, which was to be the chosenspot in my teeth, and without that I don't see any way over closely to capturing that island."

"Be patient. Resources always come with patience and thinking."

"Well, if I was thinking forever—hold on, there are—a—a few things I can do."

"I told you," said Michel quietly, "by patience and thinking the means would be discovered."

At the lower end of the Isle des Loups, which is the name given to one of the two islands, there stretches out a sand bank, on the inner side of which a luxuriant grove grows up to the proportions of a small wood. So thick and large is the screen it forms that one can see through the trees to the other land, the bank stretches towards the Isle des Moulins to observation from which it is quite open, except that the bank is somewhat impeded by the trees which grow on the island itself. But what facilitated the gaze of the adventurous was the aspect of an old boat deeply imbedded in the sand. Here was the means of carrying out the projected attack.

With a rapid survey of the situation Michel laid aside the cutlass he had taken with him, retaining by his side only the revolver.

"Michel," said Mike, "after all it was I discovered the boat first—"

"Sergeant Mahony," said Michel with a smile, "you are under orders. See, Mike, I have got it. Watch me well, and you will discover me, your rifle might stop his tongue, and besides divert attention to the shots."

"All right."

Stepping cautiously down the bank, Michel plunged into the stream, cautiously followed by the eyes of his comrade. The distance from the shore was about fifty yards, and this the swimmer easily accomplished. He landed on the sand bank, and went towards the boat, closely observing his movements closely, saw him seize the boat by the stern, and begin to push it out. It might, but vainly. The little craft was too deeply imbedded to be stirred by its single strength, powerful as that was. Where the efforts were shown to be clearly futile, he came again to the edge of the sand bank and swam down stream.

"Do you have failed, my poor friend."

"No altogether. I have learned that their watch there is not very effective. On the whole I am not sorry that I did not succeed in moving the boat. There is no oars, and I should not have known what to do with her

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 24, January
18—Sunday—Second Sunday after Epiphany. Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus. St. Prisca, Virgin and Martyr.
19—Monday—St. Canute, King and Martyr. St. Marius and Companions, Martyrs.
20—Tuesday—St. Fabian and Sebastian, Martyrs.
21—Wednesday—St. Agnes, Virgin and Martyr.
22—Thursday—St. Vincent and Anastasia, Martyrs.
23—Friday—Espousals of the B. V. M. and St. Joseph. St. Emerentiana, Virgin and Martyr.
24—Saturday—St. Timothy, Bishop and Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
PUBLISHED EVERY
SATURDAY.....JANUARY 17, 1874.

A Welcome New Year's Gift.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31, 1873.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—Dear Sir: Having with pleasure noticed the true and able manner in which THE MONITOR has been conducted for the interests of Catholicity during the past few years, I request you will increase my subscription from one to three copies for the next year. Yours truly in Christ,

J. S. ALEMANY, A. S. F.

A WORD TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

As WE are just commencing a New Year it would be well if those of our subscribers who are in arrears would settle up their accounts and start fair on the books for 1874. While very many of our friends are exceedingly punctual and exact in their payments, there are still many others who are negligent and careless in this most important matter. We are satisfied that if they had any idea of the trouble and expense attending the bringing out of a paper like THE MONITOR, there would soon be a more satisfactory system of dealing with us. However, we do not say this by way of complaint, but rather as a gentle hint which those to whom it applies ought take in good part. We certainly have great reason to to be pleased with the year which has passed, and we expect much from the year which is progressing. In all parts of the State and outside it the circulation of THE MONITOR has greatly increased, and the paper is constantly rising in the estimation of all who take it. We shall endeavor to merit all the encouragement and support we receive.

MISMANAGEMENT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

At length the public are beginning to pay a little attention to the fact that the common schools of San Francisco are outrageously mismanaged. From time to time some sickly philanthropists suggested the adoption into the schools of one course of branches of study completely unsuited for such institutions, and these recommendations were in many instances acted upon. Hence it came to pass that phonography, telegraphy, music, drawing, foreign literature, and so forth, were introduced into schools the sole business of which should have been to give a plain English education. The press, instead of expostulating, hailed each innovation with delight, and were scandalized of the time when every little boy in San Francisco would be able to speak three languages and calculate the eccentricity of curves. Now they have changed their tune pretty considerably. The present Board of School Trustees have inaugurated a season of reforms by dismissing a number of French and German teachers who had been employed instructing children in their respective languages. The dismissal was rather suddenly and discourteously accomplished, but it was, nevertheless, a step in the right direction.

There is no good reason why French or German should be taught in the public schools any more than Irish or Russian. The pupils are to be brought up as Americans, and if they speak and write correctly the language of their native land it ought be sufficient. Anything beyond that must be reckoned a luxury or an extravagance, the cost of which should fall upon the persons requiring it. If, therefore, French or German parents are anxious that their children should speak the language of Paris or Heidelberg, they themselves and not the State should provide the instructors. And the very same argument will hold good when applied to the other branches of study we have mentioned. As well might parents expect the Government to procure employment for their grown-up children as to pay for the instruction of the little ones in such subjects as these. It must be borne in mind, too, that these intellectual luxuries are indulged in at a time when the school accommodation is enormously unequal to the requirements of the city, and when the demand for new buildings is most urgent. But the reason for all this nonsense is really the fact that the rich people, who can very well afford to pay for special teachers, want to have their children educated "in all the accomplishments" without paying a cent, at the expense of the whole body of taxpayers.

Consecration to the Sacred Heart.

To-morrow (Sunday), January 18th, will be a day forever, memorable in the annals of California. As our readers are already aware, the solemn consecration to the Sacred Heart of our Lord of the dioceses of San Francisco, Los Angeles and Monterey, and Grass Valley, will take place on that day. The pastoral address of the bishops, which we published last week, explained so clearly and so forcibly the reasons for the spread of devotion to the Sacred Heart, and the great advantages to Christendom which might be expected to accrue therefrom, that it is unnecessary for us to say anything on those subjects. We shall only observe, then, that we hope the pious and devotional spirit which has so happily characterized this act of consecration throughout the Catholic nations, will also be found perceptible among the faithful of California.

THE INCREASE OF CRIME.

Just now the daily papers are occupying themselves with discussing the deplorable increase of crime in our city. There can be no question of the fact that they are justified in turning their attention to this matter, as it is one of the greatest importance to honest and law-abiding citizens. Burglaries, robberies, criminal assaults, shootings and stabbings have so multiplied lately as to become a reproach to the whole community. The law seems almost powerless to check the growing evil, and it is no wonder that it should be so, inasmuch as the punishment it provides for the convicted criminal is wholly inadequate. Imprisonment has no terrors for the vicious classes. It is simply an unpleasant way of preventing them from carrying on their raids upon society during a limited space of time, and that is the worst light in which they regard it. While in prison they are comfortably housed and well fed—far better than hundreds of honest poor in our midst—and when their sentence has expired they sally forth, ready to repeat their offenses and to be a trouble to the well-disposed until the prison door closes upon them. The legislatious classes have to pay for the support of these lawless ruffians, in addition to suffering from their depredations as long as they are at liberty.

It is evident, then, that some plan for keeping these pests in check must be devised, or else matters will run on to such an extreme that, in sheer self-defense, citizens will be compelled to take the law into their own hands and constitute themselves redressers of their own wrongs. Imprisoned criminals should be compelled to work, so as in some way contribute to their own support, and make reparation to society for the injuries inflicted by them. But their labor should not be such as to bring it into competition with our honest and honorable mechanics, who already find it hard enough to make both ends meet. It would be sufficient if they were set such business as would place them in opposition to the Mongolians, and thus make them useful in getting rid of a nuisance scarcely less burdensome than themselves. It certainly is not pleasant to suggest recourse to corporal punishment, but something of that kind must ultimately be resorted to. Garroting was one time fearfully prevalent in the streets of London, and nothing except a vigorous application of the many-tailed "cat" to the backs of the convicted garroters ever put it down. The same remedy would work well here. At any rate our prisons must not be kept up as palaces of ease for hardened criminals.

Our City Schools.

We begin to think that we have got some common sense in the Board of Education. For years past many of the schools of this city have been conducted upon the most extraordinary and unsuitable principles of little children. They have been literally crammed. Every fad and dodge were put in practice of the exaggerations adopted. Telegraphy, Astronomy, Geology, Music, Phonography and heaven only knows what else has not been introduced and attempted to be taught to children of the tenderest age, and boys scarcely old enough to know how to copy machine or movable type were put to the study of Political Economy, and a year or two in succession and absorptions, the little creatures would have had their poor brains addled by attempts to pour over the intricacies of Liturgical and Differential Calculus.

And these ridiculous follies are perpetrated while the Board is asking, year after year, authority from the Legislature to borrow money on bonds to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Just now they ask for $300,000. We have not looked to see what our school debt is at present, but presume we are paying interest on a million of dollars, or will be when this $300,000 is granted. If the Board were confined to procuring instruction in necessary English branches, such as originally designed by the common school system of education, for pupils under sixteen years of age, they would have no occasion and no paying their debts, or to ask for further power of taxation from year to year. We are doing business daily with Spaniards, Italians, etc., who cannot speak English. Why not teach their language as well as French and Germans? The secret is found in the fact that the latter pull the larger vote. Give a solid education in English branches, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, algebra, mensuration and some mathematics, in place of the flimsey, superficial course taught at present, and there will be no need of increased taxation, nor want of new school houses for some time to come. Boys and girls sixteen years of age should seek an education outside of public schools.

Who is He?

We find the following scrap in the Dublin correspondence of the New York Sun. We should like to know very much who this renegade editor is and what paper he was connected with. His recency, however, does not commend him much, because experience has taught us that it is the gentlemen loudest in profession of nationality, fiercest in denunciation of the "bloody Saxon," most clamorous for war and bloodshed, who succeed, sooner or later, in getting very amicable and loyal subjects of the Queen, when so doing will either save their heads or serve their pockets. Pierce fires her last long, the proverb says:

> Not long ago there was a red-hot editor of a red-hot newspaper of very advanced political principles. He was a red-hot Fenian, and he was a red-hot Catholic. He was ready to die in defense of a thoroughly conservative, and, of course, anti-Irish journal. He was ready to fight a duel with any man who questioned his people may expect, to visit as—not exactly Africans' cannibals, I suppose, though they are now in Ireland; strong conservatism probably does it England. This, I suppose, is the meaning of this remarkable inconsistency.

OUR LADY OF VICTORIES.—To-morrow (Sunday), January 18th, at the eleven o'clock Mass, the following celebrated artistes will sing at the French Church of Notre Dame Des Victoires, Bush street, above Dupont: Signora Inez Fabbri, Signora Martinez and others.

The Roman Catholic Church is the heaviest tax payer in Santa Clara. It is assessed for $112,730. This includes the College.

Religious Professions.

On Monday, 5th inst., the solemn and interesting ceremony of the religious profession of four young ladies took place in Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, corner of Taylor and Ellis streets, and was witnessed by a large number of the respectable friends and benefactors of the institution. The young ladies who took their vows were Miss Julia Flood (in religion, Sister Mary of the Immaculate Conception); Miss Annie Flood (in religion, Sister Margaret Mary); Miss Ellen Clifford (in religion, Sister Mary Berchmans), and Miss Ellen Murphy (in religion, Sister Mary Evangelist). His Grace the Most Rev. Archbishop officiated, assisted by Very Rev. Father Masnato, S. J., Rev. Father Messia, S. J., and Rev. Father Fagan. An eloquent and impressive discourse was given by Very Rev. Father Masnato, S. J. After the ceremony all partook of refreshment in the convent, and parted highly pleased and gratified at the morning's entertainment.

On Thursday, January 8th, the interesting ceremony of profession took place in the Convent of our Lady of Mercy, in this city. The young ladies on this occasion bid a final farewell to the vanities of the world are Miss Josephine O'Dwyer and Margaret O'Connell, known in religion as Sisters Mary Bernard and Julia. Rev. Father Gibney officiated, assisted by the Rev. Fathers McCullough and Bridgeman. There were also present Fathers Caraher, Nugent and McSweeney, and a large number of the friends of the young ladies.

Sacramento Matters.

Notwithstanding the Legislature is in session, Sacramento is far from lively. There are but few strangers in the city, and hotel rates somewhat against the hotel-and saloon keepers. This state of things will not last long, however, for by and by, when the important business is to be introduced, the lobby will crowd in.

But few bills of importance have been introduced this far. The bill repealing the two per cent. Act passed the Senate, after considerable effort had been made to defeat it, notwithstanding the election of officers.

The number of written applications for appointment on the police force to make up the fifty now applied for is 1,000.

The Mutual Marine Insurance Company of San Francisco has been granted authority to do the above business in and from a new company.

The Senate has confirmed the Board of Trustees elected by the direct vote of the people, passed the Assembly, and will doubtless pass the Senate in due time—and that's all the effect it will have in amending the Federal Constitution. Hamlet, by request, omitted the part of the Prince of Denmark.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys has reported favorably on the bill to grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company the right of way over the public lands for the purpose of constructing its road, and the bill will probably pass.

The Senate has passed the bill to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, relative to the time for filing exceptions to answers, and the bill to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, relative to the time for filing exceptions to answers, and the bill to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, relative to the time for filing exceptions to answers.

The Senate has passed

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Death of The O'Gready.

The Times records the death of the head and chief of one of those ancient "septs" or clans of Ireland which claim a Milesian descent far more remarkable and illustrious than that of any of the members of the Irish peerage, except, perhaps, the O'Briens, representatives as they are of the princes and kings of Thomond—we refer to The O'Gready, of Kilgallyown, in the county of Limerick, who died a few days since, at the age of fifty-seven. The late William de Courcey O'Gready, known in Ireland as The O'Gready, was the eldest son of The O'Gready, J. P. and D. L., and formerly High Sheriff of the county of Limerick, who died in 1862. He was born in the year 1816, and was educated at Winchester, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the usual degrees, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1840. He married, in 1841, Anne Imogen, daughter of Mr. T. de Rinzi, of Clobbmon Hall, county Wexford, by whom he left, with other children, a son, Thomas DeCourcey, born in 1844, who now becomes The O'Gready. According to Sir Bernard Burke, the Milesian family of O'Gready is one of the most ancient in the far west of Ireland; and Dr. O'Hlehi, the late Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, in his Irish and English Dictionary, assigns Cunai Eachtnaidh, King of Munster, A.D. 366, and sixth in descendant from Oilill Olum) of the race of Heber, eldest son of Milesius, King of Spain, who colonized Ireland, as the common ancestor of the O'Grady's and the O'Briens, now represented by Lord Inchiquin, of Dromoland, county Clare. The same authority tells us that when the latter house subsequently, in the person of Brian or Brien Boroimhe, the renowned monarch of Ireland, establish an ascendency of power in North Munster or Thomond, of which they became hereditary rulers, the O'Gradys came to acknowledge their paramount sway, and were arrayed as dynasts of chiefs or a sept" under the banners of the provincial princes." Sir Bernard Burke, however, traces their actual descent no further back than the internal between A. D. 1276 and 1309, when "the chieftainship of the sept vested in Donald O'Grady," who fell in battle in the latter year, leaving a son, Hugh O'Grady, who acquired the property of Kilfallyower (which has ever since been vested in the family) by his marriage with the daughter and the heiress of a local chief named O'Kerawick."

Home Government.

The Home Government Association held its last meeting on the evening of December 16th, in the Ancient Concert Rooms, under the presidency of Mr. Butt. The proceedings, naturally? were marked by much solemnity and Mr. Butt and other speakers exhibited considerable emotion. Mr. Butt, Professor Galbraith, Mr. Blonden, Mr. Alfred Webb and Mr. A. M. Sullivan reviewed the history of the Association, the work it had accomplished and the manner in which it had achieved its success. Professor Galbraith paid a well deserved tribute to the artisans of Dublin for the assistance they had always given the Association; letters were read from Lord French and others expressing regret at being unable to be present; and, finally, resolutions were passed acquitting the association de die, and authorising its officers to hand over to its more important successors, the Irish Home League, its assets, books and documents. It may be interesting to mention that the Home Government Association lasted exactly three years and four months, its first meeting having been held on the 1st of September, 1870.—Dublin Nation.

A New Church in Waterford.

An influential meeting of the citizens of Waterford was held December 18th for the purpose of raising funds to assist the Dominican Fathers in erecting a new church in that city. The present buildings of the Order in Waterford are wholly insufficient for their sacred objects, and the deficiency in this respect has long notorious in the city. The meeting was in every respect worthy of a Catholic city. The leading citizens attended, and the resolution made for the pious work was responded to with characteristic liberality, the subscription list opened at the meeting realising before the termination of the proceedings the round sum of £500. No Order of the Catholic Church has done more for religion, or contributed more illustrious names to the record of philanthropic exertion than the famous Brotherhood of St. Dominic. The claims of the Order on the Catholic people of Ireland need no recapitulation here. They are understood and appreciated by the vast congregation who have benefited by them, and the best assurance that this is so may be found in the enthusiastic and practical character of the meeting held at Waterford.

Defalcations.

The Directors of the Belfast Bank have made the unpleasant discovery that defalcations, estimated variously at from £5,000 to £100,000 have occurred in some branch or branches of their establishment. They have resolved to withhold the bonus usually given in addition to the dividend until the deficiency which is to be taken from the reserve fund is made good; but the ordinary dividend will not be diminished. It is alleged that a conspiracy has been formed to defraud the bank through transactions with another bank in London, and the persons accused, so far, of being connected with this conspiracy are an accountant of the head office named Smyth and Mr. Byers, the manager in Cookstown. The latter has been arrested and a sum of six hundred pounds is alleged to have been found in his possession.—Nation, December 20.

Miscellaneous.

The number of paupers in the Roscrea Union is 149.

The managers of the Sligo Savings Bank have resolved to dissolve the Bank.

On Saturday, December 13, about 400 children, male and female, received the sacrament of confirmation from his grace the Archbishop of Cashel, at the Cathedral, Thurles.

The work of closing over the Farnham river, in Cavan, is drawing to a close. The cost of the undertaking by the Town Commissioners will be about £500.

The Lord Lieutenant has approved of the appointment of Mr. Joseph Hamilton Swanzy Pargiblem to be Deputy Lieutenant of the county Limerick, in room of the late J. Lloyd, Esq.

A public meeting was held on Sunday, December 21st, in the church of SS. Michael and John, Dublin, for the purpose of initiating a movement to erect a suppliment to the memory of the late lamented Canon Rowlett.

The Very Rev. L. Cosgrave, O. S. F., of Wexford, has been appointed Provincial of the Franciscan Order in Ireland; the Very Rev. P. D. Keogh, ex-Provincial, has been appointed Guardian of St. Isidore's College, Rome; and the Very Rev. J. F. Hanrahan, who filled the office of Guardian of St. Isidore's, Rome, and of the Franciscan Convents of Limerick and Drogheda, respectively, has been appointed Guardian of the hotel House of the Order in Ireland.

The directors of the Bank of Ireland, having determined upon establishing a branch at Ennis, have purchased a most eligible site in O'Connell's square from Mr. Michael Powell.

A writ out of the Queen's Bench has been served upon Mr. O'Donnell, B. L., Belfast, claiming £2,000 damages for alleged slander. The cause of action arises out of observations made by Mr. O'Donnell in the police court.

Dr. Rowan Cashell, of Toomavara, has been presented by his friends with a handsome silver tea service, as a recognition of his services for twenty years, during which he had been medical superintendent of the Toomavara dispensary district.

On Saturday night, December 13th, about ten o'clock, Mr. John Hewitson was found dead, at his own residence, Inniscarberry. Shortly before his death, Mr. Hewitson retired from his wood at the Town thinnet, where he had proved one of its ablest and most useful members. The sad event has been universally lamented, as the deceased was highly esteemed by all classes.

On the evening of December 9th several persons were thrown into the sitting-room of Rev. Mr. Magill, Catholic curate near Bray. A quantity of property was destroyed. Several of the stones nearly struck the gentleman, who was in the room at the time. The murderers have been identified, and will be brought up at the next assizes.

The London correspondent of the Irish Times states that the reports again revived that Mr. Gladstone will, after all, to have the post of Secretary to the Board of Trade. He adds that Mr. Gladstone has been asked that "any extensive general or special, immediate or deferred — The Carlingford Administration has declined to accept office in the independent district of Caffraria known as Bantu Land, where, it is said, 'the may do much mischief.'" The Caffres are among the bravest of races; and some twenty years ago it cost us a long and expensive war to reduce them to subjection. Another Caffre war would be highly unpleasant just at the time King Kaffe Kalkali is on our hands. The empire on which the sun never sets" is a very expensive machine to keep in good order. Tu is especially so since the Central Government began to encourage the fatal practice of allowing colonies to govern themselves. Even with aborigines, and then permitting the Imperial resources to be drawn on for the purpose of fighting them out. If the colonies desire to make Caffre chiefs register their guns, they should themselves take the consequences of refusal on the part of the lusky illustrisimus. — Dublin Freeman, December 18.

A Foolish Wager.

It appears that some time back a Mr. James Hamplen made a bet of £500 with Mr. Alfred Hissel Wallis that the earth is flat. The stakes were held by Mr. Walsh, of an English newspaper, the Field, and a series of simple experiments proved conclusively that the earth was round. Mr. Hamplen, having lost his money, he next lost his temper, and commenced to write a series of scurrilous libels on Mr. Wallis and the Stakeholder. He was prosecuted, pleaded guilty, and was discharged on the understanding that if he failed to mend his manners he should be brought up for judgment. No sooner was this settlement effected than the impetuous Hampden broke his pledge. Accordingly, he was brought up on Tuesday in a London police court and sentenced by Mr. Commissioner Kerr to ten months' imprisonment. Retirement may happily convince Mr. Hampden that, whether the earth be round or flat, he is unmistakably a flat.—Dublin Nation, December 20.

Earl Russell and Persecution.

A correspondence has passed between Earl Russell and Sir George Bowyer, an English Catholic, who represented Dundalk in Parliament for a number of years, on the subject of the part the noble lord is taking in connection with the movement for expressing sympathy with Prussia in her struggle with the Catholic Bishops. Sir George, writing to his lordship, informed him that such a movement would produce the bitterest feelings on the part of both Protestants and Catholics in England, and not more in Ireland, and that Bismarck did not want English sympathy, and would be amused and would laugh at the applause of English Liberals. Earl Russell, in his reply, said that he conceived it to be time to declare when the English Catholic Church would be satisfied with nothing but sovereignty, and that he deemed the Pope's temporal rule over Ireland. Sir George in reply states that no one is opposed to sovereignty, whether in the setting-room of Rev. Mr. Magill, Catholic curate near Bray. A quantity of property was destroyed. Several of the stones nearly struck the gentleman, who was in the room at the time. The murderers have been identified, and will be brought up at the next assizes.

The London correspondent of the Irish Times states that the reports again revived that Mr. Gladstone will, after all, to have the post of Secretary to the Board of Trade. He adds that Mr. Gladstone has been asked that "any extensive general or special, immediate or deferred — The Carlingford Administration has declined to accept office in the independent district of Caffraria known as Bantu Land, where, it is said, 'the may do much mischief.'" The Caffres are among the bravest of races; and some twenty years ago it cost us a long and expensive war to reduce them to subjection. Another Caffre war would be highly unpleasant just at the time King Kaffe Kalkali is on our hands. The empire on which the sun never sets" is a very expensive machine to keep in good order. Tu is especially so since the Central Government began to encourage the fatal practice of allowing colonies to govern themselves. Even with aborigines, and then permitting the Imperial resources to be drawn on for the purpose of fighting them out. If the colonies desire to make Caffre chiefs register their guns, they should themselves take the consequences of refusal on the part of the lusky illustrisimus. — Dublin Freeman, December 18.

A Foolish Wager.

It appears that some time back a Mr. James Hamplen made a bet of £500 with Mr. Alfred Hissel Wallis that the earth is flat. The stakes were held by Mr. Walsh, of an English newspaper, the Field, and a series of simple experiments proved conclusively that the earth was round. Mr. Hamplen, having lost his money, he next lost his temper, and commenced to write a series of scurrilous libels on Mr. Wallis and the Stakeholder. He was prosecuted, pleaded guilty, and was discharged on the understanding that if he failed to mend his manners he should be brought up for judgment. No sooner was this settlement

FRANCE.

French Communists in London.

A band of French refugees have published a manifesto, which has not attracted notice in some of the London papers. The manifesto makes a violent against Marshal MacMahon and the Duc de Broglie in the first place, the latter of whom is vilified in milder than milk. The former they call the "plus lasse of Sedan," the "smoker of weapons," the "man whose name is reproached with the capitulation, to which, he is told, "the ones his people are ashamed of." Finally, all Belgium half clown half Jesuit—who ought to call himself Jocrasse de Loyola." "Friends and brothers" is reminded that there still remains to them "the dagger of Brutus, the pistol of Berezowski, and the shells of the Commune," and are told that "the hour is come when the lives of tyrants and traitors belong to the people chosen by Destiny." All this, and more to the same effect, ends like a confession of impotence and despair, and it is difficult to imagine in the land-office rise did not find favor with the country; and those Leicester-Square demonstrations proved doubtless the last attempt that John Bull will uphold the right of asylum at all hazards—even at the risk of what is well meant hospitality upon murderers, and thus becoming by implication the abettor of their atrocities. We trust that such as assumption may turn out to be unfounded.—London Echo, December 20.

From a French Elections.

The elections of Sunday, December 14, have caused a very natural consternation among the ranks of the Conservatives. The Republicans have been victorious along the whole line, and that at least of the new members is not only a Republican but a Communist. In the Finisterre, the Republican candidate, M. Swiney, whom we may term a native of Hibernian extraction, polled 22,641 votes against 10,691 given to M. Leguen, the Conservative. Such a return from a French department is calculated to furnish matter for reflection. In the Seine et Oise—that is at Versailles itself—M. Calmon, the Republican candidate, has defeated M. Thiers, obtained 42,445 votes to 27,331 given to the Conservative. M. Farcy, who while in the Assle, M. Marcou, a Communist now in prison for a seditious publication, and by any means the weirdest that has lately come in at the head of the poll with 29,702 votes; M.M. Castel and Peyrouse, Imperialists, coming next with about 14,000 and 13,000 respectively, while the two Royalist candidates register only about 6,000 or 7,000 apiece. Consequently, the modifications of universal suffrage proposed to the Committee of Thirty receive a good deal of support; while M. Gésanne, one of the representatives of the Left Centre on the Committee, seems to admit the necessity of doing something, though he thinks that universal suffrage must not to be sacrificed, modified, and books for salvation from the Reds to a Second Chamber "elected by groups."—London Bulletin.

The Duc d'Aumale.

The reputation of the Duc d'Aumale seems to have been raised considerably in French military circles by his conduct as presiding judge at the Bazaine trial. Several officers of high rank have expressed themselves highly pleased with his ideas of military duty, and the Duc de Broglie is said to have proposed to create for him the office of Inspector-General of the French Army, and to give him the same position and rank as Count Moltke holds in Germany. The Duc d'Aumale is at present the commander-in-chief of the division whose headquarters are at Bourges, and it is added, with some emphasis, in the French papers, that the very day the Bazaine trial was over, he started, without a moment's delay to re-assume his command. — Dublin Nation, December 20.

GERMANY.

Apathy of Catholics.

We are forced, by a regard for truth, to make the painful admission that the syndicate of the German lay Catholics absolutely justifies Prince Bismarck in assuming, as he avowedly does, that the rabid persecution of their faithful Bishops gives them no uneasiness—it does not even disturb their sleep. Of worse than little—it is wicked—to attempt to dissemble on this matter, and to say that the lay Catholics of Germany are deeply grieved at what is passing in Prussia. Pious, religious do they give or take when the Russian Catholic Church would be satisfied with nothing but sovereignty, and that he deemed the Pope's temporal rule over Ireland. Sir George in reply states that no one is opposed to sovereignty, whether in the setting-room of Rev. Mr. Magill, Catholic curate near Bray. A quantity of property was destroyed. Several of the stones nearly struck the gentleman, who was in the room at the time. The murderers have been identified, and will be brought up at the next assizes.

The London correspondent of the Irish Times states that the reports again revived that Mr. Gladstone will, after all, to have the post of Secretary to the Board of Trade. He adds that Mr. Gladstone has been asked that "any extensive general or special, immediate or deferred — The Carlingford Administration has declined to accept office in the independent district of Caffraria known as Bantu Land, where, it is said, 'the may do much mischief.'" The Caffres are among the bravest of races; and some twenty years ago it cost us a long and expensive war to reduce them to subjection. Another Caffre war would be highly unpleasant just at the time King Kaffe Kalkali is on our hands. The empire on which the sun never sets" is a very expensive machine to keep in good order. Tu is especially so since the Central Government began to encourage the fatal practice of allowing colonies to govern themselves. Even with aborigines, and then permitting the Imperial resources to be drawn on for the purpose of fighting them out. If the colonies desire to make Caffre chiefs register their guns, they should themselves take the consequences of refusal on the part of the lusky illustrisimus. — Dublin Freeman, December 18.

A Foolish Wager.

It appears that some time back a Mr. James Hamplen made a bet of £500 with Mr. Alfred Hissel Wallis that the earth is flat. The stakes were held by Mr. Walsh, of an English newspaper, the Field, and a series of simple experiments proved conclusively that the earth was round. Mr. Hamplen, having lost his money, he next lost his temper, and commenced to write a series of scurrilous libels on Mr. Wallis and the Stakeholder. He was prosecuted, pleaded guilty, and was discharged on the understanding that if he failed to mend his manners he should be brought up for judgment. No sooner was this settlement

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academical honors. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION.
Payable in advance.
Board, Tuition, Washing, etc.....$125 00
Music, with use of instrument.....30 00
Drawing.....10 00

No charge for the French, Spanish and German languages, nor for the use of the Library and Reading Room.

The first term of the eighteenth annual session will commence on August 1st.

Parents will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

Circular forwarded on application.

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of the Holy Cross, and is situated in a healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The position is high and airy, and the buildings are large and well furnished. The most approved system of education is pursued, and the comforts of home will be enjoyed, but the care of Christian mothers will be exercised. The Academic year is divided into two sessions of five months each.

TERMS:
Per session, payable half yearly in advance:
Board and Tuition.....$125 00
Washing.....12 00
Piano.....10 00

Pupils remaining at the Academy during vacation will be charged $20.

Drawing, Painting and Music form extra charges. There is no extra charge for the French or Spanish languages, nor for Needlework.

All our correspondence of the young ladies will be sent to the inspection of the Mother Superior.

Letters of inquiry may be addressed to the Sister Superior.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.
Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
Payable half yearly in advance.
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Bedding and mending.....$25 00
Physician's fee, to be paid only when needed.....10 00
Use of Library.....00 00

DAY PUPILS.
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session.....$60 00
Junior classes.....40 00

Vocal and instrumental music, drawing and modern languages will be extra charges. The discipline of the academic year commences respectively on the first of August and the fifth of January.

For further information address the Secretary.

Very Rev. P. HENNEBERY, Superior.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME
SAN JOSÉ, CALIFORNIA.
YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORated according to the laws of the State of California, and empowered to confer academical honors, will commence the Twenty-third Annual Session on MONDAY, August 16, 1875. It affords the parents the assurance that the branches of a thorough education

TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....37 50
Physician's fee (if required), per quarter.....2 50

Pupils will be charged from the time of entrance to the end of the quarter. Pupils withdrawn before the expiration of a session will be charged for the whole session, unless withdrawn on account of protracted illness.

Parents are requested to call at the Institute, and make personal arrangements with the Superior.

MISSION DOLORES ACADEMY,
CORNER OF DOLORES AND SAN FERNANDO STS.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS ACADEMY, IS A BRANCH OF THE Notre Dame College in San José. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education, and is conducted on the same principles as those taught in the Academy of the Notre Dame Institute.

TERMS:
Per quarter, payable in advance:
Board, Tuition, Washing, and Medical Attendance and Medicine, Entrance Fee.....$37 50
Half Boarders.....20 00
Music, with use of instrument.....15 00
Drawing.....10 00
Painting.....10 00
Needle Work.....10 00

DAY PUPILS.
Terms per quarter, payable in advance:
Class I Day Scholars—Reading, first and second Classes.....$ 5 00
Third and fourth grammar Classes.....7 50
Fifth Class.....10 00
Particular Studies, per month, throughout the year.....1 00

No extra charge for French, plain and ornamental needlework.

For further particulars apply to Mrs. HARRIET A. YATES, Superior.

CONVENT OF THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MA
.....FOR THE.....
EDUCATION OF YOUNG LADI
GILROY, SANTA CLARA CO.,
Conducted by the Sisters of the Most Immaculate Heart of Mary.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS.
Board, tuition, washing and bedding, per session.....$
Physician's fee, to be paid but once.....
Tuition on piano, per session.....
Drawing.....
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, Needlework, Painting, Music, Use of Library, Languages.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:
Primary, per month.....
Elementary and senior, per month.....
Music.....
From 9...
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, and Needlework, Painting, Music, Use of Library, Languages.
N. B. The above establishment is also the nearest to the depot.
For Prospectus and further particulars apply to
SISTER SAYMUNDA CREMAZIE,
Superior.

MINERS' RUBBER EMENT.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA'S JUSTICE
Court of the Second Judicial District, in and for the County of Mendocino—Action brought in the Superior Court of Mendocino County, State of California. JAMES H. JACKSON, plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM A. [illegible], defendant.

Action brought in the [illegible] Court of the County of Mendocino, State of California, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said County of Mendocino, in which a summons issued against the said defendant.

The people of the State of [illegible] required to appear in action brought against them in the Court, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days after the service on them of said summons, if served within this County; but if served out of this County, then within thirty days; or judgment will be taken against them according to the prayer of said complaint. The said action is brought to recover $200 U. S. gold coin, and for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage executed by said defendant to said plaintiff, to secure the payment of a promissory note, dated March 4, 1871, for the sum of $200 U. S. gold coin, and interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per month, and which mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the County Recorder of said County of Mendocino, on the 4th day of March, 1871, in Book [illegible] of Mortgages, page [illegible], and which mortgage was given to secure the payment of said promissory note, and the said plaintiff prays judgment for the amount due, together with costs and damages.

And you are hereby notified that unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any money or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand this 24th day of October, 1874. By order of [illegible] PENNOYER, Clerk.

Presiding Justice of the Superior Court of said County.

Attest—[illegible] HEO. L. WEDEKIND, Deputy Clerk.

Attorney for plaintiff, 621 Merchant street, San Francisco.

JAMES MEE, Sheriff of Mendocino County, State of California.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN [illegible] and healthful part of the city, [illegible] best advantages for the education of [illegible] of our Nation's house, and while [illegible] should be maintained with [illegible] standard and unqualified [illegible] and, therefore, that with the spirit of [illegible] given you always to [illegible] of work, [illegible] prayer unaccompanied by works is [illegible] and remains ineffectuous. This is the reason why exiles so much abound in Europe. To ask and not to work are contradictory terms, and they lead these unhappy effects. And I think that in many different places and kingdoms there are many souls lying altogether in prayers, and expecting from them alone the end of exile. But when shall we see the close of this day of tribulations? Then shall I see you in the piety which is manifest to [illegible] when shall we see the close of [illegible] to work outside it. In the meantime, I recommend to you, and to all ministers, if they could hear me, I recommend our children to your care. Tell them that my spirit, who was the first revolutionist in the world, desired a mother, a wife, and from that first description exalt all those souls which were afterwards swept away by the [illegible] of the Son of God. Tell Jesus that as Adam, deceived by the woman and [illegible] the devil, behind the comfort of the pattress of this House.

The parents of pupils will be at every Railroad Depot and Steamboat Landing, to convey passengers and baggage to the Academy free of charge.

MICHAEL FARRELLY, Director.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 113 Second street,
Nothing changed in name of House. Furnished Rooms to let, with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine.
M. ONEILL, Proprietor.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
M. SHOCKEY, Proprietor.

P. CASSERLY,
Late of the Tremont House, Boston, would be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.
The House is situated right in the best locality in the city, and is the best place, with Elevator, Baths and all other modern improvements. The Rooms are large and airy, and can be had either single or in suits for families.
The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of boarders.
Board and Lodging, per week.....$ 6 00
Board and Lodging, single meals.....1 00
Transient Boarders.....1 50
Family accommodations on reasonable rates.
Physician's Fee and Medicine.....
Vacation at Uklaga.....
Modern language, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 5th of August, 1871.
REV. S. JUSTIN, President.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUtion, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday of August.

The object of the Institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Commercial education to youth. For further information address the Secretary.

TERMS:
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Tuition, board and washing, per session.....150 00
Short term tuition.....75 00
Physician's fee (if required).....
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $50.

Parents may be made semi-annually in advance. Pupils will be received at any time, but they will be charged from the time of entrance to the end of the session.

For further particulars apply to
REV. J. J. CREEFE, O. S. F.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED
Rev. JAMES MacGILL, C. M., President.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE,
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA
Under the management of the Fathe of the Society of Jesus.

THE SANTA CLARA COLLEGE WAS FOUNded in 1851, and in 1852 was incorporated, with the privileges of a University. Diplomas are given to graduates in the several courses of study.

The College buildings are large and commodious, while extensive playgrounds, with a covered gallery, and gymnasium, afford every facility for healthful exercise.

The College possesses a very complete philosophical apparatus, and a valuable collection of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also practical schools of Telegraphy, Book-keeping and Phonography. A thorough instruction is taught in a thoroughly fitted Chemical Laboratory.

The Scholastic year, which begins on the first Monday in August, is divided into two sessions of five months each.

TERMS:
Payable semi-annually in advance:
Matriculation fee (who paid but once).....$ 10 00
Board, Tuition, Washing, and Medical Attendance and Medicine, Bedding, Use of Library.....75 00
Half Boarders.....40 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00

For further particulars, apply to
Rev. JOSEPH BOLENGER, S. J., President.

CONVENT OF THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MA
.....FOR THE.....
EDUCATION OF YOUNG LADI
GILROY, SANTA CLARA CO.,
Conducted by the Sisters of the Most Immaculate Heart of Mary.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS.
Board, tuition, washing and bedding, per session.....$
Physician's fee, to be paid but once.....
Tuition on piano, per session.....
Drawing.....
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, Needlework, Painting, Music, Use of Library, Languages.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:
Primary, per month.....
Elementary and senior, per month.....
Music.....
From 9...
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, and Needlework, Painting, Music, Use of Library, Languages.
N. B. The above establishment is also the nearest to the depot.
For Prospectus and further particulars apply to
SISTER SAYMUNDA CREMAZIE,
Superior.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN [illegible] and healthful part of the city, [illegible] best advantages for the education of [illegible] of our Nation's house, and while [illegible] should be maintained with [illegible] standard and unqualified [illegible] and, therefore, that with the spirit of [illegible] given you always to [illegible] of work, [illegible] prayer unaccompanied by works is [illegible] and remains ineffectuous. This is the reason why exiles so much abound in Europe. To ask and not to work are contradictory terms, and they lead these unhappy effects. And I think that in many different places and kingdoms there are many souls lying altogether in prayers, and expecting from them alone the end of exile. But when shall we see the close of this day of tribulations? Then shall I see you in the piety which is manifest to [illegible] when shall we see the close of [illegible] to work outside it. In the meantime, I recommend to you, and to all ministers, if they could hear me, I recommend our children to your care. Tell them that my spirit, who was the first revolutionist in the world, desired a mother, a wife, and from that first description exalt all those souls which were afterwards swept away by the [illegible] of the Son of God. Tell Jesus that as Adam, deceived by the woman and [illegible] the devil, behind the comfort of the pattress of this House.

The parents of pupils will be at every Railroad Depot and Steamboat Landing, to convey passengers and baggage to the Academy free of charge.

MICHAEL FARRELLY, Director.

Removal.

THE SECOND STREET HOUSE
Has Removed to 113 Second street,
Nothing changed in name of House. Furnished Rooms to let, with or without board, on the most reasonable terms. Call and examine.
M. ONEILL, Proprietor.

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Corner of Sansome and Pacific streets, San Francisco.
M. SHOCKEY, Proprietor.

P. CASSERLY,
Late of the Tremont House, Boston, would be happy to receive his friends and the public in general.
The House is situated right in the best locality in the city, and is the best place, with Elevator, Baths and all other modern improvements. The Rooms are large and airy, and can be had either single or in suits for families.
The best attention will be paid to the comfort and convenience of boarders.
Board and Lodging, per week.....$ 6 00
Board and Lodging, single meals.....1 00
Transient Boarders.....1 50
Family accommodations on reasonable rates.
Physician's Fee and Medicine.....
Vacation at Uklaga.....
Modern language, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 5th of August, 1871.
REV. S. JUSTIN, President.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUtion, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday of August.

The object of the Institution is to give a good English, Mathematical, Classical and Commercial education to youth. For further information address the Secretary.

TERMS:
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Tuition, board and washing, per session.....150 00
Short term tuition.....75 00
Physician's fee (if required).....
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $50.

Parents may be made semi-annually in advance. Pupils will be received at any time, but they will be charged from the time of entrance to the end of the session.

For further particulars apply to
REV. J. J. CREEFE, O. S. F.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED
Rev. JAMES MacGILL, C. M., President.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER FOR
IN ADDITION TO THE LEADING SE exhibited
BRAVE BOYS OF FRANC
A Tale of the Late War in Eur
Will present in its readers a series of SHORT STORIES, in each number, from the pen of Miss Eliza Allen Starr, and stories by other eminent writers in the ranks of the Catholic Church. The first story, entitled
LILLIE MEAD AND AIRE; or Faith in Spite of Fashion, by Miss Starr, will be commenced in the first number of the new volume.
TERMS:
Payable semi-annually in advance:
Board, Tuition, Washing, and Medical Attendance and Medicine, Bedding, Use of Library.....75 00
Half Boarders.....40 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00
For further particulars, apply to
Rev. JOSEPH BOLENGER, S. J., President.

MISS KENNEDY,
FASHIONABLE MILLINER
62 Third Street, Near Miss
INFORMS HER FRIENDS
the public in general that she has Ladies', Misses' and Child
HATS AND BONNET
And always keeps on hand as good an assortm
Millinery Goods, Flowers, Feather
Which she will sell at as low rates as the Ladies are invited to call and examine her fancy prices for them.

GIANT CEMEN!
A MOST EXTRAORDINARY AND NEVE
ably worded article for speaking
Cements, says, for sticking [illegible]
Ornaments, says, for sticking [illegible]
Ornaments, says, for sticking [illegible]
Ornaments

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The diocese of Natchez contributed $3,000 for the Society of the Propagation of the Faith during the last year.

The Cologne Gazette, in Prussia, was seized and confiscated for having published the Pope's Encyclical.

Twenty-five thousand dollars was the sum remitted to the Pope by the Catholics of the United States during the past year.

The Common Council of Hoboken, N. J., gave a Christmas present of $500 to the Sisters in charge of St. Mary's Hospital.

The Buffalo Union prefers "Catholicity" to "Catholicism," as the Catholic religion is not an "ism." So thought Brownson twenty years ago.

The bishop of Nashville, Tenn., has expressed deep gratitude to the clergy of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati for their aid to the suffering poor of Memphis.

There are seven Catholic schools at Fort Wayne, Ind.—three for boys, three for girls and one for both sexes—at which 1,115 children attend daily.

The Rev. Charles M. Tourney of Steubenville, Ohio, died on the 16th of December, in the thirty-fourth year of his age and the fourth year of his ministery.

The ex-Empress Eugenie recently visited the French Catholic Hospital of London, and made donations to the Sisters in charge of it. Her Majesty intends wintering at Devonshire.

A place known as the "ice place," at Vineville, near Macon, Ga., is the location selected by the authorities of Macon to be donated to Bishop Gross as a site for his college.

Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto, Upper Canada, who is now in Rome, will bring with him on his return three Brothers of the Third Order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, for the purpose of establishing a house of their Order in Toronto.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul in Boston received over $14,000 during the last nine months of 1873, and prior to 1873 the sum of $90,000—making $110,000 collected and spent for the poor of that city.

Dr. Gerhard, President of the American College at Rome, has presented to the Holy Father the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars in the name of the Catholics of the United States.

Sir Anthony Nagel, the British Envoy in Rome, contrary to assurances given to the owners of the Irish College, has decided that the estates of this institution is not a case for diplomatic intervention.

The Sisters of Mount St. Mary's, Leavenworth, Kansas, opened a hospital in October last, and are now building a suitable house at Deer Lodge City, Montana Territory, for that purpose, under the name of St. Joseph's Hospital.

Six Roman communities of religious were driven into the streets on the 1st of December, and on the 3d of the same month four Augustinian houses were suppressed. On the 4th the same pitiless injustice fell upon four convents of nuns.

The German Bishops propose sending to the Pope a memorial entreating him to order the continuation of the process of canonization of Blessed Alberters Magnus, and also of the investigation as to his right of being accorded the title of Doctor of the Church.

Before the Reformation there was an Abbot of Westminster Abbey, but in the reign of Queen Victoria Pius IX. created the Archiepiscopal See of Westminster, with Cardinal Wiseman at its head. Lord John Russell and Disraeli knashed their teeth, but could not help themselves.

On Christmas morning the long illness of Rev. Henry Hogler, of Cincinnati, terminated in death. He was twenty-seven years a priest of the archdiocese, and eleven years a patient invalid, incapable of discharging the duties of his ministery, and confined to his room during the whole of the past year.

On Sunday, 28th December, the Rev. Mark T. Devlin, a zealous young priest of the diocese of Pittsburg, left this world for a better life, in the 35th year of bleage. He was born in the vicinity of Pittsburg, ordained priest in February, 1865, and was pastor of the church of Our Lady of Consolation at the time of his death.

Rev. Father Carron, of Cleveland, died at the hospital on the 21st December, after a long illness, caused by a cancer in the upper part of his face, which incapacitated him from clerical duties for the last four years. He was 71 years of age, of which he spent over twenty years in Cleveland.

The spire of St. Malachi's church, in Cleveland, O., is 243 feet high, and is surmounted by a cross which will be illuminated on certain occasions. It is the only one of the kind in the United States. The lighting of the cross is done by electricity, and it commands such an elevated position that it can be seen across Lake Erie, in Canada.

Some time ago a young lady, Mlle Mirlac, accused the clergy and nuns of Carcassonne, France, of some vile immorality. She was brought before a Court and acquitted on a plea of insanity. Her father has since committed suicide, and so did a young man to whom she was engaged in marriage, and she herself has been sent to an insane asylum.

The literal papers of Rome are angry that the ecclesiastical property which is up for sale finds no purchasers, and that the authorities are at a loss how to find money to fulfill engagements made to monks and friars who occupied the convents. They hoped to pay the pensions by the sale of the property at low prices, but there are scarcely any purchasers to be found.

A magnificent shrine of gold and silver has been recently constructed at Milan to contain a portion of the minor relics of St. Ambrose, the great Doctor of the Church and patron of that city. It was exposed for the first time on his feast, December 9, in the fine basilica which bears his name.

Rev. Pierce Maher, pastor of St. Patrick's Church of Norristown, Penn., and for many years pastor of St. Patrick's Church, at Harrisburg, died at his residence in Norristown on the 28th of December. He was a native of the parish of Clonbam, near Clonmell, Ireland, born on the 6th of April, 1812, and resided in this country since 1834.

The Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph reports a lecture of the Rev. Mr. Hines, a Methodist clergyman in that city, from which we take the following: "For one, the reverend speaker thanked God for the Catholic Church. It had been a great power in the evangelization of the world; it had worked its wonders among the heathen, and now, in this country, with its total abstinence societies, it is the strongest element in the cause of temperance on the face of the globe."

The Randolph (Mass.) Hepister gives a long and interesting account of a sodality reception which took place there on Sunday, 16th December. In the course of it the editor pays a well-deserved compliment to the pastor, Rev. James E. O'Brien. It says: "During the short time he has been in Randolph he has done a great deal of good and becomes a general favorite with the people. He is possessed of abilities as a minister of the gospel that are seldom met with in one so young. As a preacher he excels in comprehensiveness of argument, fervor of faith and earnestness. May he long remain among the people of Randolph."

The Paris Univers announces that Bishop Dubois of Galveston, Texas, is about to leave France, where he has been for some time past, and to return to his diocese accompanied by twenty-two ecclesiastics and eighteen nuns, who have volunteered to leave their country for the American mission.

The site of the English Catholic University will be Kensington, London, not far from the Cathedral, and in the midst of the richest and most aristocratic portion of the city. It was originated and for many years urged by Dr. John H. Newman, whose withdrawal from the Church of England was declared by the London Times to be more grievous than ten thousand commonplace persons.

The Very Rev. Dr. Woodlock continues as Rector of the Dublin Catholic University. Rev. Dr. Malloy, the great theologian and geologist of the Royal College of Maynooth, is Vice-Rector. The Rev. J. Allen Pollin of Newberry, a graduate of the Paris University, is Professor of French and German, and Dr. Casey, late of Trinity College, is Professor of higher Mathematics.

At a late Home Rule meeting, called and addressed by Mr. Blennerhassett, M. P., in the county Kerry, Ireland, the Rev. George Fitzmaurice, Protestant minister, was Chairman, and by his side were Rev. M. O'Sullivan, P. P., and Rev. John O'Connor, C. C., all of the parish of Ballydonoghoe. A unanimous vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Blennerhassett as a true friend.

The Nun of Kenmare has postponed the holding of her lottery for three months, in consequence of the financial panic in the United States, and she warns the public against giving donations for her convent to her former agent, James Rogers, whom she dismissed from her service more than a year ago.

The Boston Herald says: "A paragraph published on the 10th December charged Rev. Father Tooling, of St. Mary's church, Newburyport, Mass., with having used his position to influence the members of his parish to vote for certain candidates. We now have the fullest evidence that Father Tooling never interfered nor gave any instructions regarding any election, much less the election in question."

Stanley, the Dean of Westminster, has given the celebrated linguist, Max Muller, the privilege of lecturing on Ecclesiastical Architecture in Westminster Hall, and has paid him by lauding the mother and mistress of all Churches." He said that she had always been the mistress and leader of art, and that the noble edifice in which they were assembled was another genius. The English papers are all full of wrath about it.

It was Honora Nagle, familiarly known as Nanno Nagle, who founded the Presentation Order in Cork in 1772. There are now over fifty convents of the nuns of that Order in Ireland, and besides two in this city they are found in other cities of the United States. They are not "Sisters," but secluded nuns, and are, properly, the only nuns on this coast. Miss Nagle was the daughter of Garret Nagle, of Ballygriffin, on the romantic Blackwater, near Mallow, county Cork.

One of the passengers on board the unfortunate "White Star" steamer Atlas writes as follows to the Paris Univers: "Every one was praying out loud, men and women. We put our trust in God and He saved Young Ireland and took others to Himself. A Catholic has great advantages at such a time, and also by his courage. I heard Miss H. Buckley, a young girl say to her mother, 'it will only be a short time, and then, please God, we shall live forever in eternity.'" She had a satchel full of jewels, and flung them into the sea with her mother's consent.

The Catholics of Hamilton, Ohio, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of St. Stephen's Society on the 26th ult. Two hundred men of this edifying Society received Holy Communion, while their wives, sisters and daughters assisted at the same on the day before. In the afternoon there was a grand procession through the city, and in the evening a concert by the choir of the church, under the patronage of the ladies of the congregation. Happy people!

Some two years ago the Boston Pilot said that Professor Agassiz had visited the hospitals of Boston, and found that a majority of the inmates acknowledged that their first fall occurred in public schools. Soon his statement was denied, and it was announced this a Romish lie, and published a letter from the Professor to a Protestant minister of Cleveland in which it was asserted that he never made such a statement. The Pilot did manfully, considering the charge, and proves it from the Boston Herald and by a letter from P. H. Bliss, the scientific assistant of the Professor.

The school question, so warmly discussed in the British Province of New Brunswick, appears to be drawing to a close. The Bishop of St. John's has made a proposition to the Executive Council, and they consented that the Christian Brothers and the Sisters of Charity may teach upon obtaining certificates of qualification, provided they use only the books prescribed by the Board, and observe the Common School law in other respects. They make no objection to the affiliation of Catholic schools with the common schools, and the word only in regard to books seems now to be the only impediment.

The city of Lyons, France, is said to be the City of Mary par excellence. It is in the chief hound to call itself so. Dominating the whole of the splendid town, upon a lofty hill, stands the world-famous shrine of Notre Dame de Fourvieres. It is the most celebrated of French sanctuaries, and after Lourdes and Salette, the most renowned for miracles. People flock hither from all parts of the world, and the annual number of pilgrims exceeds 500,000.

Mgr. Tarmos, a prelate of the Apostolic household, returned to Rome from France, and brought with him large sums of money as offerings to the Holy Father. Among other gifts was one from the nuns of St. Joseph's Convent, Bourdeaux, consisting of a bouquet of roses, the leaves of which were formed of gold pieces sewed together with very fine wire, and another from the nuns of St. Ursula, Port Beauvoisin, consisting of a golden heart filled with napoleons.

To an eminent layman (presumably the Marquis of Bute) who spoke doubtingly to the Holy Father about the the future of the persecuted religious in Rome, his Holiness said, "Man of little faith, how can you have such fears! They despoil us, it is true, even of the last crumb of bread. We ought to be alarmed, but we pray to Jesus in his own words, Give us this day our daily bread, and we are assured of the future, both of our bodies and our souls."

Our readers will hear in mind on reading the nomination of Father Tarquini, S.J., to the Sacred College of Cardinals, as announced in THE MONITOR last week, that Jesuits are very seldom raised to that dignity, and cannot accept the red hat under the rules of their order without an express command from the Pope.

Another Consistory is to take place at Easter, when a new series of Cardinals will be created and the Sacred College completed.

The Armenian Patriarch of Constantinople recently arrived in Rome, and brought with him a considerable sum of money which he deposited in the name of the Catholics of his diocese at the feet of the Sovereign Pontiff.

The Castelar Government in Spain has issued an order that the make and name of Spanish nationality who have been turned out of their monasteries and Convents in Rome, shall be received and entertained at the expense of his Government.

Mgr. Eberhard, Bishop of Treves, has been condemned to pay three hundred thalers fine, and Mgr. Melchers, two thousand six hundred thalers, for disobeying the edicts of the Government of Bismarck in ecclesiastical matters.

The Board of Trinity College, Dublin, have appointed Mr. Brady, a Catholic of the highest distinction, to a professorship of classical literature, as a suitable reform to his attainments and to the aid he has given in advancing the reputation of the University.

The Ireland Gazette, of Rome, says: "It is beyond belief how the number of failures among commercial men has increased within the past few years in this city. In 1870 there were only nine large commercial houses closed for insolvency; in 1871, fourteen; in 1872 sixteen, and in 1873, twenty-one! This is progress in regenerated Italy!

So great is the agitation among the Catholics of Pomerania, Silesia, the Rhenish provinces and Westphalia, that a Berlin paper assures us that, "the excitement and the excitement produced by the attitude of the Government against the clergy, there is a great chance that these provinces will have to be placed in a state of siege at once."

The Archbishop of Milan, after a lengthened and exact scrutiny, has officially announced that the bones found in an urn in the Basilica of St. Ambrose, on the night of August 8, 1871, are really those of St. Ambrose, St. Gervase and St. Protase, and his decision has been approved by the Pope in an Apostolic letter dated Rome, December 10, 1873.

On the occasion of the late Consistory, his Holiness issued a bull abrogating the usual formalities formerly in use at the creation of Cardinals, on account of the present condition of affairs in Rome. He has simply named the Cardinals without any further ceremony, as was the custom in the early Church.

It is said that Tom Moore did not know the music of his own melodies when played for him at London levees. The Duke of Wellington says that the great composers of Masses would be superhumanly endowed if they could distinguish their own music in the midst of the elaborate local embroideries wherewith it is embellished in certain churches in New York.

Condoning Robbery.

A Catholic priest has sent to the Times some facts in connection with the seizure of the Irish College at Rome from which it would appear that an audacious act of spoliation has been committed upon British subjects without the slightest exertion being made by the British Minister at Rome to afford them protection. The Italian usurping educational institution was not included in the bill for the suppression of the religious houses. Moreover, its rector was assured by the Foreign Secretary, by Lord Granville and by Sir Augustus Paget, that the law, as applied to Rome, neither in its general drift nor in its saving clause, would affect the Irish College. On the faith of these assurances the rector was feeling sufficiently safe to go to England when, on the 24th of November, he was told that large placards over the city announced the sale at auction on the day before of property supposed to belong to the Irish College. Without any warning, without the presentation, as in the case of the corporations affected by the law, of schedules to be filled up, without any notification of a change of judgment in the Italian and the Roman authorities, title deed was publicly announced. Sir Augustus Paget was on the day when the assured rector called to ask for his interference; he was engaged the next time he called, and finally he gave in writing the reply that Lord Granville had informed him that there was no cause for interference, and that the judgment of the home authorities about the Irish College had changed.—Cork Examiner, Dec. 24.

DEATH OF CHIEF BARON PIGOTT.—It is with deep and sincere regret we announce the death of Chief Baron Pigott. The sad occurrence took place in Dublin December 30, and was attained in the 75th year, and was a native of Cork county. In early life his tastes led him to study for the medical profession. Medicine he soon abandoned for law, and after the conclusion of his college he was called to the bar in 1826. He at once attained a considerable practice and obtained a leading position on the Munster circuit. He successively filled the highest offices of his profession, and was retained by the passing of several memorable measures in Parliament as M. P. for Clonmel (we might instance the Municipal Reform Act). He attained the high office of Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1846. In his judicial career, he was painstaking almost to a fault.

The national revenue in 1860 was $56,-054,509 88; in 1871 it was $383,321,015 89. The ordinary expenses of the national government in 1860 amounted to $62,676,557. In 1871 they amounted to $156,420,626. This does not include interest or principal of the public debt or pensions.

Newsdealers desiring THE MONITOR on Saturday evening or Sunday morning, can obtain copies, at regular office rates, at the store of J. E. CHOYNSKI, 16 Second street.

Subscriptions Received.

Donna—Martin Hegarty ..... $1 00
Union—T. Cline ..... 2 00
Modesto—William O'Rourke ..... 2 00
Borden Station—John Gilligan ..... 2 00
Dry Creek—Patrick Brennan ..... 2 00
Sacramento—John A. Barry ..... 2 00
Sacramento—John Barrett ..... 2 00
Murphy's Camp—William Moran ..... 2 00
Los Angeles—Right Rev. Bishop Amat ..... 2 00
D. McCarthy ..... 2 00
Marysville—William F. Peck ..... 2 00
P. Fitzgerald ..... 2 00
A. Cleary ..... 2 00
Hackney—Timothy McCarthy ..... 2 00
James McMahon ..... 2 00
Brooklyn—Thomas Cahill ..... 2 00
Yuba Station—M. Callaghan ..... 2 00
Gilroy—Mrs Alicia Dafferty ..... 2 00
Mission Dolores—James Duffy ..... 2 00
Powder Mills—Michael Murray ..... 2 00
Rodeo Tan—Michael Sweeney ..... 2 00
City—N. O'Donnell ..... 2 00
Eureka—J. E. Shanahan ..... 2 00

Curious Wills.

It is a very agreeable thing to be a legatee: sometimes, however, a legacy comes clogged with a condition which takes off a good deal of the pleasure accompanying its receipt. It may not be an intolerable condition having to take the name and arms of an old family and give up some distinguished name for an historical or an aristocratic one in order to inherit a fine estate, but it is often a terrible bore to a man to know that if she should give way to a natural wish and marry again, she will lose all or the greater part of the money left to her by husband. On such a condition large estates are constantly being willed, and many of the bequests to widows are only so long as they remain unmarried. Occasionally the condition is when legacies can be enjoyed is that the legatee shall not become or be married to a Roman Catholic. The Hon. Mrs. Araminta Monck Ridley, whose will was proved in April, 1868, placed still further restraints on her legatees. She devises "that if any or either of my said children, either in my lifetime or at any time after my decease, shall become or marry a Roman Catholic, or shall join or enter any Ritualistic brotherhood or sisterhood, then, and in any other or either of the said cases, the several gifts hereinbefore given to such child or children, shall cease and determine and become absolutely void."

In olden times estates were often held in England by very curious tenures. One of the most singular of these was that known as horn. The superior lord, who might be the king, gave possession of the land by the gift of a horn, and the land was held on condition of its being blown so as to give the Government notice of the approach of an enemy. This tenure, which prevailed in Northumberland, was abolished by a statute passed in the reign of Charles II. Another curious tenure still exists in the manor of Worksop, Nottinghamshire, which is held by the service of presenting a pair of gloves to the sovereign on the day of his coronation. The Duke of Newcastle, who is the present lord of the manor, performed this service at the coronation of Queen Victoria.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, January 15, 1874.

FLOUR—The demand for export has been unsatisfactorily small, while for export the inquiry has been up to average. We quote this at $5 75@6 25 and superfine at $5 25@5 75 in sacks for export.

WHEAT—The market has ruled quiet and at last week's prices. We quote this at $1 60@1 65 for shipping, and $1 65@1 70 for milling.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range at $1 25@1 30 for feed, $1 30@1 35 for brewing, and $1 35@1 40 for choice.

OATS—There was a fair demand, unchanged from the quiet rates of last week. Quotable at the close at $1 10@1 20 per ctl.

CORN—Quiet and unchanged at $1 25@1 30 per ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at $2 25@2 50.

RYE—Quotable at $1 50@1 60 per ctl.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayos, $3 25@3 50; Pinks, $3 50@3 75; Whites, $3 75@4; Reds, $3 50@3 75; Lima, $4 50@4 75.

ONIONS—We quote at $1 50@1 75 per ctl.

POTATOES—We quote at 75c@$1 per ctl.

DRIED FRUITS—The following are the jobbing rates: Apples, 7@7½c; Peaches, 7@8c; Pears, 7@8c; Plums, pitted, 7@8c; unpitted, 3@4c; Figs, 5@6c; Prunes, 5@6c; Nectarines, 5@6c; Apricots, 7@8c; Raisins, $1 75@2 per box.

BUTTER—We quote choice shipping grades at 18@20c; fancy dairy, 25@30c; choice dairy, 22½@25c; ordinary, 15@20c.

CHEESE—We quote at 12½@15c per lb.

EGGS—We quote good to choice shipping grades at 18@20c per dozen.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California, 18@20c; Oregon, 18@20c; Sonoma, 18@20c; Eastern Dairy, ordinary to choice, 15@20c; Eastern Creamery, 20@25c; Eastern Roll, 15@20c; Eastern Goshen, 25@30c.

CURED MEATS.

HAMS—California, 12½@13½c; Eastern, 13@14c; Eastern Sugar Cured, 15@16c.

BACON—California, 11@12c; Eastern, 12@13c.

SHOULDERS—California, 9@10c; Eastern, 10@11c.

PICKLED—Tongues, $16@18 per bbl; Pigs' Feet, $6@7 per bbl; Tripe, $3@4 per bbl.

LARD—In tierces, 11@11½c; in 10 lb tins, 12½@13c; in 5 lb tins, 13@13½c; in kegs, 11@11½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality cattle, second quality ..... cents; third quality ..... cents.

VEAL—At 6@8c.

MUTTON—At 6@8c.

PORK—At 6@8c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Live, per dozen, Turkeys, 6@7 lbs each, $12@14; Gobblers, $12@14; Geese, $12@14; Ducks, $8@9; Chickens, $6@7 for full grown; Chickens, $4@5 for young; Roosters, $5@6; Hens, $5@6; Broilers, $4@5 for large; Broilers, $3@4 for small; Pigeons, $1@1 50 per dozen.

GAME—Hares, large, 75@$1 each; Rabbits, large, 75@$1 each; Rabbits, small, 50@75c each; Quail, $1@1 50 per dozen; Mallard, $1@1 50 per pair; Canvas Back, $2@2 50 per pair; Sprig, $1@1 50 per pair; Teal, $1@1 50 per pair; Widgeon, $1@1 50 per pair; Snipe, $1@1 50 per dozen; Plover, $1@1 50 per dozen; Rail, $1@1 50 per dozen; Quail, $1@1 50 per dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Premium Outlery

First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1871
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1872
First Premium and Medal of Mechanics' Institute, 1873
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1851
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1864
First Premium of Mechanics' Institute in 1866
First Premium of Bay District Fair in 1866
First Premium in New Orleans, 1870.

M. PRICE
FOR HOME-MADE CUTLERY,
STORE: 615 KEARNY ST., bet. Pine and California.
FACTORY: 16 STEVENSON STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ Razors, Knives, Shears, etc., made to order and warranted. Particular attention paid to polishing and repairing. Orders from the interior promptly attended to. myl1

CANDIES! CANDIES
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Of all descriptions and of the best materials fresh manufactured every day by
CANTY & WAGNER
Wholesale and Retail
Confectioners
107 MONTGOMERY ST.,
Between Bush and Sutter.....SAN FRANCISCO.
The attention of the trade is called to our immense stock of Candies, which we offer at low prices, and warranted to keep in all climates. Prices low and terms liberal. Orders from the interior promptly and carefully attended to

CASH TEA STORE
CEO. T. HANLY & CO.
DEALERS IN TEAS
COFFEES and SPICES,
928 MARKET STREET,
Between Stockton and Powell.....SAN FRANCISCO.

DAY GOODS, ETC.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,
COMMISSION MERCHANTS OF.....
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
DRY GOODS,
116 and 118 Third Street,
Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO.
ONE PRICE ONLY.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF
DRY GOODS!
Complete in Every Department,
We are now prepared to supply our customers with
The Best and Cheapest Goods
In the City. Among which are—
Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Cretons,
Cashmeres,
Merinos,
Serges, Reps, Etc.
A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF
SHAWLS.
RIBBONS a specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.
☞ IRISH TATTING sold by the yard at a liberal discount.
Thankful to our friends and the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
706 MARKET STREET,
OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.

BACON & COMPANY
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS
SAN FRANCISCO

PRINTING
Paper Ruling and Book Binding.
Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply,
PERFORMED BY
Bacon & Company,
Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.

SULLIVAN, KELLY & CO.,
Northwest corner Pine and Front Sts.,
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK OF PAINTS, OILS, GLASS,
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC COAST
AT THE LOWEST MARKET RATE
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STREET
and 110 PINE STREET.

The Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener
3 MONTHS FREE.
Will be sent [illegible] for [illegible] postage at office [illegible] Address [illegible] paper until [illegible] what they are [illegible] it [illegible] before [illegible] Price [illegible] cents. The SMALL FRUIT CULTURIST, a work of 64 pages, that tells [illegible] page just how to grow fruits in abundance, [illegible] cents. Address A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N. Y.

INFORMATION WANTED.
INFORMATION WANTED PATRICK McMANUS, who left New York for San Francisco, Cal., about 22 or 23 years ago. Also, of his brother, and Mary McManus, who left Ireland in 1865, and was last heard of in San Francisco. Any information of them will be thankfully received by their brother, JOHN McMANUS, Rose Bank, New York City, 1865. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of JAMES MULCAHY, the Parish of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland. He was heard from in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1865. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother-in-law, MICHAEL SULLIVAN, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of MICHAEL HEALY, a native of Kildare, Ireland, who left Conway, N. Y., in April, 1874. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother, MICHAEL HEALY, Exeter, Monterey county, Cal. MARY HEALY, of the Bohemian Home, Oakland. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of DENNIS DUFFY, of the parish of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland. He was heard from in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1865. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother-in-law, JOHN SULLIVAN, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of THOMAS DUFFY, of the parish of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland. He was heard from in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1865. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother-in-law, JOHN SULLIVAN, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of JAMES BYRNE, a native of Ireland, who left Liverpool in 1865, and was last heard from in New York. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother, MICHAEL BYRNE, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of JAMES DUFFY, of the parish of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland. He was heard from in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1865. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother-in-law, JOHN SULLIVAN, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

INFORMATION WANTED of JOHN DUFFY, of the parish of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland. He was heard from in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1865. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by his brother-in-law, JOHN SULLIVAN, Box 1, Cincinnati, Ohio. 1st2

SITUATION WANTED—A YOUNG IRISH-MAN, lately arrived in this country, would like a situation in some wholesale store; is a thorough business man, and is not afraid of manual and English labor; would be useful, could take charge of a school, or of HIBERNICUS, this office. 2t

The Monitor.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JANUARY 24, 1874. NO. 16.

A. WALDTEUFEL,
207 MUSIC HALL,
FIRST STREET.....SAN JOSE
Importer, Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
CATHOLIC BOOKS
PICTURES AND ORNAMENTS,
Miscellaneous Books and Stationery.
Agent for
SWEENEY'S 50 NEW PIANOS;
CHICKERING & SON'S PIANOS;
MAYNE BROS. PIANOS;
BURDETT CELEBRT ORGANS;
MASON & HAMLIN'S ORGANS.
Always on hand a large assortment of the above named renowned Instruments.
☞ Liberal Discount to the Rev. Clergy and Institutions. Orders promptly executed in myl9-1y

THE FRANC-TIREURS.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XLIV.

A PROTEST.

Towards the latter end of October an attempt was made by the Communistic party of siege life in Paris by subjecting one or two of the theatres which had been closed. It was but a decided move of relief at the best, and was looked upon by many as a mere matter of policy, and as a means of diverting the attention of the people from the misery of the time to the gaudy trappings of the stage, the unreal life, and pretended their Polyxenes and Hippolytas in ordinary walking costume, for the purpose of bringing her home to the clothing of this part of the drama to the spirit, and what a difference there is in the performer who feels that he looks every inch a king, and who has to depend for majesty on the tailor and the wardrobe. Time is pantaloon—Hamlet in a tweed suit! As well send for a tailor for the Apollo Belvidere.

Two ladies were leaving the theatre Française one afternoon after the performance of a comedy of Molière. One was an actress herself, the other was a lady of rank, and they were in the habit of meeting at the house of the latter. They had been discussing the necessity of reviving the long neglected tragedy of Corneille, and the former had promised to perform it for the first time. They had arrived at the door of the carriage, and were about to enter it, when a man, who had been following them for some time, approached the lady of rank, and, touching his hat, said, in a voice which, though low, was distinctly audible to the ladies:

"Madame, I am a poor man, and have a wife and family to support. I am a carpenter by trade, but have been out of work for some time. I am willing to work for you, and will do so for a very small sum. Will you employ me?"

The lady looked at the speaker with a look of surprise, and then, turning to her friend, said, "Did you ever hear such impudence?" and stepped into the carriage.

"Most Holy Father—Summoned by an act of the usurping Government of Victor Emanuel to form a portion of the Roman Catholic Cardinals, we feel ourselves called upon, first of all, to testify to you our profound devotedness, and to express to you the sentiments of grief with which we are penetrated in view of the overthrow of your temporal throne. Your Holiness, in carrying us to Rome, has exhibited to us three times in succession the spectacle of the persecuted Pontiff, and in the midst of the storm which broke over your head you have not ceased to bless us

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The diocese of Natchez contributed $3,000 for the Society of the Propagation of the Faith during the last year.

The Cologne Gazette, in Prussia, was seized and confiscated for having published the Pope's Encyclical.

Twenty-five thousand dollars was the sum remitted to the Pope by the Catholics of the United States during the past year.

The Common Council of Hoboken, N. J., gave a Christmas present of $200 to the Sisters in charge of St. Mary's Hospital.

The Buffalo Ledger prefers "Catholicity" to "Catholicism," as the Catholic religion is not an "ism." So thought Rousseau twenty years ago.

The Bishop of Nashville, Tenn., has expressed deep gratitude to the clergy of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati for their aid to the suffering poor of Memphis.

There are seven Catholic schools at Fort Wayne, Ind.,—three for boys, three for girls and one for both sexes—at which 1,111 children attend daily.

The Rev. Charles M. Toomey of Scottsville, Ohio, died on the 16th of December, in the thirty-fourth year of his age and the fourth year of his ministry.

The ex-Empress Eugenie recently visited the French Catholic Hospital of London, and made donations to the Sisters in charge of it. Her Majesty intends wintering at Devonshire.

A place known as the "court place," at Vinculle, near Macon, Ga., is the location selected by the authorities of Macon to be donated to Bishop Gross as a site for the college.

Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto, Upper Canada, who is now in Rome, will bring with him on his return three Brothers of the Third Order of our Lady of Mount Carmel, for the purpose of establishing a house of their Order in Toronto.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul in Boston received over $14,000 during the last nine months of 1873, and paid out in the same period of time $10,000—making $110,000 collected and spent for the poor of that city.

Dr. Cahill, President of the American College at Rome, has presented to the Holy Father the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars in the name of the Catholics of the United States.

Sir Anthony Paget, the British Envoy in Rome, contrary to assurances given to the owners of the Irish College, has decided that the seizure of this institution is not a case for diplomatic intervention.

The Sisters of Mount St. Mary's, Leavenworth, Kansas, opened a hospital in October last, and are now building a suitable house at Deer Lodge City, Montana Territory, for that purpose, under the name of St. Joseph's Hospital.

Six Roman communities of religious were driven into the streets on the 1st of December, and on the 30th of the same month four Augustinian houses were suppressed. On the 4th the same pitiless injustice fell upon four convents of nuns.

The German Bishops propose sending to the Pope a memorial entreating him to order the continuation of the process of canonization of Blessed Alberteres Magnus, and also of the investigation as to his a light of being accorded the title of Doctor of the Church.

Before the Reformation there was an Abbot of Westminster Abbey, but in the reign of Queen Victoria Pius IX. created the Archiepiscopal See of Westminster, with Cardinal Wiseman at its head. Lord John Russell and Disraeli knashed their teeth, but could not help themselves.

On Christmas morning the long illness of Rev. Henry Ridder, of Cincinnati, terminated in death. He was twenty-seven years a priest of the archdiocese, and eleven years a patient invalid, incapable of discharging the duties of his ministry, and confined to his room during the whole of the past year.

On Sunday, 28th December, the Rev. Mark T. Devlin, a zealous young priest of the diocese of Pittsburg, left this world for a better life, in the 34th year of hisage. He was born in the vicinity of Pittsburg, ordained priest in February, 1866, and was pastor of the church of our Lady of Consolation at the time of his death.

Rev. Father Carron, of Cleveland, died at the hospital on the 21st December, after a long illness, caused by a cancer in the upper part of his face, which incapacitated him from clerical duties for the last four years. He was 71 years of age, of which he spent over twenty years in Cleveland.

The spire of St. Malachi's church, in Cleveland, O., is 245 feet high, and is surmounted by a cross which will be illuminated on certain occasions. It is the only one of the kind in the United States. The lighting of the cross is done by electricity, and it reminds one of an elevated pontifical that it can be seen across Lake Erie, in Canada.

Some time ago a young lady, Mlle Mirlac, accused the clergy and nuns of Carcassonni, France, of some vile immorality. She was brought before a Court and acquitted on a plea of insanity. Her father has since committed suicide, and so did a young man to whom she was engaged in marriage, and she herself has been sent to an insane asylum.

The literal papers of Rome are angry that the ecclesiastical property which is up for sale finds no purchasers, and that the authorities are at a loss now to find money to fulfill engagements made to monks and friars who occupied the convents. They hoped to pay the pensions by the sale of the property at low prices, but there are scarcely any purchasers to be found.

A magnificent shrine of gold and silver has been recently constructed at Milan to contain a portion of the minor relics of St. Ambrose, the great Doctor of the Church and patron of that city. It was exposed for the first time on his feast, December 9, in the fine basilica which bears his name.

Rev. Pierce Maher, pastor of St. Patrick's Church of Normantown, Penn., and for many years pastor of St. Patrick's Church, at Harrisburg, died at his residence in Norristown on the 29th of December. He was a native of the parish of Clonbaun, near Clonmell, Ireland, born on the 6 ii of April, 1812, and resided in this country since 1834.

The Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph reports a lecture of the Rev. Mr. Rhea, a Methodist clergyman in that city, from which we take the following: "For one, the reverend speaker thanked God for the Catholic Church. It had been a great power in the evangelization of the world; it had worked its wonders among the heathen, and now, in this country, with its total abstinence societies, it is the strongest element in the cause of temperance on the face of the globe."

The Randolph (Mass.) Register gives a long and interesting account of a nobility reception which took place there on Sunday, 14th December. In the course of it the editor pays a well-deserved compliment to the pastor, Rev. James E. O'Brien. It says: "During the short time he has been in Randolph he has done a great deal of good and become a general favorite with the people. He is possessed of qualities as a minister of the gospel that are seldom met with in one so young. As a preacher he excels in comprehensiveness of argument, fervor of faith and earnestness. May he long remain among the people of Randolph."

The Paris Univers announces that Bishop Dubois of Galveston, Texas, is about to leave France, where he has been for some time past, and to return to his diocese accompanied by twenty-two ecclesiastics and eighteen nuns, who have volunteered to leave their country for the American mission.

The site of the English Catholic University will be kensington, London, not far from the Brompton Oratory, and in the midst of the richest and most aristocratic portion of the city. It was originated and for many years urged by Dr. John H. Newman, whose withdrawal from the Church of England has been condemned by the London Times in more grievous than ten thousand evil montpiece persons.

The Very Rev. Dr. Woodlock continues as Rector of the Dublin Catholic University. Rev. Dr. Maloy, the great theologian and geologist of the Royal College of Maynooth, is Vice-Rector. The Rev. J. Adbie Pollin of Arabella, a graduate of the Paris University, is Professor of French and German, and Dr. Casey, late of Trinity College, is Professor of Higher Mathematics.

At a late Home Rule meeting, called and addressed by Mr. Blennerhassett, M. P., in the county Kerry, Ireland, the Rev. Joseph Fitzmaurice, Protestant minister, was chairman, and by the side were Rev. M. O'Sullivan, P. P., and Rev. John O'Connor, C.C., all of the parish of Ballydonoghoe. A unanimous vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Blennerhassett as a true patriot.

The Nun of Kenmare has postponed the holding of her lottery for three months, in consequence of the famine in Ireland. In the United States, and she warns the public again, giving donations for her convent to the former agent, James Rogers, whom she dismissed from her service more than a year ago.

The Boston Herald says: "A paragraph published on the 10th December charged Rev. Father Feeling, of St. Mary's church, Newburyport, Mass., with having used his position to influence the members of his parish to vote for certain candidates. We now have the fullest evidence that Father Feeling never interfered one way or any instructions regarding any election, much less the election in question."

Stanley, the Dean of Westminster, his given the celebrated linguist, Max Muller the privilege of lecturing on Ecclesiastical Architecture in Westminster Hall, and he paid him by lauding the smother and mistress of all Churches." He said that she had always been the mistress and leader of art, and that the noble edifice in which they were assembled was due to her genius. The English papers are all full of wrath about it.

It was Honora Nagle, familiarly known as Nanno Nagle, who founded the Presentation Convent in Cork in 1772. There are now over fifty convents of the name of that order in Ireland, and besides two in the only they are found in other cities of the United States. They are not "sisters," but secluded nuns, and are, properly, the only nuns on this continent. Miss Nagle was the daughter of Garret Nagle, of Ballyduffin, on the romantic Blackwater, near Mallow, county Cork.

One of the passengers on board the unfortunate ship Ville du Havre, rescued by the Loch Earn, was a Mr. Brown, of Toronto. "Every one was praying out loud, men and women. We put our trust in God and He saved some of us and took others to Himself. A Catholic by birth, he was consoled and comforted us by his courage. I heard Mass in Hurley, a young girl say to her mother, 'It will only be a short time, and then, please God, we shall live forever in eternity.' She had a satchel full of jewels, and flung them into the sea with her mother's consent."

The Catholics of Hamilton, Ohio, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of St. Stephen's church on the 20th ult. Two hundred men of Hamilton, being Society, received Holy Communion, while their wives, sisters and daughters met at the sacred table on the day before. In the afternoon there was a grand procession through the city, and in the evening a concert by the choir of the church, under the patronage of the ladies of the congregation. Happy people!

Some two years ago the Boston Pilot said that Professor Agassiz had visited the hospitals of Boston, and found that a majority of the inmates were Catholics. Upon their first fall occurred in public schools, where his daughter was employed. He announced this as a Romish lie, and published a letter from the Professor to a Protestant minister of Cleveland, in which it was asserted that he never made such a statement. The Hartford Courant has investigated the case, and proves it from the Boston Herald and by a letter from P. H. Bliss, the scientific assistant of the Professor.

The school question, so warmly discussed in the British Province of New Brunswick, appears to be dwindling into a mere echo. The Bishop of St. John's has made a proposition to the Executive Council, and they consented that the Christian Brothers and the Sisters of Charity may teach upon obtaining certificates of qualification, provided they use only the books prescribed by the Board, and observe the Common School law in all other respects. They made no objection to the affiliation of Catholic schools with the common schools, and the word only in regard to books seems now to be the only impediment.

The Church of Genoa, France, is said to be the City of Mary par excellence. It is the chief boast to call itself so. Dominating the whole city and the surrounding hills, upon a lofty hill, stands the world-famous shrine of Notre Dame de Fourvieres. It is the most celebrated of French sanctuaries, and after Lourdes and Salette, the most renowned for miracles. People flock hither from all parts of the world, and the annual number of pilgrims exceeds 500,000.

Mgr. Tarnoia, a prelate of the Apostolic household, returned to Rome from France, and brought with him a large sums of money as offerings to the Holy Father. Among other gifts was one from the nuns of St. Joseph's Convent, Bordeaux, consisting of a bouquet of roses, the leaves of which were formed of gold pieces sewed together with very fine wire, and another from the nuns of St. Ursula, Port Beauvoisin, consisting of a golden heart filled with napoleons.

To an eminent layman (presumably the Marquis of Bute) who spoke doubtingly to the Holy Father about the the future of the persecuted religious in Rome, his Holiness said, "Most of them are rich. How can you have such fears! They despoil us, it is true, even of the last crumb of bread. We ought to be alarmed, but we are joyful in our own words, tiire sethis day one thirty breed, and we are assured of the future, both of our bodies and our souls."

Our readers will bear in mind on reading the nomination of Father Tarquini, S. J., to the Sacred College of Cardinals, as we announced in THE MONITOR last week, that Jesuits are very seldom raised to that dignity, and cannot accept the red hat under the rules of their order without an express command from the Pope.

Another Consistory is to take place at Easter, when a new series of Cardinals will be created and the Sacred College completed.

The Armenian Patriarch of Constantinople recently arrived in Rome, and brought with him a considerable sum of money, which he deposited in the hands of the Cardinal of his diocese at the feet of the Supreme Pontiff.

The Castilar Government in Spain has issued an order that the monks and nuns of Spanish nationality who have been turned out of their monasteries and convents in Rome, shall be received and entertained at the expense of his Government.

Mgr. Eberhard, Bishop of Treves, has been condemned to pay three thousand thalers fine, and Mgr. Melchers, two thousand six hundred thalers, for disobeying the edicts of the government of Bismarck in ecclesiastical matters.

The Irish Catholic College, Dublin, have appointed Mr. Brady, a Catholic of the highest distinction, to a professorship of classical literature, as a suitable tribute to his attainments and to the aid he has given in advancing the reputation of the University.

The Ottawa Gazette, of Rome, says: of a beyond belief that the number of fallures among commercial men has increased within the past few years in this city. In 1870 there were only three sequestrated houses closed for insolvency; in 1871, four-teen; in 1872 nineteen, and in 1873 twenty-nine. This is fearful.

So great is the agitation among the Catholics of Pomerania, Silesia, the Rhenish provinces and Westphalia, that a Berlin paper says the leaders of the Ultramontanes in the United States, and also warns the public against, giving donations for her convent to the former agent, James Rogers, whom she dismissed from her service more than a year ago.

The Boston Herald says: "A paragraph published on the 10th December charged Rev. Father Feeling, of St. Mary's church, Newburyport, Mass., with having used his position to influence the members of his parish to vote for certain candidates. We now have the fullest evidence that Father Feeling never interfered one way or any instructions regarding any election, much less the election in question."

Stanley, the Dean of Westminster, his given the celebrated linguist, Max Muller the privilege of lecturing on Ecclesiastical Architecture in Westminster Hall, and he paid him by lauding the smother and mistress of all Churches." He said that she had always been the mistress and leader of art, and that the noble edifice in which they were assembled was due to her genius. The English papers are all full of wrath about it.

It was Honora Nagle, familiarly known as Nanno Nagle, who founded the Presentation Convent in Cork in 1772. There are now over fifty convents of the name of that order in Ireland, and besides two in the only they are found in other cities of the United States. They are not "sisters," but secluded nuns, and are, properly, the only nuns on this continent. Miss Nagle was the daughter of Garret Nagle, of Ballyduffin, on the romantic Blackwater, near Mallow, county Cork.

One of the passengers on board the unfortunate ship Ville du Havre, rescued by the Loch Earn, was a Mr. Brown, of Toronto. "Every one was praying out loud, men and women. We put our trust in God and He saved some of us and took others to Himself. A Catholic by birth, he was consoled and comforted us by his courage. I heard Mass in Hurley, a young girl say to her mother, 'It will only be a short time, and then, please God, we shall live forever in eternity.' She had a satchel full of jewels, and flung them into the sea with her mother's consent."

The Catholics of Hamilton, Ohio, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of St. Stephen's church on the 20th ult. Two hundred men of Hamilton, being Society, received Holy Communion, while their wives, sisters and daughters met at the sacred table on the day before. In the afternoon there was a grand procession through the city, and in the evening a concert by the choir of the church, under the patronage of the ladies of the congregation. Happy people!

Some two years ago the Boston Pilot said that Professor Agassiz had visited the hospitals of Boston, and found that a majority of the inmates were Catholics by their first fall occurred in public schools, where his daughter was employed. He announced this as a Romish lie, and published a letter from the Professor to a Protestant minister of Cleveland, in which it was asserted that he never made such a statement. The Hartford Courant has investigated the case, and proves it from the Boston Herald and by a letter from P. H. Bliss, the scientific assistant of the Professor.

The school question, so warmly discussed in the British Province of New Brunswick, appears to be dwindling into a mere echo. The Bishop of St. John's has made a proposition to the Executive Council, and they consented that the Christian Brothers and the Sisters of Charity may teach upon obtaining certificates of qualification, provided they use only the books prescribed by the Board, and observe the Common School law in all other respects. They made no objection to the affiliation of Catholic schools with the common schools, and the word only in regard to books seems now to be the only impediment.

The Church of Genoa, France, is said to be the City of Mary par excellence. It is the chief boast to call itself so. Dominating the whole city and the surrounding hills, upon a lofty hill, stands the world-famous shrine of Notre Dame de Fourvieres. It is the most celebrated of French sanctuaries, and after Lourdes and Salette, the most renowned for miracles. People flock hither from all parts of the world, and the annual number of pilgrims exceeds 500,000.

Mgr. Tarnoia, a prelate of the Apostolic household, returned to Rome from France, and brought with him a large sums of money as offerings to the Holy Father. Among other gifts was one from the nuns of St. Joseph's Convent, Bordeaux, consisting of a bouquet of roses, the leaves of which were formed of gold pieces sewed together with very fine wire, and another from the nuns of St. Ursula, Port Beauvoisin, consisting of a golden heart filled with napoleons.

To an eminent layman (presumably the Marquis of Bute) who spoke doubtingly to the Holy Father about the the future of the persecuted religious in Rome, his Holiness said, "Most of them are rich. How can you have such fears! They despoil us, it is true, even of the last crumb of bread. We ought to be alarmed, but we are joyful in our own words, tiire sethis day one thirty breed, and we are assured of the future, both of our bodies and our souls."

Our readers will bear in mind on reading the nomination of Father Tarquini, S. J., to the Sacred College of Cardinals, as we announced in THE MONITOR last week, that Jesuits are very seldom raised to that dignity, and cannot accept the red hat under the rules of their order without an express command from the Pope.

Another Consistory is to take place at Easter, when a new series of Cardinals will be created and the Sacred College completed.

The Armenian Patriarch of Constantinople recently arrived in Rome, and brought with him a considerable sum of money, which he deposited in the hands of the Cardinal of his diocese at the feet of the Supreme Pontiff.

The Castilar Government in Spain has issued an order that the monks and nuns of Spanish nationality who have been turned out of their monasteries and convents in Rome, shall be received and entertained at the expense of his Government.

Mgr. Eberhard, Bishop of Treves, has been condemned to pay three thousand thalers fine, and Mgr. Melchers, two thousand six hundred thalers, for disobeying the edicts of the government of Bismarck in ecclesiastical matters.

The Irish Catholic College, Dublin, have appointed Mr. Brady, a Catholic of the highest distinction, to a professorship of classical literature, as a suitable tribute to his attainments and to the aid he has given in advancing the reputation of the University.

The Ottawa Gazette, of Rome, says: of a beyond belief that the number of failures among commercial men has increased within the past few years in this city. In 1870 there were only three sequestrated houses closed for insolvency; in 1871, four-teen; in 1872 nineteen, and in 1873 twenty-nine. This is fearful.

So great is the agitation among the Catholics of Pomerania, Silesia, the Rhenish provinces and Westphalia, that a Berlin paper says the leaders of the Ultramontanes in the United States, and also warns the public against, giving donations for her convent to the former agent, James Rogers, whom she dismissed from her service more than a year ago.

The Boston Herald says: "A paragraph published on the 10th December charged Rev. Father Feeling, of St. Mary's church, Newburyport, Mass., with having used his position to influence the members of his parish to vote for certain candidates. We now have the fullest evidence that Father Feeling never interfered one way or any instructions regarding any election, much less the election in question."

Stanley, the Dean of Westminster, his given the celebrated linguist, Max Muller the privilege of lecturing on Ecclesiastical Architecture in Westminster Hall, and he paid him by lauding the smother and mistress of all Churches." He said that she had always been the mistress and leader of art, and that the noble edifice in which they were assembled was due to her genius. The English papers are all full of wrath about it.

It was Honora Nagle, familiarly known as Nanno Nagle, who founded the Presentation Convent in Cork in 1772. There are now over fifty convents of the name of that order in Ireland, and besides two in the only they are found in other cities of the United States. They are not "sisters," but secluded nuns, and are, properly, the only nuns on this continent. Miss Nagle was the daughter of Garret Nagle, of Ballyduffin, on the romantic Blackwater, near Mallow, county Cork.

One of the passengers on board the unfortunate ship Ville du Havre, rescued by the Loch Earn, was a Mr. Brown, of Toronto. "Every one was praying out loud, men and women. We put our trust in God and He saved some of us and took others to Himself. A Catholic by birth, he was consoled and comforted us by his courage. I heard Mass in Hurley, a young girl say to her mother, 'It will only be a short time, and then, please God, we shall live forever in eternity.' She had a satchel full of jewels, and flung them into the sea with her mother's consent."

The Catholics of Hamilton, Ohio, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of St. Stephen's church on the 20th ult. Two hundred men of Hamilton, being Society, received Holy Communion, while their wives, sisters and daughters met at the sacred table on the day before. In the afternoon there was a grand procession through the city, and in the evening a concert by the choir of the church, under the patronage of the ladies of the congregation. Happy people!

Some two years ago the Boston Pilot said that Professor Agassiz had visited the hospitals of Boston, and found that a majority of the inmates were Catholics by their first fall occurred in public schools, where his daughter was employed. He announced this as a Romish lie, and published a letter from the Professor to a Protestant minister of Cleveland, in which it was asserted that he never made such a statement. The Hartford Courant has investigated the case, and proves it from the Boston Herald and by a letter from P. H. Bliss, the scientific assistant of the Professor.

The school question, so warmly discussed in the British Province of New Brunswick, appears to be dwindling into a mere echo. The Bishop of St. John's has made a proposition to the Executive Council, and they consented that the Christian Brothers and the Sisters of Charity may teach upon obtaining certificates of qualification, provided they use only the books prescribed by the Board, and observe the Common School law in all other respects. They made no objection to the affiliation of Catholic schools with the common schools, and the word only in regard to books seems now to be the only impediment.

The Church of Genoa, France, is said to be the City of Mary par excellence. It is the chief boast to call itself so. Dominating the whole city and the surrounding hills, upon a lofty hill, stands the world-famous shrine of Notre Dame de Fourvieres. It is the most celebrated of French sanctuaries, and after Lourdes and Salette, the most renowned for miracles. People flock hither from all parts of the world, and the annual number of pilgrims exceeds 500,000.

Mgr. Tarnoia, a prelate of the Apostolic household, returned to Rome from France, and brought with him a large sums of money as offerings to the Holy Father. Among other gifts was one from the nuns of St. Joseph's Convent, Bordeaux, consisting of a bouquet of roses, the leaves of which were formed of gold pieces sewed together with very fine wire, and another from the nuns of St. Ursula, Port Beauvoisin, consisting of a golden heart filled with napoleons.

To an eminent layman (presumably the Marquis of Bute) who spoke doubtingly to the Holy Father about the the future of the persecuted religious in Rome, his Holiness said, "Most of them are rich. How can you have such fears! They despoil us, it is true, even of the last crumb of bread. We ought to be alarmed, but we are joyful in our own words, tiire sethis day one thirty breed, and we are assured of the future, both of our bodies and our souls."

Our readers will bear in mind on reading the nomination of Father Tarquini, S. J., to the Sacred College of Cardinals, as we announced in THE MONITOR last week, that Jesuits are very seldom raised to that dig-

Curious Wills.

It is a very agreeable thing to be a legatee; sometimes, however, a legacy comes clogged with a condition which takes out a good deal of the pleasure accompanying its receipt. It may not be an intolerable condition having to take the name and arms of an old family and give up some distinguished name for an historical or an aristocratic one in order to inherit a fine estate, but it is often a burden to a widow to know that if she should give way to a natural wish and marry again, she will lose all or the greater part of the money left to her by husband. Or, such a condition large estates are constantly being willed, and many of the bequests to widows are only so long as they remain unmarried. Occasionally the condition on which legacies can be received is that the legatee shall not become or be married to a Roman Catholic. The Hon. Mrs. Arcamuths Monck Bailey, whose will was proved in April, 1865, placed this further restraints on her legatees.

Some—that if any or either of my said children, either in the lifetime or at any time after my decease, shall become or be married to a Roman Catholic, or shall profess the religion of the Church of Rome, or shall become a member of any monastic or conventual establishment, or shall enter into any monastic or conventual life, or shall become a member of any religious community, or shall be professed in any nunnery, or shall become a novice or take the vows of any religious community thing of the quick ejection of her nature, "I place myself in your hands. In the present hour my past life shocks me with its levity, and I would gladly dooomething for the aid of my fellow-creatures."

"Ladies," said the Superior, "it is not a time for me to discuss, but your action in this, as in all other things, ought to be directed to the glory of God. I believe, however, your occupation here will teach you more than my poor words. Come, I will place you under the instruction of a lay-woman; for yourself, she has had much experience, but whose good-will and intelligence have made her one of our most valued assistants."

They rose to proceed to the wards.

"Say," said the nun, "if I must observe, the girl is not of your rank. She is, in fact, but a peasant. Remember, however, that you must accept her directions without considering that you madame, are a countess, and you, mademoiselle, I have no doubt, equally illustrious."

"Far more so—" the countess was proceeding to say when the actress interrupted her friend.

"Those in Superieure, havano fear that we shall forget ourselves as anything but ignorant pupils"—arising from a competent instructress."

The Superior proceeded "Join the apartment where you will be of help." She added, had once formed the refectory of the convent, but now serves as a dining hall for fifty and sixty beds. Two nuns in the frame of their order were moving about, busied in attending to the patients. There were beside some other women habited in black, and engaged in similar duties.

"Those," whispered the nun, "are ladies of the world like yourselves, who have come into this place to lend Christian charity."

They passed on to near the end of the room.

"Annette Beaune," called the nun.

"I am here, Madame la Superieure," replied a soft voice from the head of one of the palliets.

"Annette Mther, child. Them ladies are anxious to help in the wards, but they have not yet been accustomed to the duty. All them is new! what they have to know."

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 31, January
25—Sunday—Third Sunday after Epiphany. Conversion of St. Paul.
26—Monday—St. Polycarp, Bishop and Martyr.
27—Tuesday—St. John Chrysostom, Bishop, Confessor and Doctor.
28—Wednesday—St. Raymond of Pennafort, Confessor. St. Agnes, virgin.
29—Thursday—St. Francis of Sales, Bishop and Confessor.
30—Friday—St. Martina, Virgin and Martyr.
31—Saturday—St. Peter Nolasco, Confessor.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....JANUARY 24, 1874.

A Welcome New Year's Gift.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31, 1873.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONITOR — Dear Sir:—Having with pleasure noticed the free and able manner in which THE MONITOR has been conducted for the interests of Catholicity during the past few years, I request you will increase my subscription from one to three copies for the next year. Yours truly in Christ,

J. D. A. ELMANY, A. S. P.

A WORD TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

As we are just commencing a New Year it would be well if those of our subscribers who are in arrears would settle up their accounts and start fair on the books for 1874. While very many of our friends are exceedingly punctual and ready to pay promptly, there are still many others who are negligent and careless in this most important matter. We are satisfied that if they had any idea of the trouble and expense attending the bringing out of a paper like THE MONITOR, there would soon be a more satisfactory system of dealing with us. However, we do not say this by way of complaint, but rather as a gentle hint which those to whom it applies ought take to good part. We certainly have great reason to to be pleased with the year which has passed, and we expect much from the year which is progressing. In all parts of the State and outside it the circulation of THE MONITOR has greatly increased, and the paper is constantly rising in the estimation of all who take it. We shall endeavor to merit all the encouragement and support we receive.

THE INTERNATIONAL IN AMERICA.

When we read of the doings of the so-called International in France, Spain, Italy or Germany, we are apt to congratulate ourselves upon the seeming impossibility of a similar association ever obtaining any strength in this country. We have taken it for granted that the condition of society here is such that there is no cause for fearing that violence will ever be resorted to as a means of altering it for the benefit of separate companion"—crime. Wealth, too, is concentrating rapidly, if not in the hands of individuals, in the possession of corporations, and that is actually worse. It has been well said that corporations have no souls, and the worst tyranny of which an individual can be capable towards his fellow-men is insignificant beside the power which a monopoly can be the author. One man can never get totally rid of the sense of his moral responsibility to God, and his conscience will impose some restriction upon his actions; but a body of men acting for a common object are rarely troubled with such scruples. Give them the power and they will use it remorselessly.

In New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and other great Eastern cities, the struggle of life is nearly as hard and as hopeless as it is in the old capitals of Europe. Nobody is fast settling down into strata as distinctly marked as the geological formations of the earth. The lower classes are beginning to lose heart, and already they cast anxious eyes at the possessions of their more fortunate neighbors. As a natural consequence, Communism is raising its head. The recent parades in New York show that it believes itself strong enough to make an appearance in public. Many may be inclined to smile at the idea of any danger emanating from such a display. But movements like that of the International never give ground: they advance and gain strength as long as the reason for their existence remains. There are many things in America, too, favorable to the spread of Communism. Chief among them would we place the loose moral tone prevailing in the press. It is rarely you now find a paper which has any higher moral standard than that of expediency, or with any nobler idea of the destiny of man than that involved in the pursuit of mate rial advancement. Religion is generally scoffed at as something unworthy of the serious attention of enlightened men, and its ministers are made the objects of unceasing contumely and defamation. No doubt the object sought to be attained by this line of conduct is the total extinction of regard for revealed truth in the minds of the people, and substitution of a philosophy and code of morals which shall be purely materialistic. Moreover, our leading newspapers preach the most unmitigated Communism every day in the year. This may be all very well, and it sounds very liberal and philanthropic, as long as there is no risk of the theories ventilated being reduced to practice; but the time is coming when man will take them up eagerly and found an anti-social agitation upon them.

All the misnamed reforms in the educational system which are at present being so strenuously advocated by the secular press, have Communistic principles at the bottom of them. Their object is to throw upon the Government rights and duties which belong to the heads of families. Their effect parental responsibility, and so make the State supreme in the household. They cannot but lower the dignity and destroy the self respect of fathers and mothers. The conclusion that there is a day of trouble before the United States is absolutely inevitable. Nothing can prevent its coming but a return to the principles of Christian morality, both in public and private life. Universal recognition of the great fact that men were born for something better and nobler than the acquisition of money, cannot fail to have immense remedial effect.

The creed which declares that wealth gained by defrauding the laborer of his hire, by overtaxing his energies with constant toil, or by taking advantage of his necessities, is infamous and a curse will surely prevent employers from sucking the blood and brains of their workingmen into dimes and dollars. The faith which teaches that there is another and better world, where virtue receives an eternal reward, will certainly make the poor endure their sufferings with hope and cheerfulness. In short, religion, real practical, active religion, is the only power that is able to prevent society in peace and order, or make man happy even in this world; but the guides of American opinion do their utmost to decry and debase it. So much the worse for the people that listen to them.

CENTERS OF CORRUPTION.

We are very glad to see that the daily papers, of whose great power and influence for good or for evil no one can be ignorant, are inaugurating a crusade against the dance-cellars and melodeons which disgrace even our principal thoroughfares. In directing the attention of the police authorities to these places, pointing out their demoralising effects, and calling for their suppression, the newspapers are doing incomparably more good, more real, practical service to the city, than if they were fighting over their respective circulations, or discussing party politics, for the space of twelve calendar months. It is positively surprising that these pestiferous centers of crime and immorality should have been allowed to exist so long when the law had provided means for their extinction. The offenses recorded in them are conspicuous with its sense, all tend to make the battle of life as easy one for those willing to work. The vast majority of our wealthy men were either once poor themselves or else were the offspring of poor persons, and every one believes himself as well fitted to prosper as they were. Of course as long as the happy state of things continues, Communism, the curse of the International, can never excite any more unpleasant feeling than contempt. But there are many evidences that the happy state will not be of long duration. The effect of our high-pressure civilization is to drive people into cities, to diminish the number of those who produce the necessaries of life and to increase the number of those who create its luxuries. And with great cities invariably comes great misery, with its inworse and more pernicious. In the former men and women already stained with crime congregate; in the latter, young people, who might be made respectable citizens, are indoctrinated into the ways of vice and immorality. They are trained, so to speak, for the jail or the scaffold by the teachings they receive in these haunts. There never was a more shocking perversion of terms than to call the melodeons "places of amusement," and there was never a more intolerable stretch of authority than to license them as such. The revelations made by the reporters who recently made a tour of the "dives" and subterranean concert halls—scenes of which every number we fear, daily adds to the building trade, inasmuch as it keeps a lumber yard; and on his bros shoulders his colleagues thought it th most natural thing in the world to be selectlated to debase the mind and destroy all sense of modesty. The buffoonerie carried on do not even stop short at indecency, but they not unfrequently are pushed to the very extreme of profanity and blasphemy.

Such are the places into which hundreds of young men, who have just reached the age at which they can be called upon to vote towards either good or evil, make their way every evening. It surely is no wonder that San Francisco should be troubled with "roughnisms." It would be more wonderful if it were not. The people and the legislature and jurors should have to express astonishment at the number of offenses which are committed by lads from fifteen to twenty years of age, or further, saying his cost when finished, did not outlay his brains to leave no requirement unmet. However that may be, they satisfied Mr. Mersitt, the owner, and Mr. Hoffbauer, who plaudied the Doctor's dictum. An architect's superintendence, of course, was not be had for the $800 so ingeniously expended, and the Doctor made a further saving by the State by taking that job on himself. As he also proposed to supply the lime for the building, the ex-Mayor thus was about to set up a pulpit of his own with position from which, if his sense of decency was not strong enough to exclude him, his colleagues should have ousted him.

If public work is to be let out by put contract, as the Regents declared it to necessary in their case, then any qualified citizen who can take the contract on the most favorable terms to the State is entitled to it. It is absurd to say that any of lumber dealer could compete with Mersitt, when the latter was the super judge of the quantity and quality required and accordingly the Doctor did furnish necessary stuff, his colleagues murmured their admiration at his generous sacrifice time to the job. As the accounts have been laid before the public we are not of the prices paid to the self-sacrificing gentleman for his lumber; but it is certain that he furnished it, and equally certain that the building is now what the public reformed it would be. Plans and a attendent having been thus secured Regents next advertised for bids for the completion of the proposed college, and after an awkward delay in opening those bids, which remained over night in Dr. Mersitt's possession, a couple of friends of his were found to be the lowest estimators by about one hundred and fifty dollars. The work was awarded to them, and was not done as required by the specifications. Painting, plastering, stairs, ironwork and almost everything about the building was openly done otherwise than the men who had bid on the work were assured would be required of them. And still, by the help of an extra bill, certified by the gentleman who furnished their materials, the contractors received several thousand dollars above their bid, and a vote of thanks to boot, from the Regents.

The question arises, why were outsiders required to submit estimates in the whole? Dr. Mersitt's friends undertook to perform, but did not, if such work was not needed; or why was it omitted if it was needed? When the ex-Mayor undertook to procure plans for the public money, it was his duty to see that they fulfilled the requirements of the proposed building; and it was equally contrary to his official duty and prejudicial to the interests of the State, to the neglect of his duty personally, we fail to see the difference between his acts and a breach of trust. If a satisfactory explanation of the whole matter is not speedily stated, then the sooner Mr. Mersitt's connection with the University ceases the better. Such peculiar lessons of business capacity will be well enough in their proper place, but they are not the kind of teaching that the University students, even when ordered by votes of thanks from the other Regents.

The Washington Monument.

The New York "Herald" says that Congress should either withdraw all aid from the Washington Monument or appropriate enough money to complete it decently. We think it had better be torn down, and the money be given to the poor. If it is to remain as a mere stump, a ghastly place, no sane person would contribute a cent for its completion. The sum of $1 will never be put in and about the hill. To present size is an eyesore, and a disgrace to the country. It has been a job in its location, as there has been every effort to make it from the start. It is a job in its incompleteness. A quarter of a century of that unsightly rubbish, that unmeaning shaft of marble, that has stood in the sight of the White House like a dead monument in presence of the Pyramids. A thing unnecessary! unappropriate! a target for the jeers of the folly of the Government, of the avarice of those who have fattened on its contracts, and a reproach to the nation merely for the use of the hucksters pretending to be its friends. Let it be torn down, and the stones be used for a fence for a lot to be purchased around the Executive Mansion, ought no longer to be allowed to remain a stain upon the fair face of the Capital City. It is a monument of the Monument Movement if you will, but was down that it might not be a monument of shame, and not of glory. Let it be torn down, as a cattle pen, or a potatoe field, anything rather than the abomination it has been this quarter of a century.—Ed.

The Washington Monument, from beginning to end, was in the hands of Freemasons, and they alone are responsible for the "job," if any there were, in its "location" or "accomplishment." R. B. Mitchell, the presiding genius, on now tell no tales. Subscriptions from individuals, towns, cities, States, and from the nation at large, were literally contributed to it. Foreign countries, provinces, states, kingdoms and principalities sent in their rare block of Italian marble. Every nation took part in its place, was taken from it in the dead of night by the "dark lantern" Crescents of 1855, and destroyed. Then it was that a blight came upon building, work and laborers. Perhaps the union of plans to a competent architect, making whatever reductions were necessary to bring the cost within the limits of their funds. With one hundred and fifty dollars it was an easy task to determine exactly the requirements of another college and to em body those requirements in a contract from which no deviation could be tolerated. Such, however, was not the course of the wise men of our California Athens in their administration of the public funds. One of their number was Dr. Mersitt, hence in the building trade, inasmuch as he keeps a lumber yard; and on his bros shoulders his colleagues thought it th most natural thing in the world to be selectlated to debase the mind and destroy all sense of modesty. The buffoonerie carried on do not even stop short at indecency, but they not unfrequently are pushed to the very extreme of profanity and blasphemy.

Father Dugan.

We have just received a letter from Father Dugan, Mr. Hemphill's famous "convert in the Mint case." It contains nothing calling for publication beyond notice of the fact that it shows that has faithfully kept the promise made to us, and proves the sincerity of his declaration of sorrow for the scandals caused by him. He writes from a monastery in the East, where, he says, he is most comfortably situated, and in a way of doing good service to the Church which infatuated bigots thought he intended to repudiate. Strange to observe, Father Dugan does not send kind remembrances to Mr. Hemphill, or to Mr. G. B. Mackrell, or to Colonel Ferguson, or to any of the Presbyterian luminaries who expected to be edified and instructed by his "lectures." This may be an accidental omission, but then it is pretty certain that these gentlemen will not forget him for some time to come, and do not require any message to keep him green in their memory.

A Merited Token of Esteem.

The Catholics of Suisun recently presented their worthy pastor, Rev. Father McNabor, with a most substantial and expressive token of their respect and affection in the shape of a well-filled purse. The unwilling efforts of that reverend minister of God to pay off the debt upon the church—in which and the Convent he made a further, saving by the State by taking that job on himself—proved a task to which not even the combined energies of twenty-five hundred dollars in less than twelve months—were deemed worthy of such a recognition. The faithful Catholics of Suisun are proud of their little church, which they justly regard as one of the handsomest in the interior of the State; and their satisfaction is much enhanced by the reflection that, thanks to Father McNabor, there is not now a dime of debt upon it.

LECTURE IN AID OF THE SACRED HEART PRESENTATION CONVENT.—The lecture by Father Bouchard for the liquidation of the heavy debt on the free schools of the Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, corner of Taylor and Ellis streets, which had to be postponed last November owing to unavoidable circumstances, will take place in St. Ignatius Church, Market street, on the evening of Tuesday, February 3d. The subject, "The Catholic Church and the Conversion of Nations," in the hands of Father Bouchard is certain to be treated in a masterly manner, and cannot fail to be rendered interesting.

Both the Siamese twins died at Mount Airey, Surrey county, North Carolina, last Saturday.

Father Neri's Lecture.

The Call gives the following outline of Father Neri's lecture on Thursday, 15th inst. The experiments with which it was intended to illustrate the lecture had to be postponed on account of the dampness of the weather:

Professor Neri commenced by saying that the whole of this visible creation which surrounds us is full of wonders. The more we study it the more we marvel and the more we delight in it, and rejoice in the possession of such knowledge. If rightly studied, nature elevates and ennobles our minds, and the investigation of its phenomena and laws opens to us new mines of refined pleasure. The worlds of beauty, new means of advancement, comfort and civilization, and naturally carries the mind of the sincere and docile client of science from the contemplation of the wonderful creatures to the knowledge of and admiration of a far more sublime and noble being, the Supreme Author and final end of the whole visible and invisible universe. A taste, a desire, an esteem for scientific culture is surely surviving among us; it is taking deep root already, and promises a plentiful harvest of most precious fruits.

Referring to electrical phenomena, he said that studies since the last centuary have given to us two of the most important sciences, to many most useful arts and applications, and to the most interesting and surprising results. The mariner's compass, the lightning rod, the art of telegraphing—American, Cornish, as well as Irish, vied with each other in clearing away the fallen mass, and in opening a way to the light which would shed over our dear friends. A hole was made, an entrance effected, and a groan was heard from the cavern two hundred feet below. Life was not extinct; at least some one was alive—a groan was heard; but who will venture down two hundred feet deeper into the bowels of the earth?

Three Irish boys were buried down there, and one was still alive—for a groan was heard. Where we were standing was yet in a shapeless mass of ruins from the explosion; and here were hundreds of tons of timbering and fallen débris swaying to and fro, ready at a moment's notice to fall in a precipitous crash on the poor victims unfortunate enough to have survived their fall. Quoting fantastical explanations, electrified bodies seem to act as if endowed with some kind of instinct, many of which excite them. Likes repel, and unlikes attract. Electricity is a most powerful agent of matter, and the action of the two antagonistic forces, attraction and repulsion, that rule the whole of creation, is wonderful. Electricity resides on the surface of bodies; and even at the sacrifice of their own, it freely transmitted by conductors. Friction is not the only means of electrifying bodies, but it is the most easy and handy. Every body will act upon substances, and induce in them electrical manifestations of the most marked character. This property is called induction, and was discovered about 1730 by Stephen Gray, and by him put to practice of industries, in explanation, and the most remarkable consequences of which from it, were not discovered until 1750, by our immortal Franklin, to whom electrical science is indebted for so much, a mangled and almost lifeless form; he was not dead; he was alive. He was then mournfully by the Burgomaster of Magdburg, and invented the air-pump. Then the glass globes were introduced, and down I went again to the 500 feet level. Half an hour more, and up to us was brought the groaning object. Poor Con Ryan, one of my best friends. What a mournful passage of death; the rattling sound seemed the expressive of death; the heavy and the yawning timbers threw the pall of death all around. The dead was hoisted to the top and taken care of by his friends. Half hour after I was in the shed, and many an Irish heart was rent. Poor Con Ryan! Edward Garragan could not be found; it was now certain that he was dead and buried in the fallen mass. My three brave Irish boys were down 200 feet beneath us searching for the body which could not be found. Their condition was becoming every minute more precarious from the loosening timbers, and every now and then doing good service to the Church which infatuated bigots thought he intended to repudiate. Strange to observe, Father Dugan does not send kind remembrances to Mr. Hemphill, or to Mr. G. B. Mackrell, or to Colonel Ferguson, or to any of the Presbyterian luminaries who expected to be edified and instructed by his "lectures." This may be an accidental omission, but then it is pretty certain that these gentlemen will not forget him for some time to come, and do not require any message to keep him green in their memory.

Publications Received.

Of the book entitled "Mary, Queen of Scots and her latest English Historian," the Providence (R. I.) Press says, "Mary was never more thoroughly beheaded by the axe than she has been by the pen of Mottos. It is comprised as a handsome volume, and though satire had found a thousand blots in it, it would have found no guile in."

The total consumption of foreign and domestic sugar in the Atlantic States during the past year was 652,000 tons, and from 35,000 to 40,000 tons have been taken for consumption at this port for the past three years.

A short time ago there was but one Catholic church in Fall River, Mass. Now there are five, one of which is a French church, together with several Sodalities. Societies for the poor and for temperance, well-attended Sunday Schools, etc.

The San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Society, at a meeting last week, passed a resolution asking an appropriation of $7,000 per annum. There is a growing feeling against any proposition for the appropriation of taxation, most of which are derived mainly to the fattening of horse races.

The Fatal Explosion in Austin, Nev.

Owing to the kindness of his Lordship Bishop O'Connell, we are enabled to place before our readers the subjoined graphic account, from the pen of Rev. Father Molonay, of the late terrible accident at Austin, Nevada:

MY LORD BISHOP—I am just over a most harrowing occasion, occasioned by one of the most frightful accidents that ever occurred in Austin; an accident which buried into eternity without a moment's warning two of my best and noblest boys, while a third is just hastening after them, having already received all the rites of his Church. Last Saturday night, the 3d, the terrible and frightful catastrophe occurred. In one of the Manhattan mines, about half a mile from my residence, and situated upon the side of Leander Hill, a powder explosion took place in one of the stants at the 500-foot level; it tore up everything, dirt, rocks and timbering, for about two hundred feet of the tunnel. In the same tunnel were men who fortunately escaped. They had a breath. But down two hundred feet farther lo the same shaft were working three of my best Irish boys; and quick as the shock of lightning they were buried beneath the falling debris, which knew how many tons. Work was immediately commenced on the 100-foot level, and the explosion took place, for the exhuming of the bodies of the supposed dead. The accident occured at half-past 10 P. M., and I was on the ground at 11. All worked well and willingly—Americans, Cornish, as well as Irish, vied with each other in clearing away the fallen mass, and in opening a way to the light which would shed over our dear friends. A hole was made, an entrance effected, and a groan was heard from the cavern two hundred feet below. Life was not extinct; at least some one was alive—a groan was heard; but who will venture down two hundred feet deeper into the bowels of the earth?

Three Irish boys were buried down there, and one was still alive—for a groan was heard. Where we were standing was yet in a shapeless mass of ruins from the explosion; and here were hundreds of tons of timbering and fallen débris swaying to and fro, ready at a moment's notice to fall in a precipitous crash on the poor victims unfortunate enough to have survived their fall. But, as I said, there were three Irish boys down there; a groan was heard, and there could be no time lost in making a rush into the chasm—who shall probably sacrifice his own life—who to go to the rescue of the suffering and dying?

Oh, my Lord Bishop, three able young men were found immediately; they are ready to rush down two hundred feet below, and even at the sacrifice of their own lives are willing to rescue the dying and dead; what a grand, noble sacrifice! Their names, my Lord, are Daniel Scully, a native of Ballymorough street, Dublin, on Christmas Day.

Richard Wallace, Esq., Bart., M.P., has left the handsome gift of £500 to his agent in Lisburn, to be distributed among the poorest parishes on his estate, in aid of the Relief Fund of the Irish Church.

Lord John Manners inaugurated, on the 19th inst., the art exhibition in Cattle Bridge, Kingstown, by a speech. In his speech he dwelt especially on the benefit of the art of painting to the people.

Mr. Butt addressed a large meeting of fishmen in Dundalk on Monday night, in Monaghan on Tuesday night, and in Belfast on Wednesday night. He was well received throughout.

A bazar to raise funds for the repairs of Magh church, Killarney, was held on Monday night, December 29th, in Healy's Hall, Patrick street, under the patronage of the Hon. Mrs. Westenra and the Lady Heytings.

After more than fifteen investigations into the death of Thomas Davery, who was murdered in his own house on the 10th of last June, three persons, Mary Ann Hall, united to stand their trial at the next Tullamore assizes.

The tenantry on the Rally water estate of Mr. John Mulholland, D.L., entertained his son and heir, John A. Mulholland, Esq., on the occasion of his attaining his majority, December 30. Mr. Mulholland is the owner of the famous racing yacht Egeria.

A public meeting was held in Limerick, on January 2d, by the members of the Limerick and Ulster Railway Company, to consider the question of bringing their line into closer connection with the Great Southern and Western Railway Company.

Electricity for purposes of telegraphy has also received the method of covering the submarine cables with wires, which was first practically applied to the cable between Holyhead and Howth last year.

The General Land Office has ordered patents for the town sites of Nonora and Chicago.

Seventy of the Communists arrested at Versailles have been released, and Napoleon Noyes, are held for trial.

The venerable William Pinckney White, an old school instructor, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Senate of Maryland.

A large number of men were discharged from the New York navy yard last Saturday, and a number more will follow.

Three acres of solid coal are on fire in the Kidder mine at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and great efforts are being made to subdue the flames.

The case of Walker vs. The Board of Harbor Commissioners, involving the right of wharfage on the water front of their lands in this city, was argued before the United States Circuit Court yesterday morning.

The California Jute Manufacturing Company has established have turned out two millions of bags, and will increase the number during the coming year. The total consumption of jute in this city for the year is estimated at 30,000,000 yards.

The Sisters of Charity thankfully acknowledge the receipt of $7 20 from the San Francisco Orphan Asylum, and $10 from the Sisters of Charity, Sacramento Park. They also acknowledge $30 from Father Ward, of the Ascension Church, Oakland.

A rupture is said to have taken place among the Cronenists with regard to the disposition of the association's property, which is valued at $1,000. The New York Herald says that the sum is $10,000. The New John Mandeville is the principal claimant, and he has brought suit for the property.

George L. Wiskeind was confirmed as Receiver, Clerk by the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties. He has appointed Mr. Crowley Deputy Clerk. The Crowleys are for freedom or for death.—Irish American.

COPARTNERSHIP NOTICE.

THESE IS TO CERTIFY THAT THE UNDERsigned have formed a special partnership pursuant to the provisions of the Civil Code of the State of California (Title IX, Section 2,) for

First—That the name or firm under which such copartnership is to be conducted is A. J. BOLTON.

Second—That the nature of the business intended to be transacted is the purchasing, and selling at retail, goods, wares and merchandise, dry goods, and such other articles as are usually dealt in by retail dealers in dry goods.

Third—That the names of all the partners are Solomon J. Bolton, who resides in the city and county of San Francisco, and Alfred Bolton, who resides in the city and county of Baltimore, State of Maryland, and carries on and conducts business in the said city of Baltimore.

Fourth—And the said special partners, Morris Gutman, has contributed the sum of Fifteen Thousand Dollars in gold coin, and has agreed to leave the same there.

Fifth—That said partnership is to commence on the first day of January, A. D. 1874, and to end on the 31st day of December, A. D. 1874.

In witness whereof, I have affixed my signature and the seal of my office, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1873.

ARNOLD FULLER, Notary Public.

Dec1-4

LATE NEWS ITEMS.

The Committee of the Home Rule League had a meeting in Moate on January 6.

Mr. Butt spoke in Glasgow, on the evening of December 23d, on the subject of home Rule.

The Emperor of Russia has sent in Commissioners to the Pope, on the subject of some Rules.

There was a Home Rule demonstration at Manchester on the 5th, at which Messrs. Butt, John Martin and others spoke.

The Rector of the American College at Rome has handed to the Pope the sum of £500, sent by the Catholics of Philadelphia.

A amateur concert for the benefit of the impoverished of all denominations in Kells was held in the Court-house on Monday, the 5th January.

A bazar and drawing of miscellaneous prizes took place in the school-rooms of the Convent of Mercy, Birr, on the 5th January.

Major Vaughan Lee has issued his address to the electors of West Somerset, England. He is in favor of religious education.

The cattle plague has broken out in Meaburn, and the cattle bought on the land for Capo Coast Castle, and already shipped, are affected.

Rev. Thomas Collier, P.P., Ballina, solemnized the receipt of £3 from A. Hanlon, Lucknigion Lodge, Ballina, for the relief of the poor of Ballina.

The magistrates of the Swanlinbar district have appointed Mr. George Seale to the office of Petty Session's clerk, in the room of Mr. Thomas Hope, resigned.

The bazar in aid of St. Saviour's male and female free schools, Dominick street, Dublin, was held on the 22d and 23d December in the old chapel.

On the 1st January Mr. Maurice Brooks was elected Lord Mayor of Dublin. In the evening there was a banquet at the Mansion House.

The Howth Gas Works, which were contracted a short time since by Mr. Purcell, the proprietor of the Queen's Hotel, were formally opened January 1st.

Mr. Heyworth, of Blackburn, England has failed eight times already in his career, but cheeks for payment in full, with interest and costs, to each of his creditors.

The body of a gentleman who was connected for years with one of the Government offices, was recently found in the Liffey. Deceased had been missing for a few weeks.

The Rev. Dr. Magee, P.P., Stradbally, Queen's county, acknowledges the receipt of £20 from Mrs. Gratian Bellew, for distribution among the poor of her Neenstown estate.

The Mallow Farmers' Club has passed a resolution in favor of Mr. O'Sullivan's candidature for Limerick, and resolved to send a deputation to the Tenant Conference in Belfast.

The Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress and family, accompanied by Alderman Gunn of the Corporation, went in state to the Catholic Boys' Asylum, Marlborough street, Dublin, on Christmas Day.

Sir Richard Wallace, Bart., M.P., has left the handsome gift of £500 to his agent in Lisburn, to be distributed among the poorest parishes on his estate, in aid of the Relief Fund of the Irish Church.

Lord John Manners inaugurated, on the 19th inst., the art exhibition in Cattle Bridge, Kingstown, by a speech. In his speech he dwelt especially on the benefit of the art of painting to the people.

Mr. Butt addressed a large meeting of fishmen in Dundalk on Tuesday night, in Monaghan on Tuesday night, and in Belfast on Wednesday night. He was well received throughout.

A bazar to raise funds for the repairs of Magh church, Killarney, was held on Monday night, December 29th, in Healy's Hall, Patrick street, under the patronage of the Hon. Mrs. Westenra and the Lady Heytings.

After more than fifteen investigations into the death of Thomas Davery, who was murdered in his own house on the 10th of last June, three persons, Mary Ann Hall, united to stand their trial at the next Tullamore assizes.

The tenantry on the Rally water estate of Mr. John Mulholland, D.L., entertained his son and heir, John A. Mulholland, Esq., on the occasion of his attaining his majority, December 30. Mr. Mulholland is the owner of the famous racing yacht Egeria.

A public meeting was held in Limerick, on January 2d, by the members of the Limerick and Ulster Railway Company, to consider the question of bringing their line into closer connection with the Great Southern and Western Railway Company.

Electricity for purposes of telegraphy has also received the method of covering the submarine cables with wires, which was first practically applied to the cable between Holyhead and Howth last year.

The General Land Office has ordered patents for the town sites of Nonora and Chicago.

Seventy of the Communists arrested at Versailles have been released, and Napoleon Noyes, are held for trial.

The venerable William Pinckney White, an old school instructor, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Senate of Maryland.

A large number of men were discharged from the New York navy yard last Saturday, and a number more will follow.

Three acres of solid coal are on fire in the Kidder mine at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and great efforts are being made to subdue the flames.

The case of Walker vs. The Board of Harbor Commissioners, involving the right of wharfage on the water front of their lands in this city, was argued before the United States Circuit Court yesterday morning.

The California Jute Manufacturing Company has established have turned out two millions of bags, and will increase the number during the coming year. The total consumption of jute in this city for the year is estimated at 30,000,000 yards.

The Sisters of Charity thankfully acknowledge the receipt of $7 20 from the San Francisco Orphan Asylum, and $10 from the Sisters of Charity, Sacramento Park. They also acknowledge $30 from Father Ward, of the Ascension Church, Oakland.

A rupture is said to have taken place among the Cronenists with regard to the disposition of the association's property, which is valued at $1,000. The New York Herald says that the sum is $10,000. The New John Mandeville is the principal claimant, and he has brought suit for the property.

George L. Wiskeind was confirmed as Receiver, Clerk by the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties. He has appointed Mr. Crowley Deputy Clerk. The Crowleys are for freedom or for death.—Irish American.

The Inaugural Address of the Emperor William and the Union of the White Lady."

The Berlin correspondent of the Daily News writes, under date of Decembes 26: There is a good deal of misery about the illness of the Emperor. It will be recollected that his inaugural address was composed soon after the return from Vienna. From that time down to the end of November he was confined to the house, and part of the time to his bed; and every word was composed during a short period, to abstain wholly from work. Then he improved a little, and for several days took short drives. But on one of these occasions, as it appears, he caught a severe cold, and at once relapsed into his former condition of semi-illness.

For a month he has not been outside of the Palace. He was not permitted to be present at the funeral of the Queen Dowager Elizabeth, much as he was attached to her; and, still more cruel than all, on Christmas Day he was not strong enough to climb one flight of stairs to the apartments where the royal family had holiday gatherings. The servants brought the old veteran's gifts down to him in his own rooms. He attends daily to the most pressing official business, but only such, and I think passes the greater part of the day in bed.

The most contagious think that the patient will soon be completely restored, and in a condition to go through the winter as successfully as the youngest of us. This is, perhaps, as good news as we ought to expect. In the meantime, it is ominous for many that the White Lady has lately been seen at the Castle. Did you ever hear of the legend of the White Lady of Berlin Castle? Many, many years ago there was a Hohenzollern Princess, a widow with two children, who fell in love with—"dreams enamored of"! is, perhaps, a more courtly phrase—a foreign Prince, rich, handsome and brave. She sent him a proposition of marriage. But the brave and handsome Prince declined her suit, explaining that "four years" stood between him and acceptance. He referred to his aged parents, whom he was unwilling to leave or whose consent he could not obtain—the versions of the legend vary a little here. But the Princess understood him to refer to the four years of her own waiting, and in her anger, less, in fact, to become a stepfather. So, like Richard III., she promptly suffocated the infant obstacles and sent word that the way was clear. He was stricken with horror at the cruel deed. He received her fatal mistake to her, and died cursing his bloodthirsty rashness.

The Princess, in her turn, was overwhelmed with remorse. After lingering a day or two in indescribable anguish, she too died, and was buried under the old castle at Berlin. But not to rest quietly in her unhappy grave. At rare intervals she appears at midnight, clad in white, gliding ghostlike about the castle; and the appearance always forebodes the death of some member of the Hohenzollern family. The White Lady has been seen three times within about a year—once in October last by one of the Princes, once in January last by a sentinel just spring again to announce the end of Prince Adalbert; and the last time, while Queen Elizabeth lay on her death-bed. There is, however, some doubt about the meaning of the last sight. The Queen Dowager was not a born Hohenzollern, and the doctors are not certain that her death can be regarded as the answer to the White Lady's appearance. If not, there is yet another Princess to be removed, and the superstitious knew what that means. The Princess of the University are trying to solve this knotty question, but we shall know the result at the earliest moment.

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

A Paris dispatch of Tuesday last says: "The Ultramontane journal, L'Univers, suspended."

The Fenian flag so heavy in New York that they cannot be moved on a fine day.

Seventy of the Communists arrested at Versailles have been released, and Napoleon Noyes, are held for trial.

The venerable William Pinckney White, an old school instructor, has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Senate of Maryland.

A large number of men were discharged from the New York navy yard last Saturday, and a number more will follow.

Three acres of solid coal are on fire in the Kidder mine at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and great efforts are being made to subdue the flames.

The case of Walker vs. The Board of Harbor Commissioners, involving the right of wharfage on the water front of their lands in this city, was argued before the United States Circuit Court yesterday morning.

The California Jute Manufacturing Company has established have turned out two millions of bags, and will increase the number during the coming year. The total consumption of jute in this city for the year is estimated at 30,000,000 yards.

The Sisters of Charity thankfully acknowledge the receipt of $7 20 from the San Francisco Orphan Asylum, and $10 from the Sisters of Charity, Sacramento Park. They also acknowledge $30 from Father Ward, of the Ascension Church, Oakland.

A rupture is said to have taken place among the Cronenists with regard to the disposition of the association's property, which is valued at $1,000. The New York Herald says that the sum is $10,000. The New John Mandeville is the principal claimant, and he has brought suit for the property.

George L. Wiskeind was confirmed as Receiver, Clerk by the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties. He has appointed Mr. Crowley Deputy Clerk. The Crowleys are for freedom or for death.—Irish American.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The vessels in port on last Saturday will carry off sixty thousand tons of wheat.

During the year 1873 the steamers from China brought to the city nearly 30,000 tons of merchandise.

A number of skulls have been found on the site of Peters' new market, southwest corner of Dupont and Sutter streets. It is said that there was once a gambling den there.

Sunday, February 1st, will be the first day of the meeting of the Convention to make arrangements for the celebration of Father's Day.

The steamer just arrived from China has brought $7,000 worth of furniture to the proprietors of the Occidental and Lick hotels.

The net earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad for last year were over $7,500,000. The Company now owns 1,078 miles of road.

The office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company will be found hereafter at the old stand, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

The cargo of the steamer "China," which arrived last week, consisted of 32,000 packages of tea, 180 of silk, and 10,000 of general merchandise.

Colonel Thomas Grey has been elected President of the Pioneer Land Association. A meeting meant was done not breathe the air of San Francisco.

Persons receiving twenty-dollar rolls of silver should examine each piece. It is becoming common to find one or more of half dollars of twenty-dollar rolls.

In a statistical list prepared by the Fire Marshal it is shown that during the last nine years there have been 1,271 fires, the loss of which is $4,583,711 was insured and $2,000,000 subscribed. The insurance companies paid the insured by only $969,371.

It is very difficult to effect investigations into the frauds alleged against distillers in this city, but Gaelard Hart says that "they can be believed to have stuck in the whiskey trap."

A correspondent of the Alta proposes that California be divided into three States. Very good idea; but suppose the Legislature will prevent it, and keep up under the guise of unity the present unequal and unjust system of affairs as in New England.

The case of Walker vs. The Board of Harbor Commissioners, involving the right of wharfage on the water front of their lands in this city, was argued before the United States Circuit Court yesterday morning.

The California Jute Manufacturing Company has established have turned out two millions of bags, and will increase the number during the coming year. The total consumption of jute in this city for the year is estimated at 30,000,000 yards.

The Sisters of Charity thankfully acknowledge the receipt of $7 20 from the San Francisco Orphan Asylum, and $10 from the Sisters of Charity, Sacramento Park. They also acknowledge $30 from Father Ward, of the Ascension Church, Oakland.

A rupture is said to have taken place among the Cronenists with regard to the disposition of the association's property, which is valued at $1,000. The New York Herald says that the sum is $10,000. The New John Mandeville is the principal claimant, and he has brought suit for the property.

George L. Wiskeind was confirmed as Receiver, Clerk by the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, and has entered upon the discharge of his duties. He has appointed Mr. Crowley Deputy Clerk. The Crowleys are for freedom or for death.—Irish American.

MARRIED.

DUFFUS—In Marysville, January 8, to the wife of M. C. Duffus, a daughter.

DIED.

O'CONNOR—In this city, January 18, Honora, wife of Timothy O'Connor, a native of Mallow, county Cork, Ireland, aged 44 years.

DUFFUS—In Marysville, January 8, to the wife of M. C. Duffus, a daughter.

O'CONNOR—In this city, January 18, Honora, wife of Timothy O'Connor, a native of Mallow, county Cork, Ireland, aged 44 years.

DUFFUS—In Marysville, January 8, to the wife of M. C. Duffus, a daughter.

O'CONNOR—In this city, January 18, Honora, wife of Timothy O'Connor, a native of Mallow, county Cork, Ireland, aged 44 years.

DUFFUS—In Marysville, January 8, to the wife of M. C. Duffus, a daughter.

O'

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

A Miser's Will.

When a person possessed of property dies, leaving a will behind him, and when those whose relation to the deceased, either of blood, affection or practical affairs, assemble at the reading of his last will and testament, there is nothing more common than the overthrow of more grief for his loss by the stronger passion of resentment at his inconsiderate manner of disposing of his worldly goods. This spectacle was seen, for instance, at the promulgation of the will of one Denis Tolam, a most careful of his wealth, or, in popular phrase, a miser, who died at Cork about a hundred years ago. (Where the mortal remains of Tolam had been duly committed to earth, the expectants assembled to hear, in due course of law, what he had done with his money. The group were evidently dumb with astonishment. To his sister-in-law he left four old stockings lying "under his mattress to the right;" to his nephew, two old socks and a green highstep; to one John Stelle, a blue stocking and red cheek; to his cousin, Barbara, an old boot and a red flannel pocket; and to Hannah, his faithful housekeeper, a broken water-jug. The tempers of the legatees were sorely tried by this heartless conduct on the part of the lamented Denis. If they prayed for him at all in that moment of bitter tribulation, it was to ask of him in the style of that irreverent soldier in Mercutio's famous speech, who "swears a prayer or two." They were all in a dangerous temper, we may be sure; but Hannah, the housekeeper, who felt that her long service gave her a special claim to be practically remembered last, used her feminine privilege by losing patience first. She administered a vigorous kick to the luckless water-jug which failed to bear solace from the effects of the lamented Denis. Out rolled a goodly gathering of golden coins. Hannah, inimitable nature! her sorrow for her departed master returned in full force at once. The others had been leaving the house in a devouring rage, but, seeing the apocalypse of the broken water-jug, they looked after their several legacies, and found the socks and stockings, the highstep and the flannel pocket, duly furnished with a kind of lining which few pockets can do well without. All's well, we know, that ends well, and the end of this matter was that the sister-in-law, the nephew, the lieutenant, and the faithful, though short-tempered Hannah, blessed the memory of the upright Denis, and voted him one of the brothers whom they would turned round upon his dying bed to execrate a liar and unfaithful in favor of deserving people.—Dublin Weekly News.

Laying the Corner-Stone of a New Franciscan Monastery.

The 15th December, the Octave of the Immaculate Conception, was observed with peculiar devotion in the Church of St. Francis, Kilkenny. High Mass commenced at twelve o'clock, the celebrant being Rev. Father Albert Mitchell, O.S.F.C.; deacon, Very Rev. Father O'Hanrahan, prior, S. Augustine; Father sub-deacon, Rev. Brother Joseph, O.S.F.C. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Father James A. Nolan, O.S.A., on the dignity and privileges of the Mother of God. Immediately after the High Mass a procession was formed, preceded to the new monastery, which is intended to be a convalescent and sea-side. There were present on the interesting occasion the Very Rev. Father Friers, O.P., Black Abbey; Father Kenny, O.F., and Rev. Brother Laurence, O.F.; Very Rev. Father O'Hanrahan, O.S. A.; Very Rev. Father O'Reilly, vicar provincialis, O.S.F.C.; Rev. T. Abbe Ryan, P. P., Rev. Edward Callanan, C.C., Rev. Father Albert, O.S.F.C.; Rev. Father Edward Tombine, guardian, Franciscan Convent; Rev. Father Benedict Mary and Rev. Brother Joseph, O.S.F.C. Having arrived at the site, the corner-stone of the new building was blessed and laid by the Very Rev. D. P. O'Reilly, provincial custos, O.S. F. C.—Weekly Register.

A Rare Apostle.

Lord Desart, an Irish peer, better known for one or two trashy novels and some pro-Coercion speeches in the House of Lords than for anything else, has got into a little difficulty on account of one of his recent literary performances. It appears he is considered "authority" for the one entitled "Chesterfield Letters—1875," and published in the magazine known as London Society. One of those papers had for its subject one "Harry Brown," and Colonel Charles White, the member for Tipperary, seems to have thought that it referred to himself. The honorable and gallant gentleman, accordingly, dispatched two "friends" to the Earl of Desart with a request for an explanation.

The result appeared in the Times of Saturday in the shape of a letter from Colonel Fraser and Lieutenant-Colonel Boring, enclosing a declaration signed by the Earl of Desart. In this document the noble lord denies (emphatically upon his solemn oath," that the letter about "Harry Brown" referred to Colonel White or to any member of Colonel White's family, or that "he or they were in any way in the mind of the writer at the time, or in mine when I perused the proofs." He did it seem so," he added, "I freely admit that that article would have been defamatory, unwarranted, blackguard, infamous and utterly unworthy of a gentleman's pen." But the question then arose naturally to the seconds, "Did you see the proofs?" "Under Rubbs, December 27.

Pious versus Wife.

At the Middlesex Sessions, on Friday, Mr. George Smith, "a person of genteel, manly appearance," surrendered in discharge of his bail to answer an indictment charging him with stealing a piano of the value of £30, the property of Mr. Franklin Roger. It seems that Mr. Smith was on visiting terms with the Rogers, and, after the agreement having if his countrymen, made off with Mr. Roger's wife. He next made off with the piano and re-mustered his wife, whom, it is accidentally learned, "who, possibly, has not a pair of hands, or, if she has, does not appreciate the use of them, Providence provided them—came into Court and bowed forth his acquittance of the pious duties of matrimony. Of course he spoke of his wife as your manly Briton generally does, but the sentiment in the circumstances was novel. All the musicians of your large family will no doubt be glad to hear that Old Cox, whose brains might be compendiously described as a mirliton, received sentence against the prisoner, who was forthwith sentenced to nine months' imprisonment and hard labor. Diverse that you may send an Englishman's wife, but never his piano. The pure Britton has a vastness for such.—Punch, December 27.

FRANCE.

Extraordinary Robbery.

The Paris Figaro gives the following details of an extraordinary robbery of jewelry: A Parisian commission merchant, named Lefebvre, had received an order for diamonds to the value of £6,000. On the evening of his departure for London he dined with a number of his friends, who accompanied him some distance, where he got into his empty compartment of the train which was to take him to Calais. Some minutes later four persons entered the carriage, and, although he would have preferred to be alone, finding that there was no time to change, he engaged in conversation with them, at the same time keeping his hand on the traveling bag which contained his valuables. On arriving at Calais the strangers disappeared. M. Cahn proceeded on board the steamer. He was immediately joined by a person whom he recognized as one of his fellow travelers in the train, and who, after a short time, proved to be a police officer. He, too, offered him a cigar, which he refused. His interlocutor, however, was very persuading, and tendered a case of what he called real Havannas, which M. Cahn believes now, although he did not especially notice at the time, was not the same as the stranger himself had. In the end M. Cahn took a cigar, and lighted and commenced smoking it, when he at once became insensible. On recovering he found he was at Douvres, and that his traveling bag and impromptu acquaintance had disappeared. Three cruise were about to start. A search was made for both bag and stranger, and the telegraph was put into play, but without success. The police of London and Paris were forthwith communicated with, but no good results have been attained as yet.

GERMANY.

Bismarck's Influence.

The Berlin correspondent of the London press, through the Berlin Press Bureau, is no longer able to suppress the truth respecting the German Emperor. A fortnight ago the Emperor's personal condition was seriously ill, and the announcement was confined to this paper. Subsequently one or two of our daily contemporaries published a report that it was feared by the Court, but down to the moment at which we write the Times has been silent. Does the organ of Prince Bismarck imagine that its readers are children, and that it can thus keep the world in ignorance of a very grave fact? The version of the malady which it has been deemed expedient to publish is, that the Emperor has been unable to sleep at one Ward, of Birmingham, who was to had drunk in his own dwelling one night not long ago. His wife, Maria, was the only person present in the house. Barring what he had "chippered up" in the course of the evening, the jolly Ward was in the ordinary state of health when he went to bed. In the morning he could not rouse his master on awaking in the morning at his usual hour, he found himself not quite in trim for the day's work. A careful investigation made him very soon aware of several unpleasant facts. There were no insolences in his forehead, one of his fingers were hanging off, and the head had been almost cut across. Nor was like that were all. On the front of his thigh he found three wounds, one inflicted with a knife, and each one as nearly as the thigh bone. When the doctor came he saw two things were pretty evident. The wounds had been inflicted after Ward had gone to bed, because otherwise he would not have been able to go, and they had evidently been inflicted by some other hand than his own. The jury found that his wife, Maria, had been defending temperance principles in a manner not sanctioned by law, but which was approved by every high authority, and the energetic lady was comfort to Ward, of Birmingham, to feel that whenever he goes drunk to bed, for the next five years to come, his own Maria will not be with him in the house.—Dublin Weekly News, December 27.

The Singular Reed of Promise.

A young lady of Liverpool named Mc——tall, the daughter of a local merchant, has got a verdict for £9,000 against a gentleman named Wilding, a young man of 21 years of age, on the spring of the present year, and entered into a promise of marriage. The gentleman had been divorced from his wife two or three years before his meeting with Miss Nuttall, but on going to London a couple of months ago to see about the settlements for his marriage he happened to meet his former wife again, and the consequence was that he married her a second time. In a letter to Miss Nuttall he explained that till he came to town he was fully prepared to make her a kind and good husband. "I had not seen my wife," he said, "for two and a half years, and thought that all love for her was now gone from me, but it is not so. She has grown from me, but it is not so. She has grown more interesting very much and properly for a long time with her mother and brother, and people have led to me and misstated facts. I love her as much as ever." He added that if the meeting with his wife had been arranged between him and Miss Nuttall and not before, the result would have been the same. Only a few days after the interview with his wife he married her a second time. The verdict, however, has given Miss Nuttall a very substantial consolation.—Dublin Weekly News, Dec. 27.

Pious versus Wife.

At the Middlesex Sessions, on Friday, Mr. George Smith, "a person of genteel, manly appearance," surrendered in discharge of his bail to answer an indictment charging him with stealing a piano of the value of £30, the property of Mr. Franklin Roger. It seems that Mr. Smith was on visiting terms with the Rogers, and, after the agreement having if his countrymen, made off with Mr. Roger's wife. He next made off with the piano and re-mustered his wife, whom, it is accidentally learned, "who, possibly, has not a pair of hands, or, if she has, does not appreciate the use of them, Providence provided them—came into Court and bowed forth his acquittance of the pious duties of matrimony. Of course he spoke of his wife as your manly Briton generally does, but the sentiment in the circumstances was novel. All the musicians of your large family will no doubt be glad to hear that Old Cox, whose brains might be compendiously described as a mirliton, received sentence against the prisoner, who was forthwith sentenced to nine months' imprisonment and hard labor. Diverse that you may send an Englishman's wife, but never his piano. The pure Britton has a vastness for such.—Punch, December 27.

ITALY.

Austria and Rome.

The Emperor of Austria is not, it runs, so favorably disposed to the Church as the infidel and anti-Catholic press hereabouts represented a few days ago. He has addressed the Pope strongly advising Him to come to terms with the Italian King, the terms being the recognition of the Piedmontese Usurpation by the Holy Father. Since the scandalous visit of the Czar to Victor Emmanuel, it is said that his travelling bag and impromptu acquaintance had disappeared. Three cruise were about to start. A search was made for both bag and stranger, and the telegraph was put into play, but without success. The police of London and Paris were forthwith communicated with, but no good results have been attained as yet.

SWITZERLAND.

The Retiring Nuncio.

The following circumstance, relating to the Archbishop of Posen, might lead us to suppose that Pius IX. long foresaw what was awaiting the illustrious prelate. At the time he was named Archbishop and only was there mucloud between Berlin and Rome, but the relations of Prussia with the Pope were almost cordial. When the Archbishop was about to go to Rome for Father to go to his diocese, Pius IX. said to him, "I wish to give you a souvenir," and placed round his neck a gold chain with a pectoral cross. Both these were blessed. They were the same that adorned the first Archbishop exiled for the defense of the Church against Protestant Piedmont—at that very little, and private work of affliction and morality in the household circle, us, and we shall conquer. I have endeavored to labor much for you, and I will not cease from laboring. In your diocese there is unity, because, if you are divided, Roman Catholics they lead you into dungeon, and I say, "Be courageous, my dear Young. Keep in unity, therefore, I say the religious situation of the Church and the infectious schism of the Old Catholics

TO JESUS' HEART ALL BURNING.

To Jesus' Heart all burning
With fervent love for me,
My heart with fondest yearning
Shall raise the joyful strain.

Chorus.—While ages course along,
Blest be with sweetest song
The Sacred Heart of Jesus
By every heart and tongue.

O Heart for me on fire
With love no man can speak,
My yet sound desire
God gives me for Thy sake.

Chorus.—While ages course along, etc.

Too true I have forsaken
Thee, Lord, by willful sin
Yet in Thy Heart unbroken
Rest to Thy foot again.

Chorus.—While ages course along, etc.

Ah! Then art sweet and lowly,
And your pure of heart,
so may my heart be wholly
Of Thine the counterpart.

Chorus.—While ages course along, etc.

O that we were more grieved
For having pierced Thee,
Yet would dark be wherein
My Jesus' love to prove.

Chorus.—While ages course along, etc.

When life away is flying
And earth's false glare is dead,
Still Sacred Heart is dying
To say I'm all Thine own.

Chorus.—While ages course along, etc.

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The diocese of Newark, N. J., has subscribed $6,000 for the support of the seminarians of the diocese.

At the last monthly meeting of the Catholic Union of New York, the Treasurer's report showed an increase of six thousand dollars.

The Montreal City and District Saving Bank has presented the Sisters of Charity of Providence Asylum the liberal sum of seven hundred dollars.

Rev. Stephen Mooney, of Steubenville, Ohio, died on the 18th December, of disease contracted while administering to a sick person. His wife died a short time ago.

At a solemn given by Father Weninger, S. J., at Allentown, Penn., eighty hundred and fifty persons received Holy Communion and twenty-one persons of different denominations were received into the Catholic Church.

The Cuban Telegraph says that "the martyrdom of Father Mac is likely to occasion serious difficulties between France and the Catholic Empire."

A priest preached a sermon in Irish on the 18th of December, at Peterborough, Ont. "The good old sound was sweet music to many, and it awakened memories of childhood, home and native land."

Cologne was a stronghold of Old Catholicism a year ago, but a few days ago one of Bismarck' priests went to administer the sacrament to a dying man, with the new ceremonial prescribed by the Old Catholic synod. The people rose in indignation and drove him home.

The Marquis of Bute, who owns a vast estate in France, has received a medal from the Government of that country for devoting his immense there to using the latest improvements in agricultural implements.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "The Order of Templars are about to petition the Pope, through Archbishop Manning, to recognize their society, as many Catholics would join it if it was removed from the category of secret societies."

Sister Angelica (Lucas) died recently in Loretto Convent, Formoy, in the thirty-fourth year of her age and the twenty-first of her religious and charitable life. Her obsequies were most touching.

A new Mass, entitled the Mass of the Redeemer, arranged in quartette, chorus and accompaniment of simple style, was sung for the first time in the Church of the Sisters of St. Joseph in his parish, from their convent at Flatbush, Long Island. These sisters are specially trained as teachers in the method and text books of the public schools, eliminating all that is anti-Catholic. They teach boys as well as girls.

The good old Father Mahar, formerly of Harrisburg, Penn., died suddenly of heart disease, at Morristown, between nine and ten o'clock on Sunday morning, December 28th. He was always esteemed as a very learned man, not only as a theologian, but in literature and science also. He came to this country from the South of Ireland, about thirty years ago, and was about sixty years old.

The Pilot characterizes the style in which the returns are made up for Sadlier's Catholic Almanac as "haphazard and hodge-podge, and to the last degree badly, carelessly and irregularly compiled." What ever new a Catholic almanac by the United States that the same has not been said of it we know not.

The United States are divided into seven Catholic provinces, and the Archbishops who govern these provinces reside at Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New York, San Francisco and Portland, Oregon. Besides these, there are 56 Bishops, 4,515 priests, 4,387 churches, 154 churches in course of erection, 1,415 chapels and stations and 1,250 parochial schools.

There are seven Catholic churches in Lawrence, Mass., and a new one is being built for the French people. Notwithstanding the hard times which threw thousands out of employment, they collected the sum of $16,000 from them, in aid of churches in the last four months. A fair for the Sisters' Hospital at Lowell, Mass., realized $6,000.

The new Archbishop of San Francisco, New York will have towers three hundred and twenty feet high and the largest chime of bells on the continent. There will be no other such church edifice in America. We hope to see D. U. A. Hall in the same style de sik in our beautiful city.

The Rev. Thomas Maginnis, of Jamaica Plains, Mass., has established a convent

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XLVI.

A FRATER HEARD.

Michel was half prepared for the disastrous intelligence which set the crowd swaying and surging before him. The abrupt change in the plan of the Minister of War bodeted to him than an event of some gravity, in connection with Metz, and not of a gratifying character, had occurred. He received the news therefore with gravity, indeed, but without any of the apparent excitement that filled the minds of those around him.

"You take it with great sang froid," observed the man who had first made the announcement to him, and who looked at Michel with a keen, suspicious glance. He was a workman of the lowest type, whose pale features were marked alike by misery and dissipation.

"And yet it is dreadful news," said Michel simply.

The workman burst into a mocking laugh. "Here is a Paris baker who is good enough to think the treachery of Bazaine dreadful news."

Michel moved away as he had no desire to be mixed up in an altercation, when his eye lighted among the crowd on a face he knew. It was that of a woodcutter from the eastern district of Alsace, whose acquaintance Michel had made when in charge of game on the mountains. All at once memories of home rushed upon his mind, and he forgot Metz, far away from the crowded streets and turbulent mob of Paris, and overlooking in the German, which was more familiar than the French to the rude mountaineer, "Brandi, Brandi, he called out, "Brisenet du Joncherie!" (Do you not remember me?)

It was an unlucky ingenious which led him to call out thus. The words had scarcely escaped from his lips when the workman facing his dark eyes on him, followed, "I thought so."

"I, Pierre, I am no traitor."

Then arose as if by magic the cry so frequent, so terrible, so often fatal, "Espion." The crowd had swelled in its sanguinary second, and now grew to be of considerable dimensions. Michel, while internally cursing his own rashness in the employment of German, maintained his coolness, and met the accusation with an indignant denial. "Do you not see my uniform? I am a Frenchman, an Alsatian, and I have spoken to my countryman who is also from Alsace."

Brandi, who was separated from him by a few feet, recognized Michel's voice and called out a confirmation of his friend's assertion. But unfortunately his accents were drowned in the rising clamor. "He is a spy," "Take him to prison," "Drown him," was roared aloud. Michel, still cool, quickly stepped back to the wall of a house and looked steadily in the faces of his assailants. The hostile cries mounted still higher, but there was something in the look of the man which made most shrink from being the first to lay hands on him. He had no arms with him, his intention having been to change his uniform for the dress of a peasant; but, even unarmed as he was, there was no difficulty in predicting evil to the one who commenced the assault. The problem was solved by a Marin. A big, old and ugly as those in the Paul Delaroche's wonderful picture yell at Marie Antoinette, dashed forward with a shrill cry, and knocked Michel's hat off with a blow of her lean hand. She was a fierce, unsexed harridan—a being in whom all womanhood in her but its weakness. To Michel, however, she was a woman, and he would not strike—scarcely sought to hinder her. But in the violence of the mob it is only the first step which gives pause. There was a shoulder a rush, and in a moment a hundred hands were seeking at Michel. It was an ugly task, however, for the assailants. In their eagerness they struck each other, and those near him paid a heavy penalty in the blows they received from the strong Alsatian arm. But this could not last. The main weight of the crowd was telling; already his bare head was bleeding from the strokes of a stone which had laid open his temple. A few seconds longer, and the chances were he would have fallen, and then his doom was sealed, when the regular tramp of armed men was heard, and in a moment the mob were parting, like divided waters.

"What is this?" cried the officer in charge.

"Lieutenant Brantome," cried Michel, who had now shaken off the few who ventured to hold him.

"Great heavens! Sergeant Yoss! What is the meaning of this?"

"Nothing," said Michel, who had already recovered his opinion, "except that these miscreants have been trying to resolve mauling me as a Prussian spy."

"Silence," cried out the artful young officer, "on oath to blush to think you have thus ill-treated one of the bravest and best soldiers in the French army."

Behind the detachment there was an embalmed vehicle, one empty. It was in charge of a Zouave who rushed fanatically from the ranks, and grasping Michel firmly by the hand, called out gladly, "It is you, it is you, Michel, they have struck! Show me a dozen of the cowards that did it," and Sergeant Mahony looked round with a thirst for fight in his eyes such as no trooper ever showed for a pot of porter.

The crowd had already begun to slink away, and dispersed rapidly.

"You are wounded, Sergeant," said the Lieutenant. "We are taking an ambulance waggon to the hospital now; you had better come and have your wound dressed."

"It is nothing, monsieur," said Michel, upon whom, however, the loss of blood already began to tell.

"Fully," said the Lieutenant. "I order you to come. It is not far, and you can walk."

"Walk—I should think I can," and he stepped out resolutely. But though the distance was a hundred yards, his head grew feebler, and it needed the arm of his loving comrade to bring him to the gate of the ambulance.

The surgeon, who placed in the case, decided that Michel's duty through requiring attention, was not serious. He bade him go into a little side apartment, while he attended to the severely wounded whom it was necessary to send into the hospital. Michel, accompanied by Mike, proceeded to the apartments pointed out to them. The bleeding still continued, and his weakness and feebleness began to grow in such a degree that its impatient comrade could not bear to stand by and see nothing done for him. Ignorant of the locality, he walked in the door opposite him, and, without knocking, pushed in. He found himself in presence of a Sister of Charity.

"What do you want?" said the nun, looking up from a book at which she was seated.

With a tremendous spasm he ejaculated the word "Sœpire," helping himself as he did so, and then sank back on the pillow.

Michel, in whom the light of his professional skill more than completed the work of Annette's persuasion took him by the wasted hand which lay above the counterpane. "Mon Dieu," he said in a whisper, audibly, "I forgive you as heartily as I hope God may forgive me."

The dying man made no answer. He could speak no more. Something that he could not be certain was the voice of God, but which frightened and for the moment even bewildered his senses, passed over the dark visage, and there the shadow stole across it which told that the spirit had quitted its earthly abode. The three watchers knelt by the side of the pallet and prayed, not the dull ritual which religion prescribes, for death was busy there, and there were many others to claim the functions of the attendants, but the prayers were of that most acceptable kind, those which we offer for an enemy.

"Soldier," said the nun, "I have heard that you are brave, and fight for your country with great heroism; but to-day you have done something nobler than your most valiant action in the field."

"Madame," said Michel simply, "I can claim no credit for what I have done. All credit is due to you. You are the angel to whose aid I."

"Hush," said the nun. "For her sake! she is a good, pure girl, and I pray that one day she may be your good, pure wife. But not for her sake, nor for any claim of your mercy be, but for His who has died to procure mercy for us all."

Michel bowed his head and passed out of the chamber of death.

CHAPTER XLVII.

TOO CLOSE TO BE PLEASANT.

Many days had not elapsed when Michel found himself at his old quarters. The wound he had received proved serious enough to induce the doctor to order him a bed at the convent, and his comrades for a while under the care of the tenderest of nurses, and regarded as a personal interest in all to whom his name and his story were known. But as he lay in bed, impatience took the absolute possession of him. He thought of his old campaigning ground where all his comrades were, scenes of pleasure would a disabled debauchee. He fancied his comrades engaged in perils he did not share, in triumphs to which he had not contributed, in losses in which he bore no part. Each day was passed in the belief that Mike Mahony might now be doing; how was Felix Richard's leg; would the brave Lieutenant think he was dead or to-day. His mind, in fact, was loaded with all manner of dents which crowd so many men of active habits suddenly arrested in his career. But his powerful organisation told, and though he was not able to walk, he managed to let him return to duty was based on sound principles. Michel had not deceived himself when he said that he felt his strength had all returned, and that he was quite equal to the performance of all his occupations.

"You have things gone hereabouts I left?" asked Michel of our acquaintance the old soldier.

"Gone!" grumbled the old man, "they have not gone at all. That is to say, we have not gone forward. We are in the confounded Prussians have—nearer to us. We seem to be here for the purpose of retreating from first place to first, and I did every now and then, it is true, and it is with the belief that the whole Prussian army was on the point of flight that the enemies take no heed, and keep drawing their dwindling of the wedge by Lieutenant Chapeubras?"

"No, monsieur; but I have a comrade who has gone with them; and I should be glad to see what he is engaged at."

"Oh, well, depart. But take care not to present the National Guards from eating up the Prussians."

Michel, having provided himself with his arms, hastened away. He was prompted by mixed feelings. Absence from the scene of his old exploits had brought on a gloom and depression to which he was anxious that in so doing he should have the companionship of so brave and trusty a friend as Mike. He was also besides actuated by a certain uneasiness respecting his comrade which, though he did not confess it, was strong in his mind.

Mike had in a more spirit of fun received the appointment to the expedition. "You see," he remarked to a companion soldier, "some of you need be in the least alarmed for my safety, for if there's only a shot from the Prussians I know well it will be a hard job to catch hold of my address here."

The band had been formed out of the Ultra Turcos de la France, which was one of the most noted for its attacks upon the incompetency of the government of national defense. In most smaller corps was the eminent better Chapeubras of the line of honor. He had over and over again proved to demonstration that the rocky was an incompetent fool, who ought to be hanged in mediately, and was a silly ass, amidst the laughter of some mocking spirits, and the applause of those who were ready to catch at any extravagance, that a company—not of demoralised regular soldiers—but of the National guards, dis patched from each gate of the city, could, with their irresistible élan, penetrate the Prussian lines, and by the force of their drive bun under the guns of the fort and spike them. Every one, in fact, with a voice proposed that the citizen should lead the way to this noble undertaking, and he was accordingly.

"Citizens, National Guards," he exclaimed, "you are about to be called to make the call to arms! France speaks to you in the accents of Miraboau! Liberty calls you to the front! Abandon your ladies to the gazes of death and dishonor! Arm yourselves, and be responsed to with thunders of applause. Hundreds of enrollments took place. The band of Mike was quickly filled. The old General shrugged his shoulders, but said he had done his part in the affair by the club. Pack them off to Nogent; they can do less harm there than anywhere else." It must be confessed that the last proposition of Sergeant Yoss, and who had begun seriously to entertain the proposition of his commander, declared that they doubted the wisdom of the step, and would not consent to have the issue executed. With a noble face the lieutenant affected to be influenced by this declaration. After all," he said, "when a soldier so celebrated as Sergeant Mike has been raised from the ranks, I feel disposed to pass over their questionable conduct of to-day, and I pardon them for the present; but be they on their peril for the future."

"Michel," said Mike, as the comrades walked home together, "you're after blaming Lieutenant Chapeubras in the only epoch he ever did anything. Again I say the whole, though," added he thoughtfully, "I am well pleased."

(To be Continued.)

THE GOOD GRAY MARE.

Oh, once I believed in a woman's kiss,
I had faith in a flattering tongue
That was ready to speak of my manly form;
But now the top of my head gets hair
That is thin and scant and wears black.
But yet my heart is my heart.

So I'm a bachelor hard and cold,
Like those who preceded me;
Like those who preceded me;
Like those who preceded me;

WEEKLY BOAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 7.
1—Sunday—Septuagesima Sunday. St. Bridget, Virgin (Patroness of Ireland).
2—Monday—Purification of the B. V. M. Candlemas Day.
3—Tuesday—Chair of St. Peter at Rome (Jan 18) St. Blaise, Bishop and Martyr.
4—Wednesday—St. Andrew Corsini, Bishop and Confessor.
5—Thursday—St. Agatha, Virgin and Martyr.
6—Friday—St. Titus, Bishop and Confessor. St. Dorothy, Virgin and Martyr.
7—Saturday—St. Romuald, Abbot.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....JANUARY 31, 1874.

A Welcome New Year's Gift.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 31, 1873.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MONITOR — Dear Sir: Wishing with pleasure to contribute in the best manner in which THE MONITOR has been conducted for the interests of Catholicity during the past few years, I request you will increase my subscription from one to three copies for the next year. Yours truly in Christ.

J. S. ALEMANY, A. S. F.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

It must be apparent, we think, to every observant person that a movement for the establishment of compulsory education throughout the Union is in the immediate future. There are at the present time a great many indications visible, and they are increasing almost daily. The number of leading articles in the press advocating the compulsory system, and the multitude of pamphlets devoted to explanation of its alleged excellencies, are significant symptoms of the intentions of its champions. There can be no doubt, then, that this movement will agitate State after State until it overlaps the whole Republic. The minds of the people are being prepared for it, and, beyond question, it will be supported by an immense amount of public approbation.

This coming agitation may seem harmless enough—to the judgment of many it may appear even desirable; but if its cause be examined closely its true character will be disclosed. The end sought by the advocates of compulsory education, which they hardly pretend to conceal, is the destruction of religious teaching, and the permanent establishment of secularism as a national institution. It is expected, of course, that the latter system will tell against Catholicity; and, indeed, that constitutes its chief attraction in the eyes of its principal advocates. Therefore, compulsory education is really meant to be the beginning of a persecution of the Church, which, if circumstances turn out favorable, may ultimately be pushed to the extreme of Bismarckian despotism. Some of our readers may think it strange, and perhaps even unwarranted, that we should imagine for a moment that religious persecution could ever be set on foot in this free country. If it were brought before the people as a persecution, or if its object were openly avowed, we make no doubt it would be indignantly resented by an overwhelming majority of our citizens; but danger is not to be prevented in quite a different light, and made apparent as if it were simply a movement against crime and ignorance.

Catholics have not the slightest objection to urge against compulsory education on its own merits; on the contrary, indeed, they are just as warm supporters of it as the mass of any other Christian denomination. For our own part we unhesitatingly profess it almost indispensable for the maintenance of our republican institutions, and consequently entitled to the approval of all patriotic citizens. But the question entirely hinges on the point, what kind of education it is that should be made compulsory? We know that the secularists will, with one voice, exclaim "Non-sectarian, of course," and that finishes the discussion so far as Catholics are concerned. We must from the very outset be reckoned an undeviating opponent of the intended movement in favor of education divorced from religion. The Sovereign Pontiff has declared, not once, but repeatedly, that education separated by religion is dangerous to faith and morals. His pronouncement is final for us, because we know that it has been inspired by divine wisdom. But even if it were not final, it is very pardonable for us to differ with him on such a subject, the speeches and writings of the secularists would compel us to acknowledge the correctness of his decision.

Speaking only a few days ago, at the London meeting in support of the German persecution, an American eulogized the public school system of this country as the best opponent of "Ultramontanism." This was, manifestly, tantamount to an assertion that non-sectarian education militates against Catholicity. And some months previously, a Protestant divine in New York excitingly declared that these same public schools had taken millions away from "Romanism." Evidences like these might be adduced without number, but they are not necessary. Now, we would ask any intelligent and fair-minded man, no matter of what creed or nationality, what attitude could Catholics assume towards a system of education which, according to the statements of both their friends and foes, will act injuriously upon the prospects of their Church? The answer, certainly, would be that it would be preposterous to expect them to act otherwise than the members of any other religious denomination would act under similar circumstances. Yet, so deep-seated and inveterate are the prejudices entertained against us by prominent journalists and politicians, that they actually find fault with and denounce us for doing that which they would do themselves if forced into the same position. They will not allow us the liberty exercised by themselves, although they are incessantly prating about freedom, progress, enlightment, and so forth.

The injustice with which the Catholic side of the education controversy is invariably treated becomes painfully apparent when we read the publications of the secularist party. Because we object to compulsory education, of the kind they want to force upon us, they cry out that we are opposed to all education, and reproach us with wishing to ignorance. This is about as fair and as logical as it would be to charge a man who refused to wear a red coat with wanting to go naked! And yet it is the full sum and substance of nine-tenths of the anti-Catholic diatribes which we find in pamphlets and newspapers. The utter groundlessness of the charge may be gathered from the unquestioned fact that there is no religious denomination in America which has spent one-fourth as much upon schools and colleges as the Catholics, although they are, as a body, the least wealthy section of the population. Moreover, our schools are decidedly the best conducted and the most successful in the country. Notwithstanding all the money which is levished upon the different State educational institutions, there is not one of them which can compare, in turning out finished scholars, either male or female, with the convents and colleges maintained by Catholics. But then the former are contained at the expense of the people, and cost the individuals who send their children thither little or nothing, their influence is immensely hostile to Catholicity, and these two things are their great recommendation.

We have been led into these remarks by the perusal of a pamphlet, written by Mr. DEXTER A. HAWKINS, entitled, "Report of the New York City Council of Political Reform on Compulsory Education." With the pamphlet itself and its effects it contains we shall deal in our next issue.

THE NEXT WAR IS EUROPE.

When will the next war in Europe take place? That is the question which many shrewd journalists and politicians are discussing at the present time. All seem to be of opinion that it will come soon. Some assert that it will be declared in the course of the ensuing spring or summer; while others maintain that hostilities will be deferred until next year. A few of the more sanguine among the advocates of peace venture to say that there may be no crash of contending armies before the middle of 1876; but their opinions are only ridiculed by the majority of those who cast the political horoscope of the Old World. There is, consequently, a profound and almost universal belief that the tranquillity of Europe will, before long, be disturbed by a gigantic struggle between the great powers. This coming war, like the last, will be fought mainly by Prussia against France, and will be waged for the utter destruction of the latter nation.

When BISMARCK had exacted the huge war indemnity from his conquered adversary, he imagined he had effectually crippled France, for twenty years at the very least, and removed all possibility of her being an obstacle in the way of German designs during that time. The enormous sum of money was paid before it was due, and the wonderful vitality and recuperative energy exhibited by that country, have disagreeably surprised the German Chancellor, and convinced him that he had only performed half the task he undertook in 1870. He has evidently made up his mind to finish it, and that speedily, at all hazards. But he has proved enough to perceive that the result of his last war, long and carefully planned as it had been, was to a very great extent a matter of accident, and he will not dare again to pit Prussia alone and single-handed against France. He knows too well that it is not very likely that the corruption, weakness, inefficiency and disorganization which disgraced the army of France during the last years of the Empire, and which were the real causes of Lieber William's triumphs, will exist in the legions he will have to cope with in the next battles. So he is searching for allies. BISMARCK has found one already, and that one is worthy of him—Italy. The cordiality of the relations existing between Prussia and Italy is notorious to all the world. German generals have traveled all through the Peninsula inspecting the Italian army, into which the Prussian drill and discipline have been lately introduced. All VICTOR EMMANUEL'S foundries are engaged in casting cannon; all his arsenals are crammed with arms and ammunition; his fleet is now at its full war strength. Italy is completely bankrupt, and cannot afford to spend a cent upon empty parade, so that all these preparations body something serious. Moreover, the newspapers which dare not print a line displeasing to the Government, under pain of instant suppression, teem with articles abusive of France and laudatory of Prussia.

What part will Italy play in the coming war? A very important one, indeed, at least in the beginning. It is to her lot that the declaration of hostilities will fall, and Prussia will make her appearance in the field merely as her ally. The pretexts for such a declaration can be found at any moment in circumstances arising out of the anti-religious spoliations now being carried on by the Italian Government. In dealing with the property of French subjects it will be easy for VICTOR EMMANUEL'S Ministers to give reasons for remonstrance; and then the cry of unwarranted interference can be raised. France will then be menaced very into the championship of "Ultramontanism," as anti-clericals term any tendency to give the Church fair play or justice. For, let it be well understood, the approaching war is to be inaugurated with the cry "Liberalism against Ultramontanism"—that is to say, a directly religious issue will be raised. This trick will throw all the sympathy and support of the secret societies and the anti-Catholic organizations, which are extremely powerful, into the scale against France. The latter will be reproached with amendments to suit the new circumstances. How far this unholy alliance will be successful it is impossible to foresee. France, too, very likely, will have allies, for without them her defeat would be inevitable; but what nation would be willing to assist her in such a conflict it is not easy to determine.

The persecution of the Church waged so relentlessly by BISMARCK may perhaps compel the German Catholics to take sides with France; but this is doubtful. If the Emperor of Austria were not so cowardly and weak-minded he would congregate in an alliance with France his only chance of recovering his lost prestige, and would gladly embrace an opportunity of reversing the verdict of Sadowa. Spain is so entangled in domestic troubles that it is not probable that she will, in the short space of a year or two, be in a position to put an army in the field outside her own boundaries. Russia would have no objection to draw the sword against Germany if she could see anything more substantial than the glory of victories to be gained thereby. But by no means impossible, nevertheless, that the latter may send his legions to the assistance of France.

Such are the speculations indulged in by intelligent and far-seeing journalists, and they may be in the main correct; however, they will have to be greatly modified by circumstances.

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

We have received three copies of a little pamphlet entitled "The Chinese Question from a Christian Standpoint," purporting to be a translation by the Rev. O. GIBSON from an authentic document. At the end are inscribed the euphonious names of LAU YONG, YAN KAU, LIP YUE, LAI POON and CHUNG LEONG, representing, we presume, the Celestial gentlemen who are to be credited with the authorship. As we do not happen to have any personal acquaintance with these distinguished worthies of the great CONFUCIUS, we cannot speak authoritatively as to their literary attainments, or presume to pass upon their ability to write this or any other pamphlet. However, we have never seen the original of Mr. GIBSON'S translation; though, with shame be it confessed, we would not, were it going a lamentable omission in our youthful studies, be able to read it if we did. But a careful perusal of the pamphlet forwarded to us impresses us most strongly with the idea that Mr. GIBSON either wrote the original document, or else very assiduously "crammed" the above-mentioned Celestials before they wrote it. For it undoubtedly reads much more like the production of wretchedly fanatical Yankee than that of half a dozen Chinese mandarins. The latter we would credit with some intelligence and a certain amount of common sense; while the prejudices of the former will not allow him possess either of these desirable endowments.

When we assure our readers that "The Chinese Question from a Chinese Standpoint," is singularly devoid of marks of intelligence or common sense, we need not indicate more clearly the conclusion to which we want to push our argument. Here, for example, is a little extract which shows that LAU YONG and his brethren cannot have had some training in the Irishmans Know-Nothing school: "From Europe you receive annually an immigration of 400,000, among whom, judging from what we have observed here, are many—perhaps one-third—who are vagabonds and scoundrels, and plotters against your national and religious institutions. These, with all the evils they bring, you receive with open arms, and since great is the right of suffrage and not seldom elect them to office." The propriety and the probability of SICKLES and STEWART street Celestials characterizing our Irish European immigrants as "vagabonds" and "scoundrels," must be patent to every one; while the delicate finishing touch of styling them "plotters" against the national and religious institutions of the country, is the very thing that would be expected from devout worshipers of Josh.

To the wholesale striking of the Mongolian tribe, to which great part of the pamphlet is devoted, we can have no objection, because it is fair and legitimate enough. We have no fault to find with an endeavor to prove that Christianity is perfectly favorable and willing to take their share of the public taxation. We must even bestow commendation upon the protest against the calumnies, which are to very many of such class too often treated by the vicious among our population, as well as upon the outcry against the special legislation attempted some time ago by the Supervisors, in a most ridiculous shape, but, in the navy, by time; and at many army posts without noise or labor, men are compelled to be present at what one or other of these chaplains may be pleased to consider "religious services." For Catholics—who form a large portion of army and navy—voluntary attendance at these services is against their conscience, and so helps to make bad men of them, while it is not even the Constitutional guarantee of liberty of conscience. But if officers or men are strict Baptists or strict Presbyterians or strict Protestants Episcopalians or professed believers in the Trinity, or professed doubters of the Divinity of Christ, each their rights of conscience will be infringed so often as they are compelled to attend the performances of a preacher of a sect fundamentally different. And it is an outrage on our boasted "liberty before the law" to compel men that believe in no religion to go through the mockery of attendance on any.—N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

---

The Rev. J. A. Reichford, O.P., of St. Vincent Ferrer's Church, New York, has been elected first Provincial of the Dominican Order in America, and is to sail for Rome on the 'nose.

A Good Movement.

A new Catholic Total Abstinence Society has been organized in this city, at St. Joseph's Church, Tenth street, by the boys of the parish under the age of twenty-one years. The Society adopts the principles of the C. T. A. Union of America, to which it will be immediately affiliated through the St. Joseph's T. A. Society already existing in the parish. The object of this movement is to preserve the members of the Society from the degradation to which the young men of this city are lowering themselves. The demon of intemperance seems to be the principal cause of the bad, immoral character of our rising generation. Under the influence of drink they visit dives and dens of infamy, associate with the depraved, offer unwarranted insults to the virtuous, and make night hideous with their expressions and blasphemous yells. The daily papers prove the fact. To such a degree does it seem to lead them on, that they not only steal, but also destroy property to procure the poisonous draught; and even attempts in the line of manslaughter, arsons in their efforts to procure it. Under its intoxicating influence those young men diffuse around them an immoral atmosphere that is rapidly corrupting the juvenile members of our community. A suppression of this evil would seem to relieve the pulpit, press and courts of justice of our city of an immense burden, which their combined efforts at present are incapable of performing—namely, the reformation of our boys. Hence, it was a pleasing sight to see about forty members of the young men assembled in the church on Sunday last, and there solemnly pledge themselves before God and their friends to refrain from intoxicating drink in any shape, and then with their characters established by the privilege of renewing their pledge. The unfavorable weather did not prevent a large number of spectators being present.

An eloquent address was delivered on the occasion by Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, to which he laid before them the great blessings and benefits that will accrue to those here and hereafter from their present course of action, and congratulated them on being the nucleus of so worthy a movement.

Father Caillagher next addressed them, and dilated on the evils of intemperance witnessed by him in the several missions he has officiated in during the long course of his labors in the parish. After the address the boys approached the altar and took the pledge from the Rev. A. Cullen, Chaplain of the Society. The choir of the Christian Brothers prepared choice selections for the occasion.

The "Baltimore Mirror."

The Baltimore Mirror is certainly one of the ablest Catholic newspapers published in the United States. Its articles have the true Catholic ring about them, and are, moreover, liberal without being unbridled in spirit. Therefore it is that it has always been one of our most valued contemporaries and a welcome visitor in our sanctum. But it will be more welcome than ever hereafter, as we understand that since the beginning of the present year its editorial department has been under the charge of Dr. John Charles Waters, whose name as a writer is a sufficient bold word to all acquainted with Irish national literature during the last fifteen years. Dr. Waters is a deeply-read scholar, and a writer of rare power and good-humor. His pen has always been wielded in a good cause, and faith and fatherland owe a great deal to his versatile talent. As an essayist, poet and historian he has done a great service, even among the most highly-gifted of his fellow-countrymen. We heartily congratulate our Baltimore contemporary upon this addition to its staff. It has, indeed, succeeded in getting the right man into the right place. Long may it prosper.

The Establishment of Religion by Law in the United States.

It is not generally known, perhaps, that the sum of about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars a year is paid to fifty-eight chaplains in the army and navy of the United States. This, we believe, is against the first amended Article of the United States Constitution, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." In the present talk in Congress about curtailing expenses, here is one most useless, not to say offensive, outlay that might well be dispensed with. It is not necessary to go into the details as to the comparative number of these chaplains to inspire any respect for religion in the army posts and on the ships of war to which they are appropriated. It is enough to say that the great majority of soldiers and sailors look on them as a nuisance, while to very many of each class attendance on any religious services any of these chaplains could render would be their least religion. Here is a chance for saving. It is not only a waste of $120,000, but also a positive injury to religion, in a most ridiculous shape, but, in the navy, by time; and at many army posts without noise or labor, men are compelled to be present at what one or other of these chaplains may be pleased to consider "religious services." For Catholics—who form a large portion of army and navy—voluntary attendance at these services is against their conscience, and so helps to make bad men of them, while it is not even the Constitutional guarantee of liberty of conscience. But if officers or men are strict Baptists or strict Presbyterians or strict Protestants Episcopalians or professed believers in the Trinity, or professed doubters of the Divinity of Christ, each their rights of conscience will be infringed so often as they are compelled to attend the performances of a preacher of a sect fundamentally different. And it is an outrage on our boasted "liberty before the law" to compel men that believe in no religion to go through the mockery of attendance on any.—N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

---

D. J. O'Dea is erecting a block of handsome residences on Mission street, near Eighth.

Priests in Irish Politics.

The annexed letter, from Mr. A. M. Sullivan, editor of the Dublin Nation, appears in a recent number of the New York Herald:

NATION OFFICE, DUBLIN, Dec. 31, 1873.

To the Editor of the Herald: Your Dublin Commissioner, who recently visited Ireland to investigate and report to you upon the Home Rule question, while necessarily confessing his account of a rather protracted interview with me, has, quite unintentionally, conveyed inaccurately the substance of one portion of our conversation. I allude to that which dealt with the past and present position and influence of the Catholic clergy in Irish politics.

His questions were very searchingly directed, and pressed as to the like very prevalent in England—that the Catholic clergy exercised a despotic power over their flocks in political affairs, compelling them, by spiritual influence, to vote in blind and unreasoning submission to the dictates of the Bishop or priest. I pointed out that the fact the Catholic clergy undoubtedly were followed with unquestioning obedience and undoubting adherence in all our past political struggles, was, in fact, our only leaders, visible or actual, had direct or indirect, to do with this. But I added him, I should hope, that this was the loyalty and discipline, the trust of well-proved confidence and affection, and the obedience of free will, and not the blind submission of slaves. I explained to my visitor that the penal times (many of the effects of which still survive) how it came to pass that our clergy were absolutely necessitated to discharge for us those onerous functions in political matters, which, in every land of free citizenship, are performed by the members of the professional class. Here, in Ireland, we have been largely denied access to the avenues of power and profit, and all the time have been taken by the Saxon ruler from the ranks of our people. Hence, it was a pleasing sight to see about forty members of the young men assembled in the church on Sunday last, and there solemnly pledge themselves before God and their friends to refrain from intoxicating drink in any shape, and then with their characters established by the privilege of renewing their pledge. The unfavorable weather did not prevent a large number of spectators being present.

An eloquent address was delivered on the occasion by Brother Justin, President of St. Mary's College, to which he laid before them the great blessings and benefits that will accrue to those here and hereafter from their present course of action, and congratulated them on being the nucleus of so worthy a movement.

Father Caillagher next addressed them, and dilated on the evils of intemperance witnessed by him in the several missions he has officiated in during the long course of his labors in the parish. After the address the boys approached the altar and took the pledge from the Rev. A. Cullen, Chaplain of the Society. The choir of the Christian Brothers prepared choice selections for the occasion.

The "Baltimore Mirror."

The Baltimore Mirror is certainly one of the ablest Catholic newspapers published in the United States. Its articles have the true Catholic ring about them, and are, moreover, liberal without being unbridled in spirit. Therefore it is that it has always been one of our most valued contemporaries and a welcome visitor in our sanctum. But it will be more welcome than ever hereafter, as we understand that since the beginning of the present year its editorial department has been under the charge of Dr. John Charles Waters, whose name as a writer is a sufficient bold word to all acquainted with Irish national literature during the last fifteen years. Dr. Waters is a deeply-read scholar, and a writer of rare power and good-humor. His pen has always been wielded in a good cause, and faith and fatherland owe a great deal to his versatile talent. As an essayist, poet and historian he has done a great service, even among the most highly-gifted of his fellow-countrymen. We heartily congratulate our Baltimore contemporary upon this addition to its staff. It has, indeed, succeeded in getting the right man into the right place. Long may it prosper.

The Establishment of Religion by Law in the United States.

It is not generally known, perhaps, that the sum of about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars a year is paid to fifty-eight chaplains in the army and navy of the United States. This, we believe, is against the first amended Article of the United States Constitution, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." In the present talk in Congress about curtailing expenses, here is one most useless, not to say offensive, outlay that might well be dispensed with. It is not necessary to go into the details as to the comparative number of these chaplains to inspire any respect for religion in the army posts and on the ships of war to which they are appropriated. It is enough to say that the great majority of soldiers and sailors look on them as a nuisance, while to very many of each class attendance on any religious services any of these chaplains could render would be their least religion. Here is a chance for saving. It is not only a waste of $120,000, but also a positive injury to religion, in a most ridiculous shape, but, in the navy, by time; and at many army posts without noise or labor, men are compelled to be present at what one or other of these chaplains may be pleased to consider "religious services." For Catholics—who form a large portion of army and navy—voluntary attendance at these services is against their conscience, and so helps to make bad men of them, while it is not even the Constitutional guarantee of liberty of conscience. But if officers or men are strict Baptists or strict Presbyterians or strict Protestants Episcopalians or professed believers in the Trinity, or professed doubters of the Divinity of Christ, each their rights of conscience will be infringed so often as they are compelled to attend the performances of a preacher of a sect fundamentally different. And it is an outrage on our boasted "liberty before the law" to compel men that believe in no religion to go through the mockery of attendance on any.—N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

---

The Rev. J. A. Reichford, O.P., of St. Vincent Ferrer's Church, New York, has been elected first Provincial of the Dominican Order in America, and is to sail for Rome on the 'nose.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

The deaths in this city in 1873 were four thousand.

Half a million dollars worth of tea passed East from this city last week.

During the current month $1,087,160 in dividends has been paid by local incorporations.

The California Market on California street is talked of as a desirable site for the new Postoffice.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's office will be open on the 3d February at the old stand on Sacramento street.

A Californian now in Japan writes to his friends in this city that there are many Americans in Japan who wish they were out of it.

There were 466 inmates in the City and County Hospital last Saturday, and 266 in the Almshouse.

The amount of money on deposit in the ten Savings Banks of this State, outside the city, is $19,263,762.

Three hundred thousand dollars in silver, in half dollars, quarters and dimes, were shipped East on Monday to the Sub-Treasury in New York.

The Academy of Sciences has removed from Clay street, and is now established in the chamber on the southwest corner of California and Dupont street.

The Odd Fellows' Association protest against a bill now before the Legislature to grant the use of lands near their cemetery to the Bay District Fair Association.

The Oriental carriage manufacturing company shipped a carriage by the Panama steamer of last Wednesday for Senator Sharon, now at Washington City.

The "Macgregor," the first vessel of the new Australian line, is in port, and will sail for Melbourne and Australian ports next Saturday.

Within the past 4 years ago, when the present Postmaster-General came into office, the annual expenses of his department were $15,000,000, and now are $35,000,000.

The Japanese Government has imposed a tax of $1 per month on rabbits. This is to be levied on those who raise a large number to their own use, and $3 per month on those who raise them for sale.

The Chinese manufacturing company shipped a carriage by the Panama steamer of last Wednesday for Senator Sharon, now at Washington City.

The "Macgregor," the first vessel of the new Australian line, is in port, and will sail for Melbourne and Australian ports next Saturday.

Within the past 4 years ago, when the present Postmaster-General came into office, the annual expenses of his department were $15,000,000, and now are $35,000,000.

The Japanese Government has imposed a tax of $1 per month on rabbits. This is to be levied on those who raise a large number to their own use, and $3 per month on those who raise them for sale.

The Board of Supervisors, at its session last Monday evening, ordered bills to be paid to the amount of $28,589 25. They removed John Burke Pailips from the office of Receiving Attorney, which he has held for the last two years, and appointed E. P. Hutchins, ex-Justice of the Peace, to succeed him.

Father Hugh Gallagher organized a Youths' Temperance Society last Sunday, to be composed of young men and boys under twenty-one years. They pledge themselves to abstain from drinking alcoholic liquors of any kind, and they sign their name to the pledge before the altar of God.

A report has come to this city from Sacramento that the Regents of the State University contemplate commencing a suit against Dr. Merritt of Oakland, in connection with the expenditures of money for the Agricultural Building. They would not have said long if Dr. Merritt were a poor Irish contractor.

A question was submitted to the City and County Attorney whether the Board of Health or the Board of Supervisors has the power of removing employés from the City and County Hospital and Almshouse, and he decided that the Board of Health may discharge medical employés, but all other employés may be discharged by the Board of Supervisors.

Judge Sanky, of the County Court, decided last week that a married ticket marked "Good for this day only," is not good for another day. English Courts appear to have more money paid for a trip than we do. Here a ticket is good for one trip at any time, and that a conductor cannot restrict a passenger as to time nor keep money without giving value. Some of them have gone so far as to deny the right of a railroad company to demand money until the services are rendered.

---

The San Diego World of the 20th says: "The storm of the last few days has been an eventful one. The whole Mission Valley was flooded to the foothills. The waters covered the whole flat around Oldtown, and the principal thoroughfare into the Bay and into False Bay. Oldtown, Bugdey, was overrun with rabbits, which did not seek out of their burrows, that which resbed to the habitations of man for protection. Multitudes of snakes made their way to the same refuge. A considerable portion of the railway track was swept away, which ought to suggest to the railway folks that it would be well to raise their grade, and to lead their aid to the turning of the San Diego river."

DEATH.

HAMLOCK—At the Convent of Notre Dame, Mission Dolores, January 31, Mary Ellen Hamlock, aged 15 years and 10 months. [Newspapers please copy.]

MCBRIDE—In this city, January 31, Samuel McBride, a native of Dublin, Ireland, aged 67 years.

FOLEY—In this city, January 27, John Foley, aged 37 years and 6 months.

DUGNNOR—In this city, January 26, Thomas O'Connor, a native of Cavan, Ireland, aged 50 years.

BIELLY—In this city January 27, Margaret Reilly, a native of the county Meath, Ireland, aged 52 years.

MCLEARY—In this city, January 30, David, youngest son of Robert and Catherine Sullivan, aged 1 year, 1 month and 21 days.

COLLINS—In this city, January 31, Mary Collins, a native of Ireland, aged 70 years.

DUNNIGAN—In this city, January 23, Annie Dunnigan, a native of Carnaghan, Ireland, aged 30 years.

HOYT—In this city, January 31, John Hoyt, a native of county Kilkenny, Ireland, aged 70 years.

MURPHY—In this city, January 15, Mary Murphy, only child of Michael and Mary Murphy, aged 2 years, 7 months and 24 days.

CONLON—In this city, January 30, Margaret, infant daughter of James and Mary Conlon, aged 1 month and 20 days.

CONROY—In this city, January 31, Bernard Conroy, a native of Londonderry, Ireland, aged 36 years.

MCKETTRICK—In this city, January 31, M. A., daughter of George B. and Annie M. Bonnyer, aged 1 year, 7 months and 24 days.

MCCARTHY—At the residence of his father, in this city, January 31, Jeremiah McCarthy, a native of Bantry, county Cork, Ireland, aged 24

CUI BONO?

Pale star, if star thou be, that dar'st
So fain to shine, though far apart
From all the saintly pearls!
Then whence the eye can receive discerning? who hath set thee there to burn
Among the spheres?

Then needn't look in—the firmament
Is full, and there want never more!
For (perfect gorgeous sight!)
The eight hath centered all her pearls,
And, prism'd on her canopy, hath
Her visage to array.

The eight needs not thy lurid ray!
Then stand not where in her vest to gem
Or make the twilight fair;
Why enter terra to flout us so?
What mean ther doth look up to thee
In this despair?

Mem-ories of one, nor are we shall chance
To light on thee; no curious glance
Thy meditations bring;
No lonely pilgrim pause to catch
Thy parting ray, nor lover watch
For thy return.

Oh! leave the world that large thee not—
For who shall mark thy vacant spot?
Oh! drop into the pond!
That waits to take thee out of sight,
Bathe thee in glare of tender bright!
And really crowd!

I may say so, if I would, return
Into the dark, or cease to burn
My spark of light divine;
For it is that in my lamp distils
The sacred oil, He gently wills
That I should shine.

I live not in the house of spheres,
The eternal splendor that endures
The night is near; but untire-
Finding strange bliss in perfect quiet,
To keep with those few drops of balm
My flame alive.

It may be that some vagrant world,
Or land of darkness, need a shield
Through misty gloom or space,
Subscribers by me and by Him held
It ever, and the goal that ends
It unless race.

I know not—me this only care
Concerns, that I forever bear
My silver lamp on high,
Nor fill to God a lagged flame,
Because on earth I cannot shine
A partial eye."
—Oxford World for February.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Crime in Ireland.

We cannot help feeling a little dismay at the constant repetition of the phrases "Action fighting is the county Limerick," and "rowdyism in Dublin," which we meet in the Irish telegrams. It is quite true that when we come to the statistics of crime upon the whole year the country usually presents a favorable record. Whether the year is compared with the past years, or whether Ireland is compared with England and Scotland, it is certain that our total is not of a disheartening character. But it makes it the more sad that one provincial locality, should by preservation of the barbarous and incomprehensible custom of faction-fighting, make itself so painfully conspicuous while the metropolis, we believe, adds nearly as much to the catalogue of crimes which are generally distinguished as of the order "rowdy" as all the rest of the country together. But for these exceptional items Ireland would hold a place altogether unapproached in Europe in freedom from crimes of turbulence. The same cause, no doubt, is at work in both localities. Its author is their what could be called a distinctly criminal class. The offenses of which the lane of Limerick both wrote and whence the Phœnix Park murders sprung, are such as could only be made desperate by motives far beyond their love or capacity.—Cork Examiner, January 3.

The Limerick Election.

The Limerick election is the question of the hour. A splendid opportunity has been afforded to the men of that historic county of striking a blow for their country, and we delighted to say that the officers entrusted with the general management of affairs by assembled them to the crisis. As we write, Mr. Gray is the only candidate in the field before the public, but others whose claims must meet readers' eyes to-day, and a better man with national views never stood into the field to battle for the national freedom than Mr. Gray. On New Year's Day a meeting was to be held under the auspices of the Farmers' Club, at which delegates from every parish in the county were to be selected, and a permanent committee for the ensuing year of the week nominations to be made that the result would be the assembling of a patriot triad in the councils of Limerick, and not found wanting, a man to be found in the people, and with them in their every Irish and aspiration—Mr. William Healy O'Sullivan, of Kilmallock.—Dublin Nation, January 3.

Father O'Keeffe.

Father O'Keeffe has written a most characteristic letter to the Education Commissioners. "Thanks to my threat of proceeding against you," he abruptly commences, "for the recovery of the £10 a-year due for the services of John Sweeny, as monitor in one of my schools, the money has been paid by your district inspector, and Sweeny is completely bribed." The pithy and emphatic history runs of this sentence is kept by the "Follow me now," he says, "into the station you with an action at law in the case of Anne Dunne, to whom you owe £5 for the half year ending October 1st, 1872. After settling this account, you will still be owing me more than £600," and adding that he is about to have one particular item in this claim brought before a judge and a jury, he expresses a hope that "the jury will, in defiance of any technicality that may be started, find a verdict for the plaintiff against internal injustice."—Dublin Nation, January 3.

Christmas in Dublin.

The unusual mildness and, Scenes of the weather, so providential for the poor, helped to throw all the churches of the city, which, after six o'clock in the morning up to noon, had a succession of Masses, at the earlier one of which the majority of the people, who are fond of attending Confession. In many of the churches the Te Deum, in thanksgiving for the blessings of the past year, was sung at 6 o'clock on Sunday, December 21, but in the Pro-Cathedral, the church of St. Francis Xavier, and some others, it was sung on Sunday, the 28th. Both Friday and Saturday were kept as holidays in nearly all the public offices, so that the employés had a fair time for recreation. It appears from the police returns that there were a good many cases of drunkenness, but something of the sort may be expected at such a festive gathering among a population in the metropolitan police district of 300,000 people.

Miscellaneous Items.

On the 2d of January the Guardians of the Mallow Union, received another communication from the Local Government Board in reference to the proposed introduction of nuns into the workhouse hospital. The Board repeated that they could not sanction any appointment which might be made without a previous advertisement soliciting of open competition. In the course of the discussion upon the letter Sir Denham Norreys frankly stated that the Protestant Guardians were opposed to the admission of the nuns, and observing that the Board was equally divided in point of religion, there being twenty three Catholic Guardians opposed to it in vain to press the matter to an issue which would produce unpleasant sectarian feelings. Mr. Nunan declined to withdraw the proposal, observing that he was actuated solely by solicitude for the interests of the sick inmates, who would receive more careful nursing from the nuns at a less cost to the ratepayers than that of the present staff.—Cork Examiner.

We are happy to learn that the loss of life by the recent boat accident in Cork harbor, though very deplorable, was not as great as was reported. The boatman Boughan and three of the coast-guards, named Ahern, Bentley and Pool, were picked up alive by the fishermen who put out at great personal risk to rescue the drowning men. The persons lost were Mary Sheehan, Catherine Murphy, Patrick Walsh and John Murphy. The bodies of Mary Sheehan and John Murphy have been recovered. An inquest was held on January 2d, but the survivors were unable to be present to give evidence, being still suffering from the shock, and the immediate cause of the accident was not stated, but a surmise was offered that the boat, not having had sail enough by reason of the calm, was overpowered. The jury warmly recommended the services displayed by the fishermen, and recommended them to the consideration of the naval authorities.

Mr. W. H. O'Sullivan has issued an address to the electors of Limerick. He professes that he will unflinchingly support the Home Rule programme as laid down at the Conference held in Dublin, and adopt any course of Parliamentary action calculated to convince British statesmen of the necessity and wisdom of granting the just and reasonable demands of the Irish nation. He warmly indorses the demand for denominational education, and urges that nothing short of fixity of tenure and valuation of rents will be regarded as a final settlement of the land question, and advocates measures for the relief of the laborers, whose condition he describes as a disgrace to a civilized country. Mr. O'Sullivan pledges himself to spare no exertions to procure the release of the political prisoners.—Cork American-Examiner. Mr. Michael Ryan, he visited Rockhill yesterday, and was greeted with marked enthusiasm by the people, who are thus hearty promises of support.—Cork Examiner.

ITALY.

Death of Bixio.

General Nino Bixio, whose decease by cholera in Sumatra has been announced by telegraph, was the Lieutenant General commanding the second division of the Italian army at the assault of Rome in September, 1870. His division had twenty-four pieces of artillery, which seat a storm of bullets into the Trastevere and inflicted great damage. This bombardment from the heights of the Villa Pamphili met with scarcely any opposition from the five or six old cannons of the Pontifical army. Bixio was born at Genoa in 1821, and served in the Piedmontese navy. He gave up the royal service in 1846 and took command of a trading vessel. Three years later he took an active part in the reform agitation; in 1848 he fought against Austria, and in 1849 he was with the Roman Republic against France. Upon the restoration of the Pope, Bixio took himself to trade, and resulted in a Genoese merchantman for the south. But in 1859 he returned in company with Garibaldi and obtained the rank of Colonel. Assisted by Cavour he took an active part in the invasion of Sicily in the spring of 1860, and commanded the Piedmontese one of the two ships which conveyed the Garibaldians to Marsala. Bixio commanded one of the assaulting columns at Palermo, where he was wounded. He distinguished himself likewise in Calabria at the capture of Reggio, and in the battle of Volturno, where he was nominated Lieutenant-General. Garibaldi, in the Decree of the day of the 19th July, 1860, had raised Bixio from the rank of General of Brigade to that of Major-General. In 1862 Bixio attempted the regular Italian army, and, after the taking of Rome in 1870, he determined for the third time to seek his fortune by sea, and embarked in a trading ship for distant shores. His death at the age of fifty-two years deprives Victor Emmanuel of a brave subject. Bixio was once a Senator of the Kingdom. His family are well-known in mercantile circles at Genoa. One of his brothers, who was in trade in that city, is now in prison at Java for the offense of forging signatures to bills of exchange. Young Bixio is, however, treated differently from most prisoners. He has a room to himself, books and newspapers to read, and is dressed as a private gentleman. In a very clever, and will, probably, be released from his detention before the expiration of his term of imprisonment.—London Tablet, January 3.

The Patron Saint Day of the Pope.

Saturday, the 27th day of December, was the Feast of St. John the Evangelist, the saint whose name the Holy Father bears, and the customary recurring festival was availed of in the latter and happier days of Rome as an occasion for offering the old city's congratulations to Pius IX. Even in the unofficial manner of yesterday, the gloom of '73, with an excommunicated usurper ruling over the ancient holy city, and with a dissipated Court bedding their impious revels in the once sanctified halls of the Quirinal, the faithful people could not restrain the outburst of their enthusiasm, and they hastened in their accustomed numbers to the Vatican, to offer their personal homage on the same good God would spare him for the crowning glory of a miraculously prolonged reign, in the triumph and the peace of His Holy Catholic Church. On the occasion of the presence audiencery, deputations from the Noble Guard, from the soldiers of the Rome, under the presidency of the Marquis Cavalieri, from the Guard of the Vatican Palace, from the Palatine Guard, and from the brave and faithful Swiss guard, presented themselves before the Holy Father, and tendered their tributes of loyalty in, as well as of sympathy and condolence with, the bereaved and illustrious captive. Amidst the same time a deputation from the Belgian Catholics attended at the Vatican, and, with their address of loyalty and attachment, laid at the Holy Father's feet their offering of eighty thousand francs. Close upon the deputation from Belgium followed the Rector of the American College, who brought with him, for the acceptance of the Sovereign Pontiff, a gift for the Peter's Pence of one hundred and twenty five thousand francs in an offering of gold.

Victor Emmanuel Being Good.

The Roman correspondent of the Univers is responsible for the following: "While speaking of Victor Emmanuel, it is only right that I should mention a good deed which he has done. It is positively asserted that he has written to his son the Duke de Poggio Cagand, at Florence, a letter in which he bewails and condemns the excesses committed against the Society of Jesus in that city. In this communication he expresses his desire that the Fathers should be treated as inoffensive citizens, and as men who have labored for the public good. It would seem that the letter has not forgotten that his relative, Charles Emmanuel, died a sainted penitent in the scrivists of the Order, and that the Jesuits were always held in lofty reverence by the best and holiest of his ancestors of the holy and ancient house of Savoy. It is but fair to add that, whether it be true or not that such a letter was written, the Jesuit Fathers who reside at Florence have lately enjoyed an unusual amount of freedom from annoyance."

GERMANY.

Lord Russell and the Prussian Protestants.

The Berlin correspondence of the London press continues to afford the most satisfactory with which the prospect of Lord Russell's intended meeting is regarded by the Prussian Government and the partisans of its policy. Among the latter, the Spener'sche Zeitung points out that the Protestants of Prussia experience no such enthusiasm as that which inspires the author of the Durham letter. "And the reason is that in Germany the fact is notorious, which in this country overlooked," that "the particular policy of which the Roman Catholics complain is only part of a general scheme for the hierarchical authority of whatever kind throughout Prussia is to be reduced to a minimum." The writer finally observes that the claim of the Pope "to a certain defined jurisdiction over all Roman Catholics" is no justification of the recent ecclesiastical policy of the Prussian Government, which, despite the protestations, the obnoxious policy was inaugurated, and, as far as the exigency of that policy is concerned, the objectionable passage might be struck out as irrelevant," and be concluded that if English sympathizers with the Catholic cause had only been able to secure and confirm their sympathy with the Prussian Government in resisting Papal aggression, or in disallowing the pretentions put forth in the Pope's recent letter to the Kaiser, the proceedings will be the display unobjectionable; but they would do well to abstain from commending the measures to an unqualified approval of a particular ecclesiastical policy which stands Prussian Protestants really in the most serious alarm.—London Tablet, January 3.

SWITZERLAND.

The "Correspondance de Genève."

We have often had occasion to be grateful to the Correspondance de Genève for the accurate information on Catholic subjects which we were enabled in this column to impart to Irish Catholic readers. Though the smallest of the journalistic emanations of the Press of Europe, it held its place among the ablest and the most influential. Its promising is its strength, and it does not know that in all the concordats concluded by the Holy See, the Popes have always had to second the efforts of the civil authority. Pius VII., on whom the Correspondance has been complaisant in the necessity of making a concordat with Napoleon, always showed himself inflexible in the first point, and Napoleon never having been able to obtain it, saw himself compelled to introduce it into those organic articles, against which the Holy See has never ceased to protest, and which are a manifest violation of the concordat. It would seem that the Counselors of Brazil are ignorant of all this, and do not doubt that they have a hold over the Holy See the Church can act—namely, the principle of its liberty and of its independence."

Marriage Made Easy.

The news that a second European is about to turn Mahommedan, as a means of solving rude married misery, and of the new sanctioned bigamy, renders a volume by Mr. Shams Churn Sircar on Mahommedan law—"Tagore Law Lectures," just come from the press of Calcutta—very interesting, for it treats at length on Mahommedan marriages. The first "essential" prescribed for matrimony might seem to cynics to preclude the venture altogether, for it is only of bad dower that "the husband's property and the wife's must be sane and discreet." But passing over that initial difficulty, it would seem as if marriage threatened a Mahommedan with more than all the pains of celibacy. Divorce would be next to impossible to escape the meshes which it spreads to catch the unwary. A girl may marry herself by a simple utterance, and only escape the danger by compliciating it with a sneer. If, when she be asked will she marry so and so, she shake her tongue, "in token of respect for the modesty of her sex," and her silence is taken for consent. If she laugh it is the same, provided the man can prove that she is to believe that she is laughing at them in holiness of decorum. Talaks seven and six able and impressive sentences on the doings, the wealth, the temptations, the glories of our days. They have asked the blessing of the Holy Father on the peaceful progress they have marked out for themselves, and that blessing was beautifully, cheerfully, abundantly and effectively given in a letter from the Sovereign Pontiff, bearing date the 6th of the last month. The Pope's paternal affection is now before us, but we must reserve for another day its reproduction in the Catholic Union columns of the Freeman's Journal, again to return our warmest gratitude to the conductors of the Correspondance for the valuable assistance it so often gave to us in carrying out the purpose of the Catholic Union in their effort to furnish accurate information on Catholic subjects; and how it may in many future occasions of inspiring equal y great and constant obligations.—Catholic Union Publication.

The Persecution in the Jura.

The Catholics of Zürich who, as we have said before, are obliged to worship in a room in a café, or beer shop, are collecting money to buy them a church, and many of the Genevese parishes will have to do likewise. In the Jura they are driven to take refuge even in caves and holes in the rocks.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED According to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academical honors. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION.
(Payable in advance.)
Board, Tuition, Washing, and Mending.....$125 00
Music, with use of instrument.....25 00
Use of Library.....2 50

No charge for the French, Spanish and German languages, Drawing, Painting, Sewing and Fancy Needle Work.

The first term of the eighteenth annual session will commence August 1, 1873.

Parents desiring to visit their children will be accommodated at the house of the Superior.

For further particulars apply to the Superioress.

REV. L. GRIFFIN, V. G.
1873-ly

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of St. Dominic, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The plan of education pursued in this Academy includes all the solid and ornamental branches requisite for young ladies. Pupils of all religious denominations will be received, but, for the sake of uniformity, all are required to be present at the regular religious exercises of the house.

The scholastic year, comprising ten months, opens on the 15th of August, and ends about the middle of June. No deduction will be made if the pupil is withdrawn during the session, unless for protracted illness. Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from the date of entrance.

TERMS
Per annum (payable half yearly in advance):
Board and Tuition.....$225 00
Entrance Fee.....5 00
Washing.....24 00
Pupils remaining in the Academy during vacation will be charged $20.
Use of Piano, Drawing and Music form extra charges.
There is a private class for Needle-work, Spanish languages, for her Residence.
Gymnastic exercises are attended to.
Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from the date of entrance.
Visitors are requested not to visit during school hours.
1873 SISTER SUPERIOR.

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Rohnerville, Humboldt County, Cal.

Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
(Payable half-yearly in advance.)
For board, lodging, tuition, washing and mending.....$150 00
Entrance fee, to be paid but once.....10 00
Entrance fee, to be paid only once.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....20 00
Use of Library.....2 00
Day Students.....50 00
Music, Use of Piano, Brass and drawing form extra charges.

The studies will be resumed on the 15th of August, 1871.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on the first Monday of August, 1873.

The course of instruction is under a good Boarding, Mathematical, Classical and Philosophical Education, with a thorough English course, such as parents in California—and thereby bring its advantages within the reach of all.

TERMS.
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, payable semi-annually in advance.....200 00
Music, French and German form extra charges.
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $50.
Payments must be made semi-annually in advance. Parents will pay for medical attendance, and supply bedding and clothing.
Money will not be advanced by the College; for the special wants of pupils, except in case of necessity.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the formation of classes.

REV. J. J. CURRIE, O. S. F.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEGREES CONFERRED
1870-tf REV. JAMES Marcellin, C. M. President.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE,
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA.

Under the management of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus.

THE SANTA CLARA COLLEGE WAS FOUNDED in 1851, and in that year incorporated, with all privileges of a University. Diplomas are given, two Departments—the Classic and Scientific.

The College buildings are large and commodious, while extensive play-grounds, with two covered gymnasiums, a swimming pool, etc., afford every facility for healthful exercise.

The Philosophical Course is a very complete philosophical apparatus, and various collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also, practice schools of Physics, Chemistry and Surveying. Attached to the latter are taught in a thoroughly fitted chemical laboratory.

The Scholastic Year, which is divided into two sessions, commences on the first Monday in August, and closes towards the beginning of June.

TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually, in advance):
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once.....$10
Board, Lodging, Tuition, Washing, and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, Medical Attendance and Medicines, Baths, Use of Library.....$250
Modern Languages, Drawing and Music form extra charges. For Clothing, Books, Pocket-money and the like, no advance made by the Institution.
The next session will open on the 1st of August, 1873.
REV. A. VARSI, S. J., President.

CONVENT OF THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MARY,
SAN JOSE.....CALIFORNIA.

EDUCATION OF YOUNG LADIES
GILROY, SANTA CLARA CO.,
Conducted by the Sisters of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of Mary.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS:
Board, tuition, washing and mending, per annum.....$150 00
Entrance fee, to be paid but once.....10 00
Tuition on piano, per annum.....40 00
Use of Piano.....10 00
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, Fancy Needle-work, Drawing and Painting.
Modern languages, Music and Drawing form extra charges.

TERMS FOR DAY SCHOLARS:
Primary, per month.....$ 1
Preparatory and Senior, per month.....2
Tuition on Piano.....4
No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, Fancy Needle-work, Drawing and Painting.
Modern languages, Music and Drawing form extra charges.
Board, Tuition, Bedding, Coals and Wine without stint, per annum.....$200
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....10
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....10
Use of Library.....2
Day Students.....50
Music, Use of Piano, Brass and drawing form extra charges.

The studies will be resumed on the 15th of August, 1871.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.

ST. VINCENT'S SCHOOL

THIS INSTITUTION IS SITUATED IN SAN Francisco, on Market street, between Fifth and Sixth, delightfully and healthy part of the city, and is conducted by the Sisters of Charity.

The course of instruction embraces the English branches, with a thorough Mathematical education. Also the languages, with extra charges.

TERMS.
(Invariably half yearly in advance):
Board, tuition, bed, bedding, washing, etc., per session.....$100
Music, French and German form extra charges.
Those who spend vacation at the College will be charged $50.
Payments must be made semi-annually in advance. Parents will pay for medical attendance, and supply bedding and clothing.
Money will not be advanced by the College; for the special wants of pupils, except in case of necessity.
No deduction for absence, except in case of protracted illness.
Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the formation of classes.

REV. J. J. CURRIE, O. S. F.

NOTRE DAME ACADEMY,
MISSION DOLORES, SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS ACADEMY IS A BRANCH OF THE Academy of Notre Dame, San Jose, and is under the direction of the same Community. The course of instruction, which embraces the Primary as well as the Elementary and higher departments of education, comprises all the branches, both useful and ornamental, that are usually taught in first-class institutions.

The first term of the Eighth Annual Session will commence August 1, 1873.

Parents desiring to visit their children will be accommodated at the house of the Superioress.

TERMS:
(Invariably in advance):
For quarter session, payable in advance:
Board, tuition, washing, with use of bedding.....$ 60 00
Use of Piano.....15 00
Vocal Music.....5 00
Use of Library.....2 50
Vacation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Terms per month (in advance):
Select Day Scholars—Rhetoric, first and second Grammar Classes.....$1 00
Third and fourth Grammar Classes.....1 00
Preparatory and Primary.....50
Use of Piano, per month, throughout the Classes.....1 00

No extra charge for French, plain and ornamental needlework.

For further particulars apply to the Superioress.
1870-tf

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the convenience of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

Writing proper cards is received on every lunch tonight in the College, our own language receives special attention. The Catholic Youth is thoroughly instructed in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are prefully explained and carefully illustrated.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half-yearly in advance.)
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....20 00
Use of Library.....2 00
Day Students.....50 00
Music, Use of Piano, Brass and drawing form extra charges.

The studies will be resumed on the 15th of August, 1871.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.

MINERS' RUBBER CEMENT.
1876

$5 PER MONTH
PIANOS $6 "
$7 "
TO $8 " $9 "
RENT. $10

Gray's Music Store, 623 & 625 Ch

$10 ANY LADY OR GENTLEMAN in the U. S. A. 21 years of age can now learn Morse Telegraphy and Railroading with a Printing Telegraph Instrument. $5 to pay for everything but new book of instructions. Circulars free. Address, with stamp, Prof. A. B. DODGE, Box 73, West Troy, N. Y. The course of instruction embraces all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$10
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....$ 50
Washing, per quarter.....12 50
Physician's fees (unless it may be preferred to pay the bill in case of sickness) per quarter.....2 50
Use of Piano, per month.....1 00
Vocation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Terms per month (in advance):
Select Day Scholars—Rhetoric, first and second Grammar Classes.....$1 00
Third and fourth Grammar Classes.....1 00
Preparatory and Primary.....50
Use of Piano, per month, throughout the Classes.....1 00

No extra charge for French, plain and ornamental needlework.

For further particulars apply to the Superioress.
1870-tf

EMERSON'S
SINGING SCHOOL
Price 75 cts, or $7 50 Per Do.
Is a Complete, Cheap and Use
Book for Singing Classes.
Now is the time to send, as it has a 12 months' use before it. Specimen pages sent free. Liberal terms to the trade. Address, as above, OLIVER DITSON & CO., C. H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broadway, New York.
1st-tf

GIANT CEMENT!
JUST EXTRAORDINARY AND UNIVERSALLY-needed article for mending Furniture, Crockery, Glassware, Marble, Meerschaum, Ivory, Ornaments, etc.; also, for sporting Leather Belts, Harness, Boots and Shoes, and for many other uses. Every family will want a bottle. It is ready for use, and will stand fire, water, and the test of time. Sold by druggists and dealers generally. Price 25 cents. Manufactured by the GIANT CEMENT COMPANY, No. 27 Beekman street, New York. Sold in San Francisco by Bowen, Shaw, Selling, Crane and Shaw, and wholesale by our agents, Hall's Safe Co., 214 and 216 Battery street, corner Bush. Both Ladies and Gents are put up in this case at 25 cents. Trade supplied by the GIANT CEMENT and MINERS' RUBBER CEMENT, 1876 COMPANY, 27 Beekman street, New York.

MISS KENNEDY,
FASHIONABLE MILLINERY
62 Third Street, Near Missio

INFORM MR. PUBLIC THAT HE CAN BE FOUND AT HIS OLD STAND, Ladies' Misses' and Children's
HAT AND BONNET
Millinery Goods, Flowers, Feathers, &c.
Always on hand, at reasonable rates.
Also, Ladies' and Gents' Straw Hats cleaned, dyed and trimmed in the latest style, at fancy prices for them.

"Civil and Religious Liberty."

There is no cry so fondly and boastingly used as that of "Civil and religious liberty," the glorious principle of the Reformation." It must be admitted that at first impressions there is something extremely faltering and fascinating to the pride of man in this cry of "civil and religious liberty," as if it were a glorious and triumphant victory gained by him over some invisible foe who held the mind of man in a long, subservient and cruel bondage. Liberty is a glorious title, a noble birthright, the counterpart of slavery; but in this instance it is a fatal delusion. If we analyze it we shall find the germ of disease in its very root and principle, because it is grounded upon a false and evil basis. It is not of God, nor is the cry of modern date. It is much older than the Reformation of the sixteenth century. In the Book of Numbers, chapter xvi., we read an awful illustration of it. It is said—"Now Korah, Dathan an Abiram rose up before Moses, with certain of the children of Israel. And they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, You take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them; wherefore, then, lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?" This was literally and virtually a cry for civil and religious liberty. It was an attempt to throw off and discard the authority of Moses and Aaron, as constituted by God, and was a spirit of religious rebellion, "the earth," we read, "opened her mouth and swallowed them up, and there came out a fire from the Lord and consumed two hundred and fifty men that offered incense, and the thousand others that rebelled."

THE SPIRITUAL REVOLT OF THE REFORMERS is precisely similar in spirit and in act with the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram. It was identical with the same spirit—"civil and religious liberty." That liberty was partially accomplished by a higher authority—the Spirit of God—and was a natural sentiment. It is painfully exemplified by the sentiments so frequently expressed with regard to the authority of the Church. They call it "despotical authority"—a usurpation—a tyranny—a thing which has split families—the family of the savage and the civilized—the family of the pagan and the Christian—as regulated and maintained on the principle of authority. It is the law of nature and it is the law of God. The very child, as its reason begins to dawn, is instructed by God in the fifth commandment to decree severe punishments and to hold out the terrors of the law in order to uphold it; and in this he is justified by the acts of the Creator, who, we are sure, will consign to endless punishment those who are guilty of revolting against His decrees.

As to "religious liberty," dissent from Catholicity has now reached its climax—to the end of all finish. Two portions of its followers have now come to discard all religion—I ignore Christianity. The Communists of France and the Internationals of Spain have at last arrived at the full completeness of the principle; they have denounced and cast off both civil and religious authority, and they have shown by their acts that they can, in their civilized way, be greater and more cruel savages than the savages of nature itself; but they are mostly the pioneers of the next generation, it is now proposed, both in England and abroad, that the rising generation should be taught the rudiments of Communism and Socialism systematically, by religion being excluded from being taught to children in the schools, to such a frightful result has this evil principle come. There is at this moment a most iniquitous coalition formed by the powers of darkness combined to put down and crush the only Church.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH,
which professes and maintains the divine precept of authority. She is now suffering a prosecution abroad, from emperors and kings, worse than that carried out against her by the pagan emperors of old, and Protestant England justified, by its alliance, the robberies, fines, imprisonments and banishments of her bishops and clergy are daily occurring because they are faithful to the commands of Jesus Christ.

Never, since the creation of man, has the divine maxim of Jesus Christ, the "wherefore by their fruits you shall know them," been so palpably and fearfully illustrated and represented on so gigantic a scale, as it has been since the existence of Protestantism. If we look into the pages of history for the last three centuries we shall find that the principle of the Reformation has been the promoter and the moving spring of many of the wars and revolutions—the persecution against the blessed and sainted Jesus, and sold unto—them. You take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them; wherefore, then, lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord?" This was literally and virtually a cry for civil and religious liberty. It was an attempt to throw off and discard the authority of Moses and Aaron, as constituted by God, and was a spirit of religious rebellion, "the earth," we read, "opened her mouth and swallowed them up, and there came out a fire from the Lord and consumed two hundred and fifty men that offered incense, and the thousand others that rebelled."

THE SPIRITUAL REVOLT OF THE REFORMERS is precisely similar in spirit and in act with the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram. It was identical with the same spirit—"civil and religious liberty." That liberty was partially accomplished by a higher authority—the Spirit of God—and was a natural sentiment. It is painfully exemplified by the sentiments so frequently expressed with regard to the authority of the Church. They call it "despotical authority"—a usurpation—a tyranny—a thing which has split families—the family of the savage and the civilized—the family of the pagan and the Christian—as regulated and maintained on the principle of authority. It is the law of nature and it is the law of God. The very child, as its reason begins to dawn, is instructed by God in the fifth commandment to decree severe punishments and to hold out the terrors of the law in order to uphold it; and in this he is justified by the acts of the Creator, who, we are sure, will consign to endless punishment those who are guilty of revolting against His decrees.

As to "religious liberty," dissent from Catholicity has now reached its climax—to the end of all finish. Two portions of its followers have now come to discard all religion—I ignore Christianity. The Communists of France and the Internationals of Spain have at last arrived at the full completeness of the principle; they have denounced and cast off both civil and religious authority, and they have shown by their acts that they can, in their civilized way, be greater and more cruel savages than the savages of nature itself; but they are mostly the pioneers of the next generation, it is now proposed, both in England and abroad, that the rising generation

INSURANCE.

THE STATE INVESTMENT
Insurance Company.
FIRE AND MARINE.
Assets.....$325 000
409 CALIFORNIA STREET.
PETER DONAHUE, President.
A. J. BRYANT, Vice-President.
C. H. CUSHING, Sec'y. 1873

FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE UNION
INSURANCE COMPANY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
THE CALIFORNIA LLOYDS.
ESTABLISHED IN 1861.
Nos. 416 and 411 California Street
Cash Capital, - - - - $750,000 Gold.
Assets Exceed - - - $1,000,000 Coin.
FAIR RATES,
PROMPT SETTLEMENT OF LOSSES,
SOLID SECURITY
DIRECTORS:
SAN FRANCISCO.
J Mora Moss, James Otis,
Moses Heller, Henry Bahrs,
H J Crocker, Nicholas Luning,
W W Montagu, John Parrott,
Frederick Game, Milton S Latham,
Adam Grant, Alfred Tubbs,
Antonio Rotoli, Joseph Brandenstein
A Weill, (of the firm of Kohl-
Joseph Seligman, berg, Strauss
W C Ralston, & Co.)
Wm Alvord, T Lemmon Mayer,
J F Houghton, (of the firm of
L. Casserly, T H Goldsberger.
MARYSVILLE:
Peter Denver.
PORTLAND, Or.:
Henry Failing.
NEW YORK.
Bend Brewster, James Phalen.
STEPHEN H TOURNAY, President.
N. G. KITTLE, Vice-President.
CHAS. D. HAVEN, Secretary.
GEO. T. BOMER, Surveyor.

PACIFIC
TEA COMPANY.
OUR SPECIALTIES
COFFEE AND SPICES
THE VERY BEST PLACE
In the City
TO GET TEAS,
COFFEE,
SPICES,
AND
GENERAL GROCERIES.
All our TEAS are warranted to give satisfaction, or the money will be refunded. The fortunes possessed by the Establishment for securing TEAS enables us to undersell any other house in the city. Our Goods are all chosen with a view to their intrinsic and good drinking qualities, rather than low prices.
We are now introducing the new Brand of Tea, FLOWERY FLAGPEKOE, at 50 cents per Pound.
COFFEE.
Old Government Java, 25c. lb.....$1 00
Finest French Breakfast, 3 lbs.....1 00
French Imperial Family, 3 lbs.....1 00

MURPHY BROS.,
Proprietors Continental Steam Coffee and Spice Mills,
759 and 761 Market Street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

C. DESMOND
PRACTICAL HATTER,
No. 5 New Montgomery Street,
BRAND HOTEL BUILDING.
IN SELLING FOR CASH HIS LARGE AND VARIED stock of Hats and Caps can be sold at a small profit. Please call before purchasing for a large Bronze Age to stand. These goods

Will and Must be Sold, as no longer may be expected for self of the truth of this statement by a personal examination. The finest stock of Fall Hats ever brought to the FIFTY SILK HAT at $3 50.
All Hats are for sale when others fail.
Those from ENGLAND the latest
Of perfect shape and glossy finish.
C. DESMOND, 5 New Montgomery St., Under the Brand Hotel.

J. O'KANE,
Manufacturer and Importer of
SADDLES & HARNESS
Fine Horse Clothing, etc., etc.,
No. 613 KEARNY STREET,
Between Sutt and Bush..... San Francisco
Repairing done with neatness and dispatch. Orders promptly attended to. 1875-tf

MERCHANT TAILORS.

IMPORTATION DIRECT.
M. SHORT,
THE PIONEER TAILOR,
COMMERCIAL STREET,
Corner of Leidesdorff.
RECOGNIZING THE ENORMOUS SUPPORT it has received, owing in his supplying only the best of goods at the same price for clothes made to order as are, and have been, charged by other houses for inferior ready made Clothing, determined on personally visiting the manufactories in Europe and purchasing Broadcloth, Tweeds, Cassimeres, Vestings, &c., at the lowest cash prices, the benefit of which will now be felt by his patrons, to whom he offers a selection from the LARGEST IMPORTATION
OF THE Finest Goods
Ever introduced into this market, including
MELTONS, CAMBRIDGE,
CHEVIOTS, BAVIER,
OXFORD, WITNEYS,
ENGLANE, DOE SKIN TWILLS,
ETC.....ETC.....ETC.
A Large Assortment of Genuine Irish Frietzs.
Being the NEWEST FASHIONS, both in material and colors, which he now offers at prices which cannot be touch'd by any other house in the trade.
An inspection of
THIS SPLENDID STOCK
is respectfully invited. A perfect fit guaranteed.
Remember, our Prices to Order are:
Pants.....$ 6 00
Business Suits for.....25 00
Beaver Nobbs for.....25 00
Fine French Beaver Suits.....30 00

M. SHORT,
527 Commercial St., San Francisco.

EDWARD CASEY,
Merchant Tailor,
79 Fourth Street, near Mission,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXPERIENCE in the East in the manufacture of clothing, and a thorough knowledge of that business in all its branches, would respectfully ask a trial from the Clothing community, such a trial it would give the most satisfactory evidence that his claims are based on fact. Also, a large assortment of gentlemen's furnishing goods to select from. Orders promptly att

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

There are twenty-seven Catholic churches and chapels in the city of Baltimore.

Father Sochetti, of Trenton, N. J., has received a beautiful gold chalice, ornamented with precious stones, from the Pope's Father.

During the year 1873 the Catholics of Toledo, Ohio, erected three Catholic churches, three school-houses and a temperance hall.

The Very Rev. C. L. Reynolds, Administrator of the diocese of Adelaide, South Australia, has been appointed Bishop of that See.

It is stated that the State of New Hampshire is to be constituted a new diocese, and that the Rev. John O'Donnell, of Nashua, is to be the first Bishop.

The Catholic temperance societies of Philadelphia are urging the erection of drinking fountains, to the expense of which they propose to contribute.

All the German Catholic societies of Louisville, Ky., have added provisions in their constitutions against sending their children to public schools.

The Northern Christian Advocate, a Methodist paper, says that the two hundred students in the Cornell University of New York are "truer recruits for Satan."

The clergy of the United States contain nearly twelve millions of dollars, the orimalists forty millions, the lawyers seventy millions and rum two hundred millions!

During the past year the Peter's Pence collections throughout Belgium amounted to $59,000, and in the last thirteen years the diocese of Ghent alone contributed $710,000.

According to the Protestant Church Herald the most prominent ecclesiastics of the "Old Catholic" Church in Switzerland are Mr. Loyson, Mrs. Loyson and their baby.

All the schools attached to the Catholic churches in Brooklyn, N. Y., are now free, and very few of the Catholic children are now attending the public schools of that city.

The ice company of Newark, N. J., have delivered ice to St. Michael's Hospital during the past year to the value of $225, and presented the Sisters with an receipted bill for the whole amount.

A Russian prince named William Radzivil has become a Catholic. In Russia all converts to Catholicism lose their property and lose all prospects of favors from the Government.

The Yale Haven Register says that there are in Connecticut "every few Churches except the Catholic that would be willing to admit a single member of any church with a white."

One hundred and fifty-six thousand six hundred and eighty thousand dollars have been expended on the new Catholic Cathedral of Hartford, Conn., and it will take three hundred thousand dollars more to finish it.

The Rev. Father Walsh, of the diocese of Alton, and the Rev. Father Hodnett of Wisconsin, have been created Rote for the diocese of Chicago. Some priests are also expected from the Archdiocese of Cashel, Ireland.

The Colored Catholic Benefical Society of Washington, D. C., has paid for funerals of members $1,615; for sick benefits $600, for a lot $125, for hall over $1,000, and has left $700.

The Catholic Bank of the Dominion of Canada, chief property of the Academy of Christian Doctrine, Montreal, was founded in 1847 by the same Order as the same Academy of Quebec in 1639.

The City and District Savings Bank of Montreal has been more generous than we should be in the matter of charity of the Gentle Shepherd, as there is $500 to the St. Joseph's Asylum, $2,000 to the Hospital.

The Catholics of England have not a single Protestant in Parliament, but they promise to aggregate themselves after the next general election. The thirty-seven Catholic members in Parliament elect seven Irish members.

Rev. Father Hinsbourg, O. P., of Rockford, Ill., and Rev. Father Valley, Dubuquois, left Chicago on the 1st inst. in the interest of the Catholic Publication House, Chicago, under the auspices of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union.

Father Gallwey, of Liverpool, England, says the increase of children in the Catholic schools during the last two years, and 1873 in particular, is one hundred and twenty-seven per cent. This is the result of the Education Act of 1870, and the year 1873 was the first complete year of the working of the Act.

Bishop Foley, of Detroit, the Sisters of Charity, Detroit, and Father Quinn, of St. Louis, Mo., on the 25th inst. at St. Louis, Mo., on the 27th inst. at Notre Mary Leonil, of St. Bridget's, on the 29th inst.

Father Doyle, of Jonesville, Wis., has a congregation of over two thousand in a small city population of nine thousand. He has a large church and a school-house, and pays for both out of his own means, and no collections except for the Church of Mercy, and over and above.

A prince Jes engraved on the Vigil of the Feast of the Sacred Heart of Mary, in the Church of Mary, in the Church of Mary, in the Church

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

A LESSON IN GERMAN.

Two days after the recent arrest, a peasant with a basket of vegetables entered the fort of Nogent, inquiring for Sergeant Vous. The latter was quickly found and greeted his visitor heartily.

"Well, Barbet," said he, "I am glad your ill-treatment has not discouraged you from continuing to serve the country."

"No, why should it? But it would be a trouble to me if I were to meet that infernal tailor or hatter, whatever he is, again."

"No fear of that. Our commandant was never too content at having such an officer, and he has dispatched him and his heroes of the restaurant and the boulangerie back to the Minister of War, with a request that they may be employed to save France from some of the other fortifications."

"Ah, that is well. I risk my life every day among these Prussians. When I go in with my vegetables to sell I know that a bare hint of what I am at would suffice to get me shot, and it is not pleasant then on the other side to run the risk of being shot by a rascally brother, who could not say 'Qui vive' when he heard the sound of a Prussian ride."

Michel soothed the exasperation of the peasant, which was still warm.

"And what news is there of our friends yonder?"

"News! There is some, I can tell you. They have taken full possession of Neuilly, and have been busy for the last few days."

"Heavens! and we idle here. We must try and disturb them."

"If you do, let me advise you not to go as you have hitherto done by the gardens, but keep the ditches by the Strasbourg road."

"Will you accompany us?"

"Willingly, as far as the Pleiche farm; but if I they approached close to the Prussians my mother is at an end."

"Right. Simply set us on the track by which we may arrive soonest, and with least chance of observation, and that is all. We shall find out the rest for ourselves. I know the village pretty well."

"Agreed."

The party was soon formed and on its way. It included Michel's most trusty and accustomed followers. His first care was thought of asking for a larger number of men, but he feared that if he swelled his force to any considerable extent the chances of surprise would be greatly lessened. Within half a mile of the village the party of twelve divided, Michel leading one, Mike Mahony the other. Thence up to the village they crept in Indian file through the ditch, where it was deep stooping low, but where it was shallow actually crossing on hands and knees. "Hist, my lads," remarked Mike in a whisper to his next follower, on finding by many signs that they took near the cold abbey in Chanvillium; but faith whether it 'll care either may end or body is not sure." Arrived without observation at the edge of the main thoroughfare of the village, both parties cautiously observed for a few moments before proceeding to the attack. The enemy had manifestly gone to work with great deliberation to prevent the passage of any troops through the village. The square blocks of sandstone which composed the pavement were here so alternately, giving it somewhat the appearance of a draught board, and offering a serious barrier to the transport of artillery. Loop holes had been made in the walls of several of the houses. In the middle of the street there was a group of soldiers, among whom were two horsemen. Rising as if by magic out of the ground, the Frenchmen formed and delivered a close, well-directed fire. Several of the enemy fell. The remainder, with an astonished look, made a show of resistance and fired. A cry was opposed, and the heads of the soldiers were thrust out the window. A bullet struck one of them, and he lay motionless across the sill of the open window. A third dashed out with a wound in his hand. They had been playing billiards on the table of the deserted café. Under the fire of the unexpected foe he sought cover in his head. The church, a quaint romanesque building of the thirteenth century, with a bell tower whose gable top was covered with tiles, stood opposite the café; from behind it there emerged two horsemen who, dashing full gallop into the main street, paused, and then turned to fly. Bullets flew after them; one of which manifestly told, for the foremost soldier was seen to droop forward on his horse's neck. The other, disregarding his own safety, checked the speed of his charger in order to support his comrade and led him out of fire.

"Do not shoot," said Michel to one of his men who was leveling his piece for another shot. "He is a gallant fellow though a Prussian."

In a few minutes it seemed there was not a Prussian left in the village. They entered the café. The billiard balls were still on the table; the Prussian soldier still leaned out of the window, as if in surprised inquiry as to the foe who had disturbed him; but he would never again do so on earth for surprise, and friend and foe had become alike indifferent to him. Open windows at the back of the houses and the traces of footsteps in the garden showed where some others of the party had escaped. They next call they proceeded to the church. Michel and his band indeed more of their comrades—had no sympathy with that section of Frenchmen who scoff at religion. They entered the sacred building with reverence; they were shocked at the aspect it presented. It was evident that it had been made a stable for the post of cavalry, and that beside this desecration wanton destruction had been committed. The glass in the windows was broken in many parts; the altar was soiled in a manner that left no doubt of its having been a shelter, and a ball over the steps there were scattered torn fragments of the vestments.

"The scoundrels," burst from a dozen of tips, as the evidences of wanton profanation were noted.

"Sergeant Vous," said Barbet, "you should not have stopped my hand when I had that cavalry fellow covered."

"I don't know," remarked Mike Mahony, "I don't believe he was the ruffian that did these tricks. It's a queer thing, may be, but my idea is that the blackguard who behaved in the way we see some of them have done here would be just the fellow to bolt, when a comrade was hit, without thinking of him."

"Tell the church bell," said Michel. "It will startle still further those fellows dying, and lead them to believe we are in strong force."

"There is no rope to the bell," cried a soldier.

"Up into the tower, then, some one or two of you. Beside ringing the bell keep a lookout. I go on to see if the village is clear of these cattle." And Michel left the church with the bulk of his force. Two remained behind to execute the instructions relative to the tower. They were Barbet and Mike Mahony. The tower evidently was but rarely ascended. The stairs were broken and without protection at the side. The only floor was a kind of double trap door, in which could be seen the hole through which the rope used to pass. Into the apartment formed by this the two men entered, and Mike at once indulged in a fantasia on the bell, of great vigor if not exceeding sweetness. After he had amused himself with this occupation until his arm was tired, he looked out towards a cluster of trees which lay a few hundred yards from the village. "Why, Barbet," he said, "but I'm slighting, instead of frighting these thieves away, is only conjuring them up. Look there!"

"Ma foi," said Barbet, "there they are, and in numbers too."

"Are you loaded?"

"Yes."

"Well, let us fire at the headmost man. Our fellows are too far away to be attracted by our voices, but they will guess what a shot means."

Out of the screen of trees there had ridden a dozen troopers, followed by more than a company of infantry. The soldiers were divided into single files at each side of the road, and seemed to be taken by surprise to guard against a renewed surprise. As they advanced along the road the head of each rank seemed exactly to mount the tower. "Now," said Mike to his comrade, "the thing is to get a clear shot at one, to take down a man at the same time would be to leave two enemies less for them to deal with—you the left hand, I the right-fire." At the word his taciturn companion obeyed, and Mike followed his own direction; the horse on the left stumbled and threw his rider; the trooper on the right fell off his charger, as the ball struck him again.

"Firing from the church tower!" cried Michel. "Together men. Down each windows, quickly. It is an alarm."

The men paused for the caused momentary confusion in the German ranks. Strange to say, they did not seem to observe whence the proceeded, but it impressed them with the necessity for caution, for they made a disposition to fall their men and enter the village. The time the infantry, in open order, were in advance, the cavalry following. Then they approached close to the Prussians a low voice asked Mike should he fire again.

"No reply—I heard, but wait."

The Prussians continued to advance, and several of them were now right under the tower. The sergeant of which was not very great.

"It is a tempting moment," said Barbet.

"Hush. If they come to a fight with our fellows, well and good—we will have share in it. But my fellows, can be trusted to fight this time."

And so in patience the two occupants of the tower stood. The party was under the command of an officer evidently of rank, and was composed of about 50 men. Its undress, bore several decorations. An expression of vexation was on his countenance, and as he followed up with a yelling at his subordinates in good set terms.

"It sounded a bit difficult to stop his jaw now," remarked Mike, as, with ride in hand, he looked down upon the face of the fiery officer.

"Shall I ?" eagerly exclaimed Barbet.

"No, no. He's pitching into those blackguards, and only giving them their due. I should not like to be interrupted in the fire it's a short least of these promises you have."

As they watched they saw the countenance of the officer soon more and more flushed, while those about him, now beginning manifestly more uneasy. Non-commissioned officers were moving to and fro, and with each arrival the vexation of the commander grew more evident. At last with a shout the command to be turned and giving orders, rode away accompanied by three dragoons, and followed by the rest of the infantry.

"Barbet," said Mike in a sort of a whisper.

"Well," said his companion.

"Did you hear him use German?"

"I know you speak some outlandish tongue, but I don't think it was German."

"No, it wasn't either. It wasn't German you never heard me speak, nor did any one else. But I'll tell you all the conversation that went on below there."

"Do!"

"Me—who the devil else is likely to tell you? Perhaps you'd wish me to call up that fat sergeant there and ask him to report it to you."

"Oh, not at all—go on."

"Well then, when that officer—Captain Graf Von Higbocts came up there, he said, 'how many do the enemy number?' and the thin sergeant said, 'I do not know, Herr Graf;' and he replied, 'and why the devil don't you know?' and the thin sergeant said, 'we can find no enemy in the village,' and on this, mon ami, the officer observes, 'you are a pack of infernal block heads and asses to allow yourselves to be fooled this way by a few Franc-tireurs, and the young coxcomb that was there without a beard, but with a face that would make a French bad fled, which made the officer at last swear in very loud German, and ask was it possible that a body of men large enough to test half a company out of the village, and which fired on them as they were entering it, could have so entirely disappeared as to have left no trace of them; and then the fat sergeant of all the sergeants came up and said they had searched all the large houses and most of the country round, but that no Frenchmen could be seen; and at last the Graf roared out that he would not stay to be mortified by such a set of insensible noodles, ordered half a company of infantry add sight of the cavalry to remain, and by Jupiter, he kept their eyes in the village, and rode off."

"And now," said Barbet, wondering, "did you know this?"

"Know it! I read it man."

"Read it?"

"Yes I read it as plain as print—plainer a deal more than some print I have seen—in his face."

CHAPTER XLIX.

FRANC-TIREURS OF THE PRESS.

"Let us call our roll," said Michel, as the small jerky which had been driven out of Neuilly assembled at the farm, and a ball over the steps there were scattered torn fragments of the vestments.

"The scoundrels," burst from a dozen of tips, as the evidences of wanton profanation were noted.

"Sergeant Vous," said Barbet, "you should not have stopped my hand when I had that cavalry fellow covered."

"I don't know," remarked Mike Mahony, "I don't believe he was the ruffian that did these tricks. It's a queer thing, may be, but my idea is that the blackguard who behaved in the way we see some of them have done here would be just the fellow to bolt, when a comrade was hit, without thinking of him."

"Tell the church bell," said Michel. "It will startle still further those fellows dying, and lead them to believe we are in strong force."

"There is no rope to the bell," cried a soldier.

"Up into the tower, then, some one or two of you. Beside ringing the bell keep a lookout. I go on to see if the village is clear of these cattle." And Michel left the church with the bulk of his force. Two remained behind to execute the instructions relative to the tower. They were Barbet and Mike Mahony. The tower evidently was but rarely ascended. The stairs were broken and without protection at the side. The only floor was a kind of double trap door, in which could be seen the hole through which the rope used to pass. Into the apartment formed by this the two men entered, and Mike at once indulged in a fantasia on the bell, of great vigor if not exceeding sweetness. After he had amused himself with this occupation until his arm was tired, he looked out towards a cluster of trees which lay a few hundred yards from the village. "Why, Barbet," he said, "but I'm slighting, instead of frighting these thieves away, is only conjuring them up. Look there!"

"Ma foi," said Barbet, "there they are, and in numbers too."

"Are you loaded?"

"Yes."

"Well, let us fire at the headmost man. Our fellows are too far away to be attracted by our voices, but they will guess what a shot means."

Out of the screen of trees there had ridden a dozen troopers, followed by more than a company of infantry. The soldiers were divided into single files at each side of the road, and seemed to be taken by surprise to guard against a renewed surprise. As they advanced along the road the head of each rank seemed exactly to mount the tower. "Now," said Mike to his comrade, "the thing is to get a clear shot at one, to take down a man at the same time would be to leave two enemies less for them to deal with—you the left hand, I the right-fire." At the word his taciturn companion obeyed, and Mike followed his own direction; the horse on the left stumbled and threw his rider; the trooper on the right fell off his charger, as the ball struck him again.

"Firing from the church tower!" cried Michel. "Together men. Down each windows, quickly. It is an alarm."

The men paused for the caused momentary confusion in the German ranks. Strange to say, they did not seem to observe whence the proceeded, but it impressed them with the necessity for caution, for they made a disposition to fall their men and enter the village. The time the infantry, in open order, were in advance, the cavalry following. When they approached close to the Prussians a low voice asked Mike should he fire again.

"No reply—I heard, but wait."

The Prussians continued to advance, and several of them were now right under the tower. The sergeant of which was not very great.

"It is a tempting moment," said Barbet.

"Hush. If they come to a fight with our fellows, well and good—we will have share in it. But my fellows, can be trusted to fight this time."

And so in patience the two occupants of the tower stood. The party was under the command of an officer evidently of rank, and was composed of about 50 men. Its undress, bore several decorations. An expression of vexation was on his countenance, and as he followed up with a yelling at his subordinates in good set terms.

"It sounded a bit difficult to stop his jaw now," remarked Mike, as, with ride in hand, he looked down upon the face of the fiery officer.

"Shall I ?" eagerly exclaimed Barbet.

"No, no. He's pitching into those blackguards, and only giving them their due. I should not like to be interrupted in the fire it's a short least of these promises you have."

As they watched they saw the countenance of the officer soon more and more flushed, while those about him, now beginning manifestly more uneasy. Non-commissioned officers were moving to and fro, and with each arrival the vexation of the commander grew more evident. At last with a shout the command to be turned and giving orders, rode away accompanied by three dragoons, and followed by the rest of the infantry.

"Barbet," said Mike in a sort of a whisper.

"Well," said his companion.

"Did you think he was

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
WHO FOR WHOM ENDING FEBRUARY 14 INCLUSIVE.
1—Sunday—Kreagsmas Sunday.
2—Monday—St. Ignatius, Bishop and Martyr (Feb. 1). St. Apollonia, Virgin and Martyr.
3—Tuesday—St. Scholastica, Virgin.
4—Wednesday—St. John of Matha, Confessor.
5—Thursday—Vigil of the Blessed Immaculate Virgin.
6—Friday—Feria.
7—Saturday—Vigil of the Immaculate Conception. St. Valentine, Martyr.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 7, 1874.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION

We stated last week that our article on "Compulsory Education" was called forth by the receipt of a pamphlet written, by Mr. DEXTER A. HAWKINS, dealing with the same subject. We promised to review the pamphlet and to criticise the arguments contained therein, and we now proceed to redeem our pledge, although an attentive examination of the contents of the pamphlet has convinced us that it would be a waste of time and trouble to occupy much space with our remarks.

Mr. DEXTER A. HAWKINS is, we believe, a lawyer of mediocre ability, who takes every possible occasion of obtruding himself on the public, and succeeds only in showing everybody that he is a bumbug and a nuisance. Of course he belongs to the party of "great moral ideas," and so he imagines he has a mission to regenerate mankind: equally, of course, he is an anti-Catholic, and so he is anxious to do everything in his power to discourage "Romanism." His championship of compulsory education is, therefore, owing to his belief that it will act injuriously on the Catholic Church, and draw thousands, if not millions, of persons away from its communion. In his estimate of the consequences of the sort of compulsory education of which he is an advocate, Mr. HAWKINS is certainly not far from right, and his opinions are shared by many abler and honester men.

There is nothing new in his arguments; we have heard them at least a hundred times before—they are now worn utterly threadbare. He begins by asserting that the only way of perpetuating our democratic institutions and keeping them pure is to educate the masses. Here the question of the correctness depends altogether upon the meaning of the word "educate." If Mr. HAWKINS restricts it, as we think he does, to the imparting of mere secular instruction, then most assuredly he is wrong. But if he allows it to include the developing and strengthening of all the moral and intellectual faculties, then he is undoubtedly perfectly right. The chances of preserving our republican government, and keeping it free from corruption, would not be anything improved if every man in the United States knew how to solve the most intricate questions in algebra, or could tell the latitude and longitude of every city on the globe.

On the other hand, if every citizen were instructed as regards his duties towards God and his neighbor, and impressed with the idea of his responsibility for his acts here to an omnipotent and omniscient Judge, there would be no danger whatever of the stability of our institutions or of the happiness and freedom of our people. It is quite impossible to teach morality apart from religion, because the precepts of religion are the foundation upon which morality rests. It is vain to seek to make men virtuous by telling them that without virtue society must fall into disorganization. It is of no use to place the obligation of obeying the laws of one's country upon the ground of mere expediency. It is ridiculous to think of establishing or maintaining a Government which will acknowledge that its right of existence and its claim to allegiance depends upon a "social contract" like that preached by JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU. All these arguments may be good enough for men who are comfortably situated, and who have a natural dread of disturbance; but they can have no force at all with men who are made desperate by poverty, and who have nothing to lose and much to gain from civil commotion. Men must know and feel that the laws they are asked to obey have a higher sanction and a higher authority than the volition of a number of their fellow-men, or else they will disobey them the instant they become irksome.

The most learned and sagacious political economists have repeatedly exposed the fallacy of the assertion that knowledge, of itself, can make men more moral or more loyal to their country. They have shown that intellectual culture has no tendency whatever, to make a person virtuous. It simply bestows a certain amount of mental power, which will be turned to good or evil according to the disposition of the individual who possesses it. This truth is illustrated by the notorious fact that the criminals from whom society has most to fear at the present day are by no means uneducated. On the contrary, very many among them are as well educated as the champion of compulsory education, MR. DEXTER A. HAWKINS, if we may judge from gentleman's statements by the literary merits of his pamphlet. The skilled burglars, the cunning thieves, the audacious forgers, the merciless assassins, who constitute the most dangerous portion of our criminal class, are all educated.

Mr. HAWKINS flatters himself that he has demolished all these well-ascertained facts when he quotes statistics showing that the countries having the largest percentage of illiterate among their population have also the largest percentage of criminals. He coolly takes it for granted that there is an indissoluble connection between the two classes. If a man not knowing how to read and write is in prison, Mr. HAWKINS will have it that he is there on that account. His argument is this: "The great majority of criminals in all countries are uneducated, which is the same as saying that the illiterate class produces the greater number of law-breakers. And because the dimensions of this class, and you consequently diminish the criminals." A more absurd non sequitur was never penned by any man pretending to intelligence. By this style of reasoning we could prove, most conclusively, that the chief cause of crime is the wearing of dirty shirts, for we venture to assert, fearlessly, that for the one man who enters a prison-door with an immaculate shirt front upon him, at least one hundred pass the gloomy portals with soiled linen upon their breasts. And, following up Mr. HAWKINS' logic, we might fairly propose to extinguish crime by the establishment of free laundries or the distribution of new shirts.

The uneducated find their way into prison, not because they do not know how to read or write, but because they are deficient in moral training and neglect the teachings of religion. A good scholar frequently becomes a criminal, especially in this country where the corruption and dishonesty among the so-called respectable classes are actually terrible to contemplate, but a good Christian never does. It is true that we had not a few prominent members of Young Men's Christian Associations who have not hesitated to rob and plunder the community; but that was because their Christianity was a sham, and because they used religion as a cloak for their disreputable doings. The conduct of such individuals cannot be fairly adduced as an argument against our position.

We thoroughly agree in all that can be said in favor of education, but we decline to commit the folly of attributing to it qualities which every thinking man knows it does not possess. We refuse to acquiesce in the assertion that, because a man can read, write and calculate well, he is therefore more moral and less likely to perpetrate crime than he who cannot tell one letter of the alphabet from another. He is certainly a better scholar. He can also do more good, if he is inclined to, for the community; but he can, at the same time, do vastly more harm if he has a mind.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

The elections for the new Parliament which is to assemble on the 24th of next month are causing the most intense excitement in England and Ireland. The Whigs and Tories, or Liberals and Conservatives, as they are usually called now, are pouring forth all their strength at this secular insurrection, than most assuredly he is wrong. But if he allows it to include the developing and strengthening of all the moral and intellectual faculties, then he is undoubtedly perfectly right. The chances of preserving our republican government, and keeping it free from corruption, would not be anything improved if every man in the United States knew how to solve the most intricate questions in algebra, or could tell the latitude and longitude of every city on the globe.

On the other hand, if every citizen were instructed as regards his duties towards God and his neighbor, and impressed with the idea of his responsibility for his acts here to an omnipotent and omniscient Judge, there would be no danger whatever of the stability of our institutions or of the happiness and freedom of our people. It is quite impossible to teach morality apart from religion, because the precepts of religion are the foundation upon which morality rests. It is vain to seek to make men virtuous by telling them that without virtue society must fall into disorganization. It is of no use to place the obligation of obeying the laws of one's country upon the ground of mere expediency. It is ridiculous to think of establishing or maintaining a Government which will acknowledge that its right of existence and its claim to allegiance depends upon a "social contract" like that preached by JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU. All these arguments may be good enough for men who are comfortably situated, and who have a natural dread of disturbance; but they can have no force at all with men who are made desperate by poverty, and who have nothing to lose and much to gain from civil commotion. Men must know and feel that the laws they are asked to obey have a higher sanction and a higher authority than the volition of a number of their fellow-men, or else they will disobey them the instant they become irksome.

The most learned and sagacious political economists have repeatedly exposed the fallacy of the assertion that knowledge, of itself, can make men more moral or more loyal to their country. They have shown that intellectual culture has no tendency whatever, to make a person virtuous. It simply bestows a certain amount of mental power, which will be turned to good or evil according to the disposition of the individual who possesses it. This truth is illustrated by the notorious fact that the criminals from whom society has most to fear at the present day are by no means uneducated. On the contrary, very many among them are as well educated as the champion of compulsory education, MR. DEXTER A. HAWKINS, if we may judge from gentleman's statements by the literary merits of his pamphlet. The skilled burglars, the cunning thieves, the audacious forgers, the merciless assassins, who constitute the most dangerous portion of our criminal class, are all educated.

Mr. HAWKINS flatters himself that he has demolished all these well-ascertained facts when he quotes statistics showing that the countries having the largest percentage of illiterate among their population have also the largest percentage of criminals. He coolly takes it for granted that there is an indissoluble connection between the two classes. If a man not knowing how to read and write is in prison, Mr. HAWKINS will have it that he is there on that account. His argument is this: "The great majority of criminals in all countries are uneducated, which is the same as saying that the illiterate class produces the greater number of law-breakers. And because the dimensions of this class, and you consequently diminish the criminals." A more absurd non sequitur was never penned by any man pretending to intelligence. By this style of reasoning we could prove, most conclusively, that the chief cause of crime is the wearing of dirty shirts, for we venture to assert, fearlessly, that for the one man who enters a prison-door with an immaculate shirt front upon him, at least one hundred pass the gloomy portals with soiled linen upon their breasts. And, following up Mr. HAWKINS' logic, we might fairly propose to extinguish crime by the establishment of free laundries or the distribution of new shirts.

The uneducated find their way into prison, not because they do not know how to read or write, but because they are deficient in moral training and neglect the teachings of religion. A good scholar frequently becomes a criminal, especially in this country where the corruption and dishonesty among the so-called respectable classes are actually terrible to contemplate, but a good Christian never does. It is true that we had not a few prominent members of Young Men's Christian Associations who have not hesitated to rob and plunder the community; but that was because their Christianity was a sham, and because they used religion as a cloak for their disreputable doings. The conduct of such individuals cannot be fairly adduced as an argument against our position.

We thoroughly agree in all that can be said in favor of education, but we decline to commit the folly of attributing to it qualities which every thinking man knows it does not possess. We refuse to acquiesce in the assertion that, because a man can read, write and calculate well, he is therefore more moral and less likely to perpetrate crime than he who cannot tell one letter of the alphabet from another. He is certainly a better scholar. He can also do more good, if he is inclined to, for the community; but he can, at the same time, do vastly more harm if he has a mind.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

The elections for the new Parliament which is to assemble on the 24th of next month are causing the most intense excitement in England and Ireland. The Whigs and Tories, or Liberals and Conservatives, as they are usually called now, are pouring forth all their strength. So far as the elections have gone they favor the Conservatives, giving them a majority of thirty members. Several boroughs and counties which were thought secure for the Government have gone back on their record and returned opposition candidates. There appears to be a singular revulsion of feeling among the voters against the Liberal party and in favor of the Tories, so that it is to be looked upon as certain that GLADSTONE will find himself supported by a comparatively small minority when the House opens. This must be a severe blow to the great Liberal Premier, who fancied that he had only to appeal to the country in order to obtain a Parliament entirely devoted to his interests. To outside observers it must certainly seem inexplicable that, with such an extended franchise, England should pronounce so emphatically for the old aristocratic party, and reject the Liberals who claimed to be the party of progress. Yet the anomaly is only apparent, and is susceptible of a very facile explanation.

The triumph of GLADSTONE, who had been looked upon as a Republican in principles, and who has been openly charged with "disloyalty to his Sovereign," implied as a consequence the establishment of universal suffrage, inasmuch as the Premier was practically pledged to effect it. Now, universal suffrage would confer the voting power upon, probably, hundreds of thousands of individuals strongly imbued with socialistic principles of the most subversive character. These men would undoubtedly return members of Parliament of the same stripe as themselves, and the result would be that the House of Commons, which prides itself upon being an assemblage of the most perfect gentlemen in the world, would soon be reduced to the level of a Communistic club. The great bulk of the orderly and intelligent people of England think that reform and democracy have made more than sufficient progress already in the national institutions, and they believe it is high time to put a check upon them if they want to secure their country against revolution. Much as we admire republican institutions, we cannot help thinking that there are solid reasons for the dread entertained by such a large portion of the English people. Nothing, in our opinion, could more closely resemble pandemonium than the sort of "republic" which the tail-word clarse of the British workshops and factories would establish if they had the power. Those men have simply been brutalised by incessant toil; all religion, and even sense of decency, has died out of them; their only relaxation are found in the enjoyments of sensuality and debauch; and, we need hardly say, their only notion of moral reform would be a division among themselves of the wealth belonging to the rich. It is therefore no more than a commendable measure of precaution to prevent those men from obtaining political power.

In Ireland the great struggle is for the returning of Home Rule candidates. GLADSTONE, it is alleged, dissolved Parliament suddenly and without warning, with deliberate intent to throw confusion into the ranks of the Home Rulers, and force them into a battle before they were prepared for it. If this was his design, it has been frustrated by the patriotism and unanimity of the Irish people. We have yet had notice of the result of very few of the Irish elections, but those we have heard of all terminated favorably for the Nationalist candidates. The London Times has already declared that, although the Home Rulers were taken unaware, they were winning the fight. This is good news, and foreshadows a brilliant victory all along the line for the friends of Irish liberty. Ireland sends 105 members to the British Parliament, and if eighty of these belong to the National party they will be, in all probability, able to dictate their own terms to the Government. It is likely that they will hold the balance of power between the Liberals and Conservatives, and that any Ministry which desires to obtain a working majority must bid for their support. The Home Rulers are all pledged to oppose, on questions of policy at least, every Government which refuses to accede to their demand for the restoration of Ireland's national privileges; and if they are true to their promise, they will either obtain what they seek, render constitutional Government impossible in England, or else force the Ministry to devise forcible means for their suppression. Either will result in a triumph for the Irish nation.

A REMARKABLE DOCUMENT.

We publish elsewhere in this issue a remarkable document, which will be read with much interest by Catholics. It purports to be a Bull issued by the Sovereign Pontiff in May last, and addressed to the Cardinals, removing all the restrictions hitherto imposed on the Sacred College with regard to the election of the Pope, giving them directions how to proceed in the appointment of his successor. It has been customary to choose each Pope in the city where his predecessor died, but this Bull allows the Cardinals to authorize the Cardinals to hold the election in Malta, Monaco, or any of the towns of France. It also empowers them to make all necessary regulations previous to the election, and forbids proceeding to actual election until after that event. The reason given for these important changes in long-established practices is that Pius believes it impossible for the Cardinals to act freely and without fear of coercion in Rome under VICTOR EMMANUEL'S Government. The document we have alluded to was first received as authentic, and was published by many Catholic papers on the European continent. Soon, however, doubts began to arise, and, after close examination, the leading Catholic journals of France, Germany and Italy denounced it as a forgery. Errors and incongruities, which could not possibly exist in a genuine Bull, were discovered and exposed. Its spuriousness is now pretty generally acknowledged, and a very strange story accounting for its origin has been set afloat by a German newspaper.

It seems that the Prussian Government was informed somehow that the Pope had secretly issued such a Bull, and not being able to procure a copy of it, directed its Italian Ambassador to offer a round sum of thousand francs to whoever would produce one. So anxious was BISMARCK to learn all about the new regulations for the election, that he did not hesitate to offer that large sum for the means of gratifying his curiosity! The Ambassador could not, of course, procure a copy of this imaginary Bull, but some very clever penman, desirous of owning 10,000 francs, presented him with an original one actually bearing the signature of the Secretary of Briefs. Whether the forger received the cash we really do not know, though we think it likely, as the document was published and commented upon by nearly all the newspapers of Germany, France, England and Italy. Some papers even still cling to the idea that the Bull is genuine, as the Irish issued by PIUS IX. Certainly, having regard to the hostile attitude of the Italian Government, and to the open threats of interference made by the Pope to the Cardinals to take some measures to defeat the schemes of the enemies of the Church. But PIUS IX., notwithstanding his years, is still able and hearty, and may outlive all the potentates who are longing for his death. And when the next Papal election takes place, it may come off in Rome freed from the baleful presence of the usurpers. So may it be!

Accident in the Coal Mines

A correspondent, writing from Nortonville, Contra Costa county, gives the following particulars of a fatal accident which recently occurred in a coal mine in that place:

"Anthony Solan died here on the 15th of January under the following circumstances: He was going to work on the morning of the 17th in a breast of the Small vein, and when up twenty-five feet from the gangway the accustomed gas took fire from his lamp, burning him severely, both externally and internally. Before entering he was told there was "black damp" in the breast, but no gas; but it proved to the contrary, however, and his death was the result. Rev. Father Callaghan was in attendance and administered to his spiritual wants. The remains were accompanied by a large concourse of friends to their final resting place in Holy Cross Cemetery, Antioch. Deceased was a member of the Workingmen's Accident and Relief Association, and a native of Wexford, county Mayo, Ireland, aged 30 years; he left no family. It does seem very strange of these fatal accidents should be investigated, and an effort made to save human life, as this makes the fifth victim within a short time in the vein locality."

"M. McD."—In answer to your query, we have merely to say that there is no employment in factories, or such please, to be had in this city; but there is always employment as a domestic help to be had by girls willing to work.

There were thirty bands of music in the St. Patrick's Day procession in St. Louis last year. The Watchman recommends that they be limited this year to four, and to give the difference ($3,000) to the orphans. This is a good suggestion.

VESTMENTS, copes, chalices—the finest, now imported—new books, Bibles and prayer books, selling at H. C. DAWSON'S Catholic Bookstore, 504 Kearny street, near Sutter, a reduced prices.

A PRACTICAL VIEW OF SCHOOL MATTERS.

It is not necessary to tell our readers how highly we value the religious element in our necessary part of a good education, or how pleased we should be to see the Catholic children of this country provided with schools of their own. Notwithstanding this we are not unable to the system of public instruction as administered in the State, though its grave defects prohibit us from recommending its cordial indorsement by our co-religionists. We have little to say about what is taught in the public schools, but we might say much about what is not taught in them. In many respects they are excellent; in many more they are lamentably deficient. We do not believe they are answerable for a tithe of the evils laid at their doors, but we do believe that with a better system of education all over the country society would be in a far healthier condition.

Practically, it is evident that some of the studies pursued in the elementary classes are out of place, and that others, equally intellectual and far more utilitarian, might with advantage be substituted for them. We have, of course, no objection to the studies themselves, so far as they go. Our complaint is that they don't go far enough. It is no doubt a good thing to know the number of bones in your body, the name of the capital and length of alcohol, the peculiarities of cryptogamic plants, the distance of the stars, and the number of cents in a dollar; but it is a thing to know how to read correctly, and to understand for which we were brought into this world, and what may be our duties here and our hopes hereafter.

The Rev. Father Scherer dwelt for differing some knowledge of the grand Constitution of the United States, but it would not injure the pupils to learn something also of the gender constitutions of their bodies. We have no doubt that, looking at matters from their standpoint, the Solons of California, even though not thinking of the wise ones of Massachusetts, devised the best system they could. They must, however, have left it radically imperfect, since they make an abortive attempt to catch hold of morality by recommending teachers to inculcate it. The morality which is not based on religion is one of the evils against which WASHINGTON solemnly warned his countrymen; and, even had we a higher opinion of it than we do, the impossible evidence daily before us that WASHINGTON was right and the Massachusett's moralists wrong. School Boards all over the country are overburdened at present with the number of teachers who are avowed infidels; and the kind of morality they are likely to impart is not pleasant to contemplate. The moral code of the Public Schools is clearly an unsound one, and no sane man will venture to stand upon it. It is, however, with the gaps of the platform that we have to do, and we contend that its deficiencies are so many and so great as to constitute it that we have most fault to find.

But, laying aside the moral aspect of the case, and considering only the practical concerns of every-day life, let us for the moment speak as secularists, and ask, is the present system of public instruction the system best calculated to help the pupil along in his intended chase after dimes and dollars? We are so far from believing it to be anything of the kind that, though we desire the establishment of Catholic schools, we should hesitate to indorse any of them in which more worldly and useful knowledge might not be acquired than in the average public schools of the State. When we say there is a pressing need of Catholic schools, we mean such schools as shall turn out efficient scholars. In this respect there would be no need to more. The immediate demand is for education of a superior and practical character and unless we can attain it our higher object of disseminating religious truth in its fullness will be in great part frustrated. When, therefore, we ask for Catholic schools, we ask also for live teachers, who will not forget that their pupils have bread to earn. In short, we must have teachers who know how to teach, and that, of course, implies that they must have a goodly store of practical knowledge. It would be better to have no schools at all than one conducted by ignoramuses whose best efforts would be calculated to make the children as stupid as himself. An early increase in the number of our parochial schools may be a consolation to the mind of the right, I saw the two Vicars the mind of the right, I saw the two Vicars the mind of the right, I saw the two Vicars among the first officers we attended to were the wife and child (may Mary Anne, General Charette. M. Vaullio's paper, in which there was such severe strictures lately on the Jesuits, but which now has changed its tone and accusing them of what they never intended, has come to grief again. The following is an extract from the Bishop of Orleans' letter to the priests and members of the committee who saved so many priests' lives:

MESSIEURS ET CHERS PRÊTRES—Since March was ravaged the whole of the poor city which was called—Orleans. Its streets, its houses, its churches, its public edifices, its walls, its towers, and so many of its inhabitants, citizens, soldiers, and priests, have fallen under the blows of the enemy. Without any influence, without suffrage on the Pontifical Zouaves, the Sacred Heart in our Cathedral, under the eyes of our clergy, who remained silent, and, it was said, by their order, have given the signal for the sons of our most distinguished men were grossly insulted by the name "CLERICAL," which did not fail to take this opportunity of giving vent to its hatred. Nothing was spared to us. Our individuality gave more than interest to our misfortunes. Our Cathedral, our Seminary, the Committee for the Works of the Faith, were the result of the impiety! That all this abuse was calumny, and that there was no foundation in fact, time quickly proved.

The second letter of the illustrious prelate is directed against M. Veuillot:

Here are the simple facts, he says, and that is what you call influences and transformation profanations and abominations. What is infamous, sir, are your invention and calumnies, and when respectable witnesses tell you that you are deceived in your hatred, you are not insulted. Horror at his grave, and that all honest men feel for you! And what accusations have you spread on the National Assembly, the most Christian one we have in our country, and on which there are so many men devoted to religion and to the Holy Father? Yesterday you said, in speaking of the—the one of their heads but to tell of every principle of rectitude, and, in fact, of every principle!

When I remember how devoted the members of the Committee were, and how brave and charitable the clergy of Orleans were after the first and second invasion of Orleans, and how the wounded Pontifical Zouaves, as well as the 12,000 wounded of both armies, were treated, I cannot but blame, as every body does, such an unheard of and unjust calumny. M. Veuillot, who was absent in Rome, has, since his return, put an end to the discussion in his paper, but without making any amende honorable for the unchristian and unfounded calumny. There never was a time when such intemperate zeal and false accusations can do so much harm, and, although we admit the assertion that America might sink into the sea without any loss to civilisation, it has caused a most painful emotion among the readers of the religious paper.

The journal l'Univers having refused to publish the answer of the Bishop of Orleans to the Pontifical Council against the publication in the paper against the clergy of his diocese, the illustrious prelate addressed it in the following letter, published to-day in all the papers:

Orleans, January 30, 1874.

SIR—After having waited patiently a month, with indignation, for the answer which you promised me, I write to you and to France what the "Univers" called the "Bishop of Orleans." I can refuse to insert a letter which a Bishop wrote to you, to defend truth and the honor of his diocese, which were grossly insulted. The refusal I call in my turn a scandal, and I denounce it to all honest men. I was understood that the publication of that letter is rather embarrassing for you, and that you would prefer to avoid it. I am pressing it, and in Paris among the journalists it is a question of honor. You have now a single one left, and you will not, I hope, by your silence, sir, your paper is disingenuously by your silence, sir. Your paper is not the organ of the Catholics, but of the enemies of infancy—it was the word used. It attributed to the bishops of the Council of Versailles the intention of them as hypocrites in religion and patriotism—It goes so far as to say that the Bishop of Orleans has corrupted the flag of the Pontifical Zouaves was a public scandal. Your paper has not been ashamed to say that the sacrilegious profanations which disgrace the sanctuary of the Sacred Heart, and I repeat, that it is in the name of the Bishop of Orleans that I call upon you, in the name of my diocese, basely calumniated, that I require you to insert in your columns the letter which I wrote, sir, the homage of the sentiments which I have the honor to be, &c.

† FÉLIX DUPANLOUP,
Bishop of Orleans.

Never in the whole course of my life did I hear of, or read of, a calumny so base and unfounded as the one that gave rise to the present difficulty. The reference to the sale of the Pontifical Zouaves' effects, and the insulted prelate, attempted, as soon as he returned home, to stifle the controversy. This arbitrary conduct incensed the whole French hierarchy and priesthood against him, and rendered inevitable the stoppage of his journal. M. VEUILLOT is undoubtedly a writer of great power, but he is also a bitter partisan, and his attachment to holy faith has never been questioned. Indeed, he has always been regarded as one of the most prominent champions of Catholicity against the illegalism and secularism of the present age. But, unfortunately for himself, his temper is none of the best, and he occasionally indulges in extravagance of language which Christian charity would condemn. Moreover, he is at times deficient in the respect which all laymen, no matter how high their station or how great their talents, should show to the anointed ministers of God; and he criticises them with far more freedom than justice. In this grievous mistake he is followed too frequently by a number of his lay professionals in this country, who might very well take warning from his fate. It is more than absurd for newspaper writers to sit in judgment upon and adversely upon the course pursued in certain eventualities by priests and bishops, inasmuch as in nine cases out of ten their conduct is governed by considerations of which their critics are altogether ignorant. In the case of M. VEUILLOT, the offence was aggravated by the circumstance that no just cause of complaint existed at all; and, furthermore, if what was asserted had been correct, the Bishop of Orleans was not the individual responsible for the mistake, or slight, or whatever it should be termed. We have append the extract from the letter of the Bishop of Orleans' correspondent.

A very angry discussion has taken place between the writers of the Univers and the illustrious Bishop of Orleans, in the absence of the great prelate, a service for the victims of the war was celebrated, and he spoke in the name of the Pontifical Zouaves did not figure in the cathedral, a very bitter article appeared in the Univers, in which the famous not to have had it there, and stating that the priests and the committee for the Works of the Faith, had acted badly. Of course, that Monsignor Dupanloup had prevented the flag from being placed in the church. The great prelate, who was in Orleans last week, and inquiring into the matter, declared that the statement was a gross calumny, and that it was to their zeal and devotion to the work of God. He then spoke of the conversion of the aborigines of America as effected by the Franciscans, and of the great strength and ability displayed in their character wrought by the blessings of the Gospel. The attempts of the Dutch Calvinists to enter Florida and Brazil, and the utter failure through want of help, so many among the "missionaries," were next described. The progress of Catholic missions in all quarters of the world during the last three centuries was commented on at considerable length, and contrasted with the inefficiency and unfruitfulness which characterized all Protestant efforts at evangelization. The lecturer concluded with a most eloquent apostrophe to the Holy Virgin. We regret exceedingly that pressure on our space precludes us from giving more than this brief synopsis of what was undoubtedly a most remarkable address, and rendered inevitable the stoppage of his journal. M. VEUILLOT is, undoubtedly, a writer of great power, but he is also a bitter partisan, and his attachment to holy faith has never been questioned. Indeed, he has always been regarded as one of the most prominent champions of Catholicity against the illegalism and secularism of the present age. But, unfortunately for himself, his temper is none of the best, and he occasionally indulges in extravagance of language which Christian charity would condemn. Moreover, he is at times deficient in the respect which all laymen, no matter how high their station or how great their talents, should show to the anointed ministers of God; and he criticises them with far more freedom than justice. In this grievous mistake he is followed too frequently by a number of his lay professionals in this country, who might very well take warning from his fate. It is more than absurd for newspaper writers to sit in judgment upon and adversely upon the course pursued in certain eventualities by priests and bishops, inasmuch as in nine cases out of ten their conduct is governed by considerations of which their critics are altogether ignorant. In the case of M. VEUILLOT, the offence was aggravated by the circumstance that no just cause of complaint existed at all; and, furthermore, if what was asserted had been correct, the Bishop of Orleans was not the individual responsible for the mistake, or slight, or whatever it should be termed. We have append the extract from the letter of the illustrious prelate's correspondent.

THE "UNIVERS" AND THE BISHOP OF ORLEANS.

The telegram which appeared in the city papers a few days ago, stating that the well known and universally respected Catholic journal, L'Univers, had suspended publication, caused much surprise in literary circles. There was no reason assigned for the demise of the paper, so the matter was left open to conjecture. Nobody suspected it was lack of support, because the Univers, being under the control of the Jesuits, and in the absence of great private, a service for the victims of the war was celebrated, and he spoke in the name of the Pontifical Zouaves did not figure in the cathedral, a very bitter article appeared in the Univers, in which the famous not to have had it there, and stating that the priests and the committee for the Works of the Faith, had acted badly. Of course, that Monsignor Dupanloup had prevented the flag from being placed in the church. The great prelate, who was in Orleans last week, and inquiring into the matter, declared that the statement was a gross calumny, and that it was to their zeal and devotion to the work of God. He then spoke of the conversion of the aborigines of America as effected by the Franciscans, and of the great strength and ability displayed in their character wrought by the blessings of the Gospel. The attempts of the Dutch Calvinists to enter Florida and Brazil, and the utter failure through want of help, so many among the "missionaries," were next described. The progress of Catholic missions in all quarters of the world during the last three centuries was commented on at considerable length, and contrasted with the inefficiency and unfruitfulness which characterized all Protestant efforts at evangelization. The lecturer concluded with a most eloquent apostrophe to the Holy Virgin. We regret exceedingly that pressure on our space precludes us from giving more than this brief synopsis of what was undoubtedly a most remarkable address, and rendered inevitable the stoppage of his journal. M. VEUILLOT is, undoubtedly, a writer of great power, but he is also a bitter partisan, and his attachment to holy faith has never been questioned. Indeed, he has always been regarded as one of the most prominent champions of Catholicity against the illegalism and secularism of the present age. But, unfortunately for himself, his temper is none of the best, and he occasionally indulges in extravagance of language which Christian charity would condemn. Moreover, he is at times deficient in the respect which all laymen, no matter how high their station or how great their talents, should show to the anointed ministers of God; and he criticises them with far more freedom than justice. In this grievous mistake he is followed too frequently by a number of his lay professionals in this country, who might very well take warning from his fate. It is more than absurd for newspaper writers to sit in judgment upon and adversely upon the course pursued in certain eventualities by priests and bishops, inasmuch as in nine cases out of ten their conduct is governed by considerations of which their critics are altogether ignorant. In the case of M. VEUILLOT, the offence was aggravated by the circumstance that no just cause of complaint existed at all; and, furthermore, if what was asserted had been correct, the Bishop of Orleans was not the individual responsible for the mistake, or slight, or whatever it should be termed. We have append the extract from the letter of the illustrious prelate's correspondent.

"The Catholic Church and the Conversion of Nations."

The Rev. Father Buchard, S. J., lectured last Tuesday evening, in St. Ignatius' Church, on the above subject, for the benefit of Presentation Convent. His subject was "The Catholic Church and the Conversion of Nations." The text was taken from St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, Ex. 18, as follows: "But I say, have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound hath gone forth unto all the earth and their words unto the ends of the world." The reverend lecturer began by showing that, according to the ancient prophecies and to the promises of Christ, the true church of God was that which should convert the nations. Both before and after the Reformation the missionary spirit manifested by the Catholic Church proved that she, indeed, was fulfilling the mandates of the Redeemer. Protestantism did nothing towards bringing heathen people to the knowledge of the true God, for the utmost it could do was to proselytize. It simply induced people who previously enjoyed the full deposit of faith to accept some inane articles of which they were condemned as "superstitious" or "idolatrous" by the so called reformers. He explained how at the very time of the Reformation, when Protestantism was making no progress, the Catholic Church was reaping thousands of poor idolaters to the fold of Christ. He alluded to the evangelization of Xicaragua and Mexico, where in ten years nearly three millions of persons were baptized. Father Buchard next touched upon the wonderful labors of St. Francis Xavier and his companions in India and Japan, citing the fact that he was to their zeal and devotion to the work of God. He then spoke of the conversion of the aborigines of America as effected by the Franciscans, and of the great strength and ability displayed in their character wrought by the blessings of the Gospel. The attempts of the Dutch Calvinists to enter Florida and Brazil, and the utter failure through want of help, so many among the "missionaries," were next described. The progress of Catholic missions in all quarters of the world during the last three centuries was commented on at considerable length, and contrasted with the inefficiency and unfruitfulness which characterized all Protestant efforts at evangelization. The lecturer concluded with a most eloquent apostrophe to the Holy Virgin. We regret exceedingly that pressure on our space precludes us from giving more than this brief synopsis of what was undoubtedly a most remarkable address, and rendered inevitable the stoppage of his journal. M. VEUILLOT is, undoubtedly, a writer of great power, but he is also a bitter partisan, and his attachment to holy faith has never been questioned. Indeed, he has always been regarded as one of the most prominent champions of Catholicity against the illegalism and secularism of the present age. But, unfortunately for himself, his temper is none of the best, and he occasionally indulges in extravagance of language which Christian charity would condemn. Moreover, he is at times deficient in the respect which all laymen, no matter how high their station or how great their talents, should show to the anointed ministers of God; and he criticises them with far more freedom than justice. In this grievous mistake he is followed too frequently by a number of his lay professionals in this country, who might very well take warning from his fate. It is more than absurd for newspaper writers to sit in judgment upon and adversely upon the course pursued in certain eventualities by priests and bishops, inasmuch as in nine cases out of ten their conduct is governed by considerations of which their critics are altogether ignorant. In the case of M. VEUILLOT, the offence was aggravated by the circumstance that no just cause of complaint existed at all; and, furthermore, if what was asserted had been correct, the Bishop of Orleans was not the individual responsible for the mistake, or slight, or whatever it should be termed. We have append the extract from the letter of the illustrious prelate's correspondent.

St. Mary's Hospital Society Collection

Following is a list of collections for the month of January for St. Mary's Hospital Society, made by Mr. Owen Breslin in Nonville and vicinity:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Jas. Harrington | $2 00 | Daniel Boyle | $1 |
| Jas. O'Connell | 1 00 | Daniel Cafferty | 1 |
| John O'Meiede | 2 00 | Thomas Marshall | 1 |
| John Curtin | 1 00 | Stephen Hall | 1 |
| Thos. J. Murphy | 2 00 | Francis Clifford | 1 |
| Mary Murphy | 1 00 | Jas. Cafferty | 1 |
| John Harrington | 2 00 | John Lynch | 1 |
| D. B. Williams | 2 00 | Thomas Lynch | 1 |
| Richard Keane | 2 00 | Timothy McCarthy | 2 |
| Jas. Harrington | 2 00 | Timothy McCarthy, 2d | 2 |
| Mrs. Mary Williams | 1 00 | Joseph Cartwright | 1 |
| Mrs. A. Dorkin | 1 00 | Edward Jobe | 1 |
| William Head | 1 00 | George Hoch | 1 |
| William Bennie | 2 00 | Stewart Pray | 1 |
| Robt. Humphreys | 2 00 | John Dorkin | 1 |
| George A. Miller | 2 00 | Thos. B. O'Reilly | 1 |
| William Fitzgerald | 2 00 | Daniel McCarthy | 1 |
| Richard E. Murphy | 2 00 | Alex. Mouchette | 1 |
| James Mooney | 1 00 | Michael McGrath | 1 |
| Michael Gallagher | 1 00 | Ross Richards | 1 |

LATE NEWS ITEMS.

Mr. Phelan has been appointed Sergeant-at-Arms for Waterford.

The death is announced of Mr. W. E. Nightingale, father of Florence Nightingale.

The Waterford Poor Law Guardians have resolved not to send pauper children of their union out to nurse.

The National Tenant Right Conference opened the Music Hall, Belfast, on Tuesday, January 13th.

The British Government has decided there is no immediate necessity for sending out more troops to the Gold Coast.

Mr. Richard Fitzgerald, the bank officer, who was the victim of an outrage near Castlelyar, is a Cork gentleman.

Mr. Joseph Fleber, of the Waterford Mail, intends offering himself to the electors of that city at the next election.

On January 8th a ship-owner, of Newry, was committed for trial, charged with sending a ship to sea in an unseaworthy condition.

The Swiss Catholic bishops have sent a protest to the Federal Council against the expulsion of the Papal Nuncio from Switzerland.

Andrew Clarke, of Belmont, Lifford, county Donegal, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Tyrone.

The Attorney-General has appointed William Moncrieff Copinger, Assistant Crown Solicitor for the county of Westmeath, vice Patrick Egan, Esq., resigned.

Mr. Joseph Fleber, of the Waterford Mail, intends offering himself to the electors of that city at the next election.

On January 8th a ship-owner, of Newry, was committed for trial, charged with sending a ship to sea in an unseaworthy condition.

The Swiss Catholic bishops have sent a protest to the Federal Council against the expulsion of the Papal Nuncio from Switzerland.

Andrew Clarke, of Belmont, Lifford, county Donegal, has been appointed to the Commission of the Peace for the county of Tyrone.

The Attorney-General has appointed William Moncrieff Copinger, Assistant Crown Solicitor for the county of Westmeath, vice Patrick Egan, Esq., resigned.

The Rev. Thomas Gallagher, of Waterford, has bequeathed thirty-five thousand pounds for distribution among local charities. Mr. Gallagher was a member of all the local public boards.

John Howe, manager of Meone's colliery, Wigan, where the explosion took place recently, was fined £50 for allowing unlicensed persons to work therein. The application was refused by a large majority.

A dividend at the rate of £20 per share (£30 paid up) was declared by the Norwich Union Fire Office. This dividend represents a return upon the original paid up capital at the rate of 66 per cent per annum. The shares are now worth about £100 each. The office has reserved a fund of upwards of £500,000.

On Friday, January 9, at the beautiful chapel of New Ross, Cornwall Henry Rose, Esq., of

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

The Limerick Election.

A meeting of the clergy of the diocese of Limerick, presided over by the Most Rev. Dr. Butler, was held January 9th, to consider the coming election for the county.

After a discussion upon the merits of the candidates, an address to the electors was almost unanimously adopted, "only four clergymen dissenting." The address opens by pointing out that the Bishop and clergy have neither power nor intention to dictate to the electors, but it was their duty to give expression to their views on such an important subject as the coming election.

The address continues to state that at this moment the hearts of priests and people are set upon "domestic Government, popularly called Home Rule; upon the educated of the people according to the people's faith; upon a fixity of tenure in the land at a fair rent, and an amnesty to the political prisoners." For the advocacy of these principles, the address continues, "a man of education, position, intelligence and ability," was wanted. Of the two candidates in the Liberal interest before the county—Messrs. Kelly and O'Sullivan—Mr. Kelly, we had apprised, the address says, without invitation from the Bishop and clergy, or any one else, was in favor of the programme set forth above. He was, moreover, it is added, an "educated, intelligent, able man," having "a large stake" in the county and city, and a private character "without stain." The Bishop and clergy then pass to the charges of extreme Irritation—"the blight and bane of Ireland"—leveled at Mr. Kelly's father. They declare that some of these charges are "unfounded," others "greatly exaggerated," but if true to any extent, it is not the priests of Limerick who will excuse or palliate his conduct." But, the address asserts, it is not fair to visit on Mr. J. J. Kelly the sins of his father, and asks did young Mr. Kelly approve, could he have prevented, did he profit by these acts? Under all the circumstances, add the Bishop and clergy, there is more eligible candidate has appeared, Limerick can do no better than "give Mr. Kelly his support;" and they declare their belief that he will "honorably and manfully" advance the country's interests, and strongly urge the candidature of Mr. O'Sullivan, the Bishop and clergy assert that that gentleman's reputation would "lend most powerfully to establish" the charge that Ireland sought separation under the name of Home Rule, and would be "a strong confirmation of the allegation that the necessary backed up on confiscation as a settlement of the land question."—Dublin Freeman, January 10.

How to Rate a Wife.

A very queer conversation took place in the police-court the other day between his Worship and a shoemaker who summoned his wife for annoying him by abusive language. "Are you not her husband?" asked the magistrate. "Yes," the complainant answered, the evident fact being that the woman used to try her rhetoric on him just because she is her husband. "Why don't you prevent her?" "How can I prevent her?" "Oh, if you allow her to wear a pair of breeches, I cannot help it." "Well your worship," said the puzzled shoemaker, thinking he saw a ray of hope in the magistrate's words, "will you allow me to use violence?" His Worship probably thought it would be not be improper to endow the shoemaker with this rather dangerous privilege, but he gave as broad a hint as he can be safely conceived. "Why do you submit like a fool?" If that shoemaker be brought up hereafter for the illegal use of one of his taste as an instrument of conjugal chastened, we shall be curious to observe how the magistrate will take the incident. The last words of his Worship upon this case were: "Happily I am not a married man!" Happily for whom? To be consistant, he should have meant that his single state was a happy fact for the lady who might otherwise be his wife; but possibly the happiness is his own, for even the Jove of a police-court, terrible personage though he may be, has often been put in the dock before that supreme tribunal in which his angry spouse was prosecutor, judge and jury.—Dublin paper.

The Chances of Ireland.

Sir John Gray, at a civic banquet in Kilkenny last week, made a speech on current politics. He described himself as one hope of the success of the Home Rule movement. The chief topic of the address was Irish education, in reference to which Sir John put the claim of Irish Catholics to a charter-university in a manner equally simple and unanswerable. In view, however, of the recent conduct of the Liberal party in England with this vital question, and of the hopelessness of gaining educational justice from England, Sir John Gray expressed his faith that the Catholics of this country can and will maintain a worthy university of their own, with degrees that will be rated as guarantees of learning, though they may not have existed as one of the privileges of his mention. To the Irish all over the world, and especially to the great New Ireland of the West, the speaker said he looked for ready and liberal help in a national enterprise of such vital consequence to the moral and material welfare of the people.—Dublin Weekly News, Jan. 10.

The Catholic University.

Important reforms have recently been made in the Catholic University of Ireland. Dr. Molloy a professor of the College of Maynooth, has been appointed to the chair of Natural Philosophy. This clergyman has a reputation for great ability; he professed theology for several years, and has devoted much attention to what the Italians call la fisica sacra, or the relations between physical science and revealed religion. He is the author of a much-esteemed work, entitled "Geology and Revealed Religion." This gentleman has been appointed to the Catholic University the munificent donation of $75,000 for the improvement of its museum and of its valuable apparatus. The University was already in possession of a set of very rare philosophical instruments, purchased at Paris during the rectorship of Dr. Newman.—Westminster Gazette.

ENGLAND.

An Honest Advocate.

It is so refreshing to find an English member of Parliament going out of his own way to take up the much-neglected case of poor Ireland, that we should be neglectful of our duty if we did not do full justice to such a rare instance of political honesty. In a speech delivered the other evening by Sir Charles Dilke, at a crowded meeting of the Western of Chelsea, the honorable baronet had the honesty and courage to say:

"I found myself compelled last year to vote against a bill with the landable title of Peace Preservation Bill, but with another word, I am sorry to say, following that title and making it read Peace Preservation (Ireland) Bill. I fear that the public hardly know how severe, and indeed terrible, are the provisions of that law. The figures that have been published by Government, I do not believe to be, so far from justifying its introduction. If there had been a certain amount of disturbance in an English county, and it was proposed to pass such a bill, the outcry would be great indeed. But because it applies only to Ireland, and the Irish are looked upon as unpopular and are supposed to be an unsocommunistic people, different from all others, it is passed with but small opposition. All that I can say is that I was brought up in old Whig principles, and especially in all that concerned matters of personal liberty, and that I cannot understand how those who shudder at arbitrary arrests in Poland, and who ridicule gagging of the press in France, can permit the passing of a law for Ireland which gives absolute powers of arrest and of suppression of newspapers to the Lord Lieutenant. Ireland, unfortunately for herself, has always been looked upon as a country upon which it was safe to try experiments since the time when Harrington proposed to Cromwell to raise money by selling Ireland to the Jews."

Well would it be for the stability of the whole of the three kingdoms had we more as genuinely liberal statement as this expression of opinion of Sir Charles Dilke indicates him to be. For this talented and liberal representative for Chelsea is entitled to the leading position of every honest and just elector.—London Universe, January 10.

Home Rule Exercise.

The Home Rule principle is fast becoming a treasured article of faith in England. Mr. Butt, in his speech at Manchester, gave several cheering proofs of the growth of a friendly feeling towards the national movement. Mr. Isaac Holden, a wealthy and influential persons in Great Britain. Two signal instances of the fact are now before us. Mr. Cowen, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who has been a prominent claimant in the room of his father, Sir Joseph Cowen, whose death a few days ago left it vacant, addressed a large meeting of the constituency of Home Rule for Ireland, as defined by the Dublin Conference. And Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, a very important man, who is President of the Birmingham League, which, in fact, is Radical leader, presents himself at Sheffield as a candidate for Parliament with an open avowal that he is favorable to the Irish demand. The eminent historian, Mr. Frederic Harrison, contributes two articles to the Irish spirit to the Fortnightly Review. The opinions of individuals may be only straws in the world of politics, but such opinions as these are straws that show which way the wind is blowing.—Dublin Weekly News, Jan. 10.

Sound Reasoning.

There is no country in the world which goes in so extensively for outward shows of religion and which is at heart so drunken and immoral as Scotland. Exactorly, Scotland is a model of sobriety and decorum; interiorly, she is rotten to the core—Puritanical in the extreme or the surface, licentious and drunken at heart. In proof of this witness the records of immorality and her well-known great capabilities of private "tippling." Take, for example, the following sound reasoning of Dundee: Whilst the people of Dundee would be shocked at the innocent laugh or joyous look of a happy youth on the Sabbath day, they are not ashamed to acknowledge that they consume 252,878 gallons of foreign spirits and whisky every year. Irrespective of the beer which these thirsty fellow-citizens of Dundee annually swill, the proportion last year brought to the public exchequer £151,355, something like £1 per head of the whole population of Dundee.—London Universe, January 10.

FRANCE.

The Velina Power.

When the National Assembly meets next week, after its short recess, its attention will be drawn without delay to the great question of the electoral law. Until the law is materially reformed there can be no hope for the establishment of order and peace upon a solid basis in France. We take daily more progress from moderate men to reject their doting harm to themselves as well as to others. The French Communists are lunatics, and the elective franchise is the deadly weapon with which they threaten destruction to society. Madmen they are, for demens of every conduct on all occasions proves beyond question; and in either case they cannot be prudently intrusted with the power of breaking the legislature of a state. It is proposed to restrict the franchise to persons of a certain residence, twenty years of age and upwards, and to make suborbon residence for twelve months in the parish as absolute condition for the exercise of the franchise. This will limit the right of voting considerably and ben-fidelity. It is also proposed to borrow Mr. Disraeli's idea of fancy votes—one of which we approved with reference to England, and which we consider very conducive to the best interests of France—and to give supplementary votes to public functionaries of the Constitutional, peat or present; ministers of any one of the forms of religion recognized by the State, magistrates of all grades, lawyers, physicians, members of the learned societies, civil and military officers, whether retired or in active service, and all electors paying a sum of 5 per cent upon whatever amount of accumulated votes not, however, to exceed four. The followers of MM. Thiers and Jean-baud will, of course, denounce such a proposal as the rankest tyranny and injustice, because it is a strong check upon Red Republicanism—the only republic possible in France—but we hope that it will be adopted by the National Assembly. With such a law, the election of such wretches as Barrodet, Rane, etc., would be impossible.—London Weekly Register, January 10.

The Circular of M. de Fourtou.

We know not whether it is in consequence of representations from the German Government that M. de Fourtou has sent his letter to the French Bishops concerning the recent pastorals which some of them have put forth. At all events, it is believed that the Berlin authorities are satisfied with what has been done. The circular of the Minister of Public Worship observes all the forms, avoids singling out any particular pastoral for animadversion, and expresses a confident conviction that the eminent prelates in question would be "the first to regret" that their writings should have produced "consequences absolutely contrary to their intentions." The Government, however, could not but take notice of the fact that some "appreciations" contained in them "are calculated to excite abroad suspicions which it is undesirable to arouse," and sincerely hopes that the will not occur again. "Your Grandeur," continues M. de Fourtou, "is not ignorant of the sympathy, which the Government feels for the Church and the Holy See in the midst of their trials. It well understands therefore the cares which weigh on the Catholic conscience, and the grief of which the Catholic Bishops are now making themselves the interpreters. Such sentiments, Monseigneur, may be expressed with all the filling freedom and force without its being necessary to have recourse to attacks at which neighboring Governments may take umbrage." We should rather like to know, however, in what terms which would not offend Prince von Bismarck, the liberties of the spiritual jurisdiction could be asserted, the violation of that liberty condemned and the solidarity of Catholic interests throughout the world affirmed. And the French Bishops could do no less than this.—London Tablet, January 10.

GERMANY.

Cowing Bismarck.

Seventeen new laws are this moment in preparation in Austria, for the better regulation of the relations between Church and State." Prior to 1867 there was but one law for that purpose—namely, the concordat agreed on with the Holy Father in 1855, which worked so well that Austria was at that time one of the best regulated countries in Europe. That peaceful state of affairs did not suit Bismarck. Ever since this one law was arbitrarily set aside, everything has been at sixes and sevens in the empire; and now the Austrian Minister of Public Worship of the sleepless nights the quasi-colossus triumphs of the Prussian Kulturkampf up to rid of the celebrated Mass, but swallowed little of the object he had in view. He was only seized with spasms and violent pains in the stomach, vomiting and other symptoms of poisoning. Medical assistance was at hand, and their efforts proved successful. Examinations were set on foot, which resulted in finding traces of tartar emetic in the sacred vessels, in the wine, and in the hosts. Twenty-seven persons of seventeen brand-new sanctimonious faces, ranging up to 72 in age, were brought upon him. It is hard to tell what the object of the whole of this was, and why all this dancing to the tunes struck by Bismarck. In Prussia the Catholics are as one to two, and may be trusted to deal to a man with impunity; numerical strength at least is on the side of the oppressed. But in Austria they are altogether in the majority, the aggregate numbers of Protestants, Jews and schismatics not amounting to more than one and a half million, or about nine per cent. of the entire population to the western half of the empire.—London Tablet, January 10.

Religion of the Late Dowager Queen of Prussia.

The recent death of the late Queen of Prussia brings to memory another instance of the intolerance of the Court of Berlin. This unhappy princess was a Catholic in her youth, being a sister of the King of Bavaria. She was married to the King of Prussia by proxy, and although a good Catholic, but remorse pursued her through life, and when, a few years since, she went to Rome, she confessed to the Pope the reliance of her suite, and to have a secret interview with Pius IX. He reconciled her to the Church, and accorded to her, in consideration of the miserable slavery in which she lived, the privilege granted to the ex-Empress Eugenie, of having divine service in her private chapel. This

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

Father Hacker is at present residing in Egypt, and is greatly improved in health.

Two Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul have lately been organized in Houston, Texas.

The Mortifiene Catholic is the name of a new Catholic paper published in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Father Martinelli, one of the newly appointed Cardinals, was an humble Augustinian friar.

Bishop Loughlin, of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently dedicated St. Vincent's Home for newsboys.

Very Rev. L. Cosgrove, of Wexford, has been appointed Provincial of the Franciscans in Ireland.

Bishop Dubois of Galveston, Texas, will soon return from France to his diocese, accompanied by twenty-two priests and eighteen nuns.

A roll of bank notes advertised as lost by Charles Simon & Son, of Baltimore, was returned to the firm by a Sister of Charity of that city, who declined all reward.

The Rev. Father Young, of the Dublin Order, who has a brother in this city, delivered a lecture lately in Buffalo, for the St. Vincent de Paul Society, which realized over $600.

Bishop Salpointe, of Arizona, has received from St. Louis and Louisville some Sisters of different orders and several Christian Brothers to teach the Indians of his mission.

The Voltre Church of the Sorious, Venice, commenced by the unfortunate Maximillian of Mexico, is completed, and is one of the most magnificent of modern churches.

The Rev. P. Bradley, Chaplain to the Sisters Asylum at Albany, N. Y., died last week at the age of sixty-four years. He was ordained by Bishop Dubois, of New York, forty-two years ago.

The Sisters of Mercy from Rochester, N. Y., have opened a convent, to which a boarding and free school is attached, at Malone, and have already received two young ladies as postulants.

The Sisters in charge of St. Mary's free school at Hoboken, N. J., were robbed of their vestments on Sunday night last, and forty dollars, which they had just collected to purchase clothing for some poor children.

The Chicago Western Catholic says that all the temporary wooden churches, built after the great fire, will disappear during the next season. This proves the existence of a good Catholic spirit.

"An old priest" in the Catholic Review says that the banns of marriage should be published on the Sabbath previous to a new country like this, where people are so unsettled.

The sixth centenary of St. Thomas Aquinas is to be celebrated this year with great pomp and solemnity in Rome, where his Order, the Dominican, has been so cruelly persecuted and the mother house of the Order so repressed.

Mr. John Lesage, President of the Hibernian Mutual Relief Society of Memphis, Tenn., has been elected Mayor of that city, and was inaugurated January 7th, in return for his indefatigable labors during the late epidemic which so fearfully scourged that city.

The Catholic girls of Great Britain and Ireland are preparing an offering to the Holy Father, as a mark of the affection and sympathy for the days of persecution. Lady Herbert is Treasurer for England, the Countess of Portarlington for Ireland, and the Marchioness of Bute for Scotland.

We were in Lawrence, Mass., twenty years ago when it had but one small church. Now we have seven, and another building. The Augustinian Fathers have lately established a house of their own here, which they erected at a cost of fifty thousand dollars.

On Sunday, the 13th of October, the Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Mahoney, Bishop of Armidale, Australia, in presence of the largest congregation ever assembled at Lisscarr, laid the foundation-stone of the first Catholic church in the Richmond River district.

The St. Louis Watchman says that when the Pope wrote his last Encyclical on Christian education, he totally ignored the fact that there was a place called Boston, and that a paper called the Pilot was published there." Whats a pity! It may have been an oversight of his Holiness.

In New York city, during the year 1873, there were 849 deaths from pleasure and unnatural births, and it is a deplorable, but nevertheless a singular fact, that all were the offspring of American mothers. Similar facts were developed by the statistics of the death for the year 1872.

The Toledo Review, a secular paper, inquires—"Is a Catholic parochial school a private school?" and answers—"We think not, because it is not a school for one family, but for a portion of the community, and open to all denominations."

Dr. E. O. Haven, formerly President of the Michigan University, and at a late meeting of the Methodist clergy in New York that of the twelve different Protestant denominational Churches in Italy afforded a spectacle for infidels and skeptics to laugh at.

Some vile enemy of the "Little Sisters of the Poor" sent a rumor afloat in Philadelphia that they took to tonsure! A Protestant friend replies that it is a cruel slander, and he knows of his own knowledge "that nobody is admitted unless through pure charity, no matter what his religious belief is."

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Philadelphia numbers ten thousand members, and they propose to hold the largest Patrick's Day celebration ever seen in that city. Ten thousand Irish teetotalers is a novel but a glorious sight in one American city.

The Paulist Fathers Deshon, Dwyer and Finely have lately given very successful missions in Arlington, Lexington and other towns in Massachusetts, and the Church seems to be advancing, builds new churches all, or nearly all, converts, and many of them have been Protestant ministers, they cannot fail to make deep impression on the minds of their Puritan friends.

The Holy Father has appointed Lower California from the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, and has erected it into a Vicariate Apostolic. The Rev. Francesco Ramon de Castenada, a Discalced Carmelite of Guadalajara, is appointed Bishop of Romania in partibus, and Vicar Apostolic of Lower California, preconised December 22, 1873.

At Father Berrett's mission, given last week in Chicago, twenty-seven came into the church, and there were over four thousand communicants. Father Damen delivered his great lecture on "Objections to Catholicity" on Wednesday evening. He did think of his sainted Fathers were to get out last Saturday to commence a mission at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

The American Register—a paper published in Paris—in an article on the pleasure persecution, says: "North Germany may be Protestant, but South Germany is Catholic; and the subjugation of the latter by Prussia is not a reason for imposing a religion upon the people which they do not want and to which they will not submit without a struggle. The Catholics of Bavaria have long been dissatisfied with the Central Government, and open resistance will be made the moment the leaders of this party find that they have gained sufficient strength. A conflict under such conditions would be fearful to contemplate."

The Jesuit Fathers from Germany have located at Mankato, Minn., as a central point from which to issue out on missions through Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota and the Indian Territories. There will be their parent house for the Northwest.

The New York Herald says that, owing to the closing of so many monasteries in Italy, a large number of relics have been sent to New York, under the care of Father Gardiner, who has now one of the largest collections in the world, and that they will be distributed among the bishops of this country.

The Rev. J. T. Walford, S. J., M. A., formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and an Assistant Master at Eton College, who is at present engaged in the study of philosophy and theology at the Society's House in Louvain, Belgium, received the Tonsure and Minor Orders on the Feast of St. Stanislaus, at the hands of the Bishop of the diocese at the Novice House, situated at Tronchiennes, near Ghent.

It was through the efforts of Bishop Dubourg of New Orleans that the Society for the Propagation of the Faith was founded at Lyons, in France, in 1822. Its penny a week collections have built innumerable churches and chapels, sent missionaries throughout the world, and converted many thousands of souls; and there are few countries that have shared more in its almsgiving than the United States.

Bishop Rosecrans, of the diocese of Columbus, Ohio, a few weeks since, in the cathedral at Columbus, preached an eloquent sermon on Catholic organizations, with the sequin of the Kinsaid Benefited Associations lying upon the altar, strongly recommending the U. B. A. as a model Catholic organization, one that he considered the best in existence, and advising all Catholic young men to join.

The Catholic Union of the diocese of St. Paul, Minn., consists of twenty-seven societies, and is divided in the various counties of the State, represented by fifty-four councilors, with an aggregate membership of fifteen hundred, and steadily increasing. Last summer they issued five thousand copies of a document on Liberty of Conscience, which produced a discussion that has opened the Penitentiary and State Reformatory to the ministrations of priests.

When the Pope's messenger came into the presence of the Rev. P. Martinelli to announce to him the news of his elevation to the Cardinalate, he found him cleaning the sacred vessels in the church of St. Augustine, of which he was sacristan. Just so with St. Bonaventure. When the Papal messenger came to announce to him his elevation to the dignity of Prince of the Church, he found him washing dishes in the kitchen of his convent.

Although Nanno Nagle was the daughter of a Catholic gentleman of Catholic and Irish many and influential Protestant relatives, among whom was the great Edmund Burke, she was left to commence her first Catholic school in Cork by stealth, less than one hundred years ago. English laws forced ignorance upon the Irish people, and the English people and their American descendants have the impudence to allege that ignorance against the Irish people as a fault, if not as a crime.

An address of sympathy and respect with the Pope, signed by 1,200 Protestant ministers, has been presented to him by the Evangelical Alliance. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is the author of the address, and Dr. Schaff, of New York, presented it to the Pope. The Holy Father replied in a few words, thanking the signers for their sympathy.

The Rev. Father Young, of the Dublin Order, who has a brother in this city, delivered a lecture lately in Buffalo, for the St. Vincent de Paul Society, which realized over $600.

Bishop Salpointe, of Arizona, has received from St. Louis and Louisville some Sisters of different orders and several Christian Brothers to teach the Indians of his mission.

The Voltre Church of the Sorious, Venice, commenced by the unfortunate Maximillian of Mexico, is completed, and is one of the most magnificent of modern churches.

The Rev. P. Bradley, Chaplain to the Sisters Asylum at Albany, N. Y., died last week at the age of sixty-four years. He was ordained by Bishop Dubois, of New York, forty-two years ago.

The Sisters of Mercy from Rochester, N. Y., have opened a convent, to which a boarding and free school is attached, at Malone, and have already received two young ladies as postulants.

The Sisters in charge of St. Mary's free school at Hoboken, N. J., were robbed of their vestments on Sunday night last, and forty dollars, which they had just collected to purchase clothing for some poor children.

The Chicago Western Catholic says that all the temporary wooden churches, built after the great fire, will disappear during the next season. This proves the existence of a good Catholic spirit.

"An old priest" in the Catholic Review says that the banns of marriage should be published on the Sabbath previous to a new country like this, where people are so unsettled.

The sixth centenary of St. Thomas Aquinas is to be celebrated this year with great pomp and solemnity in Rome, where his Order, the Dominican, has been so cruelly persecuted and the mother house of the Order so repressed.

Mr. John Lesage, President of the Hibernian Mutual Relief Society of Memphis, Tenn., has been elected Mayor of that city, and was inaugurated January 7th, in return for his indefatigable labors during the late epidemic which so fearfully scourged that city.

The Catholic girls of Great Britain and Ireland are preparing an offering to the Holy Father, as a mark of the affection and sympathy for the days of persecution. Lady Herbert is Treasurer for England, the Countess of Portarlington for Ireland, and the Marchioness of Bute for Scotland.

We were in Lawrence, Mass., twenty years ago when it had but one small church. Now we have seven, and another building. The Augustinian Fathers have lately established a house of their own here, which they erected at a cost of fifty thousand dollars.

On Sunday, the 13th of October, the Rt. Rev. Dr. O'Mahoney, Bishop of Armidale, Australia, in presence of the largest congregation ever assembled at Lisscarr, laid the foundation-stone of the first Catholic church in the Richmond River district.

The St. Louis Watchman says that "when the Pope wrote his last Encyclical on Christian education, he totally ignored the fact that there was a place called Boston, and that a paper called the Pilot was published there." Whats a pity! It may have been an oversight of his Holiness.

In New York city, during the year 1873, there were 849 deaths from pleasure and unnatural births, and it is a deplorable, but nevertheless a singular fact, that all were the offspring of American mothers. Similar facts were developed by the statistics of the death for the year 1872.

The Toledo Review, a secular paper, inquires—"Is a Catholic parochial school a private school?" and answers—"We think not, because it is not a school for one family, but for a portion of the community, and open to all denominations."

Dr. E. O. Haven, formerly President of the Michigan University, and at a late meeting of the Methodist clergy in New York that of the twelve different Protestant denominational Churches in Italy afforded a spectacle for infidels and skeptics to laugh at.

Some vile enemy of the "Little Sisters of the Poor" sent a rumor afloat in Philadelphia that they took to tonsure! A Protestant friend replies that it is a cruel slander, and he knows of his own knowledge "that nobody is admitted unless through pure charity, no matter what his religious belief is."

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Philadelphia numbers ten thousand members, and they propose to hold the largest Patrick's Day celebration ever seen in that city. Ten thousand Irish teetotalers is a novel but a glorious sight in one American city.

The Paulist Fathers Deshon, Dwyer and Finely have lately given very successful missions in Arlington, Lexington and other towns in Massachusetts, and the Church seems to be advancing, builds new churches all, or nearly all, converts, and many of them have been Protestant ministers, they cannot fail to make deep impression on the minds of their Puritan friends.

The Holy Father has appointed Lower California from the diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, and has erected it into a Vicariate Apostolic. The Rev. Francesco Ramon de Castenada, a Discalced Carmelite of Guadalajara, is appointed Bishop of Romania in partibus, and Vicar Apostolic of Lower California, preconised December 22, 1873.

At Father Berrett's mission, given last week in Chicago, twenty-seven came into the church, and there were over four thousand communicants. Father Damen delivered his great lecture on "Objections to Catholicity" on Wednesday evening. He did think of his sainted Fathers were to get out last Saturday to commence a mission at Fort Wayne, Indiana.

The American Register—a paper published in Paris—in an article on the pleasure persecution, says: "North Germany may be Protestant, but South Germany is Catholic; and the subjugation of the latter by Prussia is not a reason for imposing a religion upon the people which they do not

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

The Carlists threaten to bombard the city of Bilbao.

Representative Clayton has introduced his bill for the admission jute and bagging free of duty.

A New York dispatch says that an immense balloon is to be sent to San Francisco in a few days for scientific purposes.

The Archbishop of Posen has been arrested by the German Government, and is now imprisoned in Ostrowo.

Hamilton, the Treasurer of Jersey City, absconded, and took with him $53,000 in money and $50,000 in bonds.

The Ways and Means Committee have agreed to retain twenty per cent. as the duty on tropical and semi tropical fruits.

Judge Thompson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, is dead. There was no better or more distinguished man in the State.

The President has signed the bill providing for the erection of the busts of Chief Justices Taney and Chase in the Supreme Court-room.

A dispatch from London states that Russia declines to send goods to the National Centennial Exhibition, to be held in Philadelphia in 1876.

A patent has been issued for the Mission de la Purissima in Santa Barbara county, and a small fraction is confirmed to Bishop Amat of Monterey.

A body of Philadelphia surgeons have gone to North Carolina for the purpose of making an autopsy on Siamese twins.

Eight buildings, valued at $50,000, and containing the corner of Dryades and Josephine streets, New Orleans, were burned on Saturday.

The New York police on Sunday last discovered a lot of unloaded hand-grenades on the premises of a Frenchman who was formerly a Communist. He was arrested.

The California delegation will all oppose Ward's bill to refer the Indian depredation claims to purchase from the Government within one year at ten dollars per acre.

All the new appointments in the Indian agencies have struck for twenty per cent. higher wages. The publishers have refused, and have secured help to issue their papers at a reduced size.

The extensive fire reported two weeks ago as being in the coal mines at Wilkesbarre, Penn., is still burning in force Monday and on Tuesday last was worse than ever before.

A band of praying men and women, the same now briefly chronicled, has been organized in Boston to visit saloons and pray there for the erring.

A sharp shock of earthquake, which shook stoves and other movables, visited Quebec and vicinity last Sunday. The temperature was twenty degrees below zero.

The French Assembly will report an appropriation of four million francs for the restoration of the Tuileries, the Palais Royale, and other public buildings in Paris, damaged by the Communists.

Articles of impeachment have been presented in Congress against Judge Busteed, Judiciary Committee against Judge Busteed, Federal Judge of Alabama, formerly a leading New York politician.

L'Union, a Paris paper, says that Bismarck has written to the British Government relative to the attitude of the Catholic press and Bishops of England, and received a disagreeable reply.

General Sherman is in favor of transferring the control of the Indians from the Interior Department to the War Department, the purpose of feeding, clothing & civilizing them, but to keep them in better subjection.

We announced last week that the low lands in the vicinity of Colton, Cal., were made fit for habitation by the little officers in a submerged state, the mosquitoes have been foolish enough to send a large number of a ticket to Nice and five francs to go to the devil with. The visitors, in the shape of mosquitoes, are, in order that unpleasantness may not take place within the limits of the principality. Many a poor fellow has faced death on his return to the hotel pennines and friendless, and has died in the agonies of delirium tremens. He is sure to win whether the Prince of Monaco or the Prince of Monaco, who draws his revenue from the rent paid by M. Blanc, spends the year in Paris, the life-blood dissipated in Paris.

Prevention Better than Sickness.

The ability of the human body to resist the causes of disease depends upon its vigor and upon the purity of the blood. Whenever these conditions are impaired, in the slightest degree, the most prolific causes of sickness are always present, and it is then that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters should be used. It will restore and strengthen the vital forces, and so purify the blood as to render it proof against the most common diseases. The ingredients of this powerful vegetable tonic are derived from the three kingdoms of nature, combining those well established principles which will successfully counteract the various influences to which we are subjected in different climates, and under the most unfavorable circumstances. It is the best possible remedy for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Fever and Ague, Rheumatism, Debility, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, or Sleep, and for all complaints originating in a disordered stomach, or torpid liver. Nothing else can be so safely taken in the first stages of Consumption, Bilious Fever, Chills and Fever, Kidney Complaints, and all diseases of the Urinary Organs. Physicians of all schools prescribe it. Sold by Druggists and Dealers generally.

"Housekeeper" of Health.

The liver being the great depurating organ of the human system, and this great "housekeeper" of our health" at work, it is of the utmost importance that it be kept in healthy order, and not get, as it were, the mastership of the house. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, with very small doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, are unequaled. Most diseases "flesh is heir to" are the result of a disordered liver. Even the worst scrofula in the system, when this remedy is faithfully and perseveringly given, entirely disappears. Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Chronic Diarrhœa, and every kind of humor, from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption, are speedily cured by it. Sick headache, Bilious headache, and every variety of headache, arising from a foul stomach, or torpid liver, are relieved and cured by it. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Miscellaneous.

CASH TEA STO
GEO. T. HANLY & C
DEALERS IN TEAS
COFFEES AND SPIC
928 MARKET STREET,
Between Stockton and Powell...SAN FRAN dc26

Premium Cut
GLASS
ETC., ETC., ON THE PACIFIC CO
AT THE LOWEST MARKET
101, 103 and 105 FRONT STR
and
110 PINE STREET.

The Fruit Recorder and C
Gardener

3 MONTHS FREE.

INFORMATION WANTED—
INFORMATION WANTED—
INFORMATION WANTED—
INFORMATION WANTED—

DAY GOODS, ETC.
KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,
IMPORTERS OF
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
DRY GOODS.
116 and 118 Third Street,
Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO
ONE PRICE ONLY.
sly
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
HAVING RECEIVED OUR NEW STOCK OF
DRY GOODS!
Complete in Every Department,
We are now prepared to supply our customers with
The Best and Cheapest Goods
in the City. Among which are—
Black Silks,
Japanese Silks,
Empress Cloths,
Tarnise Crotons,
Cashmeres,
Merinoes,
Gorges, Reps, Etc.
A SPLENDID ASSORTMENT OF
SHAWLS.
RIBBONS a Specialty, at VERY LOW PRICES.
Real IRISH TATTING sold in the trade at a fifth cost discount.
Thankful to our friends for the public for the liberal patronage heretofore received, we desire a continuance of the same.
WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.
706 MARKET STREET,
OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.
GOLD AND SILVER PLATING
OF ALL KINDS, BY HAND OR THE ELEC
TRO Process, in a superior manner, at the very lowest rates. Table ware, carriage work, builders' hardware, etc., done with neatness and dispatch.
PATRICK MURRAY,
Plater,
11 Geary street, San Francisco.

PRINTIN
Paper Ruling and Book Binding
Neatly, Promptly, C
PERFORMED BY
Bacon & Compa
Corner Clay and Sansome
SUCCESSORS TO BACON & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO.
SULLIVAN, KELLY &
Northwest corner Pine and Fr
Where they offer for sale
THE LARGEST STOCK
OF PAINTS, OILS,
GLAS
Wholesale and Retail
Confectione
107 MONTGOMERY ST.,
Between Bush and Sutter.....SAN F

Subscriptions Received.

Gilroy—Mrs. H. P. Shrine.....$1 50
Jackson—James Walsh.....4 00
Mr. Mansfield.....4 00
John Smith.....4 00
E. Muldoon.....4 00
French Corral—Thomas Ryan.....4 00
Hot Springs Valley—D. Mahoney.....4 00
Forest Hill—Father A. O'Donnell.....4 00
Placerville—B. Lincoln.....4 00
Gilroy—Mrs. Charles Burr.....4 00
Sacramento—T. McMurray.....4 00
San Jose—Christopher Ingoman.....4 00
Mrs. Mary Cluney.....4 00
Redding Creek—Thomas Wallace.....4 00
James Lawler.....4 00
Charles O'Connor.....4 00
Redwood City—John Mahoney.....4 00
Sherman P. O.—P. Fitzgerald.....4 00
Mission San Jose—Dennis Hart.....4 00

BURY AND GILBERT FAMILY MEDICINES.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely vegetable cathartic and tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Nervousness, Sick-headache, and all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your druggist for it. Beware of imitations. mhlo 1yeow

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, February 5, 1874.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been moderate. We quote—Extra at $4 12½@$4 37, and superfine at $3 75@$3 75 in sacks $@$ bbl.

WHEAT—The market has ruled weak and at lower rates the past week. At the close the market is quotable at $1 60@$1 65 $ ctl.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range for ordinary feed at $1 30@$1 40, and for choice brewing at $1 40@$1 50.

OATS—There was a fair demand, at unchanged rates during the past week. Quotable at the close at $2 50@$2 75 $ ctl.

CORN—The market has ruled steady during the week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $1 50@$1 55 for White and Yellow.

BRAN—Quotable at $20@$22 $ ton.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $21@$23 $ ton.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayos, $2 37½@$2 50; Pinks, $2 50@$2 62½; Reds, $2 25@$2 37½; and Small White, $3 50; large Butter, $3@$3 25 $ ctl.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1 50@$1 75 $ ctl.

POTATOES—Are quoted at $1 25@$1 50 $ 100 lbs; Sweets, $1 50@$1 75 $ ctl; Rose, $1 50@$1 75; Mercedes, $1 50@$1 75; Snowflake, $1 50@$1 75; Burbanks, $1 50@$1 75; Monstrous, 75@$1 25@$1 50; Peerless, 75@$1 25.

HOPS—Are dull at 35@37½ c lb.

WOOL—Quotable at 35@37½ c lb for Fine; 30@32½ c for Medium; 25@27½ c for Coarse; 20@22½ c for Foothill; 15@17½ c for Mountain.

HIDES—Quotable at $1 75@$2 00 $ 100 lbs.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6@6½ c lb.

SHEEP PELTS—Quotable at 50c@$1 50 each.

HORSE HIDES—Quotable at 50c@$1 $ piece.

HORNS—Quotable at $1 75@$2 50 $ 100 lbs.

BEESWAX—Quotable at 30@32½ c lb.

HONEY—Quotable at 10@12½ c lb.

BEEF—We quote Fair to Good Steers, 4@4½ c; Choice Steers, 5@5½ c; Cows, 3@3½ c; Bulls, 2½@3 c lb.

MUTTON—Quotable at 6@7 c lb.

VEAL—Quotable at 6@7 c lb.

PORK—We quote California dressed at 7½@8½ c lb.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, February 5, 1874.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been moderate. We quote—Extra at $4 12½@$4 37, and superfine at $3 75@$3 75 in sacks $@$ bbl.

WHEAT—The market has ruled weak and at lower rates the past week. At the close the market is quotable at $1 60@$1 65 $ ctl.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates. We quote the range for ordinary feed at $1 30@$1 40, and for choice brewing at $1 40@$1 50.

OATS—There was a fair demand, at unchanged rates during the past week. Quotable at the close at $2 50@$2 75 $ ctl.

CORN—The market has ruled steady during the week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $1 50@$1 55 for White and Yellow.

BRAN—Quotable at $20@$22 $ ton.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $21@$23 $ ton.

BEANS—The following are the jobbing rates: Bayos, $2 37½@$2 50; Pinks, $2 50@$2 62½; Reds, $2 25@$2 37½; and Small White, $3 50; large Butter, $3@$3 25 $ ctl.

ONIONS—Quotable at $1 50@$1 75 $ ctl.

POTATOES—Are quoted at $1 25@$1 50 $ 100 lbs; Sweets, $1 50@$1 75 $ ctl; Rose, $1 50@$1 75; Mercedes, $1 50@$1 75; Snowflake, $1 50@$1 75; Burbanks, $1 50@$1 75; Monstrous, 75@$1 25@$1 50; Peerless, 75@$1 25.

HOPS—Are dull at 35@37½ c lb.

WOOL—We quote the range at 35@37½ c lb for Fine; 30@32½ c for Medium; 25@27½ c for Coarse; 20@22½ c for Foothill; 15@17½ c for Mountain.

HIDES—Quotable at $1 75@$2 00 $ 100 lbs.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6@6½ c lb.

SHEEP PELTS—Quotable at 50c@$1 50 each.

HORSE HIDES—Quotable at 50c@$1 $ piece.

HORNS—Quotable at $1 75@$2 50 $ 100 lbs.

BEESWAX—Quotable at 30@32½ c lb.

HONEY—Quotable at 10@12½ c lb.

BEEF—We quote Fair to Good Steers, 4@4½ c; Choice Steers, 5@5½ c; Cows, 3@3½ c; Bulls, 2½@3 c lb.

MUTTON—Quotable at 6@7 c lb.

VEAL—Quotable at 6@7 c lb.

PORK—We quote California dressed at 7½@8½ c lb.

INFORMATION WANTED—

INFORMATION WANTED—Of Bartholomew Hanly, formerly of Kilmeen, County Cork, Ireland, by his brother, Timothy Hanly, who resides now in Sacramento, Cal. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received by Mr. Hanly, at the Sacramento Hotel, Sacramento, Cal.

INFORMATION WANTED—Of Mrs. Mary Ann Hanly, widow of James Hanly, who left Ireland in March of 1873, for Boston, Mass. Any information concerning her will be thankfully received by her son, Michael Hanly, Monitor Office, San Francisco

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER I.
A RESCUE.

The watch of the two soldiers left in the tower became tedious and discouraging. The tramp of the departing enemy gave them no comfort, for there were numbers still left sufficient to annihilate them. An air of sullen watchfulness, too, pervaded the German soldiers. They were not maligned absolutely in rank, but a few of them who left the group in front of the church with the intention of playing billiards at the café were harshly called back. Sentries were set at each inlet of the village, and the whole of the men were kept under arms. By-and-bye pipes were lit. Discipline, which entered the German's soul, which brought him to bear insult, blows, and tyranny of all kinds, had to stop short with his tobacco. It had found it safe to rob him of his freedom, but it dared not put out his pipe. The soldiers availed themselves of the one privilege which their superiors had left to them, and they smoked. They smoked as men do who are not in a hurry, but indeed as those who have a long time to pass and know that they can have full and leisurely enjoyment, and it become avid-at to the anxious observers in the tower that the considerable force before them had determined to occupy the village.

"Have you anything to eat?" asked Barbet, in a tone scarce above a whisper.

"A bleak, it would seem."

"I have the same. It is not much for men who have had no dinner."

"I would'nt call it a banquet myself, but we can divide our bit in halves, and share with our breakfast, we shall have what I can tell you it isn't every man in Ireland has—three meals a day."

Barbet made a grimace. "If even I had my pipe," he said.

"Ays, 'would be something, but if you tried it it might be your last. Way, these scoundrels below would hear you striking a match."

"What are they at now?"

"Dining, I suppose."

Barbet groaned, took his biscuit out of his pocket, broke it in halves, put one back and munched the other.

"What is that they are eating, in the name of all that's wonderful?" asked Mike.

"I suppose its sour-krout."

"Sure, sour-kroot can't be like that. It would be a queer thing to carry rubbish into your belt."

"Ma fol, no—I see S. now," said Barbet. "It's a sausage. Each man takes out out of his helmet."

"Oh-o-h, now," said Mike thoughfully. "It isn't what I'd call myself a very neat style of serving a dinner, but in my mind it's a very handy way of carrying a bit of meat with a man when he's likely to be in difficulties, and when there isn't a genteel cookshop round the corner to order it from."

To be situated in a tower where to make the slightest noise is certain to bring you under the observation of enemies alert and watchful, is far from conducive to ease or even the pleasures of the situation added to by the only variety afforded being in singing diseases or the forcing of tobacco pipes in which the hostile soldiers indulged. In this condition, however, did they remain as the day wore on, and twilight began to descend upon the landscape. To the privation of hunger succeeded the pain of intense cold, the open, elevated belfry of the tower being peculiarly exposed to the chill November wind which began to blow as the evening advanced.

"I suppose you think it's laughing I am," said Mike.

"There's not much to laugh at I should think," responded Barbet gloomily.

"Well, you see my jaws are giving as if it was to merry a body, but the truth is it's only my teeth that are banging against each other from the cold."

"Very probably."

"I suppose," continued Mike with an air of deep consideration, "that's what may be called laughing on the wrong side of my mouth."

His companion made no answer. Even if he were inclined to be talkative he would have hardly understood Mike's meaning.

"Curse," said Mike, "it won't do to be gloomy. I can't ask you to sing for the beauty you have barely there might be in the remaining something worse than noise at the windows—"

"You are very light-hearted."

"What's to prevent me? not the weight of my disease anyway."

"How long are we to remain in this infernal rat trap?"

"Ah, that's the question. I'm as sure as that I'm in this cheap, but airy lodging, that Michel hasn't forgotten us, and will take the first opportunity to try and get us out of it."

"Well?"

"Exactly; but you see the handful he has with him are hardly enough to dispose of all those down below there very easily."

"That's probably true, but it is not agreeable."

"My own opinion, too, comrade. But then you see Michel Voss is a kind of fox by now and just now can tell what he will do; and, strange as it may seem to you, it's my firm belief that he will overcome these ruffians down there—numerous as they are."

"Well, I should like to see him," said Barbet, in a spiritless tone. "But suppose he does not come, or suppose he does not come for a week, what are we to eat then? If we gave ourselves up, they won't at all events give us something to eat."

"It's my opinion they'd try whether you could digest a bullet. Remember you're a franc-tireur."

"Aye, but a soldier in uniform."

"That's an advantage certainly; it would save you from a rope, which, I'm told, is what they use when they're desirous out of uniform. It's a saving people they are, these Germans. You see a rope does fifty, and a cartridge is a general way can't be expected to execute more than one."

"Then you think," said Barbet, "that when the worst comes in the worst, we ought to fight it out, and sell our lives as dearly as possible."

"Barbet, I see my French must be improving, for you hit off my meaning to a T."

"Very good. I am content. Is your piece loaded, Mike?"

"What do you mean?"

"If your rifle is ready I will take a pull at it myself and alarm the enemy, then they may and compel them to put us out of pain."

"Pooh! I'd reserve my fire until it was of some use, and help Michel when he come here."

"If by the time he comes here we shall be starved to death like mice in an empty church, or we shall be so congealed with the cold we shall not be even able to fire a shot."

"Look, Barbet; if I were so frozen that you might skate over me, the right of Michel Voss would set me shavling. But any how we can hold out until to-morrow. Our fellows are located, and it will be very for-gance with us when we can't lend a second time. Let us, at all events, wait until to-morrow morning before we give up; I could'nt bear to think of—certainly could not look at them thieves at breakfast without wanting to put some leaden marigolds into their soup. Let us say a: nice o'clock to-morrow we ring the bell."

"Agreed," said Barbet, and the men grasped hands. In a few moments both were lying down and buried in a slumber which many of the so called favorites of fortune would be glad to purchase at any gold.

Early to bed and early to rise is a proverb whose practical wisdom holds true even in the draughty belfry of a church tower. Mike had slept soundly, but it was still dark when he awoke. He experienced a gnawing pain of which he had no difficulty in determining the origin. To still he importunity he rose and looked through the openings in the tower. It was so dark that he could scarcely see the German soldiers below him, though their presence was betrayed by the cold glitter of a bayonet, and the subdued hum of voices showed that several were awake and on the move.

"Why, then," said Mike, indulging his thoughts after his own fashion, "it's a pleasant thing to be perched up here with a cockloft, without bit or sup, and the exhtreme probability that you may soon have to be sweetened with sugar of lead. Mr. Mahony, my friend, you've got into a good many scrapes, but this seems likely to rub you out as clean as ever this bit of injun rubber did the beautiful copies—eh! what the divil's that? Hush—Barbet."

Mike's soliloquy was interrupted by the sound of a bell which then seemed to proceed from the rear of the church. He woke his companion.

"What is this?" exclaimed the half-bewildered Barbet.

"What is it? Take to your rifl, man, and be ready. You may kick me out of that since we've had a disappointment. I am glad to have assisted in your rescue, but you ought really have been a darnsed damsel."

"But your honor I was distressed enough for any damsel. And for that matter, I'm sure you should ever again have the chance of trying a rescue out of this tower. I am satisfied that I have in any damsel in the world you like to select—except two."

CHAPTER LI.
THE PRICE OF VICTUALS.

Since the capture of the Isles des Loups by Michel and his comrades it had been taken possession of by the French, and to attempt was made, or as far as could be seen, intended for its recapture. A post was regularly placed there and communication maintained by means of a boat—not the wobbly old craft that Michel had used, but a sturdier and better one which had been brought from the city. One morning, as a Sergeant of the guard went with the relief, a sentinel, whose station was at the upper side of the island, was found lying on his face, dead—shot through the brain. The other sentries declared that they had heard no report of a rifle. To the natural suspicion that they must have been asleep, one of them was able to reply that he heard the sound of rare in the night, and on examination it in the boat was found gone, but drifting about with the cars in her. The event naturally caused a good deal of excitement in the fort, and while the body was brought in and was surrounded by a group of curious officers, among whom naturally were Count Michel and Mike Mahony. They were deep in conversation and completely shut from the hearing of the soldiers, when Mike found the peasant who had been the informant on many important occasions, and whose natural good will towards the Franc-Tireur was much increased by the sense of gratitude for the rescue of Isolde.

"Ha, I am glad to see you. Have you heard of this poor sentry being shot at this isle des Loups?"

"I have not heard it until now."

"And the strange thing is that no sound was heard, though the rowing of a boat was heard."

"It seems, Sergeant, like an attempt to turn your tricks against yourself."

"Not like a fox-hunt," said the Count. "They steal your meat, your hole, your feather bed, your kitchen clock and your ideas."

"Can you, Tarbette, give me any clue to this?"

"Well, I know nothing of this particular affair, but I know something."

"Your eyes and ears are generally well employed."

"I was selling vegetables away at Brie yesterday morning. My little ass began to bray—you remember my little white ass, Mary poplin?—and as the fellow has a donkey makes, but I assure you If you rily couldn't tell them apart."

"I suppose we must try whether we can't get over with him."

"That is what I am endeavoring to work out."

"A gun that makes no noise is a fine thing."

"Yes, I often wished I had one."

"But after your shot it makes very little difference to you whether there's a report or not."

"No doubt."

"And the want of noise doesn't make his bullet carry farther or fairer, I'm thinking."

"I should say not."

"Well, I don't think very much of his instrument."

"But it is not the less necessary to kill him. It is quite evident that it must be—one or two, perhaps."

"Oh, a dozen of three. All right. I'm his man, and if I get a fair crack at him he'll wish all the wind in the north to get. But what shall we do?"

"Wait! Waiting. I mean that we should not adopt any special measure, but just keep a sharp look out for this terrible enemy of ours."

"But your honor I was distressed enough for any damsel. And for that matter, I'm sure you should ever again have the chance of trying a rescue out of this tower. I am satisfied that I have in any damsel in the world you like to select—except two."

CHAPTER LI.
THE PRICE OF VICTUALS.

Since the capture of the Isles des Loups by Michel and his comrades it had been taken possession of by the French, and to attempt was made, or as far as could be seen, intended for its recapture. A post was regularly placed there and communication maintained by means of a boat—not the wobbly old craft that Michel had used, but a sturdier and better one which had been brought from the city. One morning, as a Sergeant of the guard went with the relief, a sentinel, whose station was at the upper side of the island, was found lying on his face, dead—shot through the brain. The other sentries declared that they had heard

THE NEW YEAR'S NIGHT OF A MISERABLE MAN.

Translated from the German of Jean Paul Richter, by JAMES MASON HOPPIN, ESQ.

In the lone stillness of the New Year's night
A solitary wanderer stood, and turned
His eye West to the firmament, where, bright
And pure, a solitary rolling planet burned,
And then down on the earth, all cold and white,
And felt the mastership of all who mourned
And groaned upon its bosom, since there were
With his deep wretchedness and great despair.

For year him as he pressed—hidden from view,
Set by the flowers of youth, but by the snows
Of age alone. In torturing thought he flew
Over the past, and on his memory rose
The plagues of his life which conscience drew,
With all its fruits—diseases, sins and woes;
A dreary drama—a long scroll, filled o'er
O agony, remorse, and withering fears.

Like spectres now his bright youth days came back,
And that cross-road of life where, when a boy,
His father placed him down; the right hand track
Leads to a land of glory, peace and joy—
Right into wilderness, woe and misery.

Were blasts and plagues and poison winds destroy,
Then had he died! Alas! the serpent's bite
Coiled round his heart, their venom on his tongue,

Lies in counterable grief, he cried—
"Deserter of my youth! Cruel, reckless
My sources of life! Oh, father! be my guide!

Let me, let me choose my path now more!"
But the God of mercy, He heard not the cry!
Away, and all was silent as before.
He groan had gifted by speech and words were;
Neither cause nor—his was in his grave.

Sorrow lights dashed flickering by; a star was falling;
Down to the milky march he saw it rush—
Like that unchastened spirit, lost, and calling
Upon the name of God in vain, impotent!
Oh, my lost youth! return, return to me."

And youth returned, and age withdrew its terrors—
Still was he young, for he had dreamed the whole;
His locks were black as the raven's plumage.

When whirlwind passions darkens not the soul,
And the real wars less sorrowful.

The truly had he made the earth his goal;
He wept, and thanked his God that, with the will,
He had the power to choose the right path still.

Here, youthful reader, ponder—and if thou,
Like him, art reeling over the abyss,
And all appears to thee dark and cheerless,
The ghastly dream may prove thy guide to bliss!
But should age once be written on thy brow,
Or darkness still be on thy heart—take this:
Repent calmly poor thy tears above the sea
Of departed youth—it never will return!

Objects of Catholic Unions.

A kind, zealous and respected reverend friend writes to us: "It is curious how many persons ask me what is the object of the Catholic Union. I am not ashamed that we should say a word on it in this column of the Freeman. We are sorry that our reverend friend should have been so long without seeing our prospectus and our rules. Which we cordially invite all friends in the rising generation the germs of a high-souled Catholicity. The Catholic Unions multiply daily in this country, and on every branch of fruitful ground, and rest not from the conflict till the triumph of Catholic principles for Catholic children is unassailably secured.

The infidel, and Catholic press in every part (even the most remote), every corner (even the most obscure), of the universe (even, mostly after death, weak after long tenets, but whatever these may be, they cannot fail to remember that they are the servants of a professedly Catholic state. On the death of the military standard at Rome, Colonel de la Hayne, it was natural that, as a member of the French legation, his funeral rites should be performed by his fellow-countrymen in the church of St. Louis. The clergy of all church having heard that it was intended to convert the funeral into a political demonstration, refused to perform the funeral rites in their church, and these had therefore to be carried out in another church.

Now at first sight it may seem a small matter in which church the service be performed. This we readily concede, for the mere fabric does not impart any special virtue to the funeral function. The siege attached of St. Loligi have been accused of not doing their duty towards their fellow countrymen. This may be true—we concede even that; but what we do affirm most emphatically is that they showed a disinterested zeal in the service of their Master by not allowing a church to be turned into a place for political demonstrations, or a funeral rite to be transformed into a pompous anti-Papal display. It was the intention of the Italian Government to give military honors to the deceased attaché who was also a member of certain Masonic bonors. But Victor Emmanuel intended rather to have a bit at the Pope, using Frenchmen as his weapons, than to honor a gallant soldier. Had the funeral taken place in a church, the Italians would have accused the French clergy of implicitly obeying the Pope, besides, they would have been spoken ill of for allowing their church to be turned into a place for political demonstrations. But the clergy of St. Louis refused to perform the rites, theirs being the only church, they might justly be accused of favoritism. But the Madeleine is a vast edifice being consecrated and a religious function turned into a mockery, is a most praiseworthy, and such we maintain was the line of conduct adopted by the clergy of St. Louis.

As to the French frigate stationed at Civita Vecchia, the presence may not be required at present, but in these days of change and revolution no one would venture to say that the presence may not one day be necessary. If the Italian ultra-radical party get the upper hand, there is no limit to the violence that would be offered: no one would be secure, not even Victor Emmanuel himself, much less the Holy Father. Were a revolution to break out in Rome, the Church would be the first to feel the fury of the populace. But setting this point aside, we would urge that there is no provision in the International Maritime Code which forbids a ship to anchor in foreign ports. Spain does not object to our vessels remaining off Carthagena. France would not mind an Italian man-of-war lying off Toulon any more than England would protest against a Russian gun-boat being stationed off the Lizard. Indeed, the analogy is too strong in favor of laity for Civita Vecchia is not an important straitgate. Rome is the city, it has no pretensions to be a maritime power. No, the seas of the Occupoos and the funeral at St. Louis are the two points which we would plot to foment life-long against France. Italy is doing her best to incite a revolt in Spain by fanning separatist notions. Bismarck and Victor Emmanuel have notoriously made cause against the Church and against France. In Prussia penals laws are being enacted against Catholicism, in Italy, too, and in Rome itself, the religious orders are suppressed, and the Church persecuted. Surely, then, it is not unnatural and King Victor Emmanuel are to have a friendly quarrel to provoke France into a premature and destructive war.—Westminster Gazette, January 17.

A Perplexed Freachman.

The perplexities of our language to a foreigner are shown in an amusing sketch from the Paris Figaro. A young Frenchman of the world begins with different prepositions.

"I began to understand your language when I was forty years old," he says. "At first, to me, what your verbs trouble me!

"I am sorry you find them troublesome," was all that I could say.

"Yes, indeed," Mrs. Jones, just now continued he. "She says she intends to break down housekeeping. Am I right in—"

"Break up housekeeping, she must have said."

"Oh, yes! I remember. Break up housekeeping."

"What does she do that?" I asked.

"Because her health is so broken lute."

"Broken down, you should say."

"Broken down, yes. Well, indeed, since the small-pox has broken up in your city."

"Broken out."

"She thinks she will learn it for a few years."

"Indeed! And will she close her house?"

"No; she is afraid it will be broken, broken—how do you say that?"

"Into pieces."

"Certainly; it is what I mean to say."

"In her zeal to be merried soon?"

"No, the engagement is broken—broken—"

"Broken off."

"Ah! I had not heard that. She a very sorry about it. Her only son broke the leg last week. In regard of the knight I am anxious to speak the English well."

"You will soon broke the new; no proposition this time."

"It is hard to understand. That young man, he gives me to pain in the head, he—"

"He is broker, and a very fine young fellow. Good day."

"So much," thought I, "for to the verb 'to break.'"

The School Question.

"Honesty is best in the long run." This is an old proverb, and a good one the good citizens of East St. Louis think so, for they determined, some time since, to pinch her the Catholic portion of their population by the ears, and their portion of the school tax. At the present time the schools to which Catholic parents can conscientiously send their offspring receive in that city their due proportion of the money voted for the education of youth. The good and spirited citizens of Savannah, Georgia, have purged themselves of the reproach of educating the Protestant children at the expense, in part, of their Catholic fellows. We presume that Mr. D. Mulligan, of Lexington, Ky., has made a move in the right direction, in that city, as regards the school tax. He has introduced into the Council an ordinance providing for the payment of taxes collected from Catholics to apply to Catholic schools. The ordinance, it is to be hoped, will ultimately be adopted.

In this State of ours we, in many things, have a high position, of which we are justly proud. Our State debt is merely nominal; our judiciary is inferior to none and superior to most; our population and resources are increasing at a rate which excites the envy of neighboring States. But there remains upon us still this great blot, that our Protestant and indifferentist fellow-citizens seem in no slow to recognizing the great injustice of making us, Catholics, contribute towards the education of their children. If a man be unable to pay for the education of his children, in a country where there are so few schools, there would be no difficulty in tagging away from his neighbors' but when a majority, rich in this world's goods, compels a mean poorer minority to contribute towards the education of their children—then, indeed, it is not creditable. Would it not conduce to the honor of this city to take some steps to this matter?—Catholic Citizen, Newark, N. J.

A distinguished Irish artist, and an accomplished Catholic, Madame O'Connell, died recently in Paris. She was chiefly celebrated for her portraits and her extraordinary memory of faces. The Figaro tells us that if she saw a person only once she could trace the features perfectly on paper, years afterwards. She had not seen Rachel, as actress, for many years, and when the tragic lioness died, Madame O'Connell was asked to paint a portrait of her from memory. She did so, and it was universally pronounced the best ever executed. So also did she paint the likeness of Marshal Bazaine, after his trial, and that, too, years after his death, without consulting any other portrait. One day a lady asked her to paint a portrait of her husband. Madame O'Connell said she could not do it as she had never seen him. The lady reminded her that she had bought a shawl from him three years before, and Madame, exactly recalling the features, painted the picture.

BUSINESS CARDS.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
610 Montgomery Street,
Between Washington and Merchant streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

C. GREENWICH HOWARD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Office—631 Montgomery street (west side), Bl. Clay and Sacramento sts., San Francisco.

M. COONEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
Office, Room No. 7, Court Block,
626 CLAY and 620 MERCHANT STREET
SAN F.

F. J. BREARTY,
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
La Porte, Plumas County, Cal.
Will practice in the Courts of the 16 and 20th Judicial Districts, Collections attended to.

JOSEPH A. HARRINGTON,
ARTIST AND PORTRAIT PAINTER,
Pupil of the Academy of St. Luke, Rome.
STUDIO—Room No. 1 Mercantile Library Building, Bush street, between Montgomery and Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.

P. J. BONNARD, A. B. DALY.
BONNARD & DALY,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
529 WASHINGTON STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Every Description of Job Printing EXECUTED IN FIRST-CLASS STYLE.

M. WILZINSKI,
CLOTHING MANUFACTORY,
311 Pine street SAN FRANCISCO.
Orders Filled at Shortest Notice.
Special attention paid to MILITARY WORK.

DIXON BROTHERS,
Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters,
405 Montgomery Street,
Opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Express, SAN FRANCISCO
Job Work warranted.

JOHN H. McMENOMY,
BUTCHER,
Stalls 7, 8 and 9, California Market,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Hotels, Restaurants and Families supplied on reasonable terms. Shipping orders will receive strict attention and full Beef, by the barrel, warranted. Each barrel delivered to any part of the city Free of charge.

JAMES O'CONNELL,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
Wood and Coal,
LAUNE'S WHARF
Near Market street Wharf.....SAN FRANCISCO
Hotels, Boarding-houses and Families supplied at the shortest notice and at the lowest market rates.
All orders promptly attended to.

JOHN MOLLOY,
PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT,
AND DEALER IN
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS
84 Clay st., bet. Drumm and Sansome,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FRANCIS BUCKLEY,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER
Annie street (West of Powell),
Between Ellis and Eddy.....SAN FRANCISCO
All kinds of Carpenter and Jobbing Work done on the shortest notice. 29-26-tf

REMOVAL.
THE EXCELSIOR IRON WORKS
Have Removed from Sansome street to
151 and 153 Beale st. and 600 Howard st.
SAN FRANCISCO.
JAMES J. GALLAGHER, Manufacturer of all kinds of Architectural and Ornamental Iron Work, Steeper and Fire-proof Vertical and Safe Doors, Shutters, Bonne and Crossway Railings, Fixers, etc. Jobbing attended to with dispatch. Orders from the country promptly executed.

EDWARD CASEY,
Merchant Tailor,
79 Fourth Street, near Mission,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXPERIENCE in the East in the manufacture of clothing, and a thorough knowledge of the special wants of the business, would respectfully ask a trial from the Catholic clergy, feeling sure that I can give them general satisfaction. All Black 12 oz. cloths made to order in the neatest manner. All garments guaranteed to give entire satisfaction. A liberal discount to Parish and rent patrons. Give me a call.
Director of the French Savings Bank.

T. CANTY,
Merchant Tailor
27 Sutter street, near Montgomery
SAN FRANCISCO.
Suits of Clothing made to order in the latest style at the ruling prices.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS

IMPORTANT NEWS!
HOUSEKEEPERS CAN SAVE TWENTY PER cent. by purchasing their GROCERIES AND LIQUORS
—AT—
STEVE McGILLAN'S,
845 FOURTH STREET.
He guarantees to sell in quantities to SUIT WHOLESALE RATES, besides delivering goods free of charge.

FAMILY TRADE WANTED.
T. P. WALL,
Cosmopolitan Sample Rooms,
50 THIRD STREET,
Between Howard and Mission sts., San Francisco.
HAS REFITTED HIS SAMPLE ROOMS IN fine style, and has on sale the very finest brands of WINES AND LIQUORS, imported direct by himself, and invoiced specially for family use, which he offers for sale at the following low rates:
Good Bourbon Whisky, $2 75 per gallon, or 50 cents per bottle.
Fine Bourbon, $3 50 per gallon, or 75 cents per bottle; superior, $4 50 per gallon, or $1 per bottle.
Wines of all varieties at proportionate rates.
Advising the Sample Rooms in a large room for Society and Club meetings; also a Reading Room, where all the daily and principal weekly papers are on file.
T. P. WALL, 50 Third st.

"SOLANO,"
WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS,
Duthor Alley (City Hall), San Francisco.
G. H. HOPPER.....Proprietor.

JOHN T. KELLY'S
BAR AND BILLIARD ROOMS,
240 Market Street,
Opposite Fourth street.....SAN FRANCISCO.
Finest quality of Ales, Liquors and Cigars.

DUFFY BROS'. SALOON,
631 Merchant Street.....San Francisco.
Wines, Best Wines, Liquors and Cigars.
P. LYMAN. J. P. RAFFERTY. D. SCOBIE.

LYMAN, RAFFERTY & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND
WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALERS,
610 BATTERY STREET,
Corner of Merchant.....SAN FRANCISCO.

J. H. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
Wines, Liquors and Cigars,
625 California Street,
Above Montgomery.....West Cathedral Market.

P. A. BONNARD. A. B. DALY.
BONNARD & DALY,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
529 WASHINGTON STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Every Description of Job Printing EXECUTED IN FIRST-CLASS STYLE.

H. E. EMIG. JOHN EMIG.
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FINE WINES AND LIQUORS
No. 604 Battery street,
San Francisco.

B. Commins & Co
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
No. 808 Front street.

F. & P. J. CASSIN,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers in
WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 628 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Sole agents for O. K. GOLDEN PLANTATION WHISKY.

J. J. CADOGAN,
150 J street, between Sixth and Seventh, Sacramento,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS,
Also, Chemic Eggs for Hatching, Bone Dust, Bone Meal, Oyster Shells, Ground Oyster Shells, Meat Scraps, Poultry Foods, Mocha and Java Coffee, Spices, Baking Powder, Extracts, Essences, Sugar Cured Hams and Bacon, Pickles, Sauces, Canned Fruits, Vegetables, Meats, Fish, Soups, Jellies, Jams, Preserves, Condiments, Table Delicacies, Fine Teas, Rice, Sago, Tapioca, Farina, Barley, Oatmeal, Hominy, Cracked Wheat, Buckwheat, Graham Flour, Corn Meal, Rye Flour, Wheat Flour, Canned Milk, Canned Cream, Canned Butter, Canned Lard, Canned Chickens, Canned Turkeys, Canned Ducks, Canned Geese, Canned Pigeons, Canned Quails, Canned Partridges, Canned Pheasants, Canned Rabbits, Canned Venison, Canned Oysters, Canned Clams, Canned Mussels, Canned Lobsters, Canned Shrimps, Canned Crabs, Canned Salmon, Canned Sardines, Canned Mackerel, Canned Herring, Canned Tongues, Canned Corned Beef, Canned Roast Beef, Canned Soups, Canned Jellies, Canned Jams, Canned Preserves, Canned Condiments, Canned Table Delicacies, Canned Fine Teas, Canned Rice, Canned Sago, Canned Tapioca, Canned Farina, Canned Barley, Canned Oatmeal, Canned Hominy, Canned Cracked Wheat, Canned Buckwheat, Canned Graham Flour, Canned Corn Meal, Canned Rye Flour, Canned

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 21. February
14—Sunday—Quinquagesima Sunday. SS. Faustus and Jovita, Martyrs.
16—Monday—Feria.
17—Tuesday—Feria.
18—Wednesday—Ash Wednesday; beginning of Lent.
19—Thursday—Feria.
20—Friday—Most Holy Passion of our Lord.
21—Saturday—Feria.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 14, 1874.

AN UNFOUNDED STATEMENT.

The Reverend JOHN HENSHILL is, undoubtedly, very fond of notoriety. This is a weakness which we should not care to treat with much severity, for all men have foibles. But he does not appear to be overscrupulous about the means he employs to achieve the coveted notoriety. This is unbecoming a gentleman, not to speak of a Christian minister, and we cannot help finding fault with it. For example, his connection with a small illustrated sheet printed in this city, which, under pretence of being wiley, is simply scurrilous and abusive, is not a thing of which any honorable man, no matter how severely he may condemn the tenets of Catholicity, should feel proud. Here, however, we have only a question of good taste and well-bred courtesy towards one's religious adversaries, and there may be little use in discussing such matters with Mr. HENSHILL. But we have another question to treat with him of greater importance, inasmuch as it concerns his character for veracity.

We believe we are not mistaken, in asserting that it is the reverend gentleman's cherished ambition to pass off as the special opponent of the Jesuits. He has undertaken, it would seem, the herculean task of defending Protestantism against the attacks of the much dreaded followers of St. IGNATIUS LOYOLA. With a self sacrificing heroism, which cannot be accorded too much praise in this age of egotism, he has devoted himself to frustrating their wily schemes for the demolition of the "blessed work" of the Reformation. Hence if one of the Jesuit Fathers preaches, or delivers a lecture, upon any subject, Mr. HENSHILL as soon as possible gives the public the benefit of his views concerning the same matter. So accustomed are we now to this kind of thing that we hardly look out for "a reply" from the pastor of Calvary Church to almost every discourse pronounced in St. Ignatius' Church. As the big blacksmith said, when reproached for allowing his diminutive wife to beat him, "it amuses her and doesn't hurt me," so the Jesuit Fathers may very justly allege that if Mr. HENSHILL finds any satisfaction in his "replies," he is thoroughly welcome to them, inasmuch as they cannot do them the least possible harm. But, after all, this thing becomes wearisome in the course of time, and it requires considerable patience to bear with it. Still the parties principally concerned are not disposed to make complaint, so we on our part raise no objection.

But to come to our particular specific charge against Mr. HENSHILL—if there be any one among the clergymen attached to St. Ignatius' Church against whom the pastor of Calvary entertains a special antipathy, and whom he follows up with the pertinacity of a sleuth hound, it is, unquestionably, Rev. Father BUCHARD. He appears to be Mr. HENSHILL'S fere nature. On the evening of Tuesday week Father BUCHARD delivered, for the benefit of the Taylor-street Convent, a lecture on "The Catholic Church and the Conversion of Nations." Of course Mr. HENSHILL came out with his inevitable rejoinder on the following Sunday evening in the presence of his congregation. With the substance of his harangue we do not intend to deal—it is no concern of ours; if it pleased those who heard it there the matter may rest. But in the course of his remarks the reverend gentleman made a statement so astounding, so much at variance with truth, so susceptible of immediate refutation, that we cannot understand how, with all his audacity, he ventured to give it expression.

We are informed, on the best authority, that he declared Father BUCHARD was in the habit of "sneaking round after him" to his lectures and sermons for the purpose of learning what he might say. Not content with this, he actually assumed that the reverend gentleman was there and then present, and directed his remarks as though he were addressing him personally. So emphatic was he that part, if not the entire of his audience, believed Father BUCHARD was seated in the church. Now, we must inform the Rev. Mr. HENSHILL that during the twelve years Father BUCHARD has spent in this city he has never even once set foot within a church belonging to any Protestant denomination whatever. Therefore it is needless to say that he has never been inside Calvary church while its pastor was lecturing or preaching, or, indeed, at any other time. Moreover, we are afraid this assertion will hurt the vanity of the Calvinistic minister, but, as it is true, we must state it—Father BUCHARD is not even personally acquainted with Mr. HENSHILL, does not know him by appearance, and never to his knowledge met him.

If Mr. HENSHILL wants to sustain a character for veracity, and does not wish to be under the imputation of making false assertions, he will let the public know what authority he had for saying that Father BUCHARD was "sneaking round after him," or was present at any of his lectures or addresses. The pastor of Calvary must have no very modest idea of his own importance if he imagines that Father BUCHARD has nothing better to do than to listen to his anti-Catholic ravings. He must have, on the other hand, a very poor idea of the intelligence of his congregation if he thinks he can pass himself off as a "victim of Jesuit persecutions." We do not by any means grudge him whatever satisfaction he may derive from "replying" to addresses or sermons by Catholic clergymen, because we frequently find his diatribes rather amusing; but respect for truth and decency compels us to protest in the strongest manner against his seeking sympathy under false pretenses. More strongly still must we protest against his wantonly and unreservedly charging a highly respected and zealous priest, with conduct which, although Mr. HENSHILL may not be aware of the fact, all well-bred persons must consider unworthy of a gentleman.

GERMANY AND AMERICA.

A French newspaper, La Patrie, asserts that the American and German Governments are exchanging diplomatic notes, the tenor of which is not at all friendly. The subject of this acrimonious correspondence is said to be connected with the question of emigration. It is well known that Prussia does not regard with much favor the great exodus of her people to the United States. Every man who quits her shores for the land of republican freedom represents so much capital and so much industrial energy lost to her forever. It is not, however, this way of regarding the emigrant that causes grief to the Prussian authorities, but rather the consideration that every individual who flies off to America is one soldier taken from the ranks of their huge army. Hence the Government is throwing every imaginable obstacle, short of downright prohibition, in the way of emigration, and maintains an exceedingly strict surveillance over the conduct of the agents of the transatlantic steamers who are located in the German towns and cities. These facts make the statement of La Patrie wear a look of probability. Nevertheless, we do not believe it to be correct. The Prussian Government might go so far as to forbid emigration altogether without affording the United States any just grounds for remonstrance, because the legislation of one country in reference to its own subjects is not held to be a matter open to the criticism of another country. But even if it were allowable, according to the rules of international courtesy, to remonstrate against the Prussian emigrant regulations, we question very much whether the radical, and incomparably stupid, Administration with which the republic is now blessed, could muster up spirit enough to do so. Germany, "the great Protestant power," the vanquisher of Catholic France, the sworn enemy of "Ultramontanism," is in high favor with the Know-Nothings who surround General GRANT, and, we fear, they would sooner bear meekly a deliberate insult from her than give utterance to a single expression of censure upon her conduct. Moreover, our Administration has no foreign policy worth talking about, and our representatives abroad seem to have been instructed to do nothing but let matters take their own course. So we feel certain that Germany's conduct will be untaken and asserts what is not the case.

THE ENGLISH ELECTIONS.

The English elections are not yet concluded, but their result is already apparent. The Conservatives will have a majority of about fifty members in the new Parliament. Of course this precludes GLADSTONE from continuing in office as Premier, and accordingly tenders his resignation. His is desirous of tendering his resignation before the meeting of Parliament, so as to avoid the unpleasantness of an actual adverse vote; but his comrades in power will ask him to face the House and challenge an expression of its sentiments towards him. We do not know which line of policy he will adopt, but practically it does not matter. Disraeli is naturally regarded as his successor, and indeed there can be little doubt that he will be called upon to form the next Ministry. A Ministry he can certainly form, but it is questionable whether he will be able to keep it together for any length of time. It has always been found difficult to frame a Conservative Government which could command popular favor, and we do not think that Mr. DISRAELI has more desirable material at hand now than he had on former occasions when he only produced failures.

The cause of GLADSTONE'S downfall are to be found in the following circumstances: First, in his virtual abandonment of foreign policy and withdrawal of English influence from the Continent. This has led to a conspicuous ignoring of English opinion and feeling by the great powers, and, naturally, that is intensely humiliating to Englishmen. Next, in his comporising with the revolutionary element and his recognition of demagogism as an agency of Government. Lastly, in the encouragement he has given to secularism, and in his manifest tendency to do away with all the distinctive features of the British Constitution, thus paving the way for the overthrow of monarchy. Whether Mr. DISRAELI will be able to remedy these alleged errors of judgment is a matter which has to be proved by experience. The majority of the Conservatives in the new Parliament will not, it is said, exceed fifty. The Home Rulers in Ireland have succeeded in returning about that number of representatives. Consequently they hold the balance of power between the two great English parties. The side to which they give their support will be able to outvote the other on any question of importance, and can therefore take possession of the Government. This circumstance will give them an immense amount of influence which, if wisely used, cannot fail to procure at least attentive consideration of their demands. And, in our opinion, unprejudiced consideration will end in concession. Home Rule may be a disagreeable pill for English Tories to swallow, but they have already had to gulph down quite as unpalatable doses. Another question for discussion is whether the Irish people will remain content even with Home Rule. We believe they will not.

OUR POLICEMEN.

The recent addition to our police force was not given before it was urgently required. Previous to that San Francisco had, in proportion to its population, a smaller number of guardians of the public peace than any other city of importance in the Union. At the same time it probably had, and of course has still, a larger percentage of dangerous and criminally-disposed individuals who needed very sharp watching. As a consequence of these two circumstances, the police officers were sadly overworked, and the city was inadequately guarded. The men honestly did their best, they were zealous and fearless in the discharge of their duty; but it is foolish to expect that one person, however well disposed, can do the work of two. The increase was, therefore, indispensable. The suggestion of reducing the pay of the police, so as to make the hundred and fifty to greater expense to the city than the hundred had been, was certainly as paltry a piece of economy as we remember having read of for some time. The pay of a policeman as it stands at present is by no means a liberal remuneration for the services he is expected to perform, and the proposal to shrink even that was thus off on America individual afflicted with a spirit of parsimonious disgardliness. Considering the sort of examination a man has to pass before he is put on the force at all—considering that he has to be exposed to the inclemency of the weather at all hours and during all seasons—considering that he must be prepared at any moment to cope with criminals of most desperate character, armed to the teeth with deadly weapons—considering the various duties he has to perform towards the public, it does seem to us that a hundred and twenty dollars per month is not at all an extravagant salary.

The fifty men just added will pay for themselves within a short time. They will preserve or recover property belonging to citizens to the amount of many times their annual stipend, and they will thus be an excellent investment. They are all of undoubted competency and good character, so that they are sure to honorably perform their duty and reduce materially the crime by which they belong. We cannot conclude without emphatically censuring the proposal to subject the officers of old standing to further examination. They have one and all proved their thorough fitness for their position; the public have every confidence in them. There has been no complaint of any kind lodged against them; they are, in fact, as efficient and trustworthy officers as can be found in any city in the States; and whether the proposal to subject them to another examination arises from mere officiousness, or is prompted by a desire to displace them, it must be severely condemned by every one who wishes to see the public peace properly maintained. San Francisco has now a police force of unexceptionable efficiency and discipline of which it has reason to be proud, and we sincerely trust there will be no meddling or manipulation by which would tend to impair its usefulness.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

The selection of officers for the approaching anniversary of Ireland's Patron Saint reflects great credit on the Convention that made it. Mr. JAMES R. KELLY, the Grand Marshal, is one of the best of the three times elected to that position, and on every occasion acquitted himself of his duties more than faithfully. One of our most prominent merchants, long identified with every Irish or Catholic movement on the Pacific Coast, with an honorable and unimpeachable record, both public and private, he is in every sense of the word worthy of what never compliment his countrymen can confer upon him. Mr. M. C. HARNEY, President of the Day, is a rising young lawyer who evinces much interest in the progress of our Irish organizations. Mr. MICHAEL KANE, the Vice-President, is a well-known and universally respected merchant. Mr. RONNAN J. TOBIN, Jr., Post of the Day, recently graduated with distinction from the city Law School. Mr. Bayard and Mr. Casserly it is not too much to say that investigation would have ended in an complete failure as the investigation into the Credit-Mobilier last winter. But the courage and the tact of these two Senators not only effected a thorough exposure of the iniquities which had prevailed in the general letter business of the Custom-house up to that time, but also compelled a partial reform by the intervention of the man of all men the most unlikely to have moved in such a matter without a pressure so strong as it was then brought to bear upon him—the President of the United States. Mr. Casserly carries into his retirement his own consciousness of having performed a duty to Irish fellow-citizens. In the East we notice that some effort has been made by the Irish newspapers, particularly the Boston Pilot, to put a stop to the St. Patrick's Day celebrations; but so long as they are controlled by gentlemen like those elected by our Convention, they will do much good, and cannot possibly be open to censure.

LENTEN DEVOTIONS.—The pastors of the different city churches will confer a favor upon us by forwarding a few lines containing a statement of the hours at which the morning and evening devotions will take place in their churches dur ing the season of Lent.

The grand wrestling match between Colonel James H. McLaughlin of Detroit, Michigan, and Michael Whalen, the champion wrestler of California, will take place on Saturday evening of this week, at Platt's Hall, at 8½ o'clock. Both gentlemen are expert athletes, and as the prize between both is $1,000 and the honor of the championship of America, no doubt both contestants will exert their utmost strength and skill. Seats will be open for purchasers to the Link House, on Thursday and Friday evenings, commencing at 7 o'clock.

AN IMPERTANT ADMISSION.

The controversy about the abolition of the Cosmopolitan schools is growing warm if not very interesting. Our French and German fellow-citizens, at any rate, are intensely excited over the matter, and they denounce the action of the Board of Education in the strongest manner. Now, we think it will be admitted by all who read our pages, that we have constantly defended the rights and liberties of foreigners and their children. And we have naturally, our sympathies go with them on pretty nearly every question in which they are concerned. Yet we must say that considerations of justice and propriety compel us to take sides against them in the Cosmopolitan school discussion. There is no reason why the State should make provision for the teaching of French and German in its schools any more than it should provide for instruction in Irish, or Italian, or Chinese, or Greek, or Latin, or in chemistry, or engineering, or in photography, or in any other branch of learning which is recognized as an accomplishment rather than a necessary.

We can very well understand and appreciate the feeling which makes French and German parents anxious that their children should speak correctly and fluently the language of their forefathers, but we quite fail to perceive by what right they ask the community at large to bear the expense of such instruction. They can very well teach their children at home without any trouble, by simply making their mother-tongue the medium of domestic conversation. Nine-tenths of the pupils reading the public schools are the children of poor parents, and they cannot afford to spend at study the time necessary to learn even a smattering of French or German, and all that they look for is an average English education. The teaching of these languages, therefore, is an advantage only to the children of rich parents, who can afford to pay for it elsewhere, and to the children of French or German parentage who can gain all the knowledge they want in their own families, and the arguments based upon the advantages of "linguistic gymnastics" are merely folly, because they are equally applicable to branches of instruction which are only to be had in universities.

But we have headed our article "An Important Admission," for the single reason that we desired to conclude our remarks by directing attention to a sentence in an article published in Tuesday evening's Bulletin, which reads as follows: "We recognize it as the fullest extent the fact that our system of education must accord with the wishes, as far as possible, of all who support it." How does it happen, then, that the wishes of nearly eight millions of Catholics are not only completely ignored, but even contemptuously derided?

Ex-Senator Casserly.

The following article upon ex-Senator Casserly is from the New York World. It was published before both terms were filled by the Legislature. The good opinion of Mr. Casserly entertained by the people of California, is now confirmed by the people of California.

The World says:

The retirement of Senator Casserly is regretted as it deserves to be by the Democratic papers of California. For among all the able and active Democrats of the Pacific slope it will be hard to find a successor to him who can satisfy all his place. Ability and energy are not the only valuable qualities which Mr. Casserly has displayed in the Senate. Although still a young Senator, he has won the confidence of his colleagues and the respect of the whole Pacific Coast, with an honorable and unimpeachable record, both public and private, he is in every sense of the word worthy of what never compliment his countrymen can confer upon him. Mr. M. C. HARNEY, President of the Day, is a rising young lawyer who evinces much interest in the progress of our Irish organizations. Mr. MICHAEL KANE, the Vice-President, is a well-known and universally respected merchant. Mr. RONNAN J. TOBIN, Jr., Post of the Day, recently graduated with distinction from the city Law School. Mr. Bayard and Mr. Casserly it is not too much to say that investigation would have ended in an complete failure as the investigation into the Credit-Mobilier last winter. But the courage and the tact of these two Senators not only effected a thorough exposure of the iniquities which had prevailed in the general letter business of the Custom-house up to that time, but also compelled a partial reform by the intervention of the man of all men the most unlikely to have moved in such a matter without a pressure so strong as it was then brought to bear upon him—the President of the United States. Mr. Casserly carries into his retirement his own consciousness of having performed a duty to Irish fellow-citizens. In the East we notice that some effort has been made by the Irish newspapers, particularly the Boston Pilot, to put a stop to the St. Patrick's Day celebrations; but so long as they are controlled by gentlemen like those elected by our Convention, they will do much good, and cannot possibly be open to censure.

THE LEGISLATURE.

This body has at last got fairly to work, and is pushing through bills with commendable speed. With the exception of the amendments to the Jumping Codes, most of the bills so far passed have no general interest. A most interesting debate took place in the Assembly last Friday, on Mr. Cowdery's motion to strike out the word

"WHITE" FROM THE SCHOOL LAW.

The effect of this would be to admit Chinese and negroes to the public schools now set apart for white children. The bill further provides that even the children of white foreign parents who had not declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States should not be admitted. Messrs. Murphy, of Sierra; Williams, of Sonoma; and Pulcell of San Joaquin, were the chief advocates of the law as it now stands, and Messrs. Cowdery, Coggins, Keleo, Crossler and Meyers of the minority, constionists. Mr. Murphy set the ball in motion by moving to strike out the word "white" from the school law. He was the leading opposition in the political campaign when Governor Booth was elected. The only occasion he knew of when this question was fairly voted upon by the people was recently in Sacramento, when Melissa, the Japanese consul-general, was by the potent influence of the Sacramento Union and Record, was defeated for the office of Superintendent of Schools by Hinkson, a Democrat, considered by the people, in a city having several hundred Republican majority. He did not doubt there might be from 300 to 1,000 colored children in the State without facilities for education: but the difficulties had been greatly exaggerated. The passage of this bill would have the effect to break up the public school system of the State. The people were not prepared to admit the negro upon terms of social equality, in the schools or elsewhere. Because negroes are allowed the ballot, it does not follow that there may not be different or separate schools. Such separate schools in the States are now in vogue, and not considered illegal. Carry out the same theory, and the offspring of the Celestials in our midst would be entitled to the privileges of the public schools. A number of law cases might be cited, in which questions falling under the same general head were cited.

Mr. Friedenrich said the practical operation of this law would be to keep up the colored schools, and to deprive as many white children of the privileges of the schools as there might be colored children admitted. He considered the measure as was a piece of demagogism emanating in the brain of the gentlemen from San Francisco (Mr. Cowdery), who was elected on the Democratic ticket from San Francisco, [illegible] from the Democratic party.

Mr. Williams said the law makes no distinction based upon inferiority. It simply recognizes a distinction which every body can read upon every face in the land. He quoted legal authorities to show that the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States had nothing to do with the question before the Legislature. The passage of such a law would result in amalgamation. In half a century the white race would go down to the level of the colored, or our own race would cease to have any position or standing among the races of the earth.

Mr. Friedenrich said there were 31,000 white children in the State against 500 colored children. These are not to be dealt with proper educational facilities. Before putting forth a special plea in favor of the 500 colored children, let them remember that 31,000 white children who cannot be accommodated in the public schools, and who have resort to private schools.

Mr. Cowdery said the gentleman could not show him a single case where a white child was denied the opportunity of getting an education. On the other hand, he (Mr. Cowdery) could point out 1,800 cases of colored children that are denied.

Mr. Pulcell congratulated Mr. Cowdery upon his escape from his former evil associations—when he was advocating the other side of the question. One of the tenets of Cowdery Clay's political career was always to make due allowances for the prejudices of people. Within ten years there were flourishing three large private schools in the city of Stockton, which had given way to the public schools. Such a bill passed would be the severest blow the common schools could receive. If the gentleman from Placer (Mr. Norton) could tell why the certain colors better than we do others, he might explain why this prejudice against color so universally exists.

After further debate, participated in by Messrs. Bowers and Tinnin in favor of Murphy's motion, and Rogers, Estes and Meyers against, the enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 42 ayes to 32 noes, and thus the bill was killed for this session.

THE FARMS AND FERRIES.

Bill still hangs fire in the Senate, notwithstanding that it passed the Assembly several weeks ago. Here the railroad company will make its fight, and will doubtless secure important amendments or else smother the bill. The bill creating

SAN BENITO COUNTY

Out of the eastern portion of Monterey (making the Gabilan mountains the western boundary) passed the Senate on Thursday evening of last week, by a vote of 27 to 11, after a spirited debate, participated in by Pendegast, Irwin, Beck, Evans, and Farley for the bill, and Tuttle, Duffy, Edgerton and Roach against. (This bill had already passed the Assembly. It was signed by the Governor, and became a law last Monday.)

THE CHANCELLOR MISSION.

In the late Senatorial election are being investigated. The public mind is satisfied that corrupt means were used to influence the election, but that the guilty parties will be discovered and punished is more than doubtful. In fact, there is a universal belief that there was never a Senatorial election in this State, in which bribery in some shape was not had recourse to; if not in hard cash, in the promise of position or other pol'tical consideration; so that if Booth is really guilty, he is not much worse than the majority of his predecessors. His main fault is in saying, "I am more holy than Thou."

A rumor, which appears to be well founded, is afloat that Richard Murray, of San Francisco (pretty well known in connection with the position of stove-pipe inspector of the School Department), has written to a member of the Investigating Committee, that he knows many prominent people would like to have made public of the inner workings of Senator Hager's flight; and that if afforded an opportunity he will a tale unfold that will rend the parients quake. So far five different members swear they were improperly approached: Carter, of Yuba, by Richard Brown; Northup, of Placer, by Thomas Hughes, of Nevada; Wright, of Sonoma, by Mr. Adamans; Escandon, of Santa Barbara, by Jemleer. Escandon says Jemlees promised him from $5,000 to $10,000 to vote for Booth, and Pacheco also solicited him, but offered him no money. Jemlees has been appointed a Notary Public since the Senatorial election, which gives the matter a suspicious look.

Murphy's bill, providing for a State census in 1875, has passed both Houses. The Senate passed the Assembly concurrent resolution opposing the Sumtilan land grant bill in Congress; also, the Assembly concurrent resolution memorializing the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad to the public domain. Swift's bill to repeal the China basin railroad grant passed the Assembly without debate.

Senators Pendegast and Laine were requested by resolution to conduct the case of Love vs. Baehr, on behalf of the State, the Attorney-General being a party to the action. This suit is to compel the Governor, Secretary of State and Attorney-General to disgorge the extra money which they have received as members of the Board of Examiners.

A bill compelling street railroads in San Francisco to carry passengers for a uniform rate of five cents, passed the Assembly.

The Civil Half Investigating Committee have made their report. While they certify to the unimpeachable integrity of the Commissioners, they censure them for having accepted the gross estimate of expense which was submitted, instead of obtaining a detailed statement. They further censure the policy of appointing persons not residents on building commissions. They censure the commissioners for not requiring the city to pay the outstanding indebtedness of [illegible] and the amount of the unfinished contract, and that the affairs of the Commission be wound up on the completion of the present contracts, and the books, papers, etc., transferred to the Supervisors. The report concludes with a recommendation that the question, whether work shall be suspended or prosecuted on the Hall, be left to a vote of the people, and introduces a bill to that effect will be introduced.

THE ORPHANS.

We fear the present charitable institutions will have serious difficulty in getting the usual State appropriations this session. Booth's message on the opening of the Legislature suggested the propriety of a State orphanage, and the withdrawal of all aid from local charities, and this idea a majority of the Daily Yardens will endeavor to put in practice. Laine's adverse report on the asylums of the County Cork, was brought forward on Monday last, Saturday, by Busby, R. M. James McCarthy and Bartolomew Spillane, Lenners, suspected having incited Flynn to make the letters, are also present in custody, charged with shooting him. Evidence was given that the latter prisoners were under notice to fly at the time the letters were written, and that Flynn was found concealed in a box in McCarthy's house. The three prisoners are remanded for trial at the session.

A committee has been formed with the object of raising a memorial cross over the grave of the deceased young patriot, Thomas Lowry. He was one of the founders of the Celtic Association in Baltimore was incorporated in this city last week, and one who loved his country not wisely, but too well.

During two weeks no fewer than eighty sheep have been destroyed by dogs in the town of Kinsale, a few miles distant on Cavan. Mrs. Sophia Hingfield, has sixty-nine killed; K. T. Roe, Linsenman, a boatman; Mr. John Brennan, Esq., steam; and Mr. Edward Hartley, Drumgoy, nine.

The Agricultural Laborers' Union League, for a conference of Irish members of Parliament to be held in London in the second week of the coming session, to order to appoint a deputation to Mr. Gladstone, requesting the Government to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of the Irish agricultural laborers.

A meeting of Protestants was announced to be held at Carrickfergus, on Wednesday, January 21st, to express their sympathy with Prince Bismarck and the German Government in its action against the Catholic Church. The Belfast News Letter, the organ of the North, hopes the Carrickfergus meeting would give its opinion in a series of similar demonstrations throughout Ireland.

The feast of St. Sebastian was celebrated January 20th with befitting solemnity in the Dominican Church of St. Saviour, in Dublin. At the conclusion of High Mass an earnest and eloquent panegyric was delivered by the Rev. Thomas Burke, the great preacher's voice on appearance was heard by a large congregation, but owing to the crowded state of the church, he was compelled with rapt attention to his powerful and exhaustive discourse.

At the meeting of Saturday of January 24, at Dundalk, a man named Daniel Flynn was arrested for [illegible] knocking in the window, and on opening the door by a man who was there, he received several blows of an iron bar, and was struck down insensible, who is a noted character present in Dundalk, and the assailant of Flynn, and in the coat of sugar necessary to be used for the [illegible] of $50,000, for which the grapes can be profitably grown in this State at a cost of a pound, and they need no sugar or other foreign ingredient to make wine.

San Francisco now maintains the third rank among the cities of the Union in regard to its population, it being only surpassed by Philadelphia and Brooklyn, and contains a population of 149,473 souls. Some reader may be interested in knowing that of this number there died under five years of age, 1,460; over twenty years, 1,214; between twenty and thirty years, 1,025; from fifty to seventy, 462; over seventy, 85; unknown age, 21. The males numbered 2,341; the females 1,488.

Mayor Otis, at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, declared himself in favor of requesting the Legislature to authorize a further increase of the police force by an additional one hundred men. These daily papers that opposed the late increase of fifty men, on the score of economy, are severe on the Mayor's extravagant proposition.

The importing coal and salt merchants have presented the new order from Washington to discharge ships with 3-bushel bins in place of 100-bushel, as at present, on the ground that the delay and cost of unloading would be two and a half times greater; that when and other freight would accumulate in the meantime, etc. The Government claims that there is a leakage in duty by the present system.

Some country papers express surprise that certain sensational and vulgar papers have prospered in the city, should be patronized. What folly! Do they know that newspapers, like members of Congress, are representatives of the people? Go through the city on early morning, as we sometimes do, and see who will see the vulgar sheets at the doors of many, or most, of the ministers and leading church-goers of this city.

An election for Captain and First Lieutenant of the Montgomery Guard was held at the Company's Armory on Tuesday, the 3d inst., at which Charles Quinn was elected Captain, and John McCully First Lieutenant. The last named gentleman is one of our well-known citizens, and has been for the last four years Orderly Sergeant of the crack corps to which he now belongs. He has many friends who will be rejoiced to hear of his elevation.

On Sunday last the interesting ceremony of admitting two young ladies to the veil took place in the chapel of the Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, Taylor street. Rev. Father Mason, S. J., officiated; Rev. Father Nailini, S. J., and Father Morrissey were also present, and the former gave a short but impressive discourse on the happiness enjoyed in the religious life. The young ladies clothed with the religious dress were Miss Quigley (now Sister M. Baptist) and Miss Gallivan (now Sister Saint Michel.)

"A Subscriber" is informed that the Procession of United Germany formed the Catholics in the state of something less than three to one.

Developments of gross frauds are being made in the Agricultural College of Iowa.

LATE NEWS ITEMS.

The name of Mr. William Baxter, [illegible] School, Trinity College, Dublin, appears at the head of the second division of the first [illegible] Examination list, London University.

There was a meeting of Bankruptcy on the evening of January 20 to [illegible] the Sunday-closing movement, at which the Rev. J. A. Furlong presided. The central association was represented by Mr. T. W. Russell.

The Sisters of Mercy, Birr Convent, acknowledge with grateful thanks the receipt of £5 from William O'Meara, Parsonstown, as a donation in aid of the orphanage attached to the convent.

Three men employed at Jersey now harvests were washed off the breakwater on January 20 by a heavy sea, and one was drowned. They had just assisted in saving one of their comrades who had been washed overboard in a similar manner.

Mr. Washburne, the American Minister in Paris, on 20th January proceeded to Mulhouse to hold a memorial cross over the graves of his deceased young patriot, Thomas Lowry. He was one of the founders of the Celtic Association in Baltimore was incorporated in this city last week, and one who loved his country not wisely, but too well.

During two weeks no fewer than eighty sheep have been destroyed by dogs in the town of Kinsale, a few miles distant on Cavan. Mrs. Sophia Hingfield, has sixty-nine killed; K. T. Roe, Linsenman, a boatman; Mr. John Brennan, Esq., steam; and Mr. Edward Hartley, Drumgoy, nine.

The Agricultural Laborers' Union League, for a conference of Irish members of Parliament to be held in London in the second week of the coming session, to order to appoint a deputation to Mr. Gladstone, requesting the Government to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of the Irish agricultural laborers.

A meeting of Protestants was announced to be held at Carrickfergus, on Wednesday, January 21st, to express their sympathy with Prince Bismarck and the German Government in its action against the Catholic Church. The Belfast News Letter, the organ of the North, hopes the Carrickfergus meeting would give its opinion in a series of similar demonstrations throughout Ireland.

The feast of St. Sebastian was celebrated January 20th with befitting solemnity in the Dominican Church of St. Saviour, in Dublin. At the conclusion of High Mass an earnest and eloquent panegyric was delivered by the Rev. Thomas Burke, the great preacher's voice on appearance was heard by a large congregation, but owing to the crowded state of the church, he was compelled with rapt attention to his powerful and exhaustive discourse.

At the meeting of Saturday of January 24, at Dundalk, a man named Daniel Flynn was arrested for [illegible] knocking in the window, and on opening the door by a man who was there, he received several blows of an iron bar, and was struck down insensible, who is a noted character present in Dundalk, and the assailant of Flynn, and in the coat of sugar necessary to be used for the [illegible] of $50,000, for which the grapes can be profitably grown in this State at a cost of a pound, and they need no sugar or other foreign ingredient to make wine.

San Francisco now maintains the third rank among the cities of the Union in regard to its population, it being only surpassed by Philadelphia and Brooklyn, and contains a population of 149,473 souls. Some reader may be interested in knowing that of this number there died under five years of age, 1,460; over twenty years, 1,214; between twenty and thirty years, 1,025; from fifty to seventy, 462; over seventy, 85; unknown age, 21. The males numbered 2,341; the females 1,488.

Mayor Otis, at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, declared himself in favor of requesting the Legislature to authorize a further increase of the police force by an additional one hundred men. These daily papers that opposed the late increase of fifty men, on the score of economy, are severe on the Mayor's extravagant proposition.

The importing coal and salt merchants have presented the new order from Washington to discharge ships with 3-bushel bins in place of 100-bushel, as at present, on the ground that the delay and cost of unloading would be two and a half times greater; that when and other freight would accumulate in the meantime, etc. The Government claims that there is a leakage in duty by the present system.

Some country papers express surprise that certain sensational and vulgar papers have prospered in the city, should be patronized. What folly! Do they know that newspapers, like members of Congress, are representatives of the people? Go through the city on early morning, as we sometimes do, and see who will see the vulgar sheets at the doors of many, or most, of the ministers and leading church-goers of this city.

An election for Captain and First Lieutenant of the Montgomery Guard was held at the Company's Armory on Tuesday, the 3d inst., at which Charles Quinn was elected Captain, and John McCully First Lieutenant. The last named gentleman is one of our well-known citizens, and has been for the last four years Orderly Sergeant of the crack corps to which he now belongs. He has many friends who will be rejoiced to hear of his elevation.

On Sunday last the interesting ceremony of admitting two young ladies to the veil took place in the chapel of the Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, Taylor street. Rev. Father Mason, S. J., officiated; Rev. Father Nailini, S. J., and Father Morrissey were also present, and the former gave a short but impressive discourse on the happiness enjoyed in the religious life. The young ladies clothed with the religious dress were Miss Quigley (now Sister M. Baptist) and Miss Gallivan (now Sister Saint Michel.)

"A Subscriber" is informed that the Procession of United Germany formed the Catholics in the state of something less than three to one.

Developments of gross frauds are being made in the Agricultural College of Iowa.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Competition has reduced telegraphic rates for ten words to any part of the United States to $2.50.

The wheat fleet in port on last Saturday numbered twenty-two vessels, representing 24,700 tons.

Tombstones Parker, proprietors of the Bank Exchange, have fixed a pavilion in bankruptcy.

There are 145 attached to eleven city and county offices in this city, whose salaries amount to $274,000.

The Chronicle has issued a weekly at $4, and the Dramatic Review to be sundays, at reduced the price of its weekly to $3.

It is said that all but three of the fifty new policemen are Americans by birth, and the names of all are on the Great Register.

The number of passenger arrivals over departures for the month of January has given us an increase in population of 1,390.

Consul General P. Hammond of this city is appointed a member of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy.

Senator Oulton and Charles Hook were thrown from a buggy last Saturday. Both were seriously bruised, and the former had some ribs broken.

Five car loads of malt have been sent to Philadelphia this week, the first, it is believed, ever sent East. It can be sent East in warm weather, when barley cannot.

The Bank of San Francisco has been incorporated to buy and sell land, build houses and do a general banking business. It looks like having too many irons in the fire at a time.

A California Wine and Liquor Company was incorporated in this city last week, with a capital stock of $1,000,000. Tyler Curtis, Philip Mangher and others are directors.

Marshall, who first discovered the gold which caused the rush to the world of nations, is now in this city, and seems to be somewhat of a contrast between then and now.

The big suit of Sam Brannan against the Central Pacific Railroad, which drew so much interest at the opening session, is and promised to throw much more, has been compromised and withdrawn from Court.

The Call says that the revolutionary element in the Irish societies was not represented in the Irish convention held to make arrangements for the celebration of St. Patrick's Day, and that they will celebrate independently.

The ship "Three Brothers," of the old steamship "Vanderbilt" into a sailing vessel, which left this port for Havre with 4,900 tons of wheat, arrived at Falmouth, for orders, on January last in 100 days.

The carrying capacity of railroads and steamers is engaged for some time ahead for dry barley to the Atlantic. In April, when warm weather commences in the East, the rush will be over.

The death rate has decreased considerably. Sixty-two persons died last week, which is below the average for five months. Forty-two of these were males and twenty-female. Eight Mongolians were of the number, but whether unknown, is not.

The number of pupils who attended the public schools of this city during the last year was 19,390. The total attendance at evening classes was 2,501, and the average was 1,695. The total expenditure for both months and the evening eight and a half months.

The prospects of the grape culture in the East is quite discouraging for the future. The vines are badly injured by the severe cold, and in the coast of sugar necessary to be used for the [illegible] of $50,000, for which the grapes can be profitably grown in this State at a cost of a pound, and they need no sugar or other foreign ingredient to make wine.

San Francisco now maintains the third rank among the cities of the Union in regard to imports and exports. In exports she is five million ahead of Philadelphia and twelve millions over Boston. In imports she is fourteen millions ahead of Philadelphia and ten millions over Baltimore.

We have heretofore stated that the number of persons who died in this city last year was 2,242. Some reader may be interested in knowing that of this number there died under five years of age, 1,460; over twenty years, 1,214; between twenty and thirty years, 1,025; from fifty to seventy, 462; over seventy, 85; unknown age, 21. The males numbered 2,341; the females 1,488.

Mayor Otis, at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday last, declared himself in favor of requesting the Legislature to authorize a further increase of the police force by an additional one hundred men. These daily papers that opposed the late increase of fifty men, on the score of economy, are severe on the Mayor's extravagant proposition.

The importing coal and salt merchants have presented the new order from Washington to discharge ships with 3-bushel bins in place of 100-bushel, as at present, on the ground that the delay and cost of unloading would be two and a half times greater; that when and other freight would accumulate in the meantime, etc. The Government claims that there is a leakage in duty by the present system.

Some country papers express surprise that certain sensational and vulgar papers have prospered in the city, should be patronized. What folly! Do they know that newspapers, like members of Congress, are representatives of the people? Go through the city on early morning, as we sometimes do, and see who will see the vulgar sheets at the doors of many, or most, of the ministers and leading church-goers of this city.

An election for Captain and First Lieutenant of the Montgomery Guard was held at the Company's Armory on Tuesday, the 3d inst., at which Charles Quinn was elected Captain, and John McCully First Lieutenant. The last named gentleman is one of our well-known citizens, and has been for the last four years Orderly Sergeant of the crack corps to which he now belongs. He has many friends who will be rejoiced to hear of his elevation.

On Sunday last the interesting ceremony of admitting two young ladies to the veil took place in the chapel of the Sacred Heart Presentation Convent, Taylor street. Rev. Father

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

History of the Desert Peerage.

We take the following from the London correspondent of the Irish Times, and we imagine few who read it will disagree with the first and last sentences:

Lord Desart should have been about the last man in the world to sneer at a Peer because he has sprung from a trader who sold bacon." His own ancestor was a trader, or rather a shopkeeper, in Ennis. The only difference between the Annaly and the Desart pile is that the trade associate is further off in the desert tills than in the Annaly tills. It is a curious coincidence that the Lieutenant of Clare should have considered himself libelled by a Peer who is sprung from a Clare family. Two hundred and fifty years ago there dwelt in the town of Ennis a thrifty shopkeeper of the name of Maurice Cuffe. Where he came from I know not, nor do I know in what he dealt, but certainly not in "selling books" in Ennis. He prospered and made money, and died, leaving a widow, Ellinor Smith, with seven sons. After her husband's death, Mrs. Cuffe left the business in Ennis to be carried on by two of her sons, and in 1632 retired in Ballygally Castle, which she rented from the owner, Sir Valentine Blake, of Galway. The old castle is in ruins; it is situated about three miles from Ennis, and stands on the demesne of Captain Stackpoole, M.P. The widow Cuffe and her family lived in this castle for some time, and in 1632 she successfully resisted an attempt to take it by the rebels, headed by the O'Briens, O'Loghlens and Macnamaras. The interesting account of the siege of Ballygally Castle, written by old Mr. Maurice Cuffe's eldest son (Maurice), is still extant, and was printed in 1841 by the Camden Society, under the editorship of Thomas Crofton Crocker. Finally the Castle of Ballygally was taken in 1642 by Lieutenant-Colonel O'Brien, created Baron Inchiquin by the Supreme Council of Kilkenny, and from that time the Cuffes substantially disappeared from Clare. Joseph Cuffe, the ninth son of old Maurice Cuffe, the shopkeeper in Ennis, subsequently joined Cromwell's army, and was ultimately rewarded by Cromwell with a large grant of land in Kilkenny. His son was attainted by King James in Dublin, in 1689, but was reinstated by King William, in 1691, by reason, which he enjoyed till his death; and his son John, the grandson of the Ennis shopkeeper, became, by "ringing votes," M. P. for Kilkenny, and ultimately Baron Desart. Such is the history of the Desart peerage, and certainly the Annaly peerage seems in every respect as respectable and more national.

The Religious of Leinster.

Seven-eighths of the people of Leinster are Catholics, and the remaining fraction is divided between Protestants, Presbyterians, Methodists, Quakers, Jews, and a little group of very peculiar sects, which probably find their home in the metropolis. For instance, there were seven persons who made themselves down as Mormons. This will be news to many who, like ourselves, had no idea that any of the disciples of Mr. Prophet Young have their habitation so close at hand. Then we have in Leinster four Materialists, or at least with the idea of the sort of "material" they prefer; three Secularis's; a Buddhi-t, very far away from home; a Mesmerist, and a true Mormon, who probably hate each other with a malicious fervor as obstinate and benighted heretics as lose whatever in the Religion of Humanity, the gospel of which is, very likely, "Get hold of as much as you can, and do as little as possible for it." A small minority of the population—forty-nine, in fact, to be precise about it—confess that they have no religion to speak of, and there are individuals who say themselves down with graceful candor, "undetermined." Perhaps they may make up their minds before the census of '81, to form a holy alliance with that lone believer in the Religion of Humanity.—Dublin Weekly News.

An Irishman of Distinction.

The last telegrams from Queensland reports the change of Ministry—Mr. McAllister beaconed Premier, and Mr. Edward O'Donnell McDevitt, Attorney-General. Mr. McDevitt is a native of Donegal, and descended from a fine old sept that has given eminent prelates to the Church and patriots either to Tyrconnell, under the O'Donnells and O'Neills. He is only thirty-three years of age, yet in a few years he has won a leading position at the bar in Brisbane, and high distinction, and political influence in the Legislative Assembly, sitting for the district of Kennedy, so-called after an Irish settler. Mr. McDevitt is a brother of the Bishop of Rockpie, and of Dr. McDevitt of the Catholic University. Another very distinguished Irishman is Dr. Kevin Izod O'Doherty, descendant of Mr. Cahir of Inishowen, who is the foremost man in the medical profession, and also an eminent in the Legislative Assembly for Brisbane; these two Donegal men occupy eminent professional and Parliamentary rank in Queensland. Dr. O'Doherty is married to "Eva," the sweet poetess of the old Nation. Besides these, the head of the Catholic Church in Queensland is the esteemed and venerated Dr. James Quinn, Bishop of Brisbane, while Sir Maurice O'Connell is President of the Council.

A "Reconstruction."

How studiously vague regarding most important particulars and how honestly precise regarding immaterial details are English Protestant journalists who deal with any alleged misconduct on the part of a Catholic. They gloat over any rumor of such a character—particularly, most particularly, if such a Catholic clergyman is in question. Such a chance is rare, but when it comes shows, no matter how insignificant, a great is the great fiction—but sparse, remarkably sparse, are the details. The latest of these preciously dubious announcements appeared in the Daily Telegraph a few days ago. Here it is:

"A religious service was held to-day at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, at which a Roman Catholic priest made a public profession of renunciation of the errors of Popery and was received into the Irish Church by the Rev. Thomas Scott."

Of course the name of the Catholic priest is not given. Of course it would be a good, and great would be the glorification thereof. But, reader of discernment, no less than lucidity the name of the unknown personage who is said to have accomplished this very improbable achievement is given. London Truth, Jan. 29.

Iron Mines in Down.

Iron mines have been discovered in a place called Decommel, a townland in Down, situated almost at equal distances from Banbridge, Rathfriland and Castlewellan. A deposit of rich ore has been hit upon, and already upwards of sixty men are employed in utilizing the valuable mineral. The "find" is not, it appears, original, for though first known to our generation a little more than a year since, evidence came to hand during the sinking of one of the present shafts that the people of a former time had been at work on the vein. Decommel mines are situated in an extremely picturesque and highly interesting country, remarkable, not alone for its great and varied natural beauty, but also for many features of historical and legendary moment. The one is said by scientific observers to be of the richest in the British Isles. Some idea may be formed of the richness of the deposit from the fact that, though more than twelve feet is being excavated, at least an equal thickness of beds lies beneath the ground untouched.

ENGLAND.

Electioneering Anecdotes.

Sir Edward Watkin distinguished himself in the recent contest at Exeter by his affableness and tact as as a canvasser, and a host of stories are in circulation about his readiness in dealing with beatetting voters. "Lor' bless 'ee, sir," said one old dame, when asked about her husband's vote, "my old man can't vote at all this year. Coals is mortal dear." "Yes," answers Sir Watkin—as he is called in Exeter—"it's a sign of the Tories." "Is it sure, sir?" "Yes; but if I'm returned you'll have coals cheap enough next year, for I intend to do away with the tax." Then the line of small-talk argument which, if not perhaps conclusive, is surprising. "Is your husband in a by-street was asked if he had voted. "No, I have not yet; for the truth is I have no one to stand to my shop." "Is that all?" asks Sir Watkin, taking off his hat, and walking round the counter. "Here, put on your hat and go at once; I'll take care of your shop till you come back." And Sir Watkin did. Another lady, when pressed for the representation of West Gloucestershire a still more piquant instance of this kind occurs, stood firm on the side, and frequently made a drawing with a finger to show the size and shape of it, and put his finger on Mowle's side to show him the position. The prisoner further said, according to the detective's story, that Mr. Onslow wanted him to "prove" more than he did, and that he refused to do so. He had never been either in the service or Australia, notwithstanding all he swore, and Mr. Whalley's visit to America was "all a barney." It was a part of the scheme, and had been so arranged. "I should have been put into the box earlier," Detective Clerk's report of Lois's talk with him goes on, "only I could not learn my story correctly." Mr. Onslow was the most violent man of the lot, and he would have the largest share of the property. He was to be steward. Captain Brown was to be dock superintendent at Southampton, Mr. Onslow barrying promised it; and Mowle, of Holloway, was to have a public house; Mr. Whalley and Saigent were to have some of the property." Both Mr. Whalley and Mr. Onslow have sent letters to the papers, protesting their entire good faith, and so the pretty episode stands at present.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

Romanism Among Teetotallers.

We are glad to see the following among the rules of the new "Salford Diocesan Crusade against intemperance." There is so much arrant nonsense (in fact, heresy) talked upon this subject by temperance advocates that this timely warning comes none too soon; we trust that the rule will be adopted by all Catholic societies:

"As there unhappily exists in this country a heresy in respect to the nature and use of spirituous liquors, and as the 'Salford Diocesan Crusade' is designed, above all things, to preserve inviolate True Faith, without which it is impossible please God, it hereby enters its protest against even the suspicion of heretical teachings in any member of the Crusade, therefore declares that he heartily rejects and anathematizes the detestable heresy of the Manichees—condemned by the Church fifteen centuries ago—which teaches that spirituous liquors are not creatures of God, inasmuch as, intrinsically evil, and that whoever uses them is thereby guilty of sin. No person can be a member of the "Salford Crusade against the vice of Intemperance" he does not from the heart reject this and every other heresy condemned by our Holy Mother the Church."

FRANCE.

The Ministerial Crisis.

Availing themselves of the absence of a considerable number of the members of the Right from Versailles, on the first day of the meeting of the National assembly after the Christmas recess, the galaxie of MM. Thiers and Gambetta gained a victory over the Government will had for the moment an alarming effect. The members of the Right and Right Centr are, for the most part, men of rank and fortune, who have consequently forced in which to find rest and amusement during holiday time. The bulk of the Left are not so encumbered. They have no cousins to look after, no stacoks to overlook, no establishments to keep up. Lalands as they are, there is nothing to sep them from Versailles the day the Assembly is to meet, and so they mustered in fu force the first day after the close of the recess, and seeing the broad gap in the Conservative benches, they seized the opportunity for venting their spite against the Government. The matter to be discussed wasbs bill giving to the Government the right of appointing the mayors in the cities and towns of France. Twice before the assembly voted approval of this bill, and pronounced it "urgent." Accordingly th question was brought on immediately, thereupon the Revolutionists moved that the bill be postponed, pending the decisionon the Assembly upon the General Inteligal Bill, which is shortly to be introduced. Upon a division the Government was beaten by a small majority, their Constitutional enemies being aided by a small clique of sulky Royalists who are at war with everything since the Chambord fiasco. The Duke de Broglie and his colleagues at once tendered their resignation to Marshal MacMahon, who, however, very properly refused to accept it under the circumstances There remained but one course open, a reversal of the stolen vote of censure by a vote of confidence. And this has been done. When the news of the Ministerial defeat got abroad, the Conservative members rushed up to town, and the crest-fallen Gambetta benches on Monday gave sign unmistakable to the Socialists that their signal dance of triumph was premature. The Republican lieutenants, Simon and Ferad, fought the battle of their party in separately and singularly ingenious but collectively inconsistent; the Duc de Broglie replied well great ability and discretion, and upon a division the Communists were beaten hys majority of 50. Not content, however, with this victory of confidence, the Government very properly resolved to sause the enemies of public order to be routed, and accordingly introduced an urgency in favor of the Mayors' Bill, which the House seconded to. The irreconcilables made a few minutes ineffectual struggle against the bill all the resistance it their power, but it was carried by a majority of a double. M. Thiers was to the House on Monday, and was received with a storm of applause. The Government has gained a advantage of any accident that might give him a chance of disorganizing the Ministry, and the Government, but, seeing the state of the benches, he cunningly held his tongue.—Weekly Register, January 17.

Napoleon III.

The anniversary of the death of Napoleon III. was observed on Friday last by requiem services at several of the Paris churches, especially at those of St. Augustin and St. Germain-l'Auxerrois, the parish church of the Tuileries. There were, perhaps, some four or five thousand Bonapartists of all rank assembled at the former, including a good many orrivers and dependents, male and female, of the former Court. The scene at the latter consequence of the denial of a God—cast the lurid light of the scaffold on that prospect of sin and shame, and the horrors of the Reign of England.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

The Tichborne Witness.

Jean Luie is the given name of the man of his recent patrons. He was brought up last week before a London magistrate charged with perjury in the case of the Claimant. The chief inspector of detectives was took into him curiously was brought upon the table, and swore that Luie had made a statement to the effect that Mr. Whalley had brought him into the case; that who begged of them some word of time out to put him into the witness-box; that Mr. Onslow had brought him a book of evidence at the last trial, and marked the different passages in it which he had to learn at nighttime, and had frequently to sit up all night; that Mr. Onslow had told him about the brown mark on the side, and frequently made a drawing with a finger to show the size and shape of it, and put his finger on Mowle's side to show him the position. The prisoner further said, according to the detective's story, that Mr. Onslow wanted him to "prove" more than he did, and that he refused to do so. He had never been either in the service or Australia, notwithstanding all he swore, and Mr. Whalley's visit to America was "all a barney." It was a part of the scheme, and had been so arranged. "I should have been put into the box earlier," Detective Clerk's report of Lois's talk with him goes on, "only I could not learn my story correctly." Mr. Onslow was the most violent man of the lot, and he would have the largest share of the property. He was to be steward. Captain Brown was to be dock superintendent at Southampton, Mr. Onslow barrying promised it; and Mowle, of Holloway, was to have a public house; Mr. Whalley and Saigent were to have some of the property." Both Mr. Whalley and Mr. Onslow have sent letters to the papers, protesting their entire good faith, and so the pretty episode stands at present.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

Romanism Among Teetotallers.

We are glad to see the following among the rules of the new "Salford Diocesan Crusade against intemperance." There is so much arrant nonsense (in fact, heresy) talked upon this subject by temperance advocates that this timely warning comes none too soon; we trust that the rule will be adopted by all Catholic societies:

"As there unhappily exists in this country a heresy in respect to the nature and use

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION is INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer academic honors, with the usual diplomas, upon the graduates of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION.
(Payable in advance.)

Board, Tuition, Washing, etc.....$125 00
Music, with use of instrument.....15 00
Drawing and Painting.....5 00
Vacation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Terms per month (in advance):
Select Day Schools—Primary, first and second Grammar Classes.....$5 00
Preparatory and Primary.....3 00
Piano and Guitar.....8 00
Drawing and Painting.....5 00
Vacation spent at the Academy.....25 00

Extra Charges.
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....$2 50
Harmonic Tuition, per quarter.....12 50
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to have the bill in each case), per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges. Music per month, $1 50; per quarter, $4 00.
For further particulars apply to
REV. J. J. GUERIN, C. S. C.,
Superior.

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE,
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA
Under the management of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus.

THE SANTA CLARA COLLEGE WAS FOUNDED in 1851, and in 1852 was incorporated, with the privileges of a University. Diplomas are given to graduates in the various courses of study.

The College grounds comprise a square of ten acres, within which are the college buildings, a large and elegant church, with its recently gilded altars, a swimming pool, etc., all of which afford every facility for healthful exercise.

The College possesses a very complete philosophical apparatus, and valuable collection of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also a Museum of Natural History. Photography and Surveying. A valuable Chemical Laboratory.

The Scholastic Year, which is divided into two sessions of five months each, commences in August, and closes about the last week in June.

TERMS:
Payable semi-monthly, in advance.)
Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once.....$15 00
Board, Washing, Tuition, Use of Bed, Medical Attendance and Medicines, Bath, Fuel, per session.....$150 00
Half a year.....75 00
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....5 00
Use of Library.....5 00
Graduation Fee, to be paid by graduates.....10 00
Those who take the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the accommodation of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The Critical Works on Rhetoric in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are carefully discussed and corrected in the classes.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Payable half yearly in advance).
For board, washing, tuition, use of bed, and medical attendance.....$250 00
Use of Library.....5 00
Graduation Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and medicines.....10 00
Vocal Music.....20 00
Piano.....40 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 5th of August.
REV. R. ROWTH, President.
1876

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED
Rev. JAMES McGILL, C. M.,
1876-ly President.

MISS KENNEDY,
FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,
62 Third Street, Near Mission.

INFORMS HER FRIENDS AND the public in general that she has recently increased her stock and re-opened with the LATEST STYLES in

Ladies', Misses' and Children's HATS AND BONNETS,

And always keeps on hand as good an assortment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Feathers, etc as can be found in the city.

Ladies cannot do better than patronize the establishment, where they can get everything they want at the lowest price, without having to pay fancy prices for show. 4th 6m

SANTA CRUZ
FEMALE SEMINARY.

THE SPRING TERM OF THIS INSTITUTION will commence on MONDAY, January 19th, 1874.

For Circulars containing full information address
SISTER SUPERIOR.
Santa Cruz, Dec. 20, 1873. 1873

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Robersville, Humboldt County, Cala.

Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
(Payable half yearly in advance).
For board, washing, tuition, bedding and mending.....$150 00
Use of Piano, per month.....2 00
Vacation at College.....30 00

DAY PUPILS.
Senior class.....$80 00
Junior " .....60 00
Vocal and Instrumental music, drawing and modern languages form extra charges. The scholastic year of the scholastic year commences respectively on the 1st of August and 1st of February.
For further information and circulars address
Very Rev. F. MENDEGARY, Superior
1876

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME.
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA.
YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE.

THIS INSTITUTION, WHICH IS INCORPORATED with the usual literary privileges, is now prepared to confer academical honors, with courses of study equal to those of the best Institutions of the State.

TERMS:
Entrance, to be paid but once.....$15
Board and Tuition, per quarter.....$2 50
Harmonic Tuition, per quarter.....12 50
Physicians' fees (unless it may be preferred to have the bill in each case), per quarter.....2 50
Piano, Vocal Music, Drawing and Painting form extra charges. Music per month, $1 50; per quarter, $4 00.
For further particulars apply to
REV. J. J. GUERIN, C. S. C.,
Superior.

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, under the direction of the Friars Minor of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday in August.

The object of the Institution is to give a good education in general (but not classical) to the children, at the lowest possible cost, a want long felt by the people of California, and for that sake which the Friars Minor have undertaken. — Feilding Register, Jan. 17.

TERMS:
Entrance Fee, to be paid but once.....$10 00
Tuition, Board and Washing, per session, of 10 months.....150 00
Music, Vocal and German form extra charges.
Those who do not wish to study music are not charged $50.
Payments are to be made semi-annually in advance.
Parents will pay for medical attendance, and especially for medicines.
Money will not be advanced by the College; for the purchase of necessary articles, a sufficient sum must be deposited.
For further particulars apply to
REV. FATHER GUARDIAN,
Santa Barbara, Cal.
1876

DITSON & CO'S CELEBRATED
HOME MUSICAL LIBRARY,
Unexcelled Collection of Bound Music.

VOCAL.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG!
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG!
GEMS OF IRISH SONG!
WREATH OF GEMS!
OPERATIC PEARLS!
SILVER CHORD!
SHOWER OF PEARLS! Duets
MUSICAL TREASURE! Vocal and Instrumental.
INSTRUMENTAL.
For Pianoforte or Reed Organ.
GEMS OF STRAUSS!
ORGAN AT HOME!
PIANISTS ALBUM!
PIANOFORTE GEMS!
HOME CIRCLE! Volumes I and II.

Price of each Book in cloth, $1; in boards, $2 50; in gilt, $3. The above excellent Books are perfect libraries in themselves of the best and most popular Music, being sold at not the "cheapest" from no immense sheets; 200 to 300 pages, full sheet music size, to each book. Each book contains from 50 to 75 pieces of music, all worth double the price when bought separately. Any 5 Books in cloth, $10, 12 for $20, can will be sent Three Hundred and Fifty Dollars worth!
Send, post-paid, on receipt of retail price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., C. H. DITSON & CO.,
Boston. 711 Broadway, New York.
30-tf

Gray's Music Store, 623 & 625 Clay
29-13

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, B. S.; the Commercial, Master of Accounts.

The Commercial course has been established for the accommodation of those who wish to acquire a good practical education in as short a time as possible.

While proper care is bestowed on every branch taught in the College, our own language receives special attention. The Critical Works on Rhetoric in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are carefully discussed and corrected in the classes.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR,
(Payable half yearly in advance).
Board, Tuition and Washing.....$250 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and medicines.....10 00
Use of Library.....5 00
Vocal Music.....20 00
Piano.....40 00
Modern languages, Music and drawing form extra charges.
Studies will be resumed on the 5th of August.
REV. R. ROWTH, President.
1876

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
DEGREES CONFERRED
Rev. JAMES McGILL, C. M.,
1876-ly President.

THE MONITOR.

ITALY.

Freedom of the Church in Italy.

It was said that when Rome became the capital of United Italy the connection between Church and State would cease, and an end be put to the clamor and seeing against a State-paid clergy. But although Rome has been seized by Victor Emmanuel, the union between Church and State has been retained, and the clergy are the mayors to-day as they were in the days of Pius. Twice before the assembly voted approval of this bill, and pronounced it "urgent." Accordingly th question was brought on immediately, thereupon the Revolutionists moved that the bill be postponed, pending the decisionon the Assembly upon the General Inteligal Bill, which is shortly to be introduced. Upon a division the Government was beaten by a small majority, their Constitutional enemies being aided by a small clique of sulky Royalists who are at war with everything since the Chambord fiasco. The Duke de Broglie and his colleagues at once tendered their resignation to Marshal MacMahon, who, however, very properly refused to accept it under the circumstances There remained but one course open, a reversal of the stolen vote of censure by a vote of confidence. And this has been done. When the news of the Ministerial defeat got abroad, the Conservative members rushed up to town, and the crest-fallen Gambetta benches on Monday gave sign unmistakable to the Socialists that their signal dance of triumph was premature. The Republican lieutenants, Simon and Ferad, fought the battle of their party in separately and singularly ingenious but collectively inconsistent; the Duc de Broglie replied well great ability and discretion, and upon a division the Communists were beaten hys majority of 50. Not content, however, with this victory of confidence, the Government very properly resolved to sause the enemies of public order to be routed, and accordingly introduced an urgency in favor of the Mayors' Bill, which the House seconded to. The irreconcilables made a few minutes ineffectual struggle against the bill all the resistance it their power, but it was carried by a majority of a double. M. Thiers was to the House on Monday, and was received with a storm of applause. The Government has gained a advantage of any accident that might give him a chance of disorganizing the Ministry, and the Government, but, seeing the state of the benches, he cunningly held his tongue.—Weekly Register, January 17.

Napoleon III.

The anniversary of the death of Napoleon III. was observed on Friday last by requiem services at several of the Paris churches, especially at those of St. Augustin and St. Germain-l'Auxerrois, the parish church of the Tuileries. There were, perhaps, some four or five thousand Bonapartists of all rank assembled at the former, including a good many orrivers and dependents, male and female, of the former Court. The scene at the latter consequence of the denial of a God—cast the lurid light of the scaffold on that prospect of sin and shame, and the horrors of the Reign of England.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

The Tichborne Witness.

Jean Luie is the given name of the man of his recent patrons. He was brought up last week before a London magistrate charged with perjury in the case of the Claimant. The chief inspector of detectives was took into him curiously was brought upon the table, and swore that Luie had made a statement to the effect that Mr. Whalley had brought him into the case; that who begged of them some word of time out to put him into the witness-box; that Mr. Onslow had brought him a book of evidence at the last trial, and marked the different passages in it which he had to learn at nighttime, and had frequently to sit up all night; that Mr. Onslow had told him about the brown mark on the side, and frequently made a drawing with a finger to show the size and shape of it, and put his finger on Mowle's side to show him the position. The prisoner further said, according to the detective's story, that Mr. Onslow wanted him to "prove" more than he did, and that he refused to do so. He had never been either in the service or Australia, notwithstanding all he swore, and Mr. Whalley's visit to America was "all a barney." It was a part of the scheme, and had been so arranged. "I should have been put into the box earlier," Detective Clerk's report of Lois's talk with him goes on, "only I could not learn my story correctly." Mr. Onslow was the most violent man of the lot, and he would have the largest share of the property. He was to be steward. Captain Brown was to be dock superintendent at Southampton, Mr. Onslow barrying promised it; and Mowle, of Holloway, was to have a public house; Mr. Whalley and Saigent were to have some of the property." Both Mr. Whalley and Mr. Onslow have sent letters to the papers, protesting their entire good faith, and so the pretty episode stands at present.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

Romanism Among Teetotallers.

We are glad to see the following among the rules of the new "Salford Diocesan Crusade against intemperance." There is so much arrant nonsense (in fact, heresy) talked upon this subject by temperance advocates that this timely warning comes none too soon; we trust that the rule will be adopted by all Catholic societies:

"As there unhappily exists in this country a heresy in respect to the nature and use of spirituous liquors, and as the 'Salford Diocesan Crusade' is designed, above all things, to preserve inviolate True Faith, without which it is impossible please God, it hereby enters its protest against even the suspicion of heretical teachings in any member of the Crusade, therefore declares that he heartily rejects and anathematizes the detestable heresy of the Manichees—condemned by the Church fifteen centuries ago—which teaches that spirituous liquors are not creatures of God, inasmuch as, intrinsically evil, and that whoever uses them is thereby guilty of sin. No person can be a member of the "Salford Crusade against the vice of Intemperance" he does not from the heart reject this and every other heresy condemned by our Holy Mother the Church."

FRANCE.

The Ministerial Crisis.

Availing themselves of the absence of a considerable number of the members of the Right from Versailles, on the first day of the meeting of the National assembly after the Christmas recess, the galaxie of MM. Thiers and Gambetta gained a victory over the Government will had for the moment an alarming effect. The members of the Right and Right Centr are, for the most part, men of rank and fortune, who have consequently forced in which to find rest and amusement during holiday time. The bulk of the Left are not so encumbered. They have no cousins to look after, no stacoks to overlook, no establishments to keep up. Lalands as they are, there is nothing to sep them from Versailles the day the Assembly is to meet, and so they mustered in fu force the first day after the close of the recess, and seeing the broad gap in the Conservative benches, they seized the opportunity for venting their spite against the Government. The matter to be discussed wasbs bill giving to the Government the right of appointing the mayors in the cities and towns of France. Twice before the assembly voted approval of this bill, and pronounced it "urgent." Accordingly th question was brought on immediately, thereupon the Revolutionists moved that the bill be postponed, pending the decisionon the Assembly upon the General Inteligal Bill, which is shortly to be introduced. Upon a division the Government was beaten by a small majority, their Constitutional enemies being aided by a small clique of sulky Royalists who are at war with everything since the Chambord fiasco. The Duke de Broglie and his colleagues at once tendered their resignation to Marshal MacMahon, who, however, very properly refused to accept it under the circumstances There remained but one course open, a reversal of the stolen vote of censure by a vote of confidence. And this has been done. When the news of the Ministerial defeat got abroad, the Conservative members rushed up to town, and the crest-fallen Gambetta benches on Monday gave sign unmistakable to the Socialists that their signal dance of triumph was premature. The Republican lieutenants, Simon and Ferad, fought the battle of their party in separately and singularly ingenious but collectively inconsistent; the Duc de Broglie replied well great ability and discretion, and upon a division the Communists were beaten hys majority of 50. Not content, however, with this victory of confidence, the Government very properly resolved to sause the enemies of public order to be routed, and accordingly introduced an urgency in favor of the Mayors' Bill, which the House seconded to. The irreconcilables made a few minutes ineffectual struggle against the bill all the resistance it their power, but it was carried by a majority of a double. M. Thiers was to the House on Monday, and was received with a storm of applause. The Government has gained a advantage of any accident that might give him a chance of disorganizing the Ministry, and the Government, but, seeing the state of the benches, he cunningly held his tongue.—Weekly Register, January 17.

Napoleon III.

The anniversary of the death of Napoleon III. was observed on Friday last by requiem services at several of the Paris churches, especially at those of St. Augustin and St. Germain-l'Auxerrois, the parish church of the Tuileries. There were, perhaps, some four or five thousand Bonapartists of all rank assembled at the former, including a good many orrivers and dependents, male and female, of the former Court. The scene at the latter consequence of the denial of a God—cast the lurid light of the scaffold on that prospect of sin and shame, and the horrors of the Reign of England.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

The Tichborne Witness.

Jean Luie is the given name of the man of his recent patrons. He was brought up last week before a London magistrate charged with perjury in the case of the Claimant. The chief inspector of detectives was took into him curiously was brought upon the table, and swore that Luie had made a statement to the effect that Mr. Whalley had brought him into the case; that who begged of them some word of time out to put him into the witness-box; that Mr. Onslow had brought him a book of evidence at the last trial, and marked the different passages in it which he had to learn at nighttime, and had frequently to sit up all night; that Mr. Onslow had told him about the brown mark on the side, and frequently made a drawing with a finger to show the size and shape of it, and put his finger on Mowle's side to show him the position. The prisoner further said, according to the detective's story, that Mr. Onslow wanted him to "prove" more than he did, and that he refused to do so. He had never been either in the service or Australia, notwithstanding all he swore, and Mr. Whalley's visit to America was "all a barney." It was a part of the scheme, and had been so arranged. "I should have been put into the box earlier," Detective Clerk's report of Lois's talk with him goes on, "only I could not learn my story correctly." Mr. Onslow was the most violent man of the lot, and he would have the largest share of the property. He was to be steward. Captain Brown was to be dock superintendent at Southampton, Mr. Onslow barrying promised it; and Mowle, of Holloway, was to have a public house; Mr. Whalley and Saigent were to have some of the property." Both Mr. Whalley and Mr. Onslow have sent letters to the papers, protesting their entire good faith, and so the pretty episode stands at present.—Dublin Weekly News, January 17.

Romanism Among Teetotallers.

We are glad to see the following among the rules of the new "Salford Diocesan Crusade against intemperance." There is so much arrant nonsense (in fact, heresy) talked upon this subject by temperance advocates that this timely warning comes none too soon; we trust that the rule will be adopted by all Catholic societies:

"As there unhappily exists in this country a heresy in respect to the nature and use

SATURDAY, FEB. 14, 1874.

SPAIN.

The Spanish Republic.

The fall of Cartagena has followed rapidly upon the fall of Castilaer. On Monday the fate of the besiegers was not answered by the Intransigentes, and the commander of the Madrid forces took possession of the place, which he found deserted. On the following day night the besieged finding the fire of the enemy too hot and too strong for them, and seeing that resistance was hopeless, came in the resolution of decamping. Accordingly, the Giants and their troops got on board their Ironclad, the Numancia, to the number of 2,500, and quickly departed from the harbor, without meeting any resistance or interruption on the part of the Madrid fleet. They were followed, however, when they were beyond shot reach by the Madrilano admiral, who wasted one gunpowder in the ridiculous chase. On arrived safely at Oran, where they landed and surrendered to the French authorities, by whom they will, of course, be protected as fugitive vanquished belligerents. Had Canalejas remained in power at Madrid, a demand from him for their surrender might have been embarrassing, for of the legality of his authority there could be no question; but no such pretension is possible on the part of Serrano, the present occupant of the office that was the scene of the Annunciation, and the spiritual place for so long to Juan's and Joseph.

Thus year there, was no exception to the general rule of unfortunate fate in that from long before the dawn of the morning till long after the close of the evening of the night on the 15th of December gone by, the people from all the country round about the city of Castellata kept flocking in to pay their homage at the cherished spot. Another correspondent, writing from Lerida, says: "The streets are as crowded, the communion rails as frequented and the altars as brilliant as they were at home, is remarkably slow in his movements. The military revolt at Madrid appears to be entirely to have been a mere sequel to the "Castilla Unita" had fallen on the beautiful place. His Eminence Cardinal Sforza, the archbishop of Naples, has just completed the erection of a magnificent dioramic edifice, in which he will pass the holy youth of the city, both of which are already filled to their utmost capacity, and in the whole Catholic world, and we doubt not Catholic instruction to the young could be more manifestly confided to safer hands. Of such scenes are being witnessed, and wells such deeds are being done, we cannot despair of Italy; we cannot but confident that God's blessing will descend upon its lovely plains, and that the consequence of refusal, or neglect to comply. The Madrid mob, a turbulent, refractory mass of Communism, are to be the arms of her foes and attachment to Catholicism. The event would seem to have affected very painfully the aged Emperor King William, who must feel himself very near to his own day of solemn account. There can be no doubt that as soon as he is removed, the wind of sympathy, which is universal in Russia toward our North Gerrian neighbors, will manifest itself more strongly than ever. Already the diplomatic relations on the two Powers (as we noted in the last issue). Prince von Bismarck he has taken upon himself to send to this Court another dispatches in German, and Prince Gortschakoff has replied to them in Russian. The incident has caused considerable amusement in diplomatic here, and our Emperor has not blamed his waggish Chancellor, who appears to do pretty much as he pleases perhaps on a principle something like that by which dying people are allowed to eat and drink anything they may fancy.

RUSSIA.

The Late Queen Dowager Elizabeth.

St. Petersburg, December 27, 1873.—The Court has gone into mourning for twenty-four days on the occasion of the death of the late Queen Dowager of Prussia. It is stated as a fact that this royal lady, who once left the Catholic religion, had returned to it again, and expired with great sentiments of piety in the arms of her two sons, the Queen and Queen Dowager of Saxony, who are both well known to have strong attachments to Catholicism. This event would seem to have affected very painfully the aged Emperor King William, who must feel himself very near to his own day of solemn account. There can be no doubt that as soon as he is removed, the wind of sympathy, which is universal in Russia toward our North Gerrian neighbors, will manifest itself more strongly than ever. Already the diplomatic relations on the two Powers (as we noted in the last issue). Prince von Bismarck he has taken upon himself to send to this Court another dispatches in German, and Prince Gortschakoff has replied to them in Russian. The incident has caused considerable amusement in diplomatic here, and our Emperor has not blamed his waggish Chancellor, who appears to do pretty much as he pleases perhaps on a principle something like that by which dying people are allowed to eat and drink anything they may fancy.

Catholicity Not Dead in Italy.

The Jew-governed journals of the revolution and of "Liberalism" in Rome and throughout Italy are ever proclaiming that Catholicity, in other words, Christianity, is all but dead in Italy, and that its worship and its practices are relegated to religious and old women. Thats are journals nearer and nearer at home than are constantly echoing the same dismal cry, and would fain persuade their readers that the promises of God with reference to His Church are being daily falsified. Thank God, all such tales are utterly without foundation, and we can tell our Catholic people of Ireland, whom we know will rejoice as much in the hearing as we do in the telling of it, that practical, fervent Catholicity was never more abounding in Italy than it is at present. A letter from Ancona tells us of recent doings at Loreto. Everybody knows that on the night of the 10th of December, 1294, the holy house of Nazareth was miraculously transferred to the little village of Loreto, so prettily situated on a picturesque slope about three miles from the sea, and that from that time until now it has been the shrine of devotion for thousands upon thousands of pilgrims—from Pope and King to monk and peasant, from morn to south, from east to west of all the habitable globe. A search 19th of December comes around in each recurring year, a glorious celebration takes place in honor of the sainted spot where that was the scene of the Annunciation, and the spiritual place for so long to Juan's and Joseph.

Thus year there, was no exception to the general rule of unfortunate fate in that from long before the dawn of the morning till long after the close of the evening of the night on the 15th of December gone by, the people from all the country round about the city of Castellata kept flocking in to pay their homage at the cherished spot. Another correspondent, writing from Lerida, says: "The streets are as crowded, the communion rails as frequented and the altars as brilliant as they were at home, is remarkably slow in his movements. The military revolt at Madrid appears to be entirely to have been a mere sequel to the "Castilla Unita" had fallen on the beautiful place. His Eminence Cardinal Sforza, the archbishop of Naples, has just completed the erection of a magnificent dioramic edifice, in which he will pass the holy youth of the city, both of which are already filled to their utmost capacity, and in the whole Catholic world, and we doubt not Catholic instruction to the young could be more manifestly confided to safer hands. Of such scen

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

Rev. M. Dorney, a native of Chicago, was raised to the dignity of the priesthood in that city by Bishop Foley on Tuesday, January 27.

It is said that Jay Cooke's private residence at Chelton Hills Penn., which cost a million of dollars in its erection, is about being purchased for a convent.

A statue has been erected in Paris to Father Deguery who, for many years, was pastor of the Church of the Madalines, and was, with others, martyred by the Communists.

Madame Josephine Goetz, Superior-General of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, died at the mother house of the Society in Paris on the 4th of January, aged forty-seven years.

Brother Lewis Sullivan, O. S. F., died at the Franciscan Monastery at Loretto, Penn., on the 18th January. He was in the 56th year of his age and the twenty-third of his religious profession.

J. V. Clarke, a well known banker of Chicago, presented Father Damboe, the pastor of St. Mary's church at Evanston, with a rich organ, as a memorial of his son, who died two months ago.

The Catholics of England are about making another "aggression" in the shape of a ground Gothic church, two hundred feet long, at Salford, under the very walls of the central fountain of Anglicanism.

Two thousand Jews belonging to the Society of St. Vincent de Paul received holy communion in the Church of the Pantheon, Paris, on St. Stephen's day. The Cardinal-Archbishop pontificated at High Mass.

The Rev. Joseph E. Dugast, a priest of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, died at St. Joseph's College, Ottawa, on the 19th inst. He was a native of St. Jacques, Province of Quebec, and two of his brothers are priests.

Dr. O'Mahony, Bishop of Auckland, Australia, is going out a community of nuns from Ireland, to take charge of female schools. The people of Kempsey, on the Macleay, have subscribed £1,000 towards erecting a church to be dedicated to St. Patrick.

When Charles Bradlaugh was coming to America, the Irish correspondent of the Boston Pilot warned his fellow-countrymen against him as "the wild and exciting Radical leaf bewixtane in the gulse of the sheep. It is like unto the heavy Christian community to vomit him out."

A woman doctor lectured last week in New York on "The Science of Womanly Life," said she had assisted in dissecting as many as twenty women, and there was not one who did not have the pelvic cavity crowded into her abdomen by corsets. So, ladies, beware of tight lacing.

In Illinois there is some talk of a bill being introduced into the Legislature to deprive the Bishop of Chicago, and, we presume, of Alton, too, of the power to manage church property. It will fail, as repeated efforts of the same nature have done, because Bishop Hughes about thirty years ago.

President Moreno, by a decree, consecrates the Republic of Ecuador to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, from a certain day of the year as a holiday in honor of this consecration, and adds, that in all the churches of the Republic the same ceremonies will be perpetuated by means of an inscription in letters of gold.

The Papal Brigade Oroncque is now, and has been for more than a year, at the service of the Holy Father, in the harbor of Civita Vecchia, and the French transport steamer, should he decide to leave Rome. The Italian "emancipation" has expressed a desire for the removal of the vessel, but MacMahon shows no inclination to comply.

Right Rev. Mr. Murray, Bishop of Maitland, Australia, having been witness to the Consecration of Ireland to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, considered that his own diocese should be similarly dedicated on his return home, and, accordingly, that ceremony was performed with great devotion on the first Sunday of October last.

The Roman Fathers have erected a convent 190 feet long by 50 feet wide, together with a neat chapel, at Chalawa, Ia. It is intended as a mission house, from which the Fathers can go out and give retreats through the province, and for the retirement at times of clergymen and laymen. It bears the name of St. Theresa's Retreat.

Miss Rose Sands, daughter of Admiral Sands, of the United States Navy, now in charge of the Naval Observatory at Washington, D. C., received the white veil of the Order of the Visitation at Mount De Sales Convent, Baltimore county, Md. A very large assemblage of her friends witnessed the ceremony.

The Catholic Union of Great Britain is preparing to convoke a public meeting of the Catholic nobility and gentry, to meet the president of the Duke of Norfolk, to express sympathy with their co-religionists in Germany by way of contrast to the Lord John Russell meeting, which expressed its sympathy with Bismarck.

Lutgens and Reinkens are at loggerheads. Lutgens denies the jurisdiction of Reinkens as Bishop. Reinkens retorts through the official organ, the Old Catholic, that "he is not aware of having claimed any connection with Lutgens, whom marriage has brought him into Old Catholicism." When these good people throw stones they hit hard.

Some English Tory papers seem to be offended that neither Archbishop Manning nor Dr. Newman were created Cardinals, and the Saturday Review says "There has always been an English Cardinal." An Irish bull also, in the observation there have been but six English Cardinals—Wolsey, Allen, York, Weld, Acton and Wiseman.

There are bills now before the German Parliament in Berlin, for universal suffrage, for freedom of the press and for the abolition of the stamp tax on newspapers. "The most important of these is opposed by Catholic members, and are considered by the vested rights of the Socialists, supported by the Progressist party—the party friends of American radicals.

Brownson's Journal warned Catholics against the use of an inferior quality of candles on Candlemas Day. It says, "Some people think they can obtain them of greater. What grocers sell are not wax candles at all, nor are they susceptible of the blessing." Wax alone, "the work of the bee," should be used, according to our venerable ritual, and the Catholic purchaser should be provision made for their manufacture and sale by authority.

Miss Ellen Holland, daughter of the late Dr. George Holland, of Stamford, and formerly one of the congregation of St. Mary's Church in that town, (in religion Sister Marie de Borgia, Superior of the Visitation Convent, Orleans), has received the thanks of the French Government in acknowledgment of the services rendered by herself and the community to the sick and wounded during the Franco-German war; the convent, from the siege of Orleans in October, 1870, to March, 1871, having been sworn open as a hospital. The decorations consist of a silver medal and a bronze cross, with name and inscription, accompanied with diplomas from the French Government.

The very pretty church of Our Lady of Victory in Brooklyn, N. Y., is built where, "over the hill," a few years ago, there was a wide expanse of meadows and fields; with an occasional shanty here and there. This church has now its five hundred boys and girls at its parochial school, with temperance societies, sodalities and a devoted congregation under Rev. Dr. O'Connell. That city has thirty-five Catholic churches.

Professor Blanchard, a Protestant clergyman of Chicago, was lecturing lately in Illinois, N. Y., on "Ocean Stories and their Evil Influences," when he was mobbed by the students of Cornell University, and had to be escorted by the police from the hall to his hotel. It is to schools of this class that the State would have Catholics send their children. Not a thousand times No!

Bishop Wood, of Philadelphia, in an address delivered before a Catholic Temperance Society, said, in reference to other societies composed of Irishmen and Catholics: "I have carefully read their constitutions which are drawn by very skillful and adroit hands, and I very much fear that their independence of the Church will, before long, lead them into fatal mistakes. They pretend to be Catholics, but they are not."

William M. Tweed and William M. Graham, both of New York, are good examples to be held up before young men. They were both poor, the sons of working men. Tweed became the leader of a political "ring" and defrauded the city treasury. Graham became President of a bank and purloined its funds. To-day they are both old men, broken down in health and heart, and have only long terms, one ten years and the other twelve years, in the penitentiary.

The Swiss "Radicals" are throwing parish priests after parish priest into prison for saying Mass in private houses, after being driven out of the churches which they belonged to the Catholics for hundreds of years; some for attending the sick, and some on no charge whatever. One venerable old priest, seventy years old, was recently thrown into prison, and neither he nor his parishioners of Glovelier were able at the last dates to find out the cause of the brutal outrage.

Midnight Mass on last Christmas Eve was celebrated all over Paris, and not with standing the bad weather, the churches were crowded. In several private chapels it was also solemnized with considerable pomp, notably at the Hotel of the Queen Isabella II. of Spain, and at the Hotel Lamartine, the residence of the noble Polish house of Czartoriski. In both these palaces were Christmas trees of great size brautly adorned with candles and presents for children.

The venerable Archbishop MacHale, in subscribing to the Mitchel testimonial, says: "Without any of the prejudices of the political Pharisees of the day, Mitchel was, although wanting in their enervating cunning, a faithful Irishman; and had he been less so he would not now require the aid of the present contribution. The honest biographer and eloquent panegyrist of Hugh and Owen Roe O'Neill may well be deemed to have claims on all generous Irishmen."

The Lexington (Ky.) Council has made the two Cathedral schools in that city—one for the whites and the other for colored—free schools, under the supervision of the city school committee and superintendent; the teachers to submit to examination by the school committee, and the colored schools to be taught in the other two schools to be founded in the Cathedral rooms to be furnished and warmed, by the Catholics, for this purpose; the city to contribute $160 a month for the support of the schools, the children residing in the districts in which these schools are may be sent to those schools free of charge.

With the blessing of the Holy Father and the permission of the General of the Capuchin Order, a colony of clerical and lay Carmelites from Clondalkin, near Dublin, have settled in Manchester, Archbishop Lynch, of Toronto, Upper Canada, early in March, Archbishop Lynch, in a letter from Rome to the Prior of Clondalkin, says: "Catholics are better off in Canada than in the United States. They are obliged to pay taxes to godless schools, while we pay but for our own schools; and we get a percentage besides from the public fund out of every child we teach." This is a slap in the face from John Bull to free America!

There are symptoms of discontent with Prussian supremacy in the German Empire. In the late Hanverian elections the Guelphic opposition was a majority, returning twenty-eight of their own party against twenty-one Liberals. Baron Bennigsen, too, King Albert, who has just succeeded his father, the late King John, signalized his accession by addressing to the Sovereign Pontiff a letter expressing his devotion to the Holy See and his submission to both the temporal and spiritual power of the Papacy. In his order of the day to his army, also, all reference to Prussia and its sovereign is omitted, much to the dissatisfaction of Berlin.

"Lullaby Land" is the name given to an asylum and grounds occupied by the Sisters of Nazareth, near London, Eng., as a home for babies in youth and helpless old age. Most of the children are waifs snatched from starvation and death in the streets through fame, and such of them as are known to have had Protestant parents are allowed to be baptized and received into the Catholic Church by Protestant clergymen. The old are taken in between the ages of 60 and 70, and some are over 100. The number of inmates is 200. The blacks, who are ladies by birth and education, are under the care of girls, but those door to door, for scraps wherewith to feed and clothe the cheerful and contented inmates of Lullaby Land.

Some weeks ago Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote a letter to the Boston Globe on the subject of "virile depravity," which, she said, "it is time to them, as a class, to state my views upon." Her views have since been given girls I have known some of the most trustworthy, high-principled, self-respecting women. Is there any reason why, supported by Catholic members, and are considered by the vested rights of the Socialists, supported by the Progressist party—the party friends of American radicals.

Brownson's Journal warned Catholics against the use of an inferior quality of candles on Candlemas Day. It says, "Some people think they can obtain them of greater. What grocers sell are not wax candles at all, nor are they susceptible of the blessing." Wax alone, "the work of the bee," should be used, according to our venerable ritual, and the Catholic purchaser should be provision made for their manufacture and sale by authority.

Miss Ellen Holland, daughter of the late Dr. George Holland, of Stamford, and formerly one of the congregation of St. Mary's Church in that town, (in religion Sister Marie de Borgia, Superior of the Visitation Convent, Orleans), has received the thanks of the French Government in acknowledgment of the services rendered by herself and the community to the sick and wounded during the Franco-German war; the convent, from the siege of Orleans in October, 1870, to March, 1871, having been sworn open as a hospital. The decora-

Never Say Die!

Though you sought till your head ashes, you may be "the pioneer," and not the "first hand. One tenth will satisfy the most exacting that he has "seen something" when he says things upon record which positively prove Consumption, Asthma, Nervous Debility and Bronchitis Try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for yourself. It cures night sweats, peculiar to consumption of the nerves, failing of memory, difficult expectoration, sharp pains in the lungs, sore throat, chilly sensations, nausea at the stomach, heaviness of the bowels, and wasting away of the system. Price $1 00, or three bottles for $2 00. Send for circular. Address Coulter & Co., 121 Nassau street, Philadelphia. Pa., giving name of this paper.

Obsequies of the Lord Bishop of Clogher.

On Tuesday, January 26th the remains of the good, venerable and venerated Most Rev. William Keane, Lord Bishop of Clogne, were consigned to the last resting place, in the southern side of the new Cathedral, Queenstown, in presence of the prelates of the province, nearly three hundred of the clergy of its dioceses of Cloyne, Ross and Cork, all thousands of the rich and poor, who are by every means in their power to testify their regret for the loss and affectionate respect for the memory of the good Bishop whose praise was in every mouth. When I arrived here last (Monday night I found I was just in time to join in the torchlight procession which was to accompany the remains from the episcopal residence to the temporary parochial church, which literally is nothing more than the fine cabin of the Christian Brothers, which have been applied to the purposes of a place of Catholic worship until the Cathedral is in some forward state. The night was dark and wet and tempestuous, but, notwithstanding, nearly all the people of Queenstown and the large number of strangers who had arrived during the day were present. The glare of the many torches lit up the sad and solemn cortege that followed the remains, which were borne on the shoulders of workmen employed on the Cathedral. The prayers and wailings of the poor were to be heard on every side as all that was mortal of their beloved friend and pastor was being borne along. On arriving at the principal entrance of the temporary church the remains were received by the parochial clergy, who preceded them to the choir, where they were placed in the coffin. The prayers prescribed by Spiritual having been said, the Custos-guardian of the Order of St. Francis recited the Office for the Dead, which they continued through the night.

Since Thursday last, when the venerated Bishop breathed his last, Queenstown and the whole diocese of Cloyne and Ross, literally business had been all buttespended, and work there would be resumed after the last dose. Here to-day all the shops were closed, and this great seaport town had lost all its bustle and activity. The numerous vessels in the harbor and its distant roadsteads had their flags hal-mast high, as had also the Consuls of the several Governments of Europe and America. The trains from Cork, Youghal and the county generally, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, were crowded with people who had come to pay their last respects to the remains of their larly known, and so dearly beloved by rich and poor, and by even those who differed from him in most widely in religious and political belief.

The solemn Gregorian chants recorded for the first time within the walls of the new cathedral, as they will resound in hundreds of years to come on the burial of a friend or descendant of St. Colman, in the See of Cloyne. The huge stone for the top of the tomb we covered having been raised by means of chains and pulleys, the remains were lowered into their final resting place, and the sad "Requiescat In Pace" having been intoned, the grave closed over the honored dust of one eminent for learning, for nobility of nature, generous benevolence, and true self-sacrificing charity—one in whom the virtues of the Christian and the patriot were happily combined, and one whose name shall be handed down with affectionate veneration from generation to generation.—Corr. Dublin Freeman, Jan. 31.

Boston harbor was frozen on Monday last as far as the eye could reach, and in New York they had the most violent snow storm of the season.

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

A $360,000 fire occurred in Broadway, New York, last Monday.

The chief clerk of the Revenue Office at Lynchburg, Va., has absconded with $100,000.

The Postmaster General promises Lottrell a daily mail between this city and Vallejo.

The Right Rev. Joseph E. B. Guigues, D. D., Bishop of Ottawa, Province of Ontario, Canada, died last Sunday night.

Edwin Booth, the actor, who was supposed to be a millionaire, has filed a petition on bankruptcy in New York.

A marble statue of the late Senator Baker, was in every month. What I arrived here was in every month. What I arrived here last (Monday night I found I was just in time to join in the torchlight procession which was to accompany the remains from the episcopal residence to the temporary parochial church, which literally is nothing more than the fine cabin of the Christian Brothers, which have been applied to the purposes of a place of Catholic worship until the Cathedral is in some forward state. The night was dark and wet and tempestuous, but, notwithstanding, nearly all the people of Queenstown and the large number of strangers who had arrived during the day were present. The glare of the many torches lit up the sad and solemn cortege that followed the remains, which were borne on the shoulders of workmen employed on the Cathedral. The prayers and wailings of the poor were to be heard on every side as all that was mortal of their beloved friend and pastor was being borne along. On arriving at the principal entrance of the temporary church the remains were received by the parochial clergy, who preceded them to the choir, where they were placed in the coffin. The prayers prescribed by Spiritual having been said, the Custos-guardian of the Order of St. Francis recited the Office for the Dead, which they continued through the night.

Since Thursday last, when the venerated Bishop breathed his last, Queenstown and the whole diocese of Cloyne and Ross, literally business had been all buttespended, and work there would be resumed after the last dose. Here to-day all the shops were closed, and this great seaport town had lost all its bustle and activity. The numerous vessels in the harbor and its distant roadsteads had their flags hal-mast high, as had also the Consuls of the several Governments of Europe and America. The trains from Cork, Youghal and the county generally, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, were crowded with people who had come to pay their last respects to the remains of their larly known, and so dearly beloved by rich and poor, and by even those who differed from him in most widely in religious and political belief.

The solemn Gregorian chants recorded for the first time within the walls of the new cathedral, as they will resound in hundreds of years to come on the burial of a friend or descendant of St. Colman, in the See of Cloyne. The huge stone for the top of the tomb we covered having been raised by means of chains and pulleys, the remains were lowered into their final resting place, and the sad "Requiescat In Pace" having been intoned, the grave closed over the honored dust of one eminent for learning, for nobility of nature, generous benevolence, and true self-sacrificing charity—one in whom the virtues of the Christian and the patriot were happily combined, and one whose name shall be handed down with affectionate veneration from generation to generation.—Corr. Dublin Freeman, Jan. 31.

Presentation Against Sickness.

The ability of the human body to resist the causes of disease depends upon its vigor and upon the regularity with which the several organs perform their functions. In the winter the most prolific sources of sickness are damp and cold, and it is therefore wise and prudent to fortify the system against them by wholesome stimulation. Hence it is that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are so admirably safeguard against the complaints most common at this season. The ingredients of this powerful vegetable invigorant comprise three essential medicinal elements which act simultaneously upon the digestive apparatus, the secretions and the circulation, infusing strength and regularity into all. In this way the liver is put on the road to the most favorable condition to escape an attack of rheumatism, or intermittent fever, or indigestion, or biliousness, or of pulmonary disease. Cold and dampness very depressing almost as much as a miasmatic host, and a protective tonic is quite as needful in winter as in summer. The Bitters are the best tonic known, and are also the best of physics to keep open the bowels. Once a day is generally sufficient. The Bitters are a perfect remedy for dyspepsia, or indigestion, or biliousness, or for any general debility, or certain weakness, or pravity in the system, aspel it with this pure and harmless vegetable, and you will not be troubled with the diseases of seasons, but also a remedy for a large class of disorders.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONTHLY CIRCULAR, SAN FRANCISCO, THURSDAY, February 12, 1874.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while the export inquiry has been moderate. We quote—Extra at $6 [illegible] 87½, and superfine at $5 [illegible] 50 per bbl.

WHEAT—The market has ruled weak and at lower rates the past week. At the close the market was quoted at $1 [illegible] 40 per ctl.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at former rates, and sales have been extensively feed to choice brewing at $1 [illegible] 80 @ 1 90 ctl.

OATS—There was a fair demand, at unchanged rates, during the past week. Quotations: Gray, $1 [illegible] 80 @ 1 90 ctl.

CORN—Receipts have been light during the past week, with a good demand. Quotations at the close at $1 [illegible] 80 @ 1 90 ctl.

RYE—Quotable at [illegible] 90 @ 1 90 ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at [illegible] $1 90 @ 1 90 lb.

BEANS—Quotable at [illegible] 3 25 @ 3 50 @ 3 90 lb; Green Peas, 1 90 @ 2 00; Garlic, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Marrowfat, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Pink Mexicans, 1 60 @ [illegible] @ [illegible]; Asparagus, [illegible] @ [illegible].

POTATOES—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible].

POTATOES—The receipts have been free, with a good demand, and prices have ruled low. We quote—Sweets, 1 00 @ 1 25 per ctl.

ONIONS—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] per ctl.

VEGETABLES—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible].

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

HONEY—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

BEESWAX—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

HIDES—We quote California dry at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

TALLOW—Quotable at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

WOOL—We quote Fall at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

HOPS—We quote good to choice shipping grades at [illegible] @ [illegible] lb.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh fall, good to choice, [illegible] @ [illegible]; California fresh winter, [illegible] @ [illegible]; choice, [illegible].

CHEESE—California, [illegible] @ [illegible].

EGGS—California, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Eastern, [illegible].

POULTRY AND GAME.

POULTRY—Live, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Dressed, [illegible] @ [illegible].

GAME—Quail, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Rabbits, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Hares, [illegible] @ [illegible].

Retail Prices of Poultry and Game.

CHICKENS—Large, [illegible] @ [illegible].

CHICKENS—Small, [illegible] @ [illegible].

Grey Ducks, [illegible]; Mallard Ducks, [illegible].

Geese, [illegible] @ [illegible].

RABBITS—[illegible].

PIGEONS—Tame, [illegible] @ [illegible].

DEER—Fore, [illegible] cents.

DEER—Saddle, [illegible] cents.

QUAIL—[illegible] @ [illegible].

MEATS.

Beef—For first quality, [illegible]; second quality, [illegible].

Mutton—[illegible].

Veal—[illegible] @ [illegible].

Pork—[illegible].

POULTRY AND GAME.

Fowls—Hens, large, 1 [illegible] 00; Broilers, [illegible] @ [illegible]; Young Roosters, [illegible] @ [illegible].

Turkeys—Live at [illegible] @ [illegible]; Dressed, [illegible] @ [illegible].

Geese—Live at [illegible] @ [illegible]; Dressed, [illegible] @ [illegible].

Ducks—Live at [illegible] @ [illegible]; Dressed

What game is afoot? What new enterprise is about to call forth the daring of the dweller of the Vosges and the energy of the Emerald Isle—is it not that you call your distant, but I have no doubt, charming country, Sergeant?"

"Oh, yes, monsieur, they call it that. The watering pot of nature, you see, is always making the grass grow, and oh but it accosts! they're in the habit of calling it names, as you say. They call it, too, the Island of Saints."

"Eh, yes, I have heard that. Can you give me the precise reason?"

"Well, your honor, there's a saying in Ireland when something awfully cross turns out 'twould fret a saint, and so many things happen there to make you fret, and still we stand it somehow, that really we must be a parcel of saints."

"Your explanation is very striking, my friend. In my opinion you ought to be a member of the Academy. But in what enterprise is your sainted valor now engaged for?"

"We were at the trouble of thinking, monsieur."

"Possibly, I could give you a help."

"Faith, it wouldn't be the first time, your honor."

"Oh, I mean that I might help you to an idea. Sergeant Vose, have you any special plan in contemplation."

"A good many notions, monsieur, have been passing through my head. I saw a hoop-la-roo to the north of Neuilly yesterday, with the marks of boots among them. It occurred to me that a party of the enemy, horse and foot, were pushing their reconnoissance higher up."

"And you thought of falling upon them?"

"Not single-handed, certainly, monsieur, but of waiting their movements so that we might strange either to ensnap or drive them back."

"Anything else?"

"Well, monsieur, we have got possession of the islands, and I had a notion of crossing the river."

"To do what?"

"I do not know. Whatever might happen to turn up."

"Vose, you are such a man as I longed, but scarcely hoped, to see in this wise and philistine age of ours—But stop. I am not going to flatter you. I am going to do what will probably please better your unsophisticated mind. Are you not tired of this narrow round? Would you not like a bigger ambroise with a farther push in it?"

"If you mean Mandeman, are you a witch?" blurted out Miss Mahony.

"My ear ought to be the answer, and Irelanda, even if my lack of skill to ride the whirlwind were not palpable enough when I had to go on hands and knees to recall that scurvied slough on the road to Neuilly."

"Well, monsieur, I could almost have thought you heard me talking of Michel before you came up."

"Monsieur," said Michel, "my comrade has found this limited space here grow monotonous, and he is anxious for new ground, and a further dash, if possible, into the enemy's line. For myself, I have no objection to what goes on here, but I should not regret to be in an advanture of a different kind. Do you know of any such?"

"Decidedly, do you not think the Colonel has something in his mind in the way of a good expedition out of our not up there? Now, bawre, don't wander into the——"

"I know, I know," answered the journalist with a little impatience. "He has, but I am not permitted to mention any of the particulars."

"Oysh, monsieur, never be particular about a bit of diversion. Is it to be big?"

"If think it is to be serious."

"Illicit! That's the pleasantest news we've had—at the same time the most——"

"Hey friend, the Colonel has confided the news but very recently, so, in turn to one point, I regret to say, in which his views and mine differ. He thinks the Second—"

"Deroban!" cried his friend in a voice of thunder.

"Eh?"

"Will you lay perjury upon you soul?"

The poor old gentleman looked bewildered, blushed and relapsed into silence.

"My lads," said Mandeman, "there is, I think, a project under way that you will have no objection to take a share in. At all events, it is well to see something of the world, and our fort is quite a dozen miles hence, and a dozen miles is really a grand sour now. I have no doubt my excellent acquaintance the commandant here will give you a furlough of a week on condition of my undertaking to return you as safe and sound—as I am."

"Monsieur, I may say for myself and my friend that we are delighted with the chance."

"Ah, I am truly happy to have such comrades. When shall you be able to start?"

"Once we have obtained leave, monsieur, we shall be ready on the instant."

"Yes, the baggage is light," remarked Mike.

"Excellent, it is as well that we should be prompt. The way is long, and in some places we may easy owing to the Prussians, and it would be well if we were at the fort before night."

"Monsieur," said Mike addressing M. Devotant, who had remained silent.

"Eh, mon ami?"

"Shall I take a liberty with you, sir?"

"Certainly," returned the journalist politely.

"It's only to have a look at the hat, sir," M. Devotant gravely took off the tall hat, and without a word handed it to Mike.

"There they are—one, two—by, and here's three, and by the bokey, here's four. Four shots in the hat, monsieur."

Monsieur bowed.

"The fellows that put them bullets to get them back again, I go bail."

M. Devotant shook his head. "No, I would not their bullets you know. It was with my own I shot them."

"M. Mandeman," said Mike, "I told you before I belonged to the Island of Saints. There's one thing though that spoils me for a saint, and that's the habit of saying bad words. Now, I am always trying to mend. Like the old gentleman that tries to break himself of the habit of snuff taking by giving four pin his nose, I try to get out of useful swearing by using odd oaths."

"Ah, a capital plan."

"In that way I used to swear by the hole in my coat."

"Eh, bien!"

"Well, monsieur, in future I'll swear by the hole in Mr. Devotant's hat."

CHAPTER LIII.

LE BOURGET. 1.

The evening was obscuring when the franc-tireurs of the press, accompanied by Michel, Mike and half a dozen of their most companions, reached Fort d'Aubervilliers. On their arrival it soon became evident that something of moment was in contemplation. Mandeman and Devotant received intimation to proceed to the quarters of the commandant of their corps. Mobiles and regulars in large number were under arms, and there was that indescribable air over everything which spoke of preparation and movement. The little party from Nogent felt themselves rather out of place. They seemed to belong to no one and to have no business to do. Those attached to the fort, beyond a casual glance of curiosity at the new-comers, paid no attention to them. One raw mobile, who, for certain reasons, some of the departments, and attempted to patronize them, whereupon Barbet tugged at his mustache, and swore at the fellow that till he would have rue into a Prussian battery to make his escape.

"Now, Barbet, look here. These Prussians we were," said Mike Mahour.

"Prussians! Why so?"

"Why, just because its the habit, as we ought to know now, to care about every thing except where the enemy are."

"Is," said Mandeman, at last returning. "Our commander is exceedingly rejoiced at such an effective addition to our volunteers; and you I am sure, will be glad to learn that we have a piece of real work on hand."

"Soon, monsieur!"

"Now, Michel."

"Good!" was the universal form of assent uttered by the soldiers.

"I will see about having you supplied with provisions. There is no need to look about quarters for the night. You will have to make those somewhere away from the fort," said, warning his voice to a mysterious whisper, "You will have to take them from the Prussians."

"Bravo!"

"I need not ask about your arms."

"No, monsieur, you need not. I think we shall be found well prepared on that point."

"And now, comrades, for the virres. It would be bad generalship to go on a campaign with empty stomachs."

"It's a great pity your honor wasn't head of the commissariat in some of the battles we fought with."

Some hours after the expedition set out. It comprised the franc-tireurs of the press, half a battalion of mobiles and a few regulars, including the party from Nogent. They advanced in a northward direction for a mile and a half, when Mandeman whispered to Michel that their destination was La Bourget. The column was then half a mile distant from them and in the midst of a considerable body of cavalry, which, however, was dodged with water. A small river, the Molerot, passes by the village, and discharges itself into the Seine below St. Denis. This the Prussians had dammed, and the water spread itself over the country, in some places converting it into a morass, and in others forming pools here and there. Of a dangerous depth. Of the high road the Prussians of course had complete possession, and there was no question except of avoiding them directly and forcing an entrance. The halt had lasted for a few minutes, when Michel touched Mandeman upon the arm and said to him:

"Did you not say it was the Prussians who flooded the plain?"

"Yes."

"That must have been by stopping the river."

"Undoubtedly."

"And the river could only be stopped by a dam."

"Of course."

"Well, then, let us prevent a few of us getting across that dam and into the village across that the principal attack is made in front?"

"Yes, thank heaven every day you see your prayers for me are not in vain. And he called to his commander hastily and acquainted him with Michel's idea. Barbet said the situation of the dam was not well known, and the result of an attempt by it was uncertain. Mandeman represented to him that none of the force originally in the fort could be spared. Michel would be drawn off, and that it would be impossible to find a track across the swampy country, but such conditions of campaigning had become tolerably familiar to them. There was no hesitation, therefore, as they plunged mid-leg deep into the fens which lay between the road from the fields and gardens, and they scrambled their way to the shallower water beyond. There were no fish in the village that they could see, and they were delicious, but they were not wanted, but the quick ear of Michel had caught the sound of falling water, and rightly guessing it to be the work of man, he had used it as an indication of what they should aim at.

"Hey! verse," said Miss Mahony, as he drew one of his feet out of the morass with a kneeling sound, "if it wouldn't be asking to presume on me that I was at home in the tarony of Clewwilliam again."

"Is all your country under water?" asked Barbet.

"No! some people would wish it was. Is no one to be heard, Michel?"

"Hush!" said Michel. "What is that?"

"Some of them Prussians talking."

"They are casting sentries, I think. If we could only see whether it is on this or the other side of the river."

"What difference! A great deal. If it were on this side we might dispose of him without a shot."

Creeping cautiously forward, they arrived within fifty paces of the bank, and, by dint of lying themselves under the shelter of the bushes, they could see a sentry passing to and fro on the bank, while sounds from the lively Germans behind him intimated that a guard was on duty.

"Mike," said Michel, "you remember how we managed at Neuilly. I will cross the dam. If he fire, bring him down."

"And you go down with him?"

"Oh, not much par of that!"

"Michel," protested Mike, eagerly, "you are so anxious to expose yourself that in this case, at all events, you are not consulting right. There are a dozen of us. Let us take the dam at a rush when the sentry has his back turned. The last men can cover us."

"The Sergeant Irelandais is right," said Barbet.

"Well," said Michel, slowly, "I do not wish to be too obstinate; have your way. Who will volunteer to be last? No one? Come, Barbet, will you?"

"Last? Aye, or first, I don't care which."

"Good. You are an excellent shot. Keep your eye on the sentry. Don't touch him until he sees us."

"Content," replied the lecture soldier, and the arrangement was made.

Watching carefully until the sentry had passed the dam, Michel stepped out from the bushes behind which the conversation had taken place, followed by the rest, Barbet bringing up the rear. There were pauses up to within ten paces of the banks, which afforded some cover, and here a halt was made until the sentry had once more passed. Then, with a silent gesture, Michel rose from the stooping posture in which he had crept, and advanced swiftly on the dam, followed by his comrades. He waas cautiously over on the other bank, and his comrades closed after him. At the same moment the right-about was startled by the strange thing except where the enemy are."

"Is," said Mandeman, at last returning. "Our commander is exceedingly rejoiced at such an effective addition to our volunteers; and you I am sure, will be glad to learn that we have a piece of real work on hand."

"Soon, monsieur!"

"Now, Michel."

"Good!" was the universal form of assent uttered by the soldiers.

"I will see about having you supplied with provisions. There is no need to look about quarters for the night. You will have to make those somewhere away from the fort," said, warning his voice to a mysterious whisper, "You will have to take them from the Prussians."

"Bravo!"

"I need not ask about your arms."

"No, monsieur, you need not. I think we shall be found well prepared on that point."

"And now, comrades, for the virres. It would be bad generalship to go on a campaign with empty stomachs."

"It's a great pity your honor wasn't head of the commissariat in some of the battles we fought with."

Some hours after the expedition set out. It comprised the franc-tireurs of the press, half a battalion of mobiles and a few regulars, including the party from Nogent. They advanced in a northward direction for a mile and a half, when Mandeman whispered to Michel that their destination was La Bourget. The column was then half a mile distant from them and in the midst of a considerable body of cavalry, which, however, was dodged with water. A small river, the Molerot, passes by the village, and discharges itself into the Seine below St. Denis. This the Prussians had dammed, and the water spread itself over the country, in some places converting it into a morass, and in others forming pools here and there. Of a dangerous depth. Of the high road the Prussians of course had complete possession, and there was no question except of avoiding them directly and forcing an entrance. The halt had lasted for a few minutes, when Michel touched Mandeman upon the arm and said to him:

"Did you not say it was the Prussians who flooded the plain?"

"Yes."

"That must have been by stopping the river."

"Undoubtedly."

"And the river could only be stopped by a dam."

"Of course."

"Well, then, let us prevent a few of us getting across that dam and into the village across that the principal attack is made in front?"

"Yes, thank heaven every day you see your prayers for me are not in vain." And he called to his commander hastily and acquainted him with Michel's idea. Barbet said the situation of the dam was not well known, and the result of an attempt by it was uncertain. Mandeman represented to him that none of the force originally in the fort could be spared. Michel would be drawn off, and that it would be impossible to find a track across the swampy country, but such conditions of campaigning had become tolerably familiar to them. There was no hesitation, therefore, as they plunged mid-leg deep into the fens which lay between the road from the fields and gardens, and they scrambled their way to the shallower water beyond. There were no fish in the village that they could see, and they were delicious, but they were not wanted, but the quick ear of Michel had caught the sound of falling water, and rightly guessing it to be the work of man, he had used it as an indication of what they should aim at.

"Hey! verse," said Miss Mahony, as he drew one of his feet out of the morass with a kneeling sound, "if it wouldn't be asking to presume on me that I was at home in the tarony of Clewwilliam again."

"Is all your country under water?" asked Barbet.

"No! some people would wish it was. Is no one to be heard, Michel?"

"Hush!" said Michel. "What is that?"

"Some of them Prussians talking."

"They are casting sentries, I think. If we could only see whether it is on this or the other side of the river."

"What difference! A great deal. If it were on this side we might dispose of him without a shot."

Creeping cautiously forward, they arrived within fifty paces of the bank, and, by dint of lying themselves under the shelter of the bushes, they could see a sentry passing to and fro on the bank, while sounds from the lively Germans behind him intimated that a guard was on duty.

"Mike," said Michel, "you remember how we managed at Neuilly. I will cross the dam. If he fire, bring him down."

"And you go down with him?"

"Oh, not much par of that!"

"Michel," protested Mike, eagerly, "you are so anxious to expose yourself that in this case, at all events, you are not consulting right. There are a dozen of us. Let us take the dam at a rush when the sentry has his back turned. The last men can cover us."

"The Sergeant Irelandais is right," said Barbet.

"Well," said Michel, slowly, "I do not wish to be too obstinate; have your way. Who will volunteer to be last? No one? Come, Barbet, will you?"

"Last? Aye, or first, I don't care which."

"Good. You are an excellent shot. Keep your eye on the sentry. Don't touch him until he sees us."

"MY MOTHER'S PRAYER."

(FOUNDED ON FACT.)

In a low ward, on a low bed,
An aged man was laying,
Who lingered in the hospital
Unclaimed, unfriended.

His skin was dark, of olive hue,
And scarcely gray his hair,
And in his face a misery took
Beside of deep despair.

He seldom uttered, never smiled,
And still his pain grew worse,
No one spoke to him except
The nurse and the visiting doctors.

Death was at hand; his feeble strength
Diminished every day,
And no one came to cheer his hand,
To comfort him and pray.

Till chance—as men call those strange hops
Which drive us to and fro;
Where God has work for us to do
We call them little know—

Led to that ward and to that bed
One who had learned to read,
In the sad faces of the poor
A great, unconfessed need.

She sat down by the dying man!
"Have you no friend to-day?
No wife?"—she added—"not a friend?
A message I can carry?"

"Are you"—she added, speaking low—
"A Catholic, perchance?"
He looked up to her pleading face
With a dull, vacant glance.

"I know not what I am," he said,
"I never set church foot;
I only feel I soon must die,
And not find rest, alas!"

Alas! what words could then avail
To fathom that poor soul
To its long hidden depths of care
It dropped a final gaze?

Despairing of all that Christian hearts
Can never know despair—
God's secrets—and so reverently
Poured forth the Angel's Prayer!

That prayer, "Our Lord, who died to bless Transgressed mothers' hearts,"
That Angel Prayer, the only prayer
Which sea pe sorrows reach.

No sooner had the AVE's words
Struck on the dying ear,
Than on her bended and withered cheek
Rolled down a burning tear.

"Say that again!" he faintly gasped;
"That last word!" "Mother!"
It was my mother's prayer at home,
So long, so long ago!

Then on that day, the last I lived,
At least upon earth,
A key was found—no mother's prayer
Had been sent forth in vain.

Half Mary, full of grace!" he sighed,
And then a moment's pause,
The AVE trembled with fervent trust
From his poor parched lips.

Back came the lightest,
All by the Angel's memorized in haste
The dying man was saved.

Then in that day, the last he lived,
At least upon earth,
A key was found—no mother's prayer
Had been sent forth in vain.

Half Mary, full of grace!" he sighed,
And then a moment's pause,
The AVE trembled with fervent trust
From his poor parched lips.

And then a moment's pause, and then
O, blessed Mother mild!
He died even as mother as I was An AVE for her child!"

—Lady Georgiana Fullerton.

A Matter for the Consideration of Heads of Families

"See here, sonny, what is the matter with you?" "Why, I'm an orphan." "Where's your mother?" "Father's dead." "How old was your father when he died?" "Bout forty." About forty! and with his iron constitution he should have lived twenty to forty years more. Only four score and ten years ago. Do you remember, my friends, the stupid old song about the man who was being "waked?" But before I quote it as an illustration, I will tell you—that the fellow who owned that pipe would rather lose both his legs than his pipe, and measure for measure. And in a quiet thing, too, these German's have a fancy to smoke out of a thing like that, about six size and shape of a mackerel. Now filled with Limburger, twist—

"Our men are under the window; we had better go down and join them," interrupted Barbet.

"Barbet you're a good fellow, and very pleasant company in a staurch town; but, 'pon my soul, I'm afraid that sensible invitation will be lost on you."

To be Continued.

The Indian Famine.

The later the telegrams from Calcutta, the more serious is the news from Bengal. Judging by facts we are driven to the conclusion that the Viceroy's motto is—"Perish the people! Long live the hard principles of political economy!" That was Lord John Russell's rule of action, whatever his designs, with regard to the Irish famine of 1847. Free trade must not be interfered with under any circumstance. Poor may be exterminated, but free trade must prevail in the jaws of famine. Let cats and what he shipped from Dublin, Cork, Belfast, Sligo, Waterford, Dundalk, Drogheda, Londonderry and Limerick, though the people are starving. What matter? must not the principles of political economy be respected, and the multitude left to the dispensations of mercantile, and the consequences of damaged Indian meal? That was Russell's policy in Ireland, in 1847, and is now to be the Northbrook policy in India in 1873-4. The dearth is not imminent—it is a terrible fact. The lowest estimate makes the number to be provided for amount to sixty millions of human beings. Now is the staple food of the Bengalese, and the exportation of rice the Viceroy will not prohibit, though reputedly and urgently entreated by the Lieutenant-Governor to take that common-sense course. We must wait to see the result of this most accordding policy.—Weekly Register.

observation on the spot, that the result is due not to any undue elevation of the standard of admission, nor to any excessive severity in the examinations, but in some degree to the inconsiderateness in making the appointments; in others to the failure of the opponents to appreciate the honor and duty to which he is called; in a few others to the lack of facilities for pushing any education; and most of all, to want of thoroughness in the schools of our country with respect to primary work. The Academy owes it to itself and to the influences as a national institution on the whole system of popular education to render and publish to the world this honest verdict. If our school boards are superintendents and teachers in the North and South, in the East and in the West, will but hand the verdict, and use due diligence to correct the great defect, some abiding good may come from the mortifying experience of this year's examination of candidates for admission to the Academy.

A Novel Application—A Caution to Husbands.

At the last meeting of a certain Board of Guardians, not far from Dublin, the master reported that on Sunday, January 11th, an application was made by a lady accompanied by a female, who appeared to be a servant, for permission to see a pauper named ——, mother of an infant three weeks old. The lady afterwards requested to see the mother in private, when she made the following statement:

"I resided in London for the last twenty-five years, and lately I received a telegram from Dublin stating that my brother was dying. I was then near the Isle of Man, and, in consequence of all my previous children having died young, and being the very fond of children, did not quite agree with my going to travel. He left it to myself, and I went to Dublin and found he died about seventy miles from that city. I was confined, and the child remained with servants at home. Shortly, in consequence, return home, as I feared great displeasure from my husband. The State of Illinois, and for I am not likely to have any more children, I now seek to obtain an infant about five weeks old to take with me, and as good as to represent is as my own to my husband."

She then showed a letter from a friend in Dublin to Wesklow, on Sunday, for the same purpose, but failed. The driver of the car from

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 28.
Fasting.
22—Sunday—First Sunday in Lent.
23—Monday—Feast of Peter's Chair at Antioch.
24—Tuesday—St. Matthias, Apostle.
25—Wednesday—Ember day. St. Peter at Antioch.
26—Thursday—Feria.
27—Friday—Holy Cross of Thorns. Ember Day.
28—Saturday—Ember Day.

Regulations for Lent in 1874,
For the Diocese of San Francisco.

1. All the WEEK DAYS of Lent, from Ash-Wednesday till Easter Sunday, are fast days of precept; on one meal, with the allowance of a moderate collation.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence from the use of flesh meat. But, by consequence, the use of flesh meat at Sunday dinner during Lent, is not a violation of this law. Therefore during Lent, and on Fridays the Easter-tide, from Sunday and Saturday of Holy Week; which days there is no leave to use flesh meat, except by dispensation from the respective Pastors, to which they are hereby authority if in great or case of necessity, to be judged by them. All Saturdays are also days of abstinence, but not of obligation.

3. The penitentiary use of Bells and Book must at the Mass shall be forbidden in the Lent, even on Sundays.

4. Some prayers, at option, are recommended during Lent, particularly on those days in which flesh meat is used.

5. And lastly, pastors of parishes, the Pastors are requested to lay before the Faithful the importance of Christian mortification, and also the grievous obligation of complying with their Easter duty, which we hope for fulfilled from the 81st Sunday of Lent; they will frequently and earnestly impress upon their respective flocks the necessity of confessing, before all other things, to the salvation of their souls, and their will admit them to the Sacraments in charge of their Christian duties, the only thing that is wanting of 1873. We likewise recommend to them, for this purpose their established religious Confessors, who will be found to possess, when a week, according to what their predilections may dictate to them.

JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 3, 1874.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 21, 1874.

CRESCENTISM AND ORANGEISM.

We were called upon during the past week, on different days, by three gentlemen who frankly acknowledged that they were Crescents, or members of the O. A. U. M., and were present at the delivery of Mr. HEMPHILL'S address on the evening of Sunday, the 8th inst. They declared that they were actually led to attend, that Catholic divine in our article of last week, saying that he deserved to be most severely castigated for deceiving his audience by leading them to believe that Rev. Father BUCHARD was in the habit of going to Calvary church; and deserved also to be castigated for the vulgarity and bad taste of his allusions to that reverend gentleman, and for the want of tact he offered all decent and respectable people. The rounds of applause with which some of his remarks were greeted could only come, as they asserted, from individuals who attached not the slightest reverence to a place of worship, and who attended solely to gratify their feelings of animosity against Catholicity.

Our informants further assured us that, so far as the Crescent organization was concerned, there was nothing whatever in the principles and objects of their society hostile to Catholicism, and that it was intended purely for the maintenance of the public school system against all attacks. This was the object they had in view when they joined it, and none other. We have no great fault to find with this—it is natural on their part to adopt that policy; and whenever we think issues with them on that score, it shall be honorably and altogether on the question of principle. The gentlemen we are alluding to complained that persons of foreign birth, especially Irish Orangemen, take the lead of their organization, inasmuch as they seek to turn it to their own purpose and make it a society for the propagation of a narrow-minded bigotry. Without saying so directly, they intimated that Rev. Mr. HEMPHILL was the guiding spirit of the Orange section. Other names, including those of prominent office-holders and politicians, were mentioned as being among the abettors of the anti-Catholic faction, but we forbear from publishing them for the present.

So far as we can make out, the Crescents are already unfashionably, if not actually, split into two not very friendly camps—one is the American, in which is mustered the more intelligent and respectable portion, simply smiling for the maintenance of the public school system; the other is the Irish, in which is fully represented all the malice and bigotry of Irish Orangeism. Mr. HEMPHILL'S popularity and influence, we have been assured, is almost exclusively with the latter class. If Americans allow themselves to be led blindfold by men whose creed is sworn fealty to monarchy—who in their hearts despise America and American institutions—who in case of a war with Great Britain, would be merely so many volunteer spies on behalf of "our most gracious and sovereign lady, Queen Victoria"—then they are certainly greater fools and dupes than we would like to believe them to be. The fight between the American and Irish wings of the Crescents, as described to us, is both instructive and amusing. The former, we must confess, are the most honorable as well as the most respectable and intelligent party; and they prove their superiority by entertaining almost profound contempt for Mr. HEMPHILL. It is creditable to their consistency, although it speaks poorly for their liberality that, according to themselves, they took upon the pastor of Calvary as a nobody but a MAN, anyhow," and his professions of attachment to republican institutions they regard as merely so much empty buncombe to deceive the public. Mr. HEMPHILL richly deserves the contempt in which he is held by these people, for he is playing a very despicable part. Indeed, we can have but a poor opinion of the Irishman who could come to this country and endeavor to inoculate the native-born citizen with the virus of his peculiar bigotry.

REVOLUTION AND LIBERTY.

The Sacramento Union says in indignant because a correspondent of the Examiner charged it with favoring monarchy, and with opposition to universal suffrage in this country. The grounds for the allegation were discovered in some comments which the Union made on the English elections. Our Sacramento contemporary asserted, very properly as we think, that men who could have recourse to tumult and violence as a means of effecting a vital political party, were not fit for democratic institutions, and were ignorant of the very first principles of republicanism. We cannot perceive how such assertions, which are pure and simple truisms, can be tortured into anything resembling a condemnation of democracy. It seems to us that the foundation upon which genuine republicanism rests is toleration of free speech, coupled with the tacit agreement that the ballot-box shall settle all political issues. So the individuals, be they Liberals or Conservatives, who in England broke up meetings and drove speakers off platforms, because they happened to be of a different political complexion, gave the best possible proof that they were unfit to exercise the privileges of freemen, and were in their hearts despots and persecutors. Every sensible person will understand what kind of a government that would be which these rowdies would establish if they had the power.

The arguments which apply to the case of the British roughs have equal force when applied to the case of those sentimental reformers, who call themselves republicans. We have been frequently charged with favoring despotism because we condemned those disturbers of society, and therefore we can sympathize with the Sacramento Union in its complaints against the Examiner. There are, unfortunately, a number of semi-illiterate men on the American press who think themselves bound to encourage every agitation emanating from any class of men, in any country, who choose to dub them selves republicans. We do not of course include among this number the writers of the Examiner, who are, one and all, we are happy to testify, men of high literary attainments as well as of sound common sense. But these illiterate literati are forever sounding the praise of progress, civilization, liberty, and so forth, and they are equally assiduous in denouncing the evils which they suppose to be inseparable from every form of monarchy. If these writers would only look the trouble of examining the theories and principles enunciated by the continental agitators, they would find them diametrically opposed to republicanism as understood in America, and even obnoxious to civilized society.

The GAMBETTAS, CASTELARS, BRADLAUGHS and GARIBALDIS all have notions of republican government which sober minded Americans would not expect to hear outside a lunatic asylum. There is no organized form of government now in existence in any civilized nation which is not infinitely preferable to that which these men would set up as republicanism. Even those of them who are supported by law-abiding citizens as against the proposed change, because they fear the instant lawless, half-crazed and wholly irreligious enthusiast declares against an established government, and announces his intention of replacing it by what he terms a republic, he is hailed as a reformer, a friend of liberty and a benefactor of mankind. A distinguished statesman remarked long ago that we in this country were altogether too quick in accepting as patriots the political offcasts of Europe. This is unworthy of intelligent people, because it goes to prove that we can be deceived by the shallowest pretenses. The remedy is easy enough, for it consists merely in applying to political movements abroad the calm judgment and good sense we use in reference to every day matters at hom. When a European demagogue utters not that he is a republican, let us see in what his republicanism consists; and when he announces that he wishes to destroy an existing government, let us consider whether he proposes to put a better one in its stead. This will save us from the mistake of confounding liberty with revolution.

THE SUPPRESSION OF "L'UNIVERS."

When we wrote our article on the suppression of L'Univers, which appeared week before last, we were under the impression that its discontinuance was caused by its unjust attack on the Bishop of Orleans. Fuller details than those given in the telegrams have since then showed us we were wrong in assigning that as a reason. The suspension of the great Catholic Journal was brought about by something more strange and remarkable still. Its publication for the space of two months was prohibited by the Government, and the offence for which this punishment was inflicted was the printing of a pastoral letter issued by the Bishop of Périgueux. This pastoral was bold enough to condemn the persecution of the Church which BISMARCK is urging on in Germany, and declared it was the duty of all Catholics to sympathize with their suffering coreligionists. He did not use very violent language, inasmuch as an English Tory paper, the Standard, which is certainly not disposed to speak favorably, asserts that the pastoral in question was "singularly mild" document, and the same opinion has been expressed by a hundred other secular newspapers, both in England and on the continent. We publish the entire document elsewhere, so our readers can judge for themselves. But however mild the Bishop's address may have been, it was quite sufficient to raise the wrath of the German Chancellor, and he ordered the Prussian Embassador in Paris to make a very strong and speedy Americase would not expect to hear outside a lunatic asylum. There is no organized form of government now in existence in any civilized nation which is not infinitely preferable to that which these men would set up as republicanism. Even those of them who are supported by law-abiding citizens as against the proposed change, because they fear the instant lawless, half-crazed and wholly irreligious enthusiast declares against an established government, and announces his intention of replacing it by what he terms a republic, he is hailed as a reformer, a friend of liberty and a benefactor of mankind. A distinguished statesman remarked long ago that we in this country were altogether too quick in accepting as patriots the political offcasts of Europe. This is unworthy of intelligent people, because it goes to prove that we can be deceived by the shallowest pretenses. The remedy is easy enough, for it consists merely in applying to political movements abroad the calm judgment and good sense we use in reference to every day matters at hom. When a European demagogue utters not that he is a republican, let us see in what his republicanism consists; and when he announces that he wishes to destroy an existing government, let us consider whether he proposes to put a better one in its stead. This will save us from the mistake of confounding liberty with revolution.

THE SUPPRESSION OF "L'UNIVERS."

When we wrote our article on the suppression of L'Univers, which appeared week before last, we were under the impression that its discontinuance was caused by its unjust attack on the Bishop of Orleans. Fuller details than those given in the telegrams have since then showed us we were wrong in assigning that as a reason. The suspension of the great Catholic Journal was brought about by something more strange and remarkable still. Its publication for the space of two months was prohibited by the Government, and the offence for which this punishment was inflicted was the printing of a pastoral letter issued by the Bishop of Périgueux. This pastoral was bold enough to condemn the persecution of the Church which BISMARCK is urging on in Germany, and declared it was the duty of all Catholics to sympathize with their suffering coreligionists. He did not use very violent language, inasmuch as an English Tory paper, the Standard, which is certainly not disposed to speak favorably, asserts that the pastoral in question was "singularly mild" document, and the same opinion has been expressed by a hundred other secular newspapers, both in England and on the continent. We publish the entire document elsewhere, so our readers can judge for themselves. But however mild the Bishop's address may have been, it was quite sufficient to raise the wrath of the German Chancellor, and he ordered the Prussian Embassador in Paris to make a very strong and speedy remonstrance about it.

The French Government is well aware that Prussia seeks pretexts for a renewal of war, being afraid to leave France undisturbed until her army is reorganized and she is prepared for hostilities; so, humiliating as it undoubtedly was, they thought it prudent to submit to the insolent dictation, and suppressed the offending paper. It is said that BISMARCK will not remain satisfied with this, but will demand also the punishment of the Bishop. If he does, it is more than probable that the French authorities will visit the prelate with some kind of a nominal penalty. The German despot is evidently bent upon offering every insult and provocation in his power, in the hope that the fiery temper of the Gauls will prompt them to resent, and accept an unequal contest. He sees that he has not beaten or disabled his adversary sufficiently to prevent her from being dangerous again, and he is anxious to strike her another and more crushing blow. The struggle going on now is one of wanton provocation on one side and patient submission on the other. The latter is a new role for France to take up, but it is one which answers her interests now, and prudence commands her to play it, however disagreeable it may be. Anything rather than give Prussia an excuse for declaring war, must be her motto for a couple of years at any rate.

THE ORPHANS.

We have received a tabulated statement of the receipts, expenditures and actual financial condition of the Catholic Orphan Asylums and Catholic Charitable Institutions of the State, from which some interesting particulars may be gleaned. In order to give our readers an idea of the economy with which these institutions are managed, the immense amount of good they are realizing for the money, and the propriety of aiding them by the practice of Christian charity, we shall reproduce a few of the details given. In St. Vincent's Male Orphan Asylum, San Rafael, the average number of inmates during 1872 and 1873 was 249, the total expenses during the same time being nearly seventy-two thousand dollars. The males are mainly supported by part of each year's entire dollars, of which the State contributed about twenty-five per cent. More than fifty-two thousand dollars had to be provided by private benevolence. In the Female Orphan Asylum, under charge of Sisters of Charity, there was in 1873 an average number of 376 children. The cost of their maintenance being, in round numbers, forty thousand five hundred dollars. These figures show a monthly cost of nine dollars. The State gave a trifle over sixteen thousand dollars for their support, leaving the institution under charge of Sisters of Mercy, contained an average of ninety inmates, costing sixteen thousand dollars, of which the State furnished one-fourth; the average monthly expenses for each person being fourteen dollars and seventy-five cents. The Grass Valley Orphan Asylum, male and female, under charge of Sisters of Mercy, during the past two years contained 240 boys and girls, costing thirty-five thousand two hundred cents per month each. This is astonishingly low, and reflects great credit on the ladies in charge.

The summary of these four institutions gives eight hundred and sixty-seven individuals, maintained at a total cost for two years of $187,061 74, or nine dollars per month each, of which the State provided two dollars. The expenses in excess of State aid were $146,609 88, and this large amount had to be met by the contributions of the charitable. If these buildings and persons had to be maintained exclusively by the State there can be no doubt whatever that a sum not less than a quarter of a million, and probably a great deal more, would have had to be distributed during the years 1872 and 1873. Here is a most important saving to the community achieved by the self-sacrificing labors of the Sisters of Mercy and Charity. With these figures before us, and with a knowledge of the waste, extravagance and peculation characteristic of all purely Government institutions, we cannot form a very high opinion of the LAINE's wisdom in proposing to discontinue State aid to charitable or benevolent institutions which are maintained by religious denominations. Senator LAINE deserves much praise for his exertions in favor of economy, but he himself must admit that it would be the reverse of economical to turn over these nine hundred boys, girls and women to the care of pecuniary officials. The ladies who have charge of them now work for conscience sake, and not for pay, and they have not the remotest notion of "making money" out of their positions. In our very decided opinion, true economy would dictate an extension of the State aid system, and the abolition of those Government institutions which are remarkable for nothing but extravagance in management and dishonesty among the officials.

The remarks we have made, and the figures we have quoted, lead to show the urgency of doing something to place the Asylums on a more satisfactory basis financially, and this can only be accomplished now by private benevolence. The festival of Ireland's patron Saint is fast approaching, and it will, no doubt, be celebrated by a magnificent demonstration. Why, we would observe, should not advantage be taken of the occasion to make some organized effort to raise subscriptions for the benefit of the friendless and father less in these institutions? A spirited endeavor in this behalf would reflect much more credit on our countrymen than even the most imposing parade.

---

The contested election case of Gildea vs. Fraser, came up in the Senate Tuesday, and, after argument by the attorneys of contestants, was postponed.

A cold an angry man for awhile, a malicious man forever.

THE ELECTIONS IN IRELAND.

Ireland returns one hundred and three members to the British Parliament. The number was formerly one hundred and five, but two small boroughs were disfranchised on account of corrupt practices among the voters. The late telegrams enable us to know far they are trustworthy—give the political classification of the members thus: Conservatives, 30; Liberals, 15; Home Rulers, 58. Thus it will be seen that the National party have control over the country by a majority of thirteen. Interpreted according to the fashion of politicians, this fact indicates that the great bulk of the Irish people are dissatisfied with English management of their affairs, and want to get control of them themselves. This majority, though respectable, by no means represents the proportion of the representation in favor of legislative independence. Quite a large section of the people think it a waste of time and trouble to elect representatives for the British Parliament at all, and regard anything short of complete separation from England as nothing better than mockery. This is the suicidal policy of the man who preferred starvation to the acceptance of a half of a loaf when he believed himself justly entitled to a whole one.

Beyond doubt Ireland can never attain the high degree of prosperity of which she is capable, and can exercise the influence in the world which properly belongs to her, as long as she is in any way connected with England. The two countries are naturally rivals, their interests are diametrically opposed, and any union between them must always be accompanied by subjection of one to the rule of the other. Consequently the aspirations of the Irish are for the realization of their complete political independence, and the patriotic among them will ever direct their legitimate efforts to the accomplishment of that end. And there can be no reasonable doubt that in the course of time they will obtain what they seek. Agitations like those existing in Ireland never go back, but slowly or surely, according to circumstances, work on towards their consummation. But we think that very few really sane men entertain the idea that a successful insurrection could be made in Ireland, either now or in the immediate future; and the men who would try to bring such a thing about should be classed among the most dangerous enemies of the land they pretend to love. Yet, in all its aspects, nothing, to watch the people flying in thousands from their ancestral homes, until the chance of a triumphant struggle presented itself, would be the act of an idiot. Sensible men will try all they can to ameliorate the condition of the country, to fasten the people on the soil, to develop the national resources by encouraging trade and commerce, so as to make Ireland stronger; and if action in Parliament affords them an opportunity of doing these things, they will gladly avail of it.

The fifty-eight Home Rulers returned will, if they keep united and act in concert, make an impression on the Government that they will gain, if not all they seek, at any rate no inconsiderable part of it. But how small that installment may be, it will be so much taken away from the great labor which has to be performed sooner or later. The Conservatives, who number one hundred and three, are the clergymen as could be spared from other duties. Yet, in all other respects, the Irish Members are a splendid body. Many of them are men of high ability and great literary attainments, and as a whole they are remarkable for their honesty and consistency. Their constituents had the right to expect much from them, and they have not disappointed them. Their action in Parliament will be watched with much interest by the friends of Ireland all over the world, and we have no doubt that it will be characterized by the same ability and consistency which have marked their course hitherto.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

We learn from late telegrams that it is probable an attempt will be made to repeal the eight-hour law. Supervising Architect MULLETT, of Washington, is said to have been hostile to all legislation tending to regulate labor. He thinks all matters affecting labor should be left for settlement to the employer and employed themselves, and that legal interference is not only unjust, but positively injurious. In these ideas he is supported by certain manufacturers in Baltimore, who have opened a correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject. These gentlemen assert, what nobody will venture to deny, that a man cannot perform as much work in eight hours as he can in ten. But they, for purposes of their own, or as dupes of designing men, declare that the amount of work accomplished per hour under the eight hour regulation is actually less than what it was under the ten-hour system. The Baltimore capitalists are of opinion that the Government demoralizes the workmen it takes into its employ and unfits them for steady labor. The insinuation is, we suppose, that the men become idle and waste their time. Of course we cannot discuss the experience of three gentlemen, because we know nothing about it; but we think we are safe in saying that it is at variance with that of most employers in the United States.

The question which legislation attempted to settle was, how long can a man work at manual labor without impairing his health; or, in other words, how long will sound rules of social economy warrant a man in continuing at toilsome labor each day. The solution arrived at was the decision that eight hours was quite sufficient. It is true a man can be made to labor longer, but whatever is gained in his daily work is ten times counterbalanced by the undeniable fact that he gets worn out sooner, and is lost to the community at an earlier age. For instance, it is possible to make a man work twenty hours out of the twenty-four, but a very short time at that kind of business kills him. The practical issue, then, is this—Is it not better that a man should labor during eight hours per diem for forty years than during ten hours for twenty-five years? Humanitarians will not look at the thing in that way. Men cost them nothing; and even if they wear out one set in a few years or so, they can readily procure another. They would not be quite so extravagant in bone and muscle if their dollars were animate the procuring of which necessitated expenditure. The idea of leaving the matter in mutual arrangement is not new. The eight-hour law was framed simply because the mutual arrangement system was not found satisfactory. There can be no righteous mutual arrangement between parties one of whom is urged by necessity and the other of whom is perfectly free. A "day" may be anything under twenty-four hours, and where such vagueness exists, it is right and proper that restrictive limits should be established in the interests of the weaker class. So we trust the eight-hour law will not be disturbed.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. Michael Barry at Saint Peter's Church, San Francisco.

A short time ago it was our melancholy duty to chronicle the decease of the widely-known, highly esteemed and deeply lamented Father Barry. He was the last survivor of the distinguished ornaments of the missionary college of All-Hallows, Dublin, and it was, therefore, natural that the announcement should excite a chord in the hearts that are thousands of leagues asunder. During his long connection with All-Hallows, whether as Professor or as Vice-President, he had numbered in no ordinary degree to the several classes of students for whose benefit the energy, zeal and brilliant attainments were directly kept in perpetual motion. Consequently, he was personally known to almost every priest who left the Irish College, and was regarded by them as a friend and counsellor. Hence the announcement struck

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Sunday Hospital Movement.

Cardinal Cullen, if we are to rely upon the information given to the English public through the medium of the London papers, says the London Universe, has churlishly, and without the assignment of any proper reason or cause, put an effectual extinguisher upon the Sunday hospital movement, as far as Ireland is concerned. You find the simple fact, that Cardinal Cullen does not favor the movement, in the Irish correspondence column of the several London newspapers; and of course the first impulse of every English reader is to condemn his Eminence, and, like the representatives statedly made respecting the Home Rule movement, those who have a desire to be properly informed on the subject have to cross the Irish channel or look into the Irish newspapers. It turns out that the apparently churlish act of Cardinal Cullen is not alone churlish or ill considered, but that it is singularly wise and far-seeing, like everything his Eminence has written, and which has, of course, not been allowed as yet to see the light of day in England, puts a very different complexion on the affair. Persons interested in the hospital work might well ponder over the following passages from the letter to which we refer. It is, to say the least of it, full of suggestiveness:

"That Catholic hospitals are conducted on the most liberal principles, receiving patients professing the Protestant religion, thanks professing the Protestant religion, without attempting to proselytize them, and leaving them full liberty to call in their own ministers to attend them at the hour of death. Managed in the spirit of charity these hospitals are getting on satisfactorily and improving every succeeding year. In my humble opinion it is not desirable to submit institutions working so well to extraordinary rules and regulations which are made in favor of the union of Irishmen in all parts of the country for national objects, and were received with universal enthusiasm.—Dublin Nation, January 24.

Party Conflicts.

Shrewsbury has been the scene of a lengthened, very exciting, and somewhat remarkable magisterial investigation. On the 20th of June last there was, at Coalbrook, one of the three collieries between the Cathedral Clwyng parties, which are peculiar to Ulster. Some time of rewards a Catholic clergyman and a number of other magistrates were charged before the Shrewsbury bench with having presided at a riot and formed part of an unlawful assembly, and were remanded for trial to the assizes. At the same time, the same set of magistrates—the stipendiary alone dissenting—declined to receive informations against the accused Protestants. But a protest having been sent in to the Court against this conduct of the magistrates, the Attorney General directed that the depositions should be sent in again sifted, and the case was accordingly reopened. The result was that the magistrates held by their decision. A few weeks since the Attorney-General directed the local Crown solicitor to bring on the prosecution for the third time, and Shrewsbury accordingly, was, up to Saturday, all alarm with excitement arising out of their investigation. But the magistrates this time not only refused once more to receive the information, but committed one of the Crown witnesses for perjury.—Nation, Jan. 24.

Funeral of Dr. Keane.

The funeral of the pastor Bishop of Cloyne was made a demonstration of love and sorrow such as one cannot hope to witness often in a lifetime even in Ireland, where the minister of religion, especially if he happens to share the political aspirations of his countrymen, meets with greater respect and affection than is probably any other country in the world. Every section of a vast community, lay and clerical, united in rendering the last tribute of admiration and veneration to a most pure and noble character; and the religious portion of the sad ceremonial was carried out with all the solemnity and pomp with which the Catholic Church knows so well how to invest the obsequies of her children. The remains of the deceased prelate repose in the cathedral which will long be a noble memorial of his zeal for the interests of the faith and the grandeur of his ideas of church architecture.—Nation, January 24.

Important Land Case.

At the Limerick Land Court, January 22, the Chairman, Mr. Leahy, gave judgment in the claim brought, under the Landlord and Tenant Act, by Dr. O'Connell, Kilmallock, against a farmer named Stephen Walsh, also of Kilmallock, and member of the Liberal and Clare Farmers' Club. The lands from which claimants had been evicted consisted of six acres over Kilmallock, and were held at a rent of £20 per annum until Walsh became purchaser, when he immediately served notice to quit on Dr. O'Connell. Claimant now sought to recover £56, as compensation for eviction down to '82, as well as for the unexhausted manure. The Chairman, in giving judgment said, as the manure claim of £56 was not a fair one, he would not grant compensation for them; but, as he held that the eviction was unjust, he should award claimant £80, which was equivalent to four years' rent, but he would allow £17 10s. as a set-off to the landlord for dilapidation, etc.

Poisoning of Harriers.

Placards were on the 19th January posted throughout Ballinrobing a reward of £100 for information respecting the poisoning of twelve harriers, the property of Richard Stacpoole, Edenvale, at his kennel recently. This vile deed, it is said, is to be attributed to motives of surliness as to its origin and motive, has called forth the indignation of the sporting community, to whom the transfer of Mr. Stacpoole's harriers from Limerick to Mayo afforded much satisfaction. Mr. Stacpoole has also served notice of application to apply at the next presentment sessions for compensation for the loss of his dogs, which were all valuable—£150 is said to have been offered for one of them. The presentment is reserved to have been set down upon the parish of Brameville, barony of Islands.

Outrage in Tipperary.

On the evening of January 18th a small farmer, named Michael Burgess, residing at Dengye, about a mile from Tipperary, and near Monard police station, left his dwelling-house to go to an outhouse in the yard. A man, who had evidently been lurking about the premises, followed him, and, coming behind him, struck him a violent blow on the head with a bill hook, and severed the jugular vein. Burgess, who was then unarmed, fell dead. The murderer, after committing the deed, escaped by getting over a high wall which surrounds the yard.

ENGLAND.

Spiritism in England.

The Spiritualists are on a war again. There is in this country an illustrious Russian prince who has travelled all the way from St. Petersburg to investigate the phenomena of which Mr. Home is the recognized specialty, and in which nearly half educated London implicitly believes. His experience so far tends to confirm his old opinion that these phenomena are not explicable on any scientific principles, and partly to furnish a clue to their origin must be sought for in a supernatural atmosphere. At a séance (dark) held in the princely hotel chosen in Buckingham gate, a gentleman was witness of a very striking manifestation. The room—which was closely examined in order to exclude every ray of light—became suddenly filled with a gray twilight, out of which arose the spectral form of "King," a spirit whose name is famous in spiritualistic circles. King, stirred in flowing drapery, and the Italian poet Dante stood up to the prince, shook his hand, and trussed to be satisfied that he was not the victim of imposture. The illustrious stranger left the spirit's hand, and retained it. At the same time a pale but tinted lifted itself in the air, and lowered bird-like, over his head for several minutes. The medium all the time seems to have been fast asleep behind a screen, which some of the Italian party were permitted to approach. When light was admitted the expert was discovered in a state of great exhaustion by his pale damp with perspiration, his fingers cramped, and his whole appearance indicative of a fit and considerable loss of mental energy.

I am sorry that Machel Faraday did not respond to the frank invitation sent him to examine these manifestations with his own hands and eyes. Unhappily he allowed himself to be the slave of that dogmatism which is the result of seeseeful half-education. He could not endure the attitude of gravitation, although he couldn't see what he believed to but spiritualism to him was a thing so frightfully absurd—liars being nothing absolutely material about it—that he could not stoop to examine it. Brewster and Carpenter, and even our present Postmaster-General, have been more considerate. Mr. Wm was likewise one convinced. To these remarks I may add a curious bit of narrative. About four years ago a Catholic friend troubled himself about Mr. Home to the extent of bringing him into his house, and persuading him to abandon his clandestine correspondence. Home became a Catholic for the time; but the old feeling finally overcame him, and he returned, as the narrator remarked, "to the devil."—Dublin Review, January 24.

English Courtship.

The second examination of Jean Jule (in the Tichborne case), now serving out his sentence as a convicted forger, and charged with perjury and bigamy in addition, has thrown some light on the good old English ways of carrying on a courtship. Detective Clarke had cold so much already about the voluntary confession of perjury made by Louis, that, at the second sitting, the magistrate went on to hear evidence of the charge of bigamy. A good many years ago, it appears, he married a publican's daughter at Ipswich, the parties who witnessed the entry in the marriage register came up and proved that circumstance. Well, a dozen years passed away, and, as the story goes (many years ago), one night at a levee in evidence, Lois turned up one night at a levee kept by a widow, one Harriet Arrowsmith, in London. She never had seen him before. He wanted a bed, and he got it; and he informed the landlady, by an early train in the morning. He went to bed, but did not get away in the morning. He stayed for a few days, courted the landlady, married her, settled a nice lease of a public house on his bride, waited her to settle her real public house and some other little things on him, and when, after a brief interval of connubial bliss, she declined to vest all her worldly goods in her husband's name, he showed his prowess by sending her spinning through a glass door one day, she balanced the account between them by having him taken to jail, and kept them safely for a few months. When they regained their liberty he took a dive for a few years, till Harriet Arrend and he met the other day in the police court. Her husband seems disposed to let her story tell a marked effect in Court. "It was a widow," she said, "when the prisoner met me, and I supposed I am a widow still." The audience guffawed, the sarcastic magistrate said that, as a lonely one was found guilty, he could not grant compensation for them; but, as he held that the prisoner was married, he should award claimant £80, which was equivalent to four years' rent, but he would allow £17 10s. as a set-off to the landlord for dilapidation, etc.

Poisoning of Harriers.

Placards were on the 19th January posted throughout Ballinrobing a reward of £100 for information respecting the poisoning of twelve harriers, the property of Richard Stacpoole, Edenvale, at his kennel recently. This vile deed, it is said, is to be attributed to motives of surliness as to its origin and motive, has called forth the indignation of the sporting community, to whom the transfer of Mr. Stacpoole's harriers from Limerick to Mayo afforded much satisfaction. Mr. Stacpoole has also served notice of application to apply at the next presentment sessions for compensation for the loss of his dogs, which were all valuable—£150 is said to have been offered for one of them. The presentment is reserved to have been set down upon the parish of Brameville, barony of Islands.

Outrage in Tipperary.

On the evening of January 18th a small farmer, named Michael Burgess, residing at Dengye, about a mile from Tipperary, and near Monard police station, left his dwelling-house to go to an outhouse in the yard. A man, who had evidently been lurking about the premises, followed him, and, coming behind him, struck him a violent blow on the head with a bill hook, and severed the jugular vein. Burgess, who was then unarmed, fell dead. The murderer, after committing the deed, escaped by getting over a high wall which surrounds the yard.

ENGLAND.

Spiritism in England.

The Spiritualists are on a war again. There is in this country an illustrious Russian prince who has travelled all the way from St. Petersburg to investigate the phenomena of which Mr. Home is the recognized specialty, and in which nearly half educated London implicitly believes. His experience so far tends to confirm his old opinion that these phenomena are not explicable on any scientific principles, and partly to furnish a clue to their origin must be sought for in a supernatural atmosphere. At a séance (dark) held in the princely hotel chosen in Buckingham gate, a gentleman was witness of a very striking manifestation. The room—which was closely examined in order to exclude every ray of light—became suddenly filled with a gray twilight, out of which arose the spectral form of "King," a spirit whose name is famous in spiritualistic circles. King, stirred in flowing drapery, and the Italian poet Dante stood up to the prince, shook his hand, and trussed to be satisfied that he was not the victim of imposture. The illustrious stranger left the spirit's hand, and retained it. At the same time a pale but tinted lifted itself in the air, and lowered bird-like, over his head for several minutes. The medium all the time seems to have been fast asleep behind a screen, which some of the Italian party were permitted to approach. When light was admitted the expert was discovered in a state of great exhaustion by his pale damp with perspiration, his fingers cramped, and his whole appearance indicative of a fit and considerable loss of mental energy.

I am sorry that Machel Faraday did not respond to the frank invitation sent him to examine these manifestations with his own hands and eyes. Unhappily he allowed himself to be the slave of that dogmatism which is the result of seeseeful half-education. He could not endure the attitude of gravitation, although he couldn't see what he believed to but spiritualism to him was a thing so frightfully absurd—liars being nothing absolutely material about it—that he could not stoop to examine it. Brewster and Carpenter, and even our present Postmaster-General, have been more considerate. Mr. Wm was likewise one convinced. To these remarks I may add a curious bit of narrative. About four years ago a Catholic friend troubled himself about Mr. Home to the extent of bringing him into his house, and persuading him to abandon his clandestine correspondence. Home became a Catholic for the time; but the old feeling finally overcame him, and he returned, as the narrator remarked, "to the devil."—Dublin Review, January 24.

English Courtship.

The second examination of Jean Jule (in the Tichborne case), now serving out his sentence as a convicted forger, and charged with perjury and bigamy in addition, has thrown some light on the good old English ways of carrying on a courtship. Detective Clarke had cold so much already about the

ITALY.

Two Bishops Consecrated by the Holy Father.

We learn from Rome that a few mornings since his Holiness the Pope officiated in person at the ceremony of the consecration of two newly-named prelates. The ceremony was a very long one, beginning at half-past seven and lasting till half-past ten in the forenoon; and yet, at its conclusion the venerable Pontiff manifested but little signs of fatigue. This is sufficient to show how groundless are the "fears" so "affectionately" entertained by certain journals of the Continent and in England with reference to the health of the Holy Father, and will be a new source of consolation to his faithful children here in Ireland, who pray fervently for a life before whose close such great things are expected. His Eminence, the Cardinal Secretary of State, the able, indefatigable, and accomplished Cardinal Antonelli, was present throughout the ceremony. The Journal de Florence supplies us with the following interesting particulars of it: Cardinal Bilio and Monsignor Lavigerie were the two distinguished ecclesiastics thus honored by the Sovereign Pontiff. The former has been named to the bishopric of Albano, vacant by the death of last month; and the second, on his elevation to the dignity of Abbot of the famous Benedictine Monastery of Subiaco, was named to the bishopric in partibus infidelium, as also Abbot Subiaco. Does not this look anti-episcopal jurisdiction. The Holy Father was the concerning prelate, and with his blessing, we are assisting outstanding problems. The mission of Monsignori Marsodo and Marinelli, both prelates of the Roman Curia, to the court of Spain, on the subject of the glorious event that, it is to be hoped, will be the means of establishing there a solid and brighter throne. They relieve the idea of any hitch in the settlement peacefully to the Spanish question. The mission of Monsignor Franchi from the Vatican, which they call a flesh-carriers of the Jesuits, and they have no more pacific way of rejecting those testimony upon the question, as the denial is qualified by the admission of a Bull authorizing the Church to change the mode of election was enacted nearly eighty years ago. Most of the Bulls regard the admission as an attempt to assimilate as much as possible the condition of which are no longer denied, even by Catholics.

The Commissioner of Fisheries has a fishing place at Caledgala, N. Y., with a belief of 88 to 88 inches. The average catch, 7. Five and a half million of shad were fried loose in the Hudson river last fall, but it is doubted whether they will be in fresh water without access to the sea.

T. J. BRODERICK

IS RE-ESTABLISHED AT

NO. 34 THIRD STREET,

In this, two doors below Stevenson.

T. B. begs to acquaint his old friends and the public that he keeps a large stock of

Fashionable Boots and Shoes,

Now rates than any other house in the city. Also and Children's shoes made to order.

Boots Boots and Shoes made a specialty of the material and workmanship. The most under first class workmen employed.

Call and Examine Stock.

NO. 34 Third Street.

ST. VINCENT'S COLLEGE,

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEGREES CONFERRED

Rev. JAMES McGILL, C. M. President.

AGENTS FOR "THE MONITOR."

Alameda—W. H. Wright; Alvarado—John Ginley; Amador City—M. O. Mooney.

Auburn—James Walsh.

Austin, Nev.—Martin Igo

Antioch—C. Griffin.

Angel's Camp — Thomas Mackey.

Bro-Kyn, Alameda Co.—Byrnes' Store—P. Tarpey

Byrnes' Store—Dan Lynch.

Bodega—Patrick Keefe.

Bay Point—James Segee.

Chico—Thomas Mackey.

Cannochee—P. Meigrew.

Columbia—M. Bennett.

Columbia—Matt. Boyle.

Carson City—Tom Rooks.

Centreville—Wm. Cody.

Cave Rock—Thos. Mc-Donough.

Cloverdale—T. Hope.

Calle Costa—Rob't. Post.

Dowdenville—P. Grant.

Dixon—Thos. Hodges.

Dayton, Nev.—Hayes, Sons Chas.—M. Bell.

Greenville—Thomas Cochran.

Henry O'Toole.

Gonzales—P. Dardis Co.

M. Walsh.

Gilroy—James Regan.

Folsom—John Shannon.

Fort Ross—Jas. Fisher.

Fresno City—Jas. Mahoney.

Grass Valley—Jas. Mc-Donough.

Grantsville—D McCarthy

Gold Hill—J. Kane.

Howard's Flat—M. Powers.

Hollister—J. A Small.

Healdsburg—Jas. Cunningham.

Hayward—T. J. Foster.

Irish Hill—Jas. Hennessy.

Milpitas—John Nenon.

Mission San Jose—P. Murphy's Camp — James Murphy.

Mayfield—J. Dean.

Mission Dolores—John Aylward.

Mission San Jose—Jas. Sweeney.

Monterey—Jas. Hamilton.

Mission San Juan—Jas. Lorsten and Storeville—D. M. Hogan.

Livermore — Frank Mc-Kenzie.

Los Angeles — Broderick and Haverty.

Marysville—T. J. Foster.

Mission San Francisco—Rev. Jas. Bapst.

Napa—Rev. Jas. Bapst.

Nevada City—Jos. Gaston.

Nortonville—Owen Brennan and J. Lass.

North Bloomfield — R. D. Mahoney.

Petaluma—J. O. Keane.

Port Wine—Jos Lawrence

Placerville—James Patton

Petaluma—Kelly Tracy.

Petaluma—P. Mahony.

Pescadero—Jas. Gaffney.

Pleasanton—Over Murphy

Pentz, Placer Co.—John S. White.

Redwood City—J Crowley

San Mateo—Jas Farrell.

San Jose—A. Waldstein.

Santa Margarita—William Farrell.

San Jose—Capt. Thos. Moore.

San Jose—T. Hope.

San Buenaventura—Wm. Ayres.

Santa Rosa—Diego Hayes.

Santa Clara—M. Bell.

Stockton—Jas. Williams

Sutter Creek—P. Fogan.

Shasta—P. Masterson.

Tuolumne—M. J. Gavin.

St. Louis—D. Goslin.

Tehama—Jas. Fairfield.

Oakland—Jas. Barry.

Oakland—Jas. Barry, 440 Seventh street.

Oroville—Jas. Cunningham.

Pacheco Valley—Wm. Quinlan, S. McLaughlin.

Pacheco—P. Ward.

Pacheco—P. Ward.

Pleasanton—Jas. Kenealy and Capt. A. Kerrigan.

Pleasanton—Jas. Kenealy and Wm. H. Sibley.

Redwood City—Jas. Kelner & Hill.

Redwood City—Thos. Kirwan.

Sacramento—Rev. Father Kaguet.

San Francisco—Rev. Father Prendergast.

San Lorenzo—W. Nugent.

San Luis Obispo—P. Quinlan, S. McLaughlin.

San Rafael—P. Ward.

San Rafael—P. Ward.

San Leandro—Jas. Kenealy and Capt. A. Kerrigan.

San Leandro—Jas. Kenealy and Wm. H. Sibley.

San Mateo—Jas. Kelner & Hill.

San Mateo—Thos. Kirwan.

Santa Cruz—Rev. Father Kaguet.

Santa Clara—Rev. Father Prendergast.

Santa Barbara—W. Nugent.

Santa Barbara—P. Quinlan, S. McLaughlin.

Santa Rosa—P. Ward.

Santa Rosa—P. Ward.

Sonoma—Jas. Kenealy and Capt. A. Kerrigan.

Sonoma—Jas. Kenealy and Wm. H. Sibley.

Sonoma—Jas. Kelner & Hill.

Sonoma—Thos. Kirwan.

Stockton—Rev. Father Kaguet.

Stockton

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

The French Catholics of Chicopee, Mass., are to have a new church.

The Sisters of St. Francis have opened a convent at Shelbyville, Ky.

The Company of Jesus has now ten canonized saints and 102 beatified.

The Franciscan Fathers are to erect a very large church at Glasgow, Scotland.

In nineteen parishes in the county Cork, Ireland, there is not a single Protestant.

The late Michael Murphy left the sum of $200 to the Little Sisters of the Poor, Boston.

Thirty converts were made at a mission recently given by the Redemptorist Fathers in Arlington, Massachusetts.

The Order of the Christian Brothers now numbers thirteen thousand members, and is the largest order of men in the Church.

The Rev. P. Sinnott, S. J., who was ordained by the Prussian Government, is giving missions in the diocese of Albany, N. Y., to German congregations.

The Christmas collections for the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, in the different churches in New York, it is announced, they amount to $23,096 84.

Nelson P. Aiken, a Protestant gentleman of Philipsburg, N. Y., has presented Rev. J. J. Moriarty, of Chatham Four Corners, with ground on which to build a church, and a subscription of $250.

The Catholics of Needham, Mass., have purchased thirty acres of land in that town for a cemetery, and the Catholics of Newton Falls, in the same State, have purchased ninety acres for a similar purpose.

There are forty-two Catholic churches in Philadelphia. The Diocesan Temperance Union comprises forty-five societies, and it sent twenty-five thousand dollars in gold as a Christmas present to the Holy Father.

The Detroit Home Journal says, with too much truth, that "it is from white heathen than from without, that the Church suffers her greatest offences. From her own unworthy children does she receive her most painful wounds."

The Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Minnesota comprises twenty-five societies with 1,825 members, and when societies intending to join at an early day will make the Union 34 societies and 2,353 members.

Very Rev. J. A. Reynolds, Provincial of the Dominican Order in the United States, lectured in the Cathedral at Columbus, Ohio, on Sunday, the 25th ult., on the "The work of the children of St. Dominic for liberty and civilization."

Six young ladies took their first vows of poverty, chastity, obedience and labor for salvation, and four received the habit, after making their final vows, as Sisters of the Good Shepherd, at the convent of that name in St. Louis, Mo., from the hands of Bishop Ryan, on the 26th ult.

The Holy Father has set for his host to be taken Cardinal Bilio, a young Irish Catholic sculptor of Boston, not yet thirty years old. Mr. Milmore has already made a specialty of busts of Hon. Charles Sumner and Wendell Phillips, and is acquiring considerable reputation in Rome.

Rev. P. F. Crinnon, Vicar-General of Peterborough, Ontario, is the appointed successor to the late Bishop Farrell, to fill the place of Bishop Very Rev. John F. Jamot, V. G. of the diocese of Toronto, has been appointed Bishop of Sault Ste. Marie.

The London Times says that the Empress of Germany is indignant at the disgraceful persecution of Catholics, but not having the power to oppose it more openly, she has appointed every Catholic lady who has been imprisoned, under the Church and State laws, to some honorary position in her household. Baroness Leo the place of one of those who refuses at court on all state occasions.

We see by the Roman correspondent of the Boston Pilot that among the numerous and distinguished Irishmen in Rome who presented their address to the Holy Father on the eve of the Epiphany, was Gentle. Maxiere Brady, recently received into the Catholic Church. He was one of the most learned and distinguished Episcopal ministers in Ireland, and chaplain to the Lord-Lieutenant for several years.

The demand for the support of the public schools of the city of New York for this year is $4,000,000, the number of pupils on the rolls being 185,000, or about $20 a year for each pupil; while the Catholic parochial schools must educate their 70,000 children, and look for aid to the charity of the congregations give them $10 a year for each pupil.

P. V. Hegg, Esq., editor of the Catholic Review, has got the editor of the New York Nation, an Irish Orangeman, in a tight place. The latter charged that "Cardinal Cullen, in a paper edited by him in Rome, maintained that the Irish standard of female honor called for the proof, but the Nation case cannot find P.

Rev. John Kelly, of St. Malachy's Church, Philadelphia, retired to bed in good health on Sunday evening, the last one, and was found dead next morning. Carcinoma fay. He was a native of Dublin, ordained in Philadelphia in 1851, and a man of great erudition.

Father Wappelhorst has resigned his position of Chancellor of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, and has gone to Milwaukee to assume the presidency of St. Francis de Sales College, made vacant by the recent death of Dobor Salzmann. He is succeeded in the Chancellorship by Father Van Der Sanden, lately of Kirkwood, Mo.

One of the Christian Brothers, known in religion as Brother John, died of consumption at St. Matthew's Institute, Georgetown, on the 25th January. He was a native of New Jersey, and had been a member of the order for six years. A Professor in the primary department, he was much beloved by the pupils.

Bishop Hogan, of St. Joseph, Missouri, refused to pay taxes on his schools, alleging that the parochial schools of St. Joseph were public schools under the terms of the Constitution. His claim was resisted by the School Board; an appeal was taken to the Courts, and a decision has just been rendered in the Circuit Court in favor of the Bishop. It will now go to the Supreme Court.

Mayor Brown, of St. Louis, in a letter to a Dr. Elliot, says that "Protestant wedlock may turn out to be little better than the social evil, should Catholic principles prove true." The Mayor is not a good Catholic theologian. The Catholic Church declares, "All marriages outside the Catholic Church are considered invalids, unless somebody in the future should make the union monstrous."

St. Anne's Church, on the York road, near Baltimore, was dedicated in the war-ship of God on Saturday, January 31st. It is built in the Gothic style, of Blue Falls stone, trimmed with white marble, and cost about $65,000. The Bishop of Richmond delivered a discourse on the occasion. Archbishop Bayley and Bishop Becker of Wilmington were also present.

The editor of the Baltimore Mirror says that from some knowledge of the distinguished Marshal (MacMahon) he cares very little for his French ancestry, but does care for his descent from a race of Irish heroes and statesmen; and that the Duchess of Magenta, his pious, virtuous wife, is almost more Irish than the Irish themselves.

On the 15th January, Right-Rev. Bishop Verot, accompanied by several priests of his diocese, laid the corner-stone of a new convent for the Sisters of St. Joseph at St. Augustine, Florida. The building is to be "coquina," a material composed of sand and shells, quarried out on the coast, which hardens with age. It is of this material the old fort erected in that city three hundred years ago by the Spaniards, and which, yet stands, is composed.

In France there are ten Archiepiscopies and sixty-three Bishoprics, exclusive of Metz and Strasbourg, and over fifty thousand priests. Each archdiocese has three; each diocese has two Vicar-Generals. There are four theological faculties—one each at Paris, Lyons, Bordeaux and Aix; with thirty-two large and one hundred and thirty smaller seminaries for the education of the clergy, who nearly forty thousand pupils.

The Countess of Portarlington died at Emo Park, Ireland, on Thursday, the 15th January. She was a daughter of the Marquis of Londonderry, and, like her mother, was some years ago received under the protection of the Catholic Church. She was a lady of many and highly adorned virtues, and the humblest of her Catholic friends are found in her a valued and sympathizing friend.

The Catholic World says of New York city: "It is, in truth, be said of this city: "There are thousands of men in this city supporting families on $600 a year, if asked the question will say that they are—who have at best been inside of a Catholic church spoken to a priest for many years—men whose lives are scandalous in their irregularities and crimes. Some as these bring disgrace upon the Church, whose precepts they trample under foot."

Robert Dale Owen, a Scotchman, and once a member of Congress from Indiana, has written a book on Spiritism, in which he says that Protestantism held the vast majority of the people of Europe in 1580, but now it only holds feeble minority. Mr. Owen further says if Catholics continue to increase in this country for a third of a century as they have done for the last three quarters of a century, they will have a decided majority. As things go now, he thinks the whole country will become Catholic, and he thinks the only way to prevent it is to accept the faith of the spirits.

Is this a free country? The Montreal True Witness insists that it is not, and instances the case of Madame La Marquise, Catholic lady of St. Louis, Mo., who devised a sum of money to Dr. Kenrick, studying for priesthood, and without any intimation of the clerical character. The will was contested, and a United States Judge declared the bequest null and void, on the ground that the law says "Every devise of goods, chattels or money for any pious use, etc., shall be null and void."

A beautiful and impressive ceremonial was performed in the Church of the Holy Trinity church, Georgetown, D. C. A handsome marble altar was solemnly consecrated by the Most Rev. Archbishop, who also hrily blessed the organ. Rev. Father Bouchard, Rector of the church; Rev. Father H. Coskery, the assistant; Rev. Father Healy, President of Georgetown College, and Rev. Father Stirning, and one or two professors, participated in the solemn ceremony. A sermon was eloquently preached.

The Hon. Gideon M. Parker, ex-Mayor of Mobile, Ala., died on Sunday, January 4th, 1874, aged seventy-six. His early life was an acted gospel of truth and honor—an open volume of stainless broken human frailty. His life was pure, moderate, charitable and brave. His salary was all to take up that he accumulated in money, carried in well-filled baskets under the seat of his buggy, where it would not be seen. He was the fraternal spirit and ready adviser of the Sisters of the Visitation, and the valued friend of the Jesuit Fathers at Spring Hill.

The forty-sixth anniversary of the ordination of the Right Rev. and Very Rev. Dr. Mackrey of St. Mary's Church, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, was celebrated by a High Mass and a discourse from Father Beaulieu, O. S. A., on Sunday, the 25th ult. Father Stanley said, truly, in a word, the teachings of the Church are becoming better understood and her influence more widely felt in this great country, these happy results are not less due to the scholarly writings of England, the vast learning of Kenrick or the indefatigable zeal of Hughes, than to the matchless oratory of Moriarty."

The number of pupils in the Christian Brothers' parochial school in New York is 1,500, with an average daily attendance of 1,300. The building in which they are taught is 111 feet on the New York, by 83 feet on James street. It is built of brick, five stories high, with an industrial school in the well-lighted and ventilated basement. The school is taught by Christian Brothers and the girls by Sisters of Charity. It is sustained at a cost of from $12,000 to $14,000 a year, partly from the "Female Society of St. James' Church," the remainder of which they ten cents a month.

The many friends of Sister Angela will regret to hear of her death. The melancholy event occurred on Monday, January 26th, at the house of the Visitation, Frederick, Md., of which she had been Superior for several years. Sister Angela was the niece of the late venerable Father Elder, of the Seminary of St. Sulpice in Baltimore, and the cousin of Bishop Elder, of Natchez, Miss. She left Lowtown selected Mother of the Frederick Academy of the Visitation. Sister Angela was in the 55th year of her age, and the 25th of her religious profession.

The New Orleans Star says: "It is a striking fact, and one that is not a little gratifying to Catholics, that despite the innumerable sources of prejudice that exist in the average Protestant mind against Catholic institutions, large numbers of children of Protestant parents are annually educated at Catholic schools. The many instances that now flourish throughout the country are undoubtedly supported to a very appreciable extent by the patronage of Protestant parents, who thus testify, by best indisputable of all tests, to the excellence of the system pursued by our religious preceptors.

The Dowager Marchioness of Londonderry has kindly consented to take the place of the much lamented Countess of Portarlington as treasurer for Ireland in connection with the appeal to the Catholic girls of England, Ireland and Scotland on behalf of the Holy Father. The Supreme Pontiff needs at present the aid of all Catholics, and it is a fitting and beautiful idea which is due to the generosity of the congregation which was termed of old "the glory of the Church" to cooperate in saving the Holy Father against the oppressions and deprivations of his enemies.

---

The five National Gold Banks of this State have $3,522,635 of their notes in circulation.

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

The cashier of the Atlanta branch of the Freedman's Savings Bank, Atlanta, Ga., has been arrested for embezzling $10,000.

An ex-Deputy sheriff in New York has been found guilty of larceny by stealing $200 in gold coin from a firm in Virginia.

There is an American preacher named Thompson lecturing in Berlin against the Catholic Church. Bismarckites rejoice in him.

Messrs. Caldwell, Hammond and Chichester Fortescue have been nominated for the Peerage, and Mr. Gladstone as Viscount of Enfield.

The Republicans carried the municipal election held in Philadelphia last Tuesday by a large majority. The majority for Mayor is 15,000. When was it otherwise?

The Chinese Education Commissioner, and his attaché gave an entertainment at Hartford, Connecticut, on Tuesday. The Mayor and many ladies and gentlemen of the city attended.

Dispatches say that the Temperance crusade in Ohio is receiving great aid from Catholic priests. Archbishop Purcell has directed all his priests to give it their most influence.

The Chinese residents of New York celebrated last Saturday as their New Year's day by a banquet and (we cordially) religious exercises, and on Sunday they were to have a procession.

The Fortification bill has passed the Lower House of Congress. The only appropriations for the Pacific Coast are $50,000 for Fort Point, $30,000 for Lime Point and $20,000 for Alcatraz.

Mr. Gladstone and his Ministry have tendered their resignation to the Queen, and she has summoned Disraeli to form a Ministry. Whether he will succeed is not known. It will take a week to construct it.

Von Moltke, General in Chief of German armies, and Bismarck say that no war is at present threatened, but that the army must be kept in a state of efficiency. We must be ready for the time of peace, but for peace only.

A disparch from Madrid says that the Government intends to take up the cause of Spain against a republic or a monarchy, and if the former in favor of a republic, ex-Premier Castelar will support the present President, Serrano, as President of the new Republic.

It is proposed in New York to dispense with the Mayor's Ball. They parade this year, and to give the money which it would cost for the ball of the poor. The same suggestion has been made by the Boston Pilot, and it is held under consideration in many places. It involves a large expenditure, without any return of value.

Hager has introduced a bill to grant the use of the Fort Point military reservation to the city of San Francisco as public park, reserving to the United States the right to maintain the fortifications now there, or military purposes. The Government may resume possession in case public emergency demands it, or if private parties set up adverse claims to it.

Returns from twenty-five different towns in Texas, in which seven have prohibited liquor saloons with prayers, hymns and exhortations, show that the number of arrests in the seven hundred liquor saloons had been reduced to nine, and twenty-two liquor selling drug stores have sustained the traffic. Seventy-five saloons and four drug stores in those towns remain to be conquered, and the praying women show no signs of discouragement. The movement continues to spread in that State and Indiana.

The London Times of Wednesday morning says, "The final result of the general election may be exactly stated as follows: Conservatives, 351; Liberals and Home Rulers, 302. The total number of votes polled was two million and a half—considerable falling off from the last general election." In Indiana last the returns from the polls were numerous. The members of Parliament elected in Ireland are classified as follows: Conservatives, 50; Liberals, 15; Home Rulers, nearly all of whom may be considered Liberals, 58.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS.

Sonoma county has thirteen flour mills.

The Los Angeles Tobacco Company broke ground last week.

There is a petition in circulation for the division of Tulare county.

Dr. Chandler, of Sutter county, cured 50 tons of raisins the past season.

The cultivation of the grape is receiving increased attention in Nevada county.

The grain yield of Salinas Valley this season will be almost double the crop of last year.

The citizens of Santa Rosa propose to raise, by a special tax, $20,000 for the general improvement of the town.

The Benicia narrow-gauge folks are talking of resuming work on their road as soon as dry weather comes to hand.

The Argus says the rabbits are about to take Calaveras. The recent high water has driven them in that locality.

The Pacific Land Reclamation Company have a large force at work reclaiming the marsh lands lying along Sonoma creek.

A piece of rock used for macadamizing the streets of Grass Valley was recently picked up and found to contain $20 worth of gold.

Joseph H. Taylor, a farmer near Livermore, will plant the spring one thousand pounds of cotton seed as an experiment.

A rival gas company is talked of in Napa City. The old company has reduced the price from $7 50 to $5 per 1,000 feet.

The Gonzales brothers, of Monterey, have sown this year 16,000 acres of barley and it is nearly all up, and looking finely.

The San Joaquin Valley Irrigation Company is about to commence to extend its ditch to Orestimba Creek, Stanislaus county.

Hon. E. S. Freeman, author of the Assembly Bill to regulate fees of State officers in connection with the office of Governor to succeed Booth.

The Legislature adjourns for the last agricultural fairs were awarded, the sum of $17,000 was given for racing, and for wool only $1,000.

Smelting Works will be commenced in Sacramento immediately. The subscription secured is $23,000 of which $21,000 has already been subscribed.

Members of the Wine and Brandy Manufacturers' Association met in Sacramento on the 5d proximo, to consult and exchange ideas.

About one thousand head of cattle were killed by the settlers down about the Pozo San Luis county during the past season in defense of their crops.

George Cover, living near Downieville, cut down a tree nearly three feet from which he took over one hundred pounds of good wild honey.

The Truckee Independent says from 2,000 to 3,000 deer are slaughtered in that county annually for their hides, the carcasses being left to rot on the ground.

Seventy thousand dollars has been subscribed in Southern California for the purpose of building a large wine warehouse at Wilmington, Los Angeles county.

A bill is now before the Legislature to change the boundaries of Nevada county, which throws Truckee and a large portion of taxable property into the county of Placer.

Sidney Hayes, Jacob Clark and Charles Thompson, convicted at Auburn of highway robbery, have been sentenced to a term of twenty-one years each in the penitentiary.

The Sacramento Bee says that it estimates that there are employed in that city, in various branches of business, about 2,000 persons, and that the whole of the $5,000,000 in the Sacramento Pacific Railroad, would be distributed in that city in three months.

From every hundred pounds of the petroleum that is found in the oil wells of Southern California, about seventy-five pounds of refined oil is obtained, and the five pounds of paraffine worth thirty cents a pound, and the remainder waste.

Petaluma is improving in commercial position by the making and improving of roads. Nearly all the roads leading to Petaluma are being graded and macadamized, which is most needed.

The Democratic party, "The year opens auspiciously for Sonoma county. We have not abundant rains; the farmers availing themselves of the last one to put in their work; a large acre of land will be sowed in corn and wheat."

The Russian River Flag says, "It is reported that the Sonoma from Napa has purchased a large interest in the Napa route. The plain object of which is, if common report be true, to attain the foolish end of Pine Flat quicksilver mines to Napa county."

Governor Booth has appointed the following gentlemen as Commissioners to examine the new county of San Benito: H. M. Hayes, Jr., S. M. Nichols, of Hollister; John Bacon and Mark Pomeroy, Aptos, commissioned James F. Bacon (now County Judge of Monterey), as County Judge of San Benito.

Miller & Lux are dividing up their land in the vicinity of Los Banos Creek. They lease it in small parcels to settlers who improve it, and who pay a rent of $2 50 per acre first year, and $3 50 per acre second year, in addition to alfalfa, Miller & Lux furnishing the seed. The lessee has the privilege of purchasing the land at the expiration of five years at the rate of $20 per acre.

---

Black, Black Is—Cough, Cough!

Cough is a symptom by which various diseases manifest themselves. Each disease has a manifest symptom. But whether it proves a cough, or whether it proves a cough, or whether it proves a cough, or

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER LIV.

LE BOURGET. III.

"Mandeman," said the commander of the fortress with a pleasant smile, "the Prussians must have had a much larger force here than we were led to believe. There is still a considerable body of them lodged in the chateau.

"You do not say so! We had better attack it at once."

"Well, no," said the commander slowly, "I should not say so. We have nothing to force the door without exposing our men a good deal, and I would prefer to avoid unnecessary loss of life."

"Pshaw! Are we never to have a downright combat, but the accursed manœuvring au grand stratagem?"

"Don't talk like an impatient child, Mandeman. Have you one of your fellows good for an errand? If so, dispatch him with that note to the General. I want him to send some cannon up to La Courneuve. Then we shall send mousieure the Prussians out of the church without beat of drum."

"I could get you a messenger easily, trustworthy enough, ready to go through all perils, even the alert Sergeant Vose, but there is not advesitime enough in your commission for him. A postman might do it. I will send a mobile."

"Have a care, Mandeman. This is a much more serious business we are engaged in than you seem to think. Do you fancy that we are here to hold the enemy's line? I doubt it. I feel confident that they have several batteries beyond this, and that to keep such advance as we have made we shall have to fight hard."

"If you really think that this is to be the issue of the combat, that is quite another affair."

"Whether it is or not, Mandeman, believe me that military duty ought to be always well performed—however, insignificant for the time it may appear. A soldier should be always at his post."

"I am rebuked. Well, I will get you my phlegmatic Parisots, my hare out of Cooper's commune, to be your envoy on this occasion."

"Quick, and please without more words."

In the dark it was not quite so easy to find an individual, especially as Michel belonged to a party who were mostly stretched on the ground. Most of the men were scattered among the houses, amusing themselves with searching for relics of the gayer days of the occupancy.

"Finding a trail," he mused to himself, "is an extremely amusing process to the soul of in these pleasant romances of the American, but brought into practice it becomes dull and disagreeable. Now, what to avoid Lieutenant-colonel Sain my cousin! Let me see. Have I the requisite force? I think I have. Now if this notice prove correct I shall no doubt be tempted to take up the trade of leading sleuth-hound, and abandon my duties as a journalist. Vose, the indefatigable, will assuredly be down in the neighborhood of the church by the time I return—I mean where the Prussians are not—and I shall be free to—"

"Mandeman—Halting—here's terrible bad luck—I've dropped the scent! Ah, no, I have it! Mandeman—Halting—here's terrible bad luck—I've dropped the scent! Ah, no, I have it! Mandeman—Halting—here's terrible bad luck—I've dropped the scent! Ah, no, I have it!"

"Shut up, you confounded—you arequite right."

"It would be better left alone, monsieur, as a matter of rule," observed Michel quietly, "but just now I don't think it makes much matter. They know well enough from other reasons that we are here. But were you seeking us, monsieur?"

"I was. Our commander wants a messenger to go to the fort."

"And you intend me for the—"

"Yes, I thought of you."

"I am ready, monsieur."

"Indeed, I have been thoughtless. You have marched from Meaux this morning; have had a fatiguing expedition here—"

"Ah, monsieur, that is nothing. I am ready to set out as soon as you desire."

"Your clothes seem to be dripping with water."

"They will dry as I go on."

"Have you been keeping watch here?"

"We have not been set as sentries, but Mike said myself thought we would see what the Prussians in the church meant to do. Barnet will relieve him in an hour or two."

"If some of them fellows don't come out and relieve me," interrupted Mike.

"There is not much fear of that."

"Well, if any of them do, I know that what will alarm the guard is likely to startle him."

"What do you mean?" asked Mandeman.

"Why if the sound of my rifle reaches the ear of the guard, its likely to alarm them, isn't it?"

"No doubt."

"And if at the same time the bullet of the rifle reaches the ear of the Prussian, its likely to startle him, isn't it?"

"Your logic is perfect, mon Irlandais."

"Michel, don't let anything keep you away too long, unless some of these infernal Prussians are too pressing with you."

Michel laughed an adieu.

Having received his instructions from the chief of the expedition, he carried off, not to Aubervilliers, but to Bobigny, which was about equidistant. With a light foot and a keen eye it was not likely he would delay long upon the road, and less than half an hour had elapsed before he found himself at his place of destination. The sentinel on duty made a menacing rush for, and he was shown at once to the quarters of the General. The latter, who was seated among some officers, sprang up on seeing the dispatch Michel had brought with him, and tore it open. "Ha," he said, as he ran his eyes over it. "Famous, only twenty wounded, capital! Assistance," to be sure. All we can. How many are under arms, Colonel?"

"A regiment and some artillery."

"Let them move on at once to Courneuve. He tells me that some of the Prussians are shut up in the church. A shell or two will soon send them out of that."

"You have not said who is to take command."

"Yourself, of course. I mean this to be serious. I will follow you in the course of a few hours with as good aid as I can muster. We have begun well, and it is a pity not to follow the thing up. The old Bronze, however, has no heart in the business, and lends me no assistance."

"Indeed!"

"He says he does not care for partial attempts at all. By the time we have drilled his troops below there, so as to be fit for action in his view, Paris will have had to surrender or have knuckled."

The Colonel coughed.

"Ah, I understand—you are quite right."

"The presence of Michel made it unseemly that the conduct of the Commander-in-Chief should be discussed. "Tell my friend," said the General, "what you know of this business. Were you in the expedition from D'Aubervilliers?"

"As supernumerary, mon general."

"How? In what?"

"My party and I belong to Nogent."

"And you came up here for the variety of the thing, I suppose?"

"Something like that, monsieur."

"Well, what do you think of this affair now? Has it satisfied you?"

"It has been very well begun, monsieur."

"Begun?"

"The enemy has been driven out everywhere except from the church, but—I say it with respect, monsieur le general—they will return with far greater force."

"What is your idea of greater force?"

"As army, monsieur le general."

"An army?"

"When we have beaten away a sentry once or twice they seem to multiply—then we worry a guard they send a company; if we harrass a company on that they cannot assemble and they send a battalion. This is a serious affair, and they will try as usual to have ten to one."

The general laughed. "My friend, I see you are no fool, but I fancy you a little exaggerate the force we shall have to encounter. Go," added he, kindly, "you had better take some rest, and in the morning you can attach yourself to my party. You have no objection, I suppose, to join the expedition against Paris?"

"I should esteem it a great disgrace and disappointment to be left out of it, monsieur le general."

"Well, we shall not forget that punishment upon you and your party for your behavior. Adieu, and be ready for action."

When Michel laid down the whole fort was alive with preparations for the departure of the troops. The heavy wheels of artillery in whose noisethenbroke of them have never heard of Jameson's whisky."

"I am very sorry," said Mother, "the best of the discovery of the two. I have heard that our mobiles, and indeed our men of the line too, have done little business taken to drinking a great deal."

"Drinking what?"

"Wine, brandy—anything."

"It's a pity. But what harm about the wine?"

"Herod! Why I fear they will drink it and get drunk."

"Drunk!" shouted Mike, "it is drunk on that I Glory be to God, it they can get drunk on that, why—why it's no wonder the Prussians would beat them."

"Ah, my dear friend, believe me, it is not good to be drunk either on weak wine or strong spirit, and the stoutest men for endurance of fatigue, and the steadiest of nerve, will always be found those who take least of strong drinks."

"Indeed, I wish a great many in Ireland were of your way of thinking."

As the two soldiers strolled into the street the shells rattled and fizzed and burst about them, but they had grown too much accustomed to the perilous noise to regard it much. Not so, however, with all the working parties. Many of the mobiles had never seen a bombs shot before, and they became fidgety. It is startling on your first day's acquaintance with fire to see your neighbor's head taken off, and it is difficult not to recollect that it may be your own turn next, even though the doctrine of chance be in your favor.

"That is a heavy fire, and discomposes the men," remarked the general to the colonel of the Franc-Tireurs.

"Yes, it is trying on young soldiers."

"Could we not annoy the enemy in some way so as to check that bombardment?"

"I will give you a few sharp-shooters who may be able to do something." Mandeman was summoned, and asked if he thought he could do aught. His mind immediately reverted to his allies Gros and Nogent, whom he sought out and found. His proposition was heartily received, and a party of some forty men went in loose order to the outskirts of the enemy's position. It was a perilous task, because there was a wide range of soldiers outside and to the rear of the guns; but the nature of the ground, covered with vines, gardens, fruit orchards, vegetable gardens, and the hundred interruptions natural to a thickly settled country part, gave them a chance. They used it well, dropping so annoying rifle-fire here, from here, from there, that in a couple of hours they fretted like untrained horses under the terrible missiles, stood in the midst of the battle as coolly as on parade ground. Their own fire still lacked steadiness, but it was energetic and not without effect. At the different the enemy was baffled, and had not got all the advantage he expected from his surprise. There was a cessation of fire on his side.

"What now, are they retiring?" asked one of the defenders.

A mitrailleuse was behind the crest of the battery.

"Make ready men," said the officer in charge.

Scarcely a moment had passed when a sheer was heard outside the barricade, and amidst the smoke the huge forms of the Prussian guards were seen by-trees, in hand.

A counter cheer from the defenders. The grant of the mitrailleuse was heard and a line was cut through the ranks of the advancing foe; but they were spread across the whole street. Then the rifles poured in upon them their fire, and it ey fat in heaps, but they passed on, the very rear of them behind leading them an impetuous charge to be resisted. At last they were upon the barrier. But new comes the wild French "hurrah!" and laymen manage bayonet, and the fury of the defenders meeting the impetuosity of the enemy, Hurrah! hurrah! is shouted on either side. No thought of man's own life now, only take that of the enemy—sob, thrust. Not then dared fear the barricade they go at last. Cheer again, they are driven off, and now load and fire. And the heavy tide of the foe surges slowly back, after having paid a heavy penalty. But on they come again; reinforced by fresh and yet greater numbers, and the scene is repeated; each time, however, the number of the defenders growing less, and their fatigued energies more inadequate to supporting the terrible contest.

"You are fatigued, sir," said Michel to M. Dorobent, "this struggle is too hard for you."

"Dorobent," said Mandeman, "go back. You have done knight's service. Farewell will become of your opinion with reference to the General-in-Chief."

"Mandeman, and you, friends, I thank you for your solicitude," replied the old man simply, "but I cannot do it. My conviction is that being beaten in such an affair as this only paves the way to being beaten everywhere. My poor old arm can not do much, but so long as I can lift it, it must be at my country's service. I swear it," he added, "as things look now, I do not know that to be slain at a barricade is the worst thing that can happen to those who love France."

For the first time that day Mandeman's bright face became clouded.

"I admire your courage, but I cannot help deploring your obstinacy—that the old smile breaking out again; "you were always obstinate; you will not be content with my yielding to you on the point of the Second—but, hallo, here are our friends again. Come now, bullets and bayonets!"

And once again the wearied troops were brought to the edge of the barricade to keep up a against the foe. This time the latter appeared more numerous and more furious than ever. They were swarming under the fire of their first surprise and of their repeated repulses, and they rushed with several battalions to the attack. They reached up the barricade, getting a farther footing than they had before attained. Dorobent, wounded by his own hand, was seated on a stone, and by the mere weight of the shock which he received from the bayonet which obtained Mandeman; and two bayonets met in the body of the foe. "Save him!" called Mandeman, "if we don't save a good old fight soon, I'll make a fool of myself and take to crying."

"He deserves tears, for he was a noble soul. But I agree with you that action of some sort is needed to get rid of this miserable depression."

"What is that, Michel?" said Mike, quickly, "have you the glass?"

Michel, who had been dolefully presented by Lieutenant Beaumont, took out of his pocket a small telescope and handed it to Mike, who whenever possible, raised it now to his eyes and looked for some minutes in silence. The afternoon was calm and the sky was clear, flecked with only a few light specks that floated here and there. To the naked eye the object at which he looked was only like a large bird, but the glass immediately revealed its nature more startlingly. "It is a balloon," he said, "like, I thought so;" was the response of Mike. Under the light breeze the balloon was gaining steadily along in a direction which from the city, seem to lie ascending flight. It seemed to either another craft on air, and quickly, almost suddenly, its course appeared to change to the north, and in some more rapid. Michel watched it in silence, and it disappeared from his gaze, still speeding along a motherly course.

"I wonder," he said, thoughtfully, "have they watched that balloon from the Ministry of War."

"I suppose they are busier than us," said Mike, who was leisurely seated on the esplanade in front of Fort Nogent, "and maybe think they have something less fogy to look after than that kind of kite flying."

Michel shook his head. These balloons are our only chance of communicating with the great army that there is in them, they say, on the Loire; and that one certainly does not seem like to do its mission very efficiently."

"It's a curious kind of traveling post-bag that one is dependent upon for getting the letters to keep them from blowing skywards."

Michel still continued thoughtful. "It seems a pity," he observed, "that its intelligence should be trifling away from the quarter where it may be useful."

And he was right. The puff of wind which changed the direction of the metal traveler was one of the causes which compelled it to forego unavailing its struggle that France now waged. It was on the 24th it rose into the air. With exceptional rare good fortune it might have been expected to descend within the forty-eight hours in some part of France, whence its news could be communicated to the delegate of the Government at Tours. How important it was that such intelligence should be understood from the chief enemy it contained! It was from General Trochu to M. Gambetta, and it said:

"The news received from the Loire army has decided me to go on on the southern side, and to march towards the army at any cost. On Monday, 28th November, my operations will take place by a sortie, leaving them on day and night. On Tuesday, the 29th, an army commanded by General Ducrot, the most energetic of us all, will attack the enemy's position, and if they are repulsed, will push, cannon in front, in the direction of Glen."

The communication ended in a message, carried swiftly along away over the English channel, over England itself, across the German Ocean, and the inhabitants in Norway. It was the 30th when its contents were received at Tours, and by that time the battle of Villiers had been fought and lost, and the evaporating movement which was the last ground lessons's success had become impossible.

The afternoon on which our friends were occupied in watching the balloon was the last on which they had any reason to complain of dullness. No sooner was it well out of them to find all eyes beyond the fortifications stopped by proclamation, but there was now other object of interest in mind. From the city came rumors of proclamations one after another, and of other changes, all tending to the preparation for some great event, which was finally announced to them by the celebrated address of Ducrot. Yet again on the night of the 28th came some valid testimonies of hot work to be done. All Grand Fort Gros and the General. Small I load the attack myself!"

"I do. Take sufficient force with you."

The bugles rang out.

"My lads," said the Colonel in a clear, ringing voice, "we are going to take Bicêtre. En avant!"

A shout was the answer, and a rush. As the men, carrying nothing on to the fort of Bicêtre, Mike turned to his companion who was one far from him, "Do you remember the night we made a slaughter house of his place?"

"I do."

"I wonder have the removed all the horses yet?"

"Why do you ask?"

"I hardly know. A queer idea crossed my mind. I'd like to put a lot of Prussians on their horses."

"But what would be the use of putting live men on dead horses?"

"But I don't mean they should be alive."

"Oh!"

As they approached the village a murderous fire assailed the French, but it pressed on steadily. The houses were barricaded, and from within the walls of the muskets bulls; the streets were barricaded and the pavement torn up. At the first and were a couple of pieces of light artillery, which were well handled, and crew no small amount of destruction in the ranks of the assailants. But nothing could withstand their contest. Its impetuosity bore them steadily into the village, over its own dead and wounded, then over those of the enemy. They swarmed across the barricade, and captured those of its defenders who had not fled. From the backs of it houses the Germans might be seen trying to escape. The cannon had been carried off when it was seen, by the manœuvres which the French had cleared the first barricade, that their assault was not to be resisted, and now but a few pieces were engaged in the fight. The Irish people possess that extraordinary power of self-control and self-exertion which fit nations for Home Rule.

In the sacred names of Ireland we call upon all classes to take their place in a great and glorious effort for our native land.

To the clergy we appeal with respectful confidence to take their place with that people with whom they have lived so long and so orderly united.

To the gentry we invite the co-operation of the country and the upper classes in the great work of national redemption, which will be gravely jeopardized by any want of spirit within the next few days.

To the farmers we appeal to stand by their country in the hour of her trial.

This is a cause in which we are justified in appealing to the Irish people at home to actuate you, derived from the most sacred associations that stir the hearts of men. There is no man in Ireland who loves Ireland and the Irish people who does not feel that the cause of Home Rule is that of religion, of order, and of peace. We have it now in our hands peacefully to win that Home Rule which has been the hope and desire of our fathers for many generations, and which will be gained in the course of a few months if the people will be true to themselves.

Let the Irish people at home and abroad deserve it, and we don't think the Irish people will not be found wanting in the hour of duty, with their tactics dragging after them, and beg at basement doors in a mendicant spirit. The Home Rule bill will be introduced next session, and there will be no trouble don't do that. They will sit in their homes and stare fixed. They will not vote, and they will not work. They will they come here because they know they will be expected to do so, and they will not have the assistance and sympathy which the deserve. I help everybody who can help himself, and I will not give to the Irish, because I do not believe they are starving of assistance, but because I desire to get people to understand it, and not get still more donations than ever.

WORKINGMEN AND THE REAL CAPITALISTS.—Recent investigations into the conditions of the workingmen of England have disclosed some rather surprising facts relative to their earnings, savings, etc. It appears that in their savings banks the deposits, published for the year in the world's census, the deposits now amount to £90,000,000 sterling. As much as £40,000,000 has been deposited since 1862, though petition families and a commercial panic between those years. The total deposits in 1871 alone amounted to £3,820,291. In addition to this, the various friendly and provident societies, of which there are twenty thousand, on an accumulated capital of about twenty millions sterling, this must still be added the wealth of trade unions, which comprises over 700,000 men, and have an aggregate capital of £7,000,000.

M. Guizot, who is eighty-seven years old, says: "Last year I finished my history of France, and this, please God, no one commence my Universal History. I come of a hardy race. I can see to-day well and work well. Pius IX. is the same: we are the hardiest old men in Europe, and will outlive many who are young, if God please."

MATER MISERICORDIÆ.

At Saxon near the sea
In a fair celestial sphere,
We have to-day a radiant line
The images born constantly—
The inside of God and Mary
Unwinking bead and starring base
Of the station of Our Lord
Where the Mother and the Child
Are the images of mystery.
The glory add its glare;
Of a heaven lovely as the light
That beckons her thy face.

At Saxon near the sea
From a little crystal stream:
Lave a river in a chalice
It runneth noiselessly.
And it flows before the altar
Of that pure maroon in love
From the mountains down the valley,
From the mountains to the plain,
Where the Mother waiteth to receive
Her Son in the arms of the cherubs
Of a sentinel seraphic glory,
Whalling down to wings the ripples blaze
Like jewels in a mine.

Where they rarest, fairest gleam,
Here, to days dark as the present,
A poor and humble shepherd
Was was washing in the stream.
When from among the golden splendor
On the b'nk and down, just here,
Were the perfect images reflected
The holy spot endeared.
He saw and knew the Mother
In mantle of blue and gold—
He saw, he knew and reverence,
He knew and bowed and prayed.

So he also him to the town.
And he trembling told the tale,
Till the people came in crowds
Hiding fear beneath a frown.
There were men of high and low degree
And some, with scowl and thrust,
Who would have slain the shepherd
As—tought to brave it out!
But in the end they gave
Their hearts to God,
Our Saviour and Lady gave a sign
That they were reconciled.

And soon the wondrous vision
Of that pure and humble maze,
Like sacred, holy light
Through the land, from coast to coast,
And where it came
On the bank they built this shrine,
Where we have met to-day
To hold our Lady's festive shine—
Our Mother and our Queen.
To this place from every land
Our pilgrims have come,
And soon the wanderers vision
Of that poor and humble maze,
Like sacred, holy light
Through the land, from coast to coast,
And where it came
On the bank they built this shrine,
Where we have met to-day
To hold our Lady's festive shine—
Our Mother and our Queen.

And Saxon's soon did penance,
And her daughters watched and prayed;
The exile to his home
Were thronged with weeping tenants.
And the sinner to his God
Sent the bow in token air;
And the sick and the sorrowful
Fled to each footpad,
And the lame to their crutches,
And the blind to their staff,
And the lord of justice, yielding,
In his mercy forgave.

—Mrs. Maria.

Address of the Home Rule League.

Immediately on the dissolution of Parliament being known a meeting of the Council of the Home Rule League was held in Dublin, Mr. Butt in the chair. There were present Messrs. L. Waldron, Kenealy, J. J. Callan, Dr. Ryan, T. D. Ryan, J. J. Kennedy, P. McCabe Fay, Charles F. Egan, George Delaney, J. B. Murtagh, Dawson, W. Bury, R. B. Butt, A. M. Sullivan, John Martin, Alderman Carey, Rev. J. Galbraith, Colonel Welsh, H. F. Gill, W. Kenning Clay, John Martin and John Nolan. It was resolved that the following address to the Irish people on the present crisis be adopted and circulated:

The intelligence which has this morning reached us of the dissolution of Parliament, and of the immediate dissolution of Parliament, makes it our duty at once to appeal to the people of Ireland to be prepared for the struggle that is before them. The writs for the general election will issue early in the week, and the election will be conducted with the utmost rapidity and energy. Every moment is precious. Every hour lost may be fatal to the success of the cause. Let us, then, lose no time in preparing for the struggle. Let us be ready to meet the enemy. They have not been idle. They have been preparing for the struggle for months. They have been collecting their funds, and they have been organizing their forces. We must be prepared to meet them with equal energy and activity. We must be prepared to meet them with equal energy and activity. We must be prepared to meet them with equal energy and activity. We must be prepared to meet them with equal energy and activity.

The Home Rule candidates of every constituency must at once be chosen, and this done by the prompt and energetic action of the electors themselves. Success in the movement, which arraigns on three thrown upon the energy of the people in the several constituencies, will be, after all, the strongest proof that the Irish people possess that self-reliance and that self-exertion which fit nations for Home Rule.

In the sacred names of Ireland we call upon all classes to take their place in a great and glorious effort for our native land.

To the clergy we appeal with respectful confidence to take their place with that people with whom they have lived so long and so orderly united.

To the gentry we invite the co-operation of the country and the upper classes in the great work of national redemption, which will be gravely jeopardized by any want of spirit within the next few days.

To the farmers we appeal to stand by their country in the hour of her trial.

This is a cause in which we are justified in appealing to the Irish people at home to actuate you, derived from the most sacred associations that stir the hearts of men. There is no man in Ireland who loves Ireland and the Irish people who does not feel that the cause of Home Rule is that of religion, of order, and of peace. We have it now in our hands peacefully to win that Home Rule which has been the hope and desire of our fathers for many generations, and which will be gained in the course of a few months if the people will be true to themselves.

Let the Irish people at home and abroad deserve it, and we don't think the Irish people will not be found wanting in the hour of duty, with their tactics dragging after them, and beg at basement doors in a mendicant spirit. The Home Rule bill will be introduced next session, and there will be no trouble don't do that. They will sit in their homes and stare fixed. They will not vote, and they will not work. They will they come here because they know they will be expected to do so, and they will not have the assistance and sympathy which the deserve. I help everybody who can help himself, and I will not give to the Irish, because I do not believe they are starving of assistance, but because I desire to get people to understand it, and not get still more donations than ever.

WORKINGMEN AND THE REAL CAPITALISTS.—Recent investigations into the conditions of the workingmen of England have disclosed some rather surprising facts relative to their earnings, savings, etc. It appears that in their savings banks the deposits, published for the year in the world's census, the deposits now amount to £90,000,000 sterling. As much as £40,000,000 has been deposited since 1862, though petition families and a commercial panic between those years. The total deposits in 1871 alone amounted to £3,820,291. In addition to this, the various friendly and provident societies, of which there are twenty thousand, on an accumulated capital of about twenty millions sterling, this must still be added the wealth of trade unions, which comprises over 700,000 men, and have an aggregate capital of £7,000,000.

M. Guizot, who is eighty-seven years old, says: "Last year I finished my history of France, and this, please God, no one commence my Universal History. I come of a hardy race. I can see to-day well and work well. Pius IX. is the same: we are the hardiest old men in Europe, and will outlive many who are young, if God please."

BUSINESS CARDS.

JOHN M. BURNETT,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
620 Montgomery street,
Between Washington and Merchant streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

C. GREENWICH HOWARD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Offices—421 Montgomery street (rear site),
Bet. California and Sacramento sts., San Francisco.

M. COONEY,
Attorney and Counsellor at Law,
Office, Room No. 7, Court Block,
636 CLAY and 630 MERCHANT STREET

F. J. BREARTY,
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
La Porte, Plumas County, Cal.
Will practice in the Courts of the 3d and 19th Judicial Districts. Collections promptly made.

JOSEPH A. HARRINGTON,
ARTIST AND PORTRAIT PAINTER,
Post of the Academy of St. Luke, Rome.
STUDIO—Room No. 1 Mercantile Library Building, Bush street, between Montgomery and Sansome, SAN FRANCISCO.
Lessons given in Drawing, Painting, etc. jn11

F. A. BONNARD. H. A. DALY.
BONNARD & DALY,
BOOK AND JOB PRINTERS,
620 WASHINGTON STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Every Description of Job Printing EXECUTED IN FIRST-CLASS STYLE.

REMOVAL.
McNALLY & HAWKINS, HAVE REMOVED THEIR STOCK OF GAS FIXTURES
AND PLUMBING MATERIAL
TO
332 AND 334 PINE STREET,
BELOW MONTGOMERY.
Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting attended to. Orders promptly executed. d1

MORAN & McBRIDE,
Produce Commission Merchants,
AND DEALERS IN
Grain, Flour, Beans, Onions, Ground Feed, etc.
M. MORAN. D. McBRIDE.
M. WILZINSKI,
CLOTHING MANUFACTORY,
211 Pine street.....SAN FRANCISCO.
ROOMS NOS. 7 AND 23.

ORDERS FILLED AT SHORTEST NOTICE.
Special attention paid to MILITARY WORK.

DIXON BROTHERS,
Plumbers, Gas and Steam Fitters,
325 Montgomery Street,
Opposite Wells, Fargo & Co.....SAN FRANCISCO
All work warranted. n1

JOHN H. McMENOMY,
BUTCHER,
Stalls 7, 8 and 9, California Market,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Hotels, Restaurants and Families supplied on the most favorable terms. Meats delivered at short notice, Corned and Salt Beef, by the barrel, warranted. Marketing delivered to all parts of the city free of charge.

JAMES O'CONNELL,
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALER IN
Wood and Coal,
LAUREL STREET WHARF,
Near Market-street Wharf.....SAN FRANCISCO
Hotels, Boarding-houses and Families supplied at the shortest notice and at the lowest market rates.
All orders promptly attended to. n1

JOHN MOLLOY,
PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT,
No. 108 DALE ST.
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS
Constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled.

JOHN KENNY,
IMPORTER AND WHOLESALE DEALER IN
FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC
WINES AND LIQUORS,
Has removed from 710 Market street to
NO. 618 FRONT STREET,
Between Washington and Jackson.....San Francisco

WILLIAM B. DOLAN,
105 Third Street.....San Francisco
Importer and Dealer (Wholesale and Retail) in French Wines and Brandies,
AND
Irish Whiskey,
Imported direct from Ireland.

H. HAS ALSO ON HAND A LARGE AND assortment of Clothing, Hats of every description, which he will dispose of, in bulk or in lots, at the lowest rates for cash.
All orders left at the store, 105 Third street, will be promptly attended to, and delivered free of charge in any part of the city. 1y29

THURMAN J. POWER, 106 CHURCH STREET
Is Agent for the sale of the very best brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand. A first-class lunch set daily. n1

WANTED, WE WILL GIVE EMPLOYMENT Men and Women
Business that will Pay
From $5 to $5 per day; can be pursued in your own neighborhood, and is entirely honorable. Particulars free, or samples worth several dollars that will enable you to go to work at once, will be sent on receipt of 10c. Address J. LATHAM & CO., 202 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

GROCERIES, WINES AND LIQUORS

IMPORTANT NEWS!
HOUSEKEEPERS CAN SAVE TWENTY PER cent. by purchasing their GROCERIES AND LIQUORS
AT
STEVE McGILLAN'S,
NO. 4 FOURTH STREET.
He guarantees to sell to customers at WHOLESALE RATES, besides delivering goods free of charge. 1y12

FAMILY TRADE WANTED.
T. P. WALL,
Compopolitan Sample Rooms,
NO. 30 THIRD STREET,
Between Stevenson and Mission sts., San Francisco.
HAS REFITTED HIS SAMPLE ROOMS IN first style, and has on sale the very finest brands of WINES AND LIQUORS, imported direct by himself. Also, a choice selection of Family Groceries, which he will sell as low as the lowest. Good Bourbon Whisky, $2 per gallon; or 75 cents per bottle. Fine Whisky, $3 per gallon, or $1 25 per bottle. Wines of all varieties at proportionate rates. Drinking the Sample Rooms is a large room for Sports of all Clubs and Societies. Also a Lunch Counter, where all the choicest and purest whisky papers are supplied. T. P. WALL, No Third st.

"SOLANO."
WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS,
Corner Kearny (City Hall), San Francisco.
G. H. HOPPER.....PROPRIETOR.

JOHN McCULLY,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
Fine Wines and Liquors, Ale & Porter,
S. W. corner Mason and Second sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
S. R.—Oysters in Every Style. fe14m

JOHN T. KELLY'S
BAR AND BILLIARD ROOMS,
No. 210 Market Street,
Opposite Fourth street, SAN FRANCISCO.
Finest Liquors of Also, Liquors and Cigars. n1

DUFFY BROS' SALOON,
621 Merchant Street—San Francisco.
Best Wines, Liquors and Cigars. d2

D. DUFFY. J. DUFFY. S. DUFFY.

LYMAN, RAFFERTY & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND
WHOLESALE LIQUOR DEALERS,
618 BATTERY STREET,
Corner of Merchant.....San Francisco.
se13

EAGLE EXCHANGE,
S.W. corner Mission and Second Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HOLIDAY & LARG.....Proprietors.

WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS
Of the best brands constantly on hand. Pacific Coast agents for
CHARLES LABOUREUR'S
Saloon
Northeast corner Pacific and Jackson sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Only the best brands of Liquors and Cigars. d1

J. H. DOUGHERTY & CO.,
Wines, Liquors and Cigars,
518 California Street,
Above Montgomery.....West California Market.
1y16

H. E. KELLY. JOHN EGAN.
Kelly & Egan,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN FINE WINES AND LIQUORS,
No. 604 Battery Street,
San Francisco.

H. Commeau & Co.
(Successors to P. Riley & Co.)
WHOLESALE LIQUOR MERCHANTS
AND
No. 414 FRONT STREET.

F. & P. J. CASSIN,
Importers and Wholesale Dealers in
WINES AND LIQUORS,
NO. 606 FRONT STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Sole agents for O. E. GOLDEN PLANTATION WHISKY. n30

P. F. BRADY,
LA GRANDE EXCHANGE,
613 Battery street and 61 Front street,
(Opposite Mercantile Temple).....San Francisco.

JOHN MOLLOY,
PRODUCE COMMISSION MERCHANT,
108 DALE ST.
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS
No Cheap Goods, but Dressed and Neat.
We always keep on hand
FRANCIS BUCKLEY,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER
Assie street (West of Powell),
Bonvoz Bills and Kidd.....San Francisco.
All kinds of Carpenter and Jobbing Work done in the shortest notice. my26-tf

REMOVAL.
THE EXCELSIOR IRON WORKS
Have Removed from Stationer street to 181 and 183 Stevenson, between Second st.,
SAN FRANCISCO.
JAMES J. HALLORAN, Manufacturer of all kinds of Architectural and Ornamental Iron Work, Bronze and Brass Castings, Bolts, Nuts, Washers, Brass and Composition Bushings, Pulleys, etc. Job-bing done to order with despatch. Drawings for ornamental work executed. Chisholz Finderiester.

EDWARD CAREY,
Merchant Tailor,
19 Powell Street, near Market,
SAN FRANCISCO.
HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXPE rience in the East in the manufacture of superior clothing, and a thorough knowledge of the special wants of the business, would respectfully ask a trial from the public and strangers, feeling that I could get their general satisfaction. All kinds of cloth kept constantly on hand. All orders promptly attended to. All garments guaranteed to give entire satisfaction. A fine assortment of pants and vests always on hand. 1y1

$10 to $20 PER DAY. AGENTS WANT-ED—Male or Female. Address J. LATHAM & CO., 202 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

SACRAMENTO ADVERTISEMENTS.

P. J. HOPPER,
Attorney-at-Law and General Land Agent.
OFFICE—In U. S. Land Office building, southeast corner Fifth and K streets, SACRAMENTO.
Township Maps of United States Surveys for 1874 Ready.
Particular attention given to business in United States and State Land Offices. Soldiers' Bounty, back pay and pension claims collected.
No Charge for information, either by letter or otherwise. jn16
J. W. ARMSTRONG. A. C. HINKSON
ARMSTRONG & HINKSON,
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW,
Office, corner Seventh and K streets, Sacramento.

DR. TYRRELL,
Licentiate Royal College of Surgeons and King and Queen's College of Physicians, Ireland.
Office—Sacramento Savings Bank Building, corner Fifth and J streets, Sacramento. d15

ARBOR SALOON,
Fifth Street.....SACRAMENTO
MARTIN HYNES.....PROPRIETOR.
The very best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on sale. oc28

COYNE'S SALOON,
DEALERS IN WINES, LIQUORS AND CIGARS,
126 K Street (opp. Pacific Hotel), Sacramento.

Household Liquors of the very best quality. de4
J. J. MCCLELLAN. JOHN DELANEY
NEW ORLEANS SALOON,
Corner K and Sixth Streets.....Sacramento.
McCALLION & DELANEY.....PROPRIETORS.

Only the best of Liquors and Cigars on sale. d2

McMORRY & BROTHER,
Opposition Boot and Shoe Store,
NO. 36 K STREET,
Second store from Fourth.....Sacramento.
Retailing at Wholesale Prices. d2

RAILROAD HOUSE,
Front Street (between K and L).....Sacramento.
B. SHIELDS.....PROPRIETOR.
Board per week.....$5 | Board per day.....$1
This House has been newly furnished, and is kept open day and night. Meals at all hours. Lodging $1 and 50 cents. Baggage will accompany the House. de4

CITY FRONT SALOON,
No. 56 Front street (opposite C. P. R. R. Depot, between J and J streets).....Sacramento.
Choice Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand
CASSIDY & ENGLAND. PROPRIETORS.
J. CASSIDY. T. ENGLAND.

CENTRAL SALOON,
90 K street.....Sacramento.
DUNN & O'HALLORAN, Proprietors.
MARTIN DUNN. THOS. R. O'HALLORAN.

BLUE WING SALOON,
Corner Fourth and K streets.....Sacramento
M. HALLAHAN.....Proprietor.
Notice but the very best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

BARNEY CLARK,
Central Saloon and Oyster and Chop House,
Open night and day. 39

P. H. BREEN'S
SAMPLE ROOMS,
46 and 48 Sixth street, bet. J and K, Sacramento
Open from 6 A.M. until Midnight.
Always on hand Pioneer Bottled Liquors by family case.

J. J. CADOGAN,
104 J street, between Sixth and Seventh, Sacramento.
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
GROCERIES AND PROVISIONS,
Butter, Cheese, Eggs, Bacon, Hams, Lard,
Dry Goods, etc.

CITY HOTEL,
No. 71, 73, 75 and 77 K street, bet. Third and Fourth, Near the Railroad Depot and Steamboat Landing, SACRAMENTO.
P. CONLEN.....Proprietor.
Board, per week.....$4 50 | Meals.....25 cts.
Single Rooms.....50 cts. | Lodgings.....25 cts.
Free Coach and Free Bus Will Be Furnished Boarders.
Family Rooms and Suits of Rooms.

Barber Shop and Bath-House attached. Omnibus always at the Depot and Boats ready to convey passengers to the Hotel free of charge.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
At Front street, between K and L.....Sacramento.
LARKEY & CONRAD.....PROPRIETORS.
Board, per week.....$4 50 | Single Meals.....25 cts.
Lodgings.....25 cts. | Single Rooms.....50 cts.
Free Coach and Baggage conveyed to the House free of charge.

UNITED STATES HOTEL,
At Front and K streets, Sacramento, E. Railroad Depot and Steamboat Landing, Sacramento.
Board, per week.....$5 | Meals.....50 cts.
Lodging.....25 cts. | Single Rooms.....50 cts.
Good accommodations for Families. Free Coach to and from the House. Baggage conveyed free of charge.
PACIFIC HOTEL,
Corner K and Fifth streets.....Sacramento.
STEPHENS & SCHAEFER.....PROPRIETORS.
J. STEPHENS. L. SCHAEFER.

JAMES RYAN,
BOOT AND SHOE STORE,
104 J street, between Eighth and Ninth, Sacramento.
Orders made to order by the best of workmen.

JOSEPH A. CONDIT,
UNDERTAKER,
102 J street, bet. Fourth and Fifth, Sacramento.

WHYTE & NICHOLL,
IMPORTERS AND DEALERS IN
Foreign and Domestic
DRY GOODS
N. W. corner J and Seventh Sts.,
SACRAMENTO.
A Large Stock of MOURNING GOODS always on hand. ma18-tf

T. CANTY,
Merchant Tailor,
67 Sutter

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 7.
March
1—Sunday—Second Sunday in Lent.
2—Monday—Feria.
3—Tuesday—Feria.
4—Wednesday—St. Casimir, Confessor. St. Lachlan, Pope and Martyr.
5—Thursday—Feria.
6—Friday—Feria. Of the Lance and Nails.
7—Saturday—St. Thomas Aquinas, Confessor and Doctor of the Church. St. Perpetua and Felicitas, Martyrs.

THE MONITOR.
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....FEBRUARY 28, 1874.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Judge STANLY created considerable of a sensation in the early part of the week by an address to the Grand Jury, in which he was good enough to suggest that the Mayor of the city and the County Treasurer should both be indicted for felony. The felony consisted in an alleged misappropriation of the public funds, and the misappropriation consisted in the depositing of money in the Bank of California when, according to law, it should have been placed in the treasurer's vault. Unfortunately, the public mind is so familiarized with stories of defalcation and embezzlement the first impression which got abroad was that Mr. Otis and Mr. HOBART had been doing something which was not exactly honest. It was supposed that they had placed large sums of money belonging to the people in bank for the purpose of drawing interest upon it, instead of putting it in their pockets. The balances in the treasury are sometimes very large, not unfrequently approaching a million of dollars, and if this could be done with them, it was indeed a handsome thing—it would accrue to the depositor. But investigation of the facts has shown that Judge STANLY was altogether too hasty, and that his anxiety for an indictment of Messrs. Otis and HOBART was traceable to something besides zeal for the public interests. The moneys in the Bank of California were the proceeds of certified checks, given in payment of taxes, which were placed there for collection. Mr. HOBART, instead of taking the funds out as fast as collected, let them lie there for a few days, when he forwarded them to Sacramento by a draft. There was no interest whatever, we are informed, accrued on the money, which was a special deposit; so neither the Mayor nor the Treasurer had anything to gain by the course pursued. Indeed, they merely followed the routine universally adopted by business men when dealing with large sums of money. But there can be no doubt that the law was technically violated, for the money was actually in the Bank of California when it should have been in the city vaults. The law, however, is inconvenient, and imposes practically impossible duties upon the Treasurer. We think that Judge STANLY might have bided his time, and spared certain members of the Board of the Asylum with which Messrs. OTIS and HOBART were to be charged. If he had done so he would not have placed himself in the somewhat ridiculous position he now occupies before the public. His remarks in anywise reflected upon the Mayor, who is about as high a piece of artificial and empty dignity as we have seen recorded during a very long time.

THE CRUSADE AGAINST WHISKY.

The movement known as the "crusade against whisky," which is now progressing in several of the Eastern States, is a burlesque of the broadest kind. Bands of women parade the streets of the cities, halting before each saloon door, and praying and singing with an energy reflecting credit upon their lungs if upon nothing else. The dispenser of liquors is first politely invited to abandon his trade, and if he refuses, a blockade of song and prayer is immediately instituted. In many instances the treatment has been effectual so far as inducing the saloon-keeper to close his door, and in some cases his "conversion" has proceeded to the extreme of compelling him to spill his stock in trade out on the public street. With any rational movement for the suppression of intemperance we are of course prepared to sympathize in the warmest manner; but it seems to us that this crusade is entitled to no respect from any person. Although the object which it has in founded is a desirable resulting from the abuse of strong drink, yet, it is quite evident that it proceeds more directly from that morbid craving after sensation and excitement characteristic of certain classes of American women. Anything that will give them an excuse for unsexing themselves, for behaving in some way that modest females, as a general thing, are not supposed to behave, especially if "religion" can in the slightest fashion be connected with it, will be readily seized by the strong-minded and turned to account.

There is nothing of necessity more sinful in keeping a saloon than in keeping a butcher shop. There is nothing of necessity more immoral in taking a glass of whisky than in drinking a cup of tea. Undoubtedly the saloon keeper who sells a glass liquor when he has already had sufficient, or who sells it to him when he knows that it injures either him or his family, commits a wrong and endangers the peace of society. Undoubtedly the person who takes from the comfort of his family for the gratification of his passion for liquor, or who drinks so as to in the slightest way interfere with his business or capacity for business, is guilty of a grievous offense against God and his neighbor. But all this only goes to prove that the evil is not in the use but in the abuse of liquor. To maintain that there is anything immoral in partaking of any of the drinks usually vended in saloons, is to assert what is false in fact and heretical in doctrine. The immoderate or injurious consumption of them is what the Catholic Church condemns and reprobates. The horror which she entertains of the sin of drunkenness, the efforts she makes to extirpate it, are attested sufficiently by the great, incontrovertible fact that the best, the most active and the most successful organizations for combating intemperance are those which are under the control and supervision of the bishops and priests. Consequently, Catholics, while they give the singing and praying ladies credit for sincerity, think that they would be more usefully and more decorously employed in their household work at home, and know that any results they achieve in the way of shutting up saloons will be only temporary, and will not materially diminish the amount of intemperance.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

England's "little wars," without which she cannot, apparently, be happy, are not only very expensive things but they are occasionally very troublesome, too. The Abyssinian affair cost a great deal of money, but then it wound up with a "brilliant victory" in which some thousands of King THEODORE'S followers were killed and three British soldiers were slightly hurt. This last consoled John Bull for the immense expenditure of his hard cash. Ameanse, with an unfortunate tendency to call things by their right names, may be unkind enough to insist that this "glorious" affair must have been a massacre and not a battle, but mere Yankee criticisms will never affect the magnificent self complacency of Englishmen. The Ashantee war, in which Lord Chief Justice Britain is at present engaged, while it promises to be even more expensive than the Abyssinian expedition, does not seem likely to be so productive of "glory." The chances are made of sterner stuff than the Abyssinians, and understand fighting incomparably better. A few days ago it was reported that KOFFEE, King of Ashantee, was humbly suing for peace, and that Sir GARNET WOOLSEY, the British commander, had haughtily refused to listen to any overtures until Coomassie, the capital and King's residence, had been captured and, of course, plundered by his troops. Late information shows that Coomassie is not to be occupied as easily as Magdala was, and the chances are that it will never be occupied by the British at all. Sir GARNET WOOLSEY got near the city, but his great anxiety now appears to be to get away from it as speedily as possible. The following telegrams give an account of a great battle, in which it is evident the English suffered a severe defeat. Our readers must bear in mind that the telegrams are all from ? In advance, and that some of them have been sent on the account of the affair. But it is disagreeable enough, even as the English themselves represent it:

LONDON, February 23.—The latest despatches received here from the Gold Coast announce the total defeat of the British troops and the Ashantees. The command of General Sir Garnet Wolseley, is reported as having engaged the troops of King Koffee, at Abrakrampa Coomassie, on the 31st of January. A severe engagement followed, lasting nearly all day. General Woolsey's command, it reported as having suffered severely. The Ashantees fought desperately, and are believed to have sustained heavy losses in killed and wounded. The hostilities ceased at night. When the news left, General Woolsey was in a critical position with the bulk of his command about fifteen miles from Coomassie, awaiting reinforcements and preparing for a renewal of the hostilities at any moment.

Other despatches received this evening from the scene of hostilities near Coomassie say the battle of the 31st January at Abrakrampa resulted in a victory for the British troops. The Ashantee Commander-in-Chief was killed during the battle. Another battle is imminent. On the arrival of reinforcements General Woolsey will immediately open hostilities.

LONDON, February 25th.—The War Office has received no report of the battle said to have occurred between General Woolsey's army and the Ashantees. But an official dispatch has reached the Admiralty Office.

The Globe says if the news be true, a great victory has been gained by the British, and the only course left for Sir Garnet Woolsey is to effect a safe retreat to the coast.

A special dispatch in the Standard says that the Ashantees entirely surrounded the British army, but were eventually driven off with great loss. The principal warchief of the Ashantees was killed. The King has taken command of his army in person, and it was expected he would renew the attack. February 5th was the day decided upon for storming Coomassie by General Woolsey's forces.

Further details of the battle between Sir Sir Garnet Woolsey's force and the Ashantees, say the latter fought desperately. Seventeen British officers were killed or Wounded. The Naval Brigade 165 strong, lost 60 among the Rifle Brigade, 36, and the Engineers 32. The loss of the native allies is unknown, but is very heavy.

The communications of the English with the rear are threatened. It is believed another battle before the army can safely approaching Coomassie from the south-east. In addition to the losses already reported, the Fusiliers lost fifty-six men in the battle with the Ashantees.

The Standard thinks the fact that the 24 of February had been fixed upon for an attack upon Coomassie, indicates that the position of the British troops is not long been, but at the same time says that under the circumstances anybody gives the only chances are nearly for victory, but for saving the army.

The Daily Telegraph special dispatch says the Highlanders suffered a heavy loss in an ambush. The ground was hilly and the bush dense.

All the London journals show in their editorials on the Ashantee news the utmost anxiety for the result. The Times and Telegraph attribute the failure of the peace negotiations to an incomprehensible misapprehension of the British commander to enter Coomassie.

HON. MR. FAREY, of Calaveras, introduced a bill in the Assembly to license gambling. One of the effects of this bill, should it become a law, will be to kill the "guerrilla" games, as they are called, besides bringing a large revenue to the treasury.

Communism in New York.

The sadly-need sensational telegram appeared in the daily papers of Thursday:

NEW YORK, February 25.—A police spy reports the member of New York Communists at three hundred, and says the German and Irish organizations are uniting with Frenchmen. At a recent meeting the Chairman said: "It is not only work we want; it is also liberty, and the abolition of high salaries and monopolization. We want the heads of some of the thieves who are now stealing the funds of the city. We want their heads, and we shall have them. We want to make them suffer what we are now suffering. There is no justice in New York. We will take justice in our own hands and administer it with rifles and bayonets. We have arms already. We will find petroleum and use it as we did in Paris. Our German, American and Irish brothers will help us, and we will help them."

Our readers will remember that we have more than once expressed the opinion that there was real danger to this country in the spread of Communism. It is the very worst policy to ridicule or make little of it in the hope of suppressing it in that way. The growing evil must be faced boldly and dealt with rigorously, or else it will pass beyond control. Wolle we say this we are not much disposed to credit the revelations of his unprincipled informers. There are a great deal more than three hundred, or three thousand, Communists in New York. If there were only the former number, talk of "taking the heads" of any persons would be simply ridiculous. The danger of insanity for even French revolutionists is utter. The reference to the "Irish brothers," moreover, induces us to think that this rage" has been drawing largely upon his imagination for his facts. Communism has no attractions for Irishmen, and they are recognized as its deadliest enemies, both here and wherever they can come into contact.

The Archbishop's Pastoral.

The Pastoral of his Grace the Archbishop, which was read in all the churches of the diocese on Sunday last, and which we give to our readers in to-day's issue, has already produced good effect. The following paragraph, copied from the Stockton Independent, records the very creditable action taken by the Ancient Order of Hibernians in that town—an action which we would wish to see imitated throughout the State. The proper application of St. Patrick's Day would be shorn of none of its attractions by this laudable compliance with the expressed wishes of his Grace, but, on the contrary, would derive greater relief and lustre therefrom. All honor to the zealous and faithful Hibernians of Stockton:

A. O. H.—REGULAR MEETING.—A large attendance of the members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians assembled at Pioneer Hall last night to consult and take action on the Pastoral Letter of Archbishop Alemany, read by Rev. Father Caubert, on Sunday at High Mass. In the Archbishop appealed to the Catholics of the diocese to abstain from parading in balls and dances on St. Patrick's day; to refrain from dancing in the holy season of Lent. The members of the Order having made grand preparations for a ball on that day, it was unanimously agreed to postpone it to Easter Monday night, in accordance with the Pastoral Letter. This society, numbering over two hundred, the above action will leave a large influence over similar societies throughout the diocese contemplating celebrating the day by balls and parties. The tickets sold by the members for the ball on that evening will be good for Easter Monday night.

Water.

We notice with great pleasure that Hon. P. A. Roach has introduced a bill in the Senate to authorize the city of San Francisco to provide and maintain public water works, and to condemn and purchase private property for the purpose; to allow the condemnation of all water right in the peninsula, etc., and to issue such bonds as may be necessary for that purpose." Our limited space will not allow us to say much on the subject to-day; we may observe, however, that the excuse that existed for the creation of a monster monopoly, in the infancy of our city, for the supply of families with water, no longer exists. The monopoly has surely passed long since, and the outrageous charges which we know this monopoly to make are so intolerable infliction upon the whole community. We can refer to thousands of only three persons who pay three dollars and a half for the water they use, without garden, bath, stable or other outdoor purposes, when with such works in possession of the city, they will no doubt it could be supplied for one-third of this price. This is but one of many instances of oppression to which we could refer, but for to-day we simply express the hope that the bill will pass.

DEATH OF REV. JAMES PUJOL.—It is with much regret that we chronicle the death of Rev. James Pujol, late pastor of San Luis Obispo, who departed this life in St. Mary's Hospital on Thursday, February 26th. The deceased who was a native of the province of Catalonia, Spain, and aged thirty years, was a nephew of Right Rev. Dr. Mora, Coadjutor Bishop of Los Angeles and Monterey. The funeral services will take place to-day (Saturday) in St. Francis Church, Vallejo street, solemn Mass commencing at 9 o'clock.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL'S SOCIETY, ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—The following is the report of the lady members of the St. Vincent de Paul Society attached to St. Patrick's parish for the year 1873. Amount received during 1873, from contributing members, $895 65; amount expended, $1,060. The Society assisted during the year some nine hundred persons. Thanks are returned to the many contributing members of the parish, and particularly to Mr. Isaac Upham for his annual donation of provisions.

The apportionment bill has passed in engrossment in the Assembly by a majority of 19 in its provisions, and is, therefore, almost certain to fall, at least in its present form.

Washington's Birthday at St. Mary's College.

An appropriate and admirably managed entertainment in honor of Washington's birthday took place in St. Mary's College. The celebration was conducted under the auspices of the members of the Junior Literary Society, and was carried out in such a manner as to reflect the highest credit on their training ability and patriotism. They entered into the spirit of the day with enthusiasm, and therefore fully realized the high expectations which their friends had formed. The College hall was tastefully decorated and festooned with flags and evergreens, and pendant from a triumphal arch fronting the platform was the monogram, "Washington," executed in flowers. With a laudable ambition of public celebrations, they elected a president of the day, an orator also, and had, besides, the good fortune to find a genuine poet. Invitations were issued, and by the time the literary exercises commenced the hall was thronged by an appreciative audience.

The young President, Mr. Charles F. Hanlon, introduced the business of the evening in a neat, manly speech, and throughout conducted the proceedings in a dignified manner. The selections made for declamation were in excellent taste, and admirably calculated to extol the grand character of him whose memory they designed to honor. While it must be admitted that pieces recited by Messrs. J. Shirley, J. Harrington and Alex. Borgh were splendidly rendered and deservedly applauded, it will not be invidious to single out the character of Washington, so glowingly depicted by R. J. Mahony, as eminently worthy of the laudation with which it was received. The original essays by Messrs. John Henry Hill, Quinlan and Harrington were also excellent productions—action for which Mr. Mary's has a well-earned reputation. Their spirit, thoroughly republican, American and patriotic, is, however, the merit for which we admire them most.

The oration, delivered by H. Kellum, was an elaborate effort, which does honor to his heart and head. This would have been the great feature of the evening's celebration if there had been something more than pleasing to bring forward. This was an original poem, with the ring of the true poet in it, written for the occasion by N. J. O'Connell French, Esq. With characteristic kindness he delivered it personally, and as in delivery he has few equals in the country, the poem was enthusiastically received.

These literary exercises were agreeably varied by musical pieces, which were ably rendered. Solos, duets and choral solos were excellently performed by Messrs. Cullen, Sanchez and Greene. The selection of St. Patrick's Day would be shorn of none of its attractions by this laudable compliance with the expressed wishes of his Grace, but, on the contrary, would derive greater relief and lustre therefrom. All honor to the zealous and faithful Hibernians of Stockton:

A. O. H.—REGULAR MEETING.—A large attendance of the members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians assembled at Pioneer Hall last night to consult and take action on the Pastoral Letter of Archbishop Alemany, read by Rev. Father Caubert, on Sunday at High Mass. In the Archbishop appealed to the Catholics of the diocese to abstain from parading in balls and dances on St. Patrick's day; to refrain from dancing in the holy season of Lent. The members of the Order having made grand preparations for a ball on that day, it was unanimously agreed to postpone it to Easter Monday night, in accordance with the Pastoral Letter. This society, numbering over two hundred, the above action will leave a large influence over similar societies throughout the diocese contemplating celebrating the day by balls and parties. The tickets sold by the members for the ball on that evening will be good for Easter Monday night.

Debate Between Satan and Mother Eve, As Reported by Alex. Campbell.

The greatest debate in the annals of time, so far as consequences were involved, was upon the proper interpretation of a portion of paragraph. The theme of not a single nation, of an empire or of an age, but of the world, was thrown upon the decision of two persons; the one of these two persons the word is also to be said, was the most subtle, polished, accomplished, intriguing, logic-splitting of all the powers of darkness, and gifted talent and sorrow and death.—Alexander Campbell's Millennial Harp, p. 30.

Thinking that a few Catholic items from this section of the State might prove interesting to some if not all of your readers, I propose to send a succinct account of a religious ceremony which took place on last Sunday at the Convent of Mercy in the most beautiful Bury.

The morning was ushered in with a pure atmosphere, a clear sky and a brilliant sun making the day an exceptional one, so that the most chronic grumblers of coughs and colds could find nothing in it to complain of. The town, which is surrounded like an oyster in a shell, by mountains clad in the "beautiful snow," looked really pleasant; and the peerless as well as world-renowned Shasta Butte, sitting like an

"IMPERIUM IN IMPERIO,"

Smiled down on the diversified scenery of its neighboring rivals, none of which, however, can ever aspire to the beauty or sublimity of the "old patriarch." The Convent bell—not the sweetest in sound having gone through the ordeal of fire, called the hour that a profession of consecration to the Sisters was to take place, and crowds anxious and inquisitive denizens with the better halves could be seen turning the corners in a great hurry, all wending their way to the house of prayer where Mass was to be offered up and the sermon preached. Long before half-past ten the hall was packed with what a lady styled "the elite of Yreka." NO understanding French enough to know the meaning of a single word in this isolated county, and its bearing on the community, I will not wait to inquire, but will pass on to what did take place and the effect it produced.

THE CEREMONY.

The hour having arrived, the Rev. J. J. Cullen entered the hall in sontane and surplice, preceded by the altar boys in red cassocks and surplices. While the Father was blessing the black veil and ring, all the Sisters entered in processional form, and took their places on either side of the altar. A cross-bearer, with two young ladies dressed in white, led the procession, and as they passed up the middle aisle, it was easy to see that there were but few dry eyes in the hall. The solemn silence, the raised step, the black dresses, the mortified look all reminded one strongly of the grave.

The ceremony which was then performed by the altar boys in the day time. I suppose the front of night is caused by the coldness of the winds blowing from the snowy mountains which surround this valley. Nothing worth mentioning has been done in the line of farming. Many of those who have water are doing well. This will be the best season they have had for many years. If it continues some time give you a description of this country, its scenery and future prospects, together with an account of the adjacent Modoc country. CAVAN RACES.

THERE is no article in domestic use more dangerous to the health of consumers than spurious yeast powders, a large amount of which has been recently thrown upon the market. It is made free from all imitation of the genuine materials and cream tartar. The powders marked "S. Calender" can be safely used, as all goods from his establishment are guaranteed by the manufacturer.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.—Some notices of books and magazines received for review are unavoidably held over until next week.

For the rich with few children it may be but a blow without tips, but those who are blessed with little money and many children it is a release to buy any other than SILVER TIPPED shoes.

YREKA CORRESPONDENCE.

YREKA, February 17, 1874.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir.—Thinking that a few Catholic items from this section of the State might prove interesting to some if not all of your readers, I propose to send a succinct account of a religious ceremony which took place on last Sunday at the Convent of Mercy in the most beautiful Bury.

The morning was ushered in with a pure atmosphere, a clear sky and a brilliant sun making the day an exceptional one, so that the most chronic grumblers of coughs and colds could find nothing in it to complain of. The town, which is surrounded like an oyster in a shell, by mountains clad in the "beautiful snow," looked really pleasant; and the peerless as well as world-renowned Shasta Butte, sitting like an

"IMPERIUM IN IMPERIO,"

Smiled down on the diversified scenery of its neighboring rivals, none of which, however, can ever aspire to the beauty or sublimity of the "old patriarch." The Convent bell—not the sweetest in sound having gone through the ordeal of fire, called the hour that a profession of consecration to the Sisters was to take place, and crowds anxious and inquisitive denizens with the better halves could be seen turning the corners in a great hurry, all wending their way to the house of prayer where Mass was to be offered up and the sermon preached. Long before half-past ten the hall was packed with what a lady styled "the elite of Yreka." NO understanding French enough to know the meaning of a single word in this isolated county, and its bearing on the community, I will not wait to inquire, but will pass on to what did take place and the effect it produced.

THE CEREMONY.

The hour having arrived, the Rev. J. J. Cullen entered the hall in sontane and surplice, preceded by the altar boys in red cassocks and surplices. While the Father was blessing the black veil and ring, all the Sisters entered in processional form, and took their places on either side of the altar. A cross-bearer, with two young ladies dressed in white, led the procession, and as they passed up the middle aisle, it was easy to see that there were but few dry eyes in the hall. The solemn silence, the raised step, the black dresses, the mortified look all reminded one strongly of the grave.

The ceremony which was then performed by the altar boys in the day time. I suppose the front of night is caused by the coldness of the winds blowing from the snowy mountains which surround this valley. Nothing worth mentioning has been done in the line of farming. Many of those who have water are doing well. This will be the best season they have had for many years. If it continues some time give you a description of this country, its scenery and future prospects, together with an account of the adjacent Modoc country. CAVAN RACES.

THERE is no article in domestic use more dangerous to the health of consumers than spurious yeast powders, a large amount of which has been recently thrown upon the market. It is made free from all imitation of the genuine materials and cream tartar. The powders marked "S. Calender" can be safely used, as all goods from his establishment are guaranteed by the manufacturer.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.—Some notices of books and magazines received for review are unavoidably held over until next week.

For the rich with few children it may be but a blow without tips, but those who are blessed with little money and many children it is a release to buy any other than SILVER TIPPED shoes.

THE REPRESENTATION OF LOUTH.

DUNDALK, February 2.—A meeting of the clergy and laity of the patriotic county of Louth was held to-day in the Town Hall for the purpose of selecting the popular candidates for the county and borough. There was a large and respectable attendance from all parts of the county. The industrial traders and shop-keepers of the town were also numerously represented. Throughout the proceedings the greatest unanimity and enthusiasm was displayed, and the utmost determination was manifested to have earnest advocates of Home Rule, Denominational Education, Purity of the land, and the removal of the odious pinioners. As will be seen, the meeting unanimously selected Mr. Callan and Mr. A. M. Sullivan to be their future representatives for the county, and Mr. Callan, the sole member, for the borough.

His Lordship, on the motion of Mr. H. E. Kelly, Mr. Owen Mackey, President of the Louth Independent Club, was called to the chair. Among those present were the Rev. Patrick McCullagh, P.P., Dromiskan; Rev. H. McKee, P.P., Tenure; Rev. J. Tuite, P.P.; Rev. Mr. Murphy, P.P.; Rev. James Markey, P.P., Tallanstown; Rev. Mr. Dillon, Kilcurry; Rev. Mr. Bannon, Cogher Head; Rev. Mr. Kennedy, C.C.; Rev. Mr. Smith, C.C., Tallanstown; Rev. Mr. Brennan, J.P.; J. Kelly, Ballybarrack; Cl. M. Neary, Mr. Murnagh, solicitor; P. Hall, Mr. Hall, J. Hamill, Joseph Farrell, T.C.; J. Carroll, T.C.; Terence Hughes, T.C.; P. Sellors, P.L.G.; J. Finnegan, Dr. Hughes, Rev. John Gallagher, C.C., Tullyallen; Rev. P. Kieran, P.P., Dromiskee.

The Chairman having briefly expressed his thanks for the honor done him in calling him to the chair, Mr. Patrick McCullagh came forward, and was received with loud cheers. He said he never felt greater pleasure in his life in having acted on the purpose for the acceptance of that meeting to meet in representative of Louth in Parliament. They were men not of to-day or yesterday, but well known, well tried, and well able to respond to the duties of the position. The selection of Mr. Callan was a good one, and one which would give great satisfaction to the people. The name of Sullivan was a household word in Ireland, and he was proud to say that in this county and in this town the Sullivans had joined the movement, and that the Fenian element was strong within it. He (Mr. McCullagh) would give just a brief sketch of the time play the part of a Liberal member. Mr. Callan had been elected by the Catholics of this county, and he was bound to be responsible to them for his conduct. He was not a follower or helper of English Whiglets, I am not your man, I'll no compromise with the Saxon," but a Liberal Irishman, who would be prepared to support the Liberal Government when they were right, and to oppose them when they were wrong. He (Mr. McCullagh) would not detain them longer, but would say that he was prepared to support the candidature of Mr. Callan.

The Rev. Mr. Kirke, in seconding the resolution, said he was delighted that such a gentlemen were to represent the United Irishmen of Louth, and especially as they had been proposed for many a year. They were worthily proposed by Rev. Father McCullagh, who was one of the first priests to join the Home Rule movement. Mr. Callan had represented the borough of Dundalk for the last two years, during which time he had not given a single vote against the views of the people. The latter Irish Ireland nobly; he had given his time and attention and his business capacity to the interest of the country, and therefore he (Mr. Kirke) felt it an honor to second the proposal that he be one of their future members. With regard to Mr. Sullivan, his abilities were well known. He believed that he was a thoroughly good Irishman and a sound Irishman.

The motion was then put from the chair and carried unanimously.

Mr. Callan on coming forward was received with loud cheers. He said he would not never before did he stand in the presence of the men of Louth with a deeper feeling of gratitude than he did on that occasion, and he would say that to be a Catholic, nor of any Government, to confer upon him; and they knew that in doing so they did him honor to be elected by the constituencies of the country, under protection of the ballot, may be moulded to the right principles of nationality, and be guided into an indifference of results and a consequent carelessness of the exercise of their franchise, which is the sole and paramount declaration of the ever-faithful energy of Louth. He also esteemed it a compliment to be elected by a constituency of which Mr. Sullivan, whom he regarded as one of the purest and most single-minded politicians of the present day, in 1865, when he was thought a traitor for Irishism Assembly, and was elected by Mr. Sullivan came there and gave them his personal sentiments and those of his journal in that dying hour, and declared that it was but meet and right that such a compliment should be paid to him by the people of Louth. After alluding to the pretensions of Mr. Russell to the borough, he paid a compliment to Lord Claremont as a landlord, and concluded by stating a telegram had been received from Mr. Sullivan accepting the nomination.

Mr. Callan was then, on the motion of Mr. Kirke, also declared to be the borough of Dundalk also.

A subscription list having been opened for the county and the borough, the proceedings terminated.

MR. SULLIVAN'S ADDRESS TO THE ELECTORS OF LOUTH.

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN.—The patriotic priests and people of Louth, in public meeting assembled, have done me the high honor to present myself as a candidate to appeal to the charitable to aid them in getting a church where they can accommodate their congregations, whose numbers are much anxiously to be present on such occasions as that described. Indeed, many would attend on Sundays but for want of accommodation. The Rev. Father Callen will undertake the difficult task early next summer of building one here, and another at Fort Jones, where the people are equally in need of accommodation.

It is very cold here at present; frost every night, and sometimes snow and rain in the day time. I suppose the frost at night is caused by the coldness of the winds blowing from the snowy mountains which surround this valley. Nothing worth mentioning has been done in the line of farming. Many of those who have water are doing well. This will be the best season they have had for many years. If it continues some time give you a description of this country, its scenery and future prospects, together with an account of the adjacent Modoc country. CAVAN RACES.

THERE is no article in domestic use more dangerous to the health of consumers than spurious yeast powders, a large amount of which has been recently thrown upon the market. It is made free from all imitation of the genuine materials and cream tartar. The powders marked "S. Calender" can be safely used, as all goods from his establishment are guaranteed by the manufacturer.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.—Some notices of books and magazines received for review are unavoidably held over until next week.

For the rich with few children it may be but a blow without tips, but those who are blessed with little money and many children it is a release to buy any other than SILVER TIPPED shoes.

IN YOUTH.

A solemn duty devolves on those who have assumed the guidance and leadership of the new national movement. Upon their conduct and character whether this movement shall be a power for good or a paltry pretext for personal ambitions. The selection of the ballot, may be moulded to the right principles of nationality, and be guided into an indifference of results and a consequent carelessness of the exercise of their franchise, which is the sole and paramount declaration of the ever-faithful energy of Louth. He also esteemed it a compliment to be elected by a constituency of which Mr. Sullivan, whom he regarded as one of the purest and most single-minded politicians of the present day, in 1865, when he was thought a traitor for Irishism Assembly, and was elected by Mr. Sullivan came there and gave them his personal sentiments and those of his journal in that dying hour, and declared that it was but meet and right that such a compliment should be paid to him by the people of Louth. After alluding to the pretensions of Mr. Russell to the borough, he paid a compliment to Lord Claremont as a landlord, and concluded by stating a telegram had been received from Mr. Sullivan accepting the nomination.

Mr. Callan was then, on the motion of Mr. Kirke, also declared to be the borough of Dundalk also.

A subscription list having been opened for the county and the borough, the proceedings terminated.

MR. SULLIVAN'S ADDRESS TO THE ELECTORS OF LOUTH.

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN.—The patriotic priests and people of Louth, in public meeting assembled, have done me the high honor to present myself as a candidate to appeal to the charitable to aid them in getting a church where they can accommodate their congregations, whose numbers are much anxiously to be present on such occasions as that described. Indeed, many would attend on Sundays but for want of accommodation. The Rev. Father Callen will undertake the difficult task early next summer of building one here, and another at Fort Jones, where the people are equally in need of accommodation.

It is very cold here at present; frost every night, and sometimes snow and rain in the day time. I suppose the frost at night is caused by the coldness of the winds blowing from the snowy mountains which surround this valley. Nothing worth mentioning has been done in the line of farming. Many of those who have water are doing well. This will be the best season they have had for many years. If it continues some time give you a description of this country, its scenery and future prospects, together with an account of the adjacent Modoc country. CAVAN RACES.

THERE is no article in domestic use more dangerous to the health of consumers than spurious yeast powders, a large amount of which has been recently thrown upon the market. It is made free from all imitation of the genuine materials and cream tartar. The powders marked "S. Calender" can be safely used, as all goods from his establishment are guaranteed by the manufacturer.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.—Some notices of books and magazines received for review are unavoidably held over until next week.

For the rich with few children it may be but a blow without tips, but those who are blessed with little money and many children it is a release to buy any other than SILVER TIPPED shoes.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

There was $968,300 in the City Treasury last Saturday.

The deaths in this city last week were 71, of which 52 were males and 19 females.

It is still confidently reported that the strong-minded ladies of this city are organizing crusades against the liquor dealers.

The net earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad for 1873 were $5,222,999, an increase of $1,191,930 over the previous year.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company have reduced the fare for cabin passengers to $150 to Yokohama and $200 to Hongkong.

Brigadier General Hawston went on a visit to Berkeley on Washington's birthday, and no flag was displayed over his head-quarters.

The President has directed that so much of Mesdocelo county as now belongs to the Hamboldt Land District shall be transferred to the San Francisco Land Office.

There are said to be two thousand liquor dealers in this city who have their doors open and ample space within, where ladies can come to pray and sing.

The Sancelito Land and Ferry Company have purchased the steamer Petaluma, formerly employed in the Petaluma trade, and will refit her for their business in place of the Princess.

The docket of the Police Court is said to have numbered nearly 200 cases on Tuesday morning. The intemperance legion was represented full rank after their celebration of Washington's birthday.

The Vasco de Gama, the first of the new British Orient line, sailed with $153,340 in treasure and a fair cargo, valued at $50,-700. Of the treasure shipped, $42,000 was in trade dollars and only $2,647 in gold.

Jacob's famous painting of Samson and Delilah is among the valuables of the Bank Exchange to be sold by the Commissioner in Bankruptcy in a few days. Twelve thousand dollars have been refused for it on three occasions.

The Board of Supervisors passed a resolution on Tuesday requesting the Board of Education to reestablish the Cosmopolitan schools at their earliest convenience, so that we can have the additional expense to the School Department." Business.

The three-principal rain-gauges in this city differ materially as to the amount of rain that has fallen. The last is 17.20 inches, another nearly 19 and the third 20.25. Who can decide when doctors disagree?

The foreign commerce of this port for January, with respect to the export trade, compares as follows with that of Portland and Philadelphia: January exports from San Francisco, $2,239,200; from Baltimore, $2,709,800; from Philadelphia, $3,585,000.

The receipt of fees received by the City Surveyor's office have amounted in the last three years to seven times over $10,000, or over $35,000 a year. The Call says that the income last month reached $60,300 in two years, but fails to tell how many deputies he had in that time, or how much he paid them.

A banner, very tastefully worked, was presented on Thursday night of last week to Usher Lodge No. 6 of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. The address in presentation was delivered by Nellie Sullivan, and the flag was accepted on behalf of the Division by M. C. Hassett, who made a feeling response. Upwards of 300 ladies and gentlemen were present.

The Supreme Court has rendered a decision in the Railroad Commissioner case of Neumann vs. Matthewson. Chief Justice Sawyer delivered the opinion, which was concurred in by all the other Judges. The Court holds that Neumann's election was illegal, and therefore there was no authorizing the election.

All public business was suspended on Washington's birthday, and the lovely weather attracted everybody to the streets, but there was no general and unified demonstration. The National Guard, the Emmet Guard and the Shields Guard were the only organizations, civic or military, that celebrated the day.

In January, 1873, the freight transported by rail to the East, from the cities of San Francisco, San José, Stockton, Sacramento and Marysville, was 9,740,196 lbs., and in January of this year, 9,744,176 lbs. The difference is found in the shipments from the city, 32,000 lbs. due to the large quantities of barley sent forward.

The Commercial Herald gives the amount of lager beer made in this city during the year 1873 at about, 175,000 bbls. Of this amount the Philadelphia made 37,838 bbls; the Empire, 20,316 bbls; the Albany, 14,-276 bbls; the Washington, 13,110 bbls; the Bavaria, about 30 breweries, making from 8,705 down to 100 bbls.

A dispatch from Washington says it is proposed by a Senate Committee to reduce the postal system and the free delivery of letters. It is intimated that if cities want free delivery of letters, they must, and not the whole people of the United States, who should pay for it.

According to the Auditor's report the expenses of the Health Department of this city have increased forty per cent. in the last four years. When the small-pox prevailed in 1869 the salary account amounted to less than $8,000. The last year it was over $15,000.

No claimant has yet been found for the watch which was in the bag poisoned from a Chinese thief in this city, some weeks ago. The following description is on the inside: "Presented by Rev. Dr. Fleming, Bishop of Newfoundland, to Jas. Purcell, Esq., architect." A lady of this city remembers the circumstance, and says that Purcell lately resided in New York. The British Consul in New York has been written to.

No claimant has yet been found for the watch which was in the bag poisoned from a Chinese thief in this city, some weeks ago. The following description is on the inside: "Presented by Rev. Dr. Fleming, Bishop of Newfoundland, to Jas. Purcell, Esq., architect." A lady of this city remembers the circumstance, and says that Purcell lately resided in New York. The British Consul in New York has been written to.

MARRIED.

BOWES—CALLAGHAN—In the city, February 17, by the Rev. Father Ouffee, at St. Joseph's Church, Michael Bowes to Miss Callaghan, both of this city.

BRADY—REILLY—In the city, February 19, by Rev. Peter Le Dogue, Thomas Brady to Miss Mary Reilly.

RAMIREZ—PERALTA—In this city, February 19, at 9 o'clock, by Rev. Father Prendergast, Mr. Jesus Ramirez to Miss Antonia Peralta, both natives of Santa Cruz.

DIED.

KELLY—In this city, February 19, Annie Jane Kelly, sister of John M. A. R. and Rev. P. J. Kelly, also of Miss Johnnie Kelly, of St. Joseph's Asylum, Mountain View, Cal., aged 18 years. R. I. P.

DURKEE—In this city, February 23, Ann, wife of Dr. Durkee, aged 61 years.

NUGENT—In this city, February 19, Mary Jane, daughter of P. T. and Sarah Jane Nugent, aged 5 months and 17 days.

SULLIVAN—In this city, February 20, John Thomas, son of Thomas J. and Mary Sullivan, aged 2 years and 10 days.

MOULTRIN—In this city, February 19, Frank Moultrin, a native of the parish Inniscarra, county Cork, Ireland, aged 60 years.

MAHONEY—In this city, February 21, William B. Joseph, a native of Ireland, England, aged 43 years.

WILSON—In this city, February 20, James Wilson, a native of Ireland, aged 74 years.

HEFFERNAN—In this city, February 21, James Heffernan, aged 43 years.

KIELY—In this city, February 21, Jeremiah Kiely, a native of Ireland, aged 42 years.

GANNON—In this city, February 20, James, son of Richard and Lizzie Gannon, aged 7 months.

KROUSE—In this city, February 19, Minnie, daughter of Thomas and Mary Krouse, aged 2 years, 11 months and 19 days.

LYNCH—In this city, February 20, Mary, wife of Thomas Lynch, a native of county Limerick, Ireland, aged 51 years.

LYNCH—In this city, February 21, Mary Lynch, aged 3 years.

LYON—In this city, February 21, John F. Lyons, aged 7 years

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

A "Scene" in Dundalk.

DUNDALK, January 30.—An extraordinary scene in connection with Mr. O'Reilly Dease's contract was witnessed here this evening. Mr. Dease, accompanied by his conducting agent and another gentleman, arrived by the Imperial Hotel with the intention of canvassing some gentlemen in town who have votes for the county. Before they had proceeded as far as the postoffice a large crowd had collected, which hooted and hissed the party as they passed down the Market Square. As they entered Clanbrassil street the crowd became extremely augmented, and the hooting and yelling, mingled with cries of "coercion," was intense. Before they reached Lower Clanbrassil street the crowd closed in upon them, and shoved them into a narrow lane, where Mr. Dease was very roughly jostled about. The police were then called into requisition, and having surrounded Mr. Dease and his friends, escorted them, amid great hooting and uproar, to the house of Mrs. Harold, where the Rev. Father McCann resides. The crowd surrounded the house, and kept hooting and shouting to turn him out. Father McCann asked the crowd to allow Mr. Dease to proceed quietly to his hotel, but it was utterly useless. A car was then procured and pulled up before the door, when a passage from the door of the car was forced and filled by police at each side, but just as Mr. Dease was about stepping into the car the driver lashed the horse and drove at an awful rate up the street, leaving Mr. Dease in the midst of the crowd. The cross that ensued was indescribable. The two solicitors, leaving their clients to look after their part of valor, were not to be found; and Mr. Dease, despite the efforts of the police, unfortunately received very rough treatment from the crowd. His hat was broken in, and sticking laces were thrown at him as he was jostled from one side of the street to the other. Supported by the police, Mr. Dease, who, indeed, seems to be in good health, was in a fainting condition when he reached the hotel, into which he was assisted by the police constables.

John Mitchel's Candidature.

A meeting of the Nationalists of Cork was held on the evening of January 26th to promote the candidature of Mr. John Mitchel in opposition to Mr. N. D. Murphy. Mr. E. Murphy was moved to the chair, and the principal persons present were Mr. J. Horne, Queenstown; Colonel Richard Burke, Mr. J. F. O'Brien, W. Mulcahy, W. Murphy, C. P. O'Sullivan, H. G. Walsh and W. Bradshaw. The chairman said the Nationalists of the city were determined not to allow one of their late representatives to misrepresent them any longer, and resolved to get a man in whom they placed implicit reliance—one who had never betrayed the sacred cause in him, and who had lived and suffered for Ireland. The chairman further announced that Mr. Mitchel had formally consented to stand for a city. A resolution declaring John Mitchel to be a fit and proper person to represent the city of Cork in the House of Commons was passed unanimously. Mr. Horne proposed the next resolution, which was eulogistic in terms of service of Mr. Joseph P. Bourke, and alleging that Mr. N. D. Murphy had betrayed the trust reposed in him, and had supported Coercion and other acts oppressive to Ireland. A resolution pledging the meeting to support the candidature of Mr. Mitchel in connection with Mr. Bonayge was also adopted.

A Good Man Gone.

The grave has closed upon a man whose name will long be cherished in grateful Irish memory with the first heavy blow at Orange domination in Ireland, and at Catholic proscription in the United Kingdom. It was by the chivalry of Henry Grattan, aided powerfully by the Catholic Association, that the baleful ascendancy of a bad faction, then symbolized in the name of Beresford, was shaken to its base. Never was a greater fight fought, never was a nobler victory won for the cause of civil and religious liberty than that of which Waterford was the scene in the summer of 1826. That victory was the precursor of Catholic Emancipation, and of that triumph Henry Villiers Stuart was the hero. Without his and the popular battle against Corporate abuses, the stronghold of Orangeism in the South of Ireland, though we are happy to say it is so no longer, could not have been fought. The defeat of Lord George Beresford was the opening to the Clare election, of August, 1828, and therefore to Catholic Emancipation. And by one of those strange coincidences that happen in life, it so happened that the very measure which Henry Villiers Stuart contributed so much to carry against formidable opposition, to a successful issue forty-five years ago, now enables his son, reliable and old friend of the house, the Marquis of Bute, to take his seat in the House of Lords.—Weekly Register, January 31.

The King's County Election and the Catholic Priests.

At a meeting of the parish priests, held at Frankford (January 26, 1874), Very Rev. M. MacAlroy, Tullamore, in the chair, and Rev. John Doyle, Secretary, the following resolution, proposed by Very Rev. Dr. Belger, and seconded by Very Rev. Kyan, Shannon, was unanimously adopted:

"That, from our late representative, Sir Patrick O'Brien and Sergeant Sherlock, having habitually fulfilled their pledges made at the election on the three great questions then agitating the country, specially for voting for the overthrow of the Government on a late momentous occasion, when it was attempted to force a system of education on Catholic Ireland, and having in their present addresses pledged themselves to the full of the measures of that which the country now seems to have fixed in its heart, are, in our opinion, deserving the support of the electors of King's county."

Signed on behalf of the priests of the diocese of Meath, residing in King's county, MATTHEW KELLY, V.G.

Signed on behalf of the priests of the diocese of Killaloe,

MICHAEL BULGER, V.G.

Signed on behalf of the priests of the diocese of Clonmacnoise, residing in King's county, KYRAN EGAN, V.F.

Signed on behalf of the priests of the diocese of Kildare and Leighlin, residing in King's county, JOHN DOYLE, P.P.

In signing the foregoing resolutions, we direct them in our own part, and on the part of the priests of King's county, all intention of dictating to the electors.

M. MACALROY, V.G., Chairman.

ENGLAND.

Protestant Infallibility.

A Protestant clergyman has made the discovery that in the Protestant Church infallibility is in fact practice, and that in the same Church there is much need for a fixed creed. The Rev. F. W. Waters is what is called a Dissenting clergyman, and from the ministry of Harborne chapel, near Birmingham. The reason for his secession show up in a very striking manner Protestant Church practices. In his farewell sermon Mr. Waters says:

"Infallibility was the very position a Dissenting Church assumed, calling itself the Church of Christ, arrogating to itself the power to decide the spiritual condition of men and women, and constituting the sacraments to those whom it considered fit and proper persons. He called this a violation of the first principles of Protestantism, and an arrogation of that infallibility which was alone an attribute of God Himself. Especially was this assumption absurd when the Church did not even possess a creed. They knew what Papal infallibility was, but what the Protestant infallibility of Harborne chapel was no one could tell, except one or two favored individuals who had stood up among their brethren and declared themselves the champions of an orthodoxy which as yet only existed in imagination, and had never been seen nor heard. As to tyranny, it appeared that the minority in a Dissenting Church was able to decide, both for themselves and the congregation, what preaching should be dispensed from the pulpit by declaring their determination to maintain orthodoxy."

Yet, a few months ago, he raised the divinely-authorized infallibility of the head of the Catholic Church.—London Universe.

The "Destiny of the Irish Race."

This was the title of a lecture delivered on Monday night, January 26th, to a highly appreciative audience, by the Rev. Dr. Anderdon, in Edinburgh. The lecture was announced by definitely stating that the word destiny, repudiating the Napoleonic idea of a fatalistic signification, and using it here as denoting the end for which the Irish race seemed created. He said he had some claim to speak of the Irish, as nine of the happiest years of his life had been spent in Ireland, and he had lately passed two years in America among the Irish there, and had everywhere found them a highly intelligent, religious, zealous and industrious people. The lecturer proceeded to say that, looking at the geographical position of Ireland, he would expect to find in it an enlightened people, and keeping in mind that, as it had been well expressed, Ireland had its back to the past and its face to the west, he would expect them to emigrate principally westward. Though remembering he was addressing a Scotland, he must not overlook the fact that they were great emigrators in all directions, and quoted the names of Scotland, which is indebted for its very name to the colony of Scots from Dalriada, who settled in the valley of the Clyde. Rapidly alluding to some of the instances of Irish modern history, including the name of Daniel O'Connell, etc., Dr. Anderdon stated his belief that the destiny of the Irish race was all opposite to that of the Jew. The Jew was teacher and propagator of Catholic faith—a faith which had formally ceased to be the inheritance of the globe. After a spiritual appeal to them present to insist on highness of Catholic education, he alluded to immorality in the little Palace of the Elysée, which have been well attended, as regards both the numbers and the quality of the visitors. The position of the Government in the National Assembly is now pretty firm and secure. The small knot of extreme Legitimists are gradually sobering into amalgamation with the other members of the Right, and the Left Centre are tending down into moderate acquiescence in the accomplished fact that Marshal MacMahon is elected with power for seven years, and that M. Thiers is a thing of the past. The failure of the Cabinet upon the Mayors' bill has apparently been accepted by the section led by M. Calvier Perier, as evidence of the futility of further fac-tous opposition, and Gambetta is turned preacher of prudence. There are, of course, occasional explosions of Communist rage in the Chamber, but, on the whole, the State vessel is sailing at present in smooth water. During the recent discussion of the Army Organization bill the Communistic members protested vehemently against the appointment of army chaplains. This called up the Bishop of Orleans, who eloquently defended the proposal, and in the course of his remarks paid a grateful tribute to the good conduct and religious sentiment of the German soldiers while in occupation of Orleans. We are not surprised at the testimony of a French bishop to the religious character of the German soldiery; for it has been our fate not to see obtrusions in various parts of Germany crowded with soldiers at prayer, and with attentive and devout worshipers we never observed anywhere else. They all carried and occasionally used their books in the hymns and responses, according to the German custom; all paid marked attention to the sermon, and all behaved most reverently at the Mass. Most heartily do we wish that we could speak in similar terms of the conduct of the soldiers of France.—Weekly Register, January 31.

Spain.

Spain Pacified.

The Courrier de Paris gives some details of a quarrel between Prince Napoleon and M. Gallenf d'Istria. According to this account, the Prince Napoleon, accompanied by a friend, called upon the Prince at his residence in the Rue de l'Arcede, where he found him surrounded by a number of persons who form the entourage of the late Emperor Imperial dynasty. In the course of a conversation upon political affairs, Prince Napoleon bitterly complained of the conduct of the Bonapartist party in the Assembly, which he accused of assisting the Ministry, instead of endeavoring to overturn it, as was its duty. He added, applied that the party had no ground of complaint against the Ministry, since had shown itself very well disposed upon the subject of dissolution of the Imperial civil list; and that, moreover, if it were to be returned, the next Ministry would be under the direction of the Duc d' Audiffret Pasquier, which was certainly as much more favorable to the Bonapartist party. "What matters that!" exclaimed the Prince, "the Ministry is infected with clericalism, and you support it." "But, Monseigneur, replied M. Gallenf, "France is Catholic, and we fulfill our duties as it representatives by being supported by Catholic majority, without, however, being in any way clerical." The Prince became furious at this reply, and went so far as to declare that France was not Catholic, and that it was a country to be "set right." "Why," added he, "I know what is in the head of you, and that you would gladly vote for Henri V. if you were asked to do so." M. Gallenf then rose, and during the Prince fell in the face, replied, "Monseigneur, whenever I may asked to vote for the restoration of a Prince to the throne of France, I shall vote for the Prince Imperial, for him alone, and never for any other." Soon, of course, the conversation ceased, and particularly addressing himself to M. N——, a former mayor of Ajaccio, and an ex-priest of Marseilles, he added, "As for those creatures who advise you to play such a part I despise them, and will remain no longer in their company."

The Paris "Univers."

The excitement caused by the arbitrary suspension of the Univers has not yet subsided in France, and there is some reason to hope that the President of the Republic will reconsider the matter with a view of lessening the penalty inflicted on the proprietors of that journal for daring to give utterance to feelings in regard to recent events which Marshal MacMahon himself must share. With regard to the committee appointed by the National Assembly to report on a bill regulating the liquidation of the civil list of the late Emperor, it is said that only one of fifteen members are opposed to the convention, while the majority are favorable to it with certain modifications. One member of the Assembly demands that a sum equal to the civil list for the year 1870, received by the Emperor before the revolution in the early part of that year, should be deducted from the amount to be handed over to the Empress. Surely the stability of the Republic cannot be endangered by acting fairly towards the Empress Eugenie.

GERMANY.

Austria Presenting.

The sword of Damocles, which for some time past had been kept dangling over the head of the Catholic Church in Austria, has at last come down with a crash. At the sitting of the Reichsrath of the 21st inst., four out of a large number of so-called "ecclesiastico-political" bills were brought in by the Government and referred to a select committee. These bills go far beyond Falck's famous or infamous May laws. By the first of them, the "Patent of November 5, 1855"—in other words, the Concordat concluded with the Holy See in that year—is set aside sens aucune forme de procès, and all the privileges of the Church and the dignitaries regulated. The Concordat is an international treaty, not a jot of which can be cancelled by one side without the acquiescence of the other. But, then, circumstances alter cases. Ah, if it were a treaty with Russia or Prussia! Then the consequence of its repudiation might prove highly inconvenient. But what thinks the King of the Pope now, forsooth? A weak old man, who not only has neither army nor navy, but not even a single friend among the great powers to back him! His rights, such as they are, may well be ridden over roughshod with the utmost impunity. Krupp guns are the thing, and where there are bones of them to oppose us, we can do as we like. This is the reasoning which has prompted the Clericalism Cabinets in Prussia, Austria, and Germany generally. The keystone of the arch once removed, one part of the vault will tumble down after the other. Thus we are treated to three more laws, by which the rights of convents, the powers of the bishops with respect to ecclesiastical living, and the privileges of the hierarchy as the creed of the majority, are fleshed one after another in rapid succession. We shall have a great deal more to say on a future occasion. We are now waiting to see what's coming. All we can say is that the Catholic Church of Austria is no more likely to be injured by Bismarck's laws than that of Prussia has hitherto been affected in its vitality by those of Bismarck, Falck & Co.—London Universe, January 31.

The Supplementary Falck Laws.

The two bills intended to supplement the Falck laws are published in the Berlin Official Gazette. The first substitutes imprisonment for fine where the fines have not been or cannot be paid. The second is a reproduction to the most stringent form of the tyrannical legislature introduced into Geneva, and will simply deprive the Catholic Church throughout Prussia of the whole of her property, cathedrals and churches. We may shortly expect to see most if not all the Bishopric and many of the Archbishopric Chapters closed by the Court for Ecclesiastical Causes; and in any case of such deprivation, suspension, imprisonment or banishment, the ecclesiastical authorities, in whose hands the election or nomination rests, are to be summoned to appoint a person acceptable to the State, and ready to take the State oath. The ecclesiastical authorities will, of course, reply that they cannot, as the Bishopric or curé in question is not canonically vacant; whereupon, in the case of priests, ten members of the community, being required to denounce him to the Public Prosecutor, on the decision of the Supreme Court, recognized for all such purposes as Catholics—may petition the Overpresident to the State, and ready to take the State oath. The second is still more tyrannical. It says

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

Right Rev. Bishop Quinlan, having regained his health in the North, has returned to his home at Mobile.

The Sisters of Providence, who have been eminently successful in promoting the cause of Catholic education in the West, have opened a nunnery at Indianopolis.

The Cincinnati Telegraph says that the Passionist Fathers of that city have been received a large supply of the miraculous water of Lourdes, which they will gladly distribute to all applicants.

The Brothers of Charity have arrived in Boston from Montreal, and have taken charge of the Home of the Angel Guardian, to which the late Father Haskins devoted so many years of his life.

The Rev. Father Conway, of St. Patrick's Church, Chicago, is making preparations to receive in his church the temperance and benevolent societies of that city on St. Patrick's Day.

Rev. Father Cousseman, S. J., formerly of St. Louis but now of St. Ignatius College—but where that is the Watchman fails to tell—has been suffering for some time from an apoplectic attack.

The Rev. Dr. Butler, formerly of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Chicago, is at present in Germany, and quite unwell. He was a very eloquent divine, and well known in the diocese.

Right Rev. Bishop Lamy, of Santa Fé, is erecting a cathedral which will be something grand in its proportions. The walls are of rub stone of variegated colors, tastefully arranged, and it is intended to be the crowning beauty of the city.

Bismarck paid ten thousands francs for a copy of a pretended "Political Confession of Faith of a Successor to Pius IX. The document was soon discovered to be a forgery, and Bismarck is out of pocket and lamper.

The Benedictine Fathers in charge of St. Joseph's College, Stearns county, Minn., bid fair to make their institution a great seat of learning. The number of students is largely on the increase, and it is well patronized by all denominations.

The total number of Roman Catholic bishops and priests in England and Wales is 1,669. The total number in Great Britain is 1,888. The total number of churches, chapels and stations in Great Britain is 1,253. There are 86 religious houses of men, 268 convents and 20 colleges.

St. Bridget, parishioner of Trinity, was born in Foxhard, in Ulster, soon after Ireland had received the light of faith. She received the veil of religion from St. Mel, the disciple of St. Patrick, and made herself a cell under a large oak, thence called Kill Dharra, or the cell of the oak, and now anglicised into Kildare.

Thursday, February 5th, was the fifty-sixth anniversary of the opening of St. Mary's Female Orphan Asylum in Baltimore, Md. It has been under the charge of the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, and was established by the united Convent Mother Seton on the 5th of February 1818.

Mrs. Seton's husband was Doctor William Seton, who belonged to a distinguished Scotch family, the head of whom is the Earl of Winton. He was the grandson of Sir Alexander Seton. One of his aunts was the mother of the celebrated Mary and Agnes Berry, friends of Horace Walpole.

The Irishmen of Washington City have organized a Home Rule League, and they were to hold a meeting the last week, at which Governor Shepard was to preside and Hon. A. H. Stephens of Georgia, Hon. C. Allen of Nebraska, Hon. Pompey Stanley, ex-Governor of Arkansas, Hon. C. D. Drouyn, ex-Minister to Portugal, and others, were to address them. An address to the people of the United States was to be read.

A society has been formed in Belgium for collecting all waste paper and selling it for the benefit of the Holy Father. The society has appealed to all the possessors of old books, such as the works of Voltaire, Rousseau, Diderot, Voltney and other detestable authors, to send them over as waste paper.

Rev. Richard J. Boone, S. J., has been temporarily transferred from St. Ignatius' Church in Baltimore, to Leonardstown, St. Mary's county, Md., to relieve Father Joseph Wolf, whose health is somewhat impaired. During the absence of Father Boone, Father Denny will be in charge of the Sodality of St. Ignatius' Church.

A compulsory education bill has passed the State legislature of Illinois. It provides that school officers shall prosecute parents, or the immediate guardians, whose children are not taught grammar, geography, etc. Another bill has been introduced to take the management of the Catholic church property out of the hands of the Bishop and trustees to incorporate.

Sister Mary Raphael, of the Order of the Visitation, died last week at Washington City. She was the daughter of the late Hon. Gregory Eneis, Esq., an early and substantial citizen, who founded and was for many years President of the Illinois Insane Asylum at that city, and Sister of John F. Eneis, Esq., a distinguished lawyer. Her whole life was a preparation for death, as was also her pious parents.

We published in these few weeks ago in which it was stated that Bishop Rosecrans, of Columbus, Ohio, had recommended the Emerald Benevolent Association. The Catholic Telegraph is authorized by the Bishop to say that he never made any such recommendation, either publicly or privately. When we copied it we thought it strange that he should do so.

The Portland Catholic Standard has passed into the hands of the Associated Catholic Publishing Company." We wish it all the possible success. We learn from it that Rev. P. F. Gleeson, pastor of Corvallis, Oregon is complete the church recently begun at Astoria, and that Father De Roo has been appointed by Baker City. Father Thiboult, of Salem, is ill, and Father McCormick is going to his assistance.

The triumphal imprisonment of the Archbishop of Posen is creating considerable sensation throughout the Catholic world, and it may lead to results that we cannot see through at present. He was guilty of no other crime than that of ordaining a priest without first consulting Government officials in regard to the fitness of the candidate for sacred orders.

Dr. J. W. Rogers, formerly a Protestant minister, lectured in St. Louis on Sunday, the 8th inst., on "Shemarch and the Pope," and in closing he said he had wandered from the path he had trod the way and had kneeled the Mother of Jesus Christ that he was at last within the bounds and indulgences of the Church, and would there bestrew flowers upon the graves of loved ones and robes the air with fragrant incense.

A Chicago correspondent of the Brooklyn Catholic Review says: "The following is a list of the papers which are carried up week by by by the newsdealers of Chicago and the Northwest, to satisfy the moral cravings of the people for reading matter—27,000 Ledgers; 25,000 Weeklys; 10,000 Saturday Nights; 10,000 Fireside Companions; 4,000 Star Journals; 6,000 Chimney Corners; 1,000 Irish Worlds; 7,000 Harper's Magazines; 2,400 Leslie's. Against this mass of nothingness there are not quite 100 Catholic papers supplied. These figures of course do not include the papers sent to subscribers, but only those supplied by newsdealers."

The Westminster (England) Gazette says that the great English architect, E. Welby Pugin, has been commissioned to prepare designs for several fine new Catholic churches for Chicago, Ill., the most important of which will be that of St. James for Rev. Mr. Reardon, and that of St. John for Rev. Father Waldron. The new Cathedral, which will cost $500,000, is in the hands of Mr. Kelly, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Bishop of Montreal has had a model made of the basilica of St. Peter's at Rome, for the purpose of adopting it in the building of his new cathedral. The exterior is an exact reproduction, and the interior will be a pretty close copy by substituting fine paintings for the mosaics and statues in plaster in place of marble. The model is 12½ feet long, 8½ feet wide and 8 feet high.

One of the apostate "Old Catholic" priests of Geneva has seen the evil of his sin and has abandoned the schismatics. He formerly belonged to the diocese of Poitiers. He has made an humble and sorrowful confession to his former ecclesiastical superior. His letter of repentance discloses the fact that forsshadow the speedy rocking to pieces of the rotten boat of "Old Catholicism." The breakers of internal discord will not long remain behind.

The Old Catholics have published a manifesto in which they proclaim themselves the sole responsible for Hyacinthe or his acts; whereupon the Western Watchman of St. Louis says: "Really the poor man is too small and too soon for this little bit of Protestantism to break up into fragments. Döllinger is the only one responsible for the success of the Old Catholics. He is the head and Hyacinthe is the tail; so we may soon expect the whole thing to go into heads and tails' for the spoils."

A solemn Mass was sung for the late Brother Philogonius in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, by Rev. Father Keane, assisted by Brothers Justin and Ireneus. Brother Justin, for acting as master of ceremonies. At least one hundred Christian Brothers and many of the pupils from the schools and college of the Brothers were present to pay their last respects to their deceased chief. Among the clergy who took part in the office were Vicar-General Quinn, Fathers Mooney, Galchaten, O'Reilly and O'Flaherty.

On the Feast of the Purification the Blessed Virgin Mary, in the chapel of the Franciscan monastery, Lorretto, Penn., Brother Philip Heyn made his vows as a professed religious in the Third Order of St. Francis. Mr. James Kaan (in religion Brother Thomas), and Mr. Sylvester Long (in religion Brother Leo), were clothed with the holy habit on the same occasion. The ceremonies were performed by Rev. E. A. Dush, Ecclesiastical Superior of the community.

In the fifteen century as the first toll of the Angelus there was not a Frenchman, either in the fields or in the streets, who did not immediately fall upon their knees, and invoke the name of Mary. This duty over, the travelers and wayfarers arose and continued their journey. Louis XI., in 1475, instituted the Angelus, as it is now practiced among us, in honor of our Lord's incarnation, and expressed his desire that, besides the usual evening prayer for peace and concord among all Christian States, a special prayer should be offered at noon for the prosperity of his kingdom. It was ordained that all Frenchmen, knights, men at arms and others, should alight from their horses on such knees at the sound of the mid-day bell and bless themselves devoutly and offer up a prayer.

The Sisters of the two convents of Mercy in New Orleans, St. Alphonsus and St. Patrick's, feed all this good people who apply at the institutions; a large number of persons (male and female) avail themselves of the kind kindness, and take their meals at the convents. The good Sisters are not satisfied with this; they send out to the poor and sick at their homes in all quarters of the city, and bring them food, nourishing, and in many instances, the Sisters furnish their poor guests with meals something more substantial than the meat of a soup house, and serve them with a sweet eagerness that is characteristic of the devoted Sisterhood of the Catholic Church. The Sisters never received any assistance from State or city governments, but the donations of the benevolent (in money and kind) and their own little revenues from teaching, have enabled them to sustained this good work since their arrival.

Regulations for Lent in 1874,
For the Diocese of San Francisco.

1. All the week days of Lent, from Ash Wednesday till Easter Sunday, are days of precept; each one is bound, with the usual exceptions, to observe them.

2. The precept of fasting implies also that of abstinence from the use of flesh meat. But, by dispensation, the use of flesh meat is allowed in this Diocese during Lent; except on the following days, viz.: Ash Wednesday, Friday after Ash Wednesday, and the Thursday and Saturday of Holy Week; except, also, the Fridays of Lent, when flesh meat, together with the use of eggs and lacticinia, is forbidden. But any one hereby authorized to grant in cases of necessity, the use of flesh meat, all Sundays and also days of abstinence, but not fasting.

3. The permission to use flesh meat at the same meal is forbidden in Lent, even on Sundays.

4. Some prayers, at option, are recommended during Lent, particularly those which begin with flesh meat is used.

5. Lent is a penitential time, the Pastors are requested to instruct the people on the importance of penitential mortification, and also the grievous scandal to be avoided in the observance of Lent, which may be fulfilled from the first Sunday of Lent to Easter Sunday inclusively, and to receive their respective flocks the necessary of attending, before all other things, to the sanctification of their souls, and they will exhort them to the faithful discharge of their Christian obligations. The only thing that can excuse from the everlasting happiness of heaven for any person one of these precepts is the impossibility of their observance, arrived almost a week, according to what their prudence may deem to be right.

JOSEPH S. ALEMANY,
Archbishop of San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, February 2, 1874.

CHURCH NOTICES.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL.—Mass every morning at 6, 8, 9 and 10 o'clock. Benediction on Wednesday and Friday; sermon on Wednesday, Sunday and Holy days.

ST. DOMINIC'S CHURCH (corner of Bush and Fillmore streets.—Masses every morning at 6, 7 and 8 o'clock. A. M. Compline and Rosary every evening at 7 o'clock. Benediction, or Sermon and Benediction, on the evenings of Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

ST. FRANCIS CHURCH.—Masses on week days at 7 and 8 o'clock, A. M. Services every evening at 7½ P. M. On Wednesday evenings, Rosary, Sermon and Benediction; on Thursday evenings, Benediction of the Cross and Benediction; Thursday evenings, Sermon in Spanish. Confessions heard in the morning half an hour before Mass, and in the evening immediately after each service.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.—Lenten exercises every evening at 7½ P. M., Sermon, Instruction, Benediction. Wednesday and Friday evenings, Stations of the Cross and Benediction.

The women's anti-liquor pelting crusade prevails through all parts of Ohio and is meeting with considerable success. Its progress in Indiana is not general. It has commenced in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Louisville, and in many other parts of the States of Tennessee and Mississippi.

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

Ex-Senator Wigfall, of Texas, died at Galveston on Saturday last.

B. C. Schenck, our Minister at the Court of Queen Victoria, is on his way home.

The President has nominated Robert H. Lindsay to be United States Attorney for the State of Nevada.

Mr. Jewell, our Minister to Russia, gave a grand fete on Monday, in honor of Washington's birthday.

There is a bill before Congress to provide for the Mission Indians of Southern California.

The National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry report an aggregate membership of 780,000.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that, under the Constitution of the State, women can be members of school boards.

Three women who refused to pay taxes until allowed to vote had their property sold at public auction, in Worcester, Massachusetts, last week.

It is stated, on the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, that a number of prominent English manufacturers contemplate the removal of their capital and manufactories to the United States.

Ex Deputy Sheriff Conkling, of New York, has been sent to State prison for five years for stealing $25,000 in gold certificates from one Craft, of Virginia, while the latter was drunk.

A Committee of the Kansas Legislature have investigated the affairs of the late State Treasurer, and have found such peculations as to warrant them in offering a resolution for his impeachment.

The Asiatic cholera is raging in Buenos Ayres. The deaths are forty or more a day, and fifty thousand people have left the city, including the President.

It is represented that Gladstone has determined to no longer take an active part in Parliamentary affairs, and there is much speculation as to who will succeed him as head of the opposition.

It is stated that Cardinal Antonelli has sent a circular letter to all the Bishops, asking them to come to Rome, as the Pope wishes to see them before he dies. Another telegram states the rumor is without foundation.

It is thought that Secretary Fish will succeed Schenck as Minister to England. Bancroft is said to have a desire to settle from Berlin, and it is thought that Rev. Mr. Thompson, the great anti-Catholic lecturer, will succeed him.

The floods have caused serious losses to crops in the Southern States. All the streams in Tennessee and Arkansas are at flood height. The railroads suffer severely. One trestle work on the Memphis and Charleston road, 200 feet long, near Middleton, and several smaller ones, are gone.

Chief Justice Allen, of the Sandwich Islands, is in Washington, and the death of King Lonalilo lends importance to his visit. He will once more urge upon Congress the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. He will also urge the claims of Princess Ruth to the throne.

Collegian Literary Society.

To the Editor of The Monitor—Sir: With your kind permission I desire to give an abstract of the debates of St. Mary's Collegian Literary Society, hoping they will be received with kindness. On Wednesday evening, February 18th, the Society discussed the following question:

Resolved, That colored children should be taught in the same class and have the same privileges as white children.

The debate was opened by Mr. Rodgers, who took the affirmative. His remarks were replete with good arguments and sound sense. He was followed by Mr. Augustine, followed with a careful review of the subject and a good treatise thereon. Mr. Moore, in the affirmative, was the next speaker, and in a few words he came to the point, dwelling a good deal on the taxing of the negro and his consequent right. Mr. Maynard, on the negative side, delivered his opinion like a Burke; he went to the very heart of the question and showed its workings. Mr. Hill, of the affirmative, took the floor and disputed former points brought up on the other side. Mr. Coffey, on the negative of the question, left no point which he did not handle. Mr. McCartney in the affirmative, put all his mental powers in play and delivered a telling eulogy on the bravery of the blacks during the war. Mr. Wheeler, in a logical manner, opposed all such such measures, and made a strong effort in favor of the negative. Mr. Barry, of the affirmative, closed his side by dwelling upon the expense of the measure, and the taxation of the African. Mr. McCall closed the debate by combating all the arguments advanced by his opponents and upholding the negative. The question was then submitted for decision, and, after a few spirited remarks, the President decided in favor of the negative.

The Society meets every two weeks. Following is a list of its officers: President, Bro. Alexander; Vice President, Bro. Wheeler; Secretary, T. C. Berry; Assistant Secretary, Gwinn Maynard; Treasurer, J. P. Coffey; Chairman of Literary Exercises, John T. McCall.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE, February 19.

Proscription Against Sickness.

The ability of the human body to resist the causes of disease depends upon the vigor and upon the quality with which the several organs perform their functions. In the winter the most prolific sources of sickness are damp and cold, and it is therefore wise and prudent to fortify the system against them by whatever the circumstances. Hoofland's Stomach Bitters prove such an invaluable safeguard against the complaints most common at this season. The ingredients of this powerful regulator and invigorant comprise three essential medicinal elements which act simultaneously upon the digestion, the circulation, the secretions, and the nerves, infusing strength and regularity into all. In this way the blitters put the body in the best possible condition to resist an attack of rheumatism, or intermittent fever, or indigestion, or biliousness, or of pulmonary disease. Cold and damp are very depressing; almost as much so as versative heat, and a protective medicine is quite as needful in winter as in summer. The commercial community so extensively suffer in the form of drams to take away the cold," have a precisely opposite effect to that produced by Hoofland's Bitters. Their first result is succeeded by a reaction which depresses instead of invigorates. Those who use the Bitters for the benefit of building up and strengthening the system, and not for the purpose of intoxication, are never subject to the evils of dissipation. The physique is strengthened, the appetite increased, the bowels regulated, the stomach toned and these conditions continue, if judgment, or, if necessary, of physicians, or intermittent fever, or general debility, or nervous weakness, is present. In like manner, expel it with the purest and best of all antidotes, which is not only here under a practical test of its excellence, but also a case of a large class of disorders.

Deafness Caused by Catarrh.

Catarrh not unfrequently causes deafness. Mr. Levi Springer, of Nettle Lake (P. O.), Williams county, Ohio, formerly of Durham's Corners, Ohio, has been deaf in his right ear, completely so for some years, so that Catarrh Remedy. He was so deaf that he could not hear the church bells sealed by his side and can now hear the church bells ring. It was no humbug in his case.

A MARRIED PAIR OF DEAFNESS CURED.

DEAR SIRS—Having been deaf for years, I, on Feb. 23, 1871—About one year ago I caught a severe cold in the head. It settled in my ears and I became deaf in both. During the time discomfort occurred in the usual passages, and I was troubled with a sore throat, with partial deafness in the ears. The inflammation was so great that I was obliged to consult a physician, and I was in medicine for about eight months. At last, one day, I saw your advertisement in the Rural Press, edition I called on Dr. Pierce for aid, who prescribed his Catarrh Remedy, Pellets and Douche. I purchased and under their use I have rapidly recovered. My hearing is restored and my catarrh is entirely cured.

JOHN SMITH.

Wholesale Harbor Report.

MONTHLY OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO, }
SATURDAY, February 21, 1874. }

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been moderate. We quote—Extra at $5 @$5 12½; superfine at $4@$4 25 in sk; $4 in bbl.

WHEAT—The market has been very weak and at lower rates the past week, all the close the market is quiet at $1 40 @ $1 50 @ $1 55.

BARLEY—Has been very good and better rates. We quote the range for ordinary feed to choice brewing at $1 @$1 10 @ $1 20.

OATS—Have been in good demand at unchanged rates during the past week. Quotable at the close at $1 60 @ $1 70 @ $1 80.

HAY—The receipts have been light during the year and prices have ruled firm at the close at $15@$17 for ordinary to choice in bulk.

BRAN—Quotable at $16 @ 17 00 from mill.

MIDDLINGS—We quote feed at $17 @ 18 00 from mill.

BARLEY MEAL—We quote California dry at $32@$35, and Oregon at $30@$32 per ton.

HORSE—We quote California dry at $32@$35, and Oregon at $30@$32 per ton.

HAY—We quote good to choice shipping grades at $12@$13 per ton; poor to fair, $10@$12 per ton.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—California fresh roll, good to choice 30 @ 35c; fair to ordinary, 25@28c; pickled Eastern, 18@20c. Cheese—California, 15@16c; Oregon, 16c.

EGGS—California, 18 @ 19c; Oregon, none; Eastern do, 14@15c.

HONEY—California, in 1 lb tins 9 @ 10; Eastern sage-colored Strained, 7@8c; Comb, 12½@15c.

LARD—California, 10@11c; in 5 lb pails, none in 10 lb pails, 11½@12½c; Eastern, 10@11c; do, in cases 11½@12c; do in kegs, 11½c.

FRESH MEATS.

BEEF—For first quality, 6@6½c; second quality, 4@5c.

VEAL—4@6½c.

MUTTON—6@7c.

PORK—Dressed, grain-fed, 7½@8c; do corn, grain-fed, 6@6½c.

POULTRY AND GAME.

TURKEYS—Live, 18@20c; dressed, 20@22c.

GEESE—Live, 12@13c; dressed, 14@15c.

DUCKS—Tame, at 12@13 per dozen; Mallard, $2 50@3; wild Ducks, $1 50; Small Ducks, $1.

CHICKENS—At $12@13 per dozen.

TURKEYS—Live, 18@20c; dressed, 20@22c.

GEESE—$1 50@2 per dozen.

QUAIL—$1 75@2 per dozen.

NEW YORK STORE

110 SECOND STREET, SAN FRANCISCO,

THE CHEAPEST PLACE IN THE CITY TO BUY

HAIR GOODS

STATIONERY, ZEPHYR WOOL, HOSIERY, RIBBONS, ETC.

Human Hair switches, short stems.....All prices
Human Hair switches, long Hair, curade.....
$1 00 to $15
Human Hair Side Curls, double, six inch stem.....
$4, worth $10
Mohair Switches, very fine.....7 reels
Linen Serlinet, 8 inch, 3 colors.....72 reels

Importer and Manufacturer of Human and Imitation Hair Goods.

☞ My Human Hair Goods are made of the best French Hair. Nearly all Hair dealers mix Chinese Japanese hair in their goods; this hair is coarse and of a black brown color, hard to dyed different colors. Agent for HAIR SILK CRINOLINE, made of pure Silk. The NEW YORK STORE has been established for years, and is the leading one in the city. NO Branch Stores. Goods sent C. O. D.

4-28 A. B. SAMPSON. 110 Second Street, between Mission and Minna, San Francisco.

GREAT BARGAINS IN

BOOTS AND SHOES,

AT THE

RED HOUSE,

848 MARKET STREET, (OPPOSITE FOUNTH)

☞ REDUCED FULLY FROM 25 TO 75 PER CENT. ☜

☞ The most complete assortment of BOOTS AND SHOES ever offered to the public in a store at the RED HOUSE, and from 25 to 75 per cent. less than usually sold in the city. Read my List of Prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Twenty-five cases Children's Fancy Shoes, with Spring..... | $1 and upward |
| Ladies' Kid Sculptured Shoes, Gaiters..... | $1 75 |
| Ladies' Kid Sculptured Shoes, Button..... | $2 |
| Ladies Kid Sculptured, plain Gaiters..... | $1 75 |
| Children's Kid Sculptured Shoes, Button..... | $1 50 |
| Children's Extra Fine Kid Shoes, Button..... | $1 25 |
| Misses' Kid Sculptured Gaiters..... | $1 75 |
| Misses' Kid Sculptured Shoes, Button..... | $2 |
| Misses' Plain Gaiters..... | $1 50 |
| Misses' Pebble Goat, Full Sculptured Gaiters..... | $1 50 |
| Misses' Pebble Goat, Full Sculptured Shoes, Button..... | $1 75 |
| Misses' Kangaroo Gaiters (Calf)..... | $1 50 |
| Boys' Sewed Gaiters..... | $1 50 |
| Ladies' Extra Rubbers..... | $1 |

In great variety; and at other goods in proportion. I am selling Genin's D. S. Hand Sewed Boots for $5 in sizes 3 to 11. 37 cases Men's Plain Boots, 6 to 10, not spread, and

Now or Never will you buy as Cheap Shoes as will be Sold for the Next 30 Days at

HEALY'S RED HOUSE,

848 Market Street.

4-28 DRY GOODS, ETC.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

WE HAVE NOW A FULL AND COMPLETE assortment of Spring and Summer

DRESS GOODS

Which we offer the public at very

LOW PRICES.

Consisting, in part, of Black and Fancy

SILKS,
IRISH POPLINS, SHAWLS,
AND
FANCY GOODS.

We invite special attention to our supply of

BLACK GOODS.

Table Linens & Housekeeping Goods

To Hotels and Boarding-houses at Wholesale Prices

RIBBONS

A spe. ialty, at Importers' rates.

ORDERED SERGES, in Black and White, always in stock, especially for the use of the Sisters and Fathers of the Coast.

☞ IRISH TATTING sold to the trade at 5 Cts. and discount.

Orders from the country promptly attended to at lowest prices.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

706 MARKET STREET,

OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.

KENNEDY, O'NEILL & BRENNAN,

DIRECT IMPORTERS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

116 and 118 Third Street,

Corner of Minna.....SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ ONE PRICE ONLY. ☜

CASH TEA HOUSE.

GEO. T. HANLY & CO.,

DEALERS IN

TEAS

COFFEES AND SPICES.

928 MARKET STREET,

Between Stockton and Powell.....SAN FRANCISCO.

CAUTION.

D. CALLAGHAN,

Proprietor and Manufacturer of

DONNELLY'S CALIFORNIA PREMIUM

YEAST POWDER,

WOULD INFORM CONSUMERS that a spurious imitation of this celebrated Yeast Powder is now being sold in this market; also a spurious article of Soda, Saleratus and Cream Tartar, closely imitating his well-known brands.

D. CALLAGHAN, having supplied the Trade of this Coast with these articles for the last ten years, NOW warns the public against this base imitation. None genuine unless the name, D. CALLAGHAN, is on every package.

Having on hand at present a LARGE STOCK, I will sell to the Trade for 60 days at REDUCED RATES. Send your orders. All goods sold by me will be guaranteed.

D. CALLAGHAN, Proprietor,
121 Front street, S. F.

D. CALLAGHAN, Importer, offers for sale, at reduced rates, 20 casks CREAM TARTAR CRYSTALS and 1,000 kegs BICARB. SODA.

6-11

INFORMATION WANTED—OF WILLIAM BELL, a native of Ireland, aged about 40 years, by his brother, formerly Westmeath, Ireland; or of his cousin, MARIA HILLEBRANT, were also from about four years ago. Any information sent to the undersigned will be thankfully received by their nephew JOHN PERRY. Address care of John Williams, Perry eighth street, Portsmouth Ward, Pittsburgh, Penn. 5-11

INFORMATION WANTED—OF JAMES FLOOD, who left Ireland in 1849, county Down, Ireland. He was heard from in Australia in 1852, and was last heard from in Galle, Asy Ireland. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, PATRICK FLOOD, directed care of Mr. Power, Bay street, Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y. 5-11

INFORMATION WANTED.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF WILLIAM BLAKE, who left Ireland in 1849, county Down, Ireland. He was heard from in Australia in 1852, and was last heard from in Galle. Any information of him will be thankfully received by his brother, PATRICK BLAKE, directed care of Mr. Power, Bay street, Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y. 5-11

BACON & COMPANY'S SAN FRANCISCO

PRINTING

Paper Ruling and Book Binding,
Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply,
PERFORMED BY

Bacon & Company,

Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.

Country Orders will receive equal consideration as those from our city patrons.

FRENCH MUTUAL PROVIDENT Savings and Loan Society.

Twenty-eighth Semi-Annual Dividend.

☞ A dividend of nine per cent. per annum (nine per cent) upon the operations of the French Savings and Loan Society, for the six months ending December 31, 1873, has, in accordance with the Report of the Committee of Verification appointed by the Members of the Society, been declared by the Board of Administration, at the Annual Meeting held on the 16th inst. This dividend will be payable on and after the 16th instant, at the office of the Society, 411 Sansome street.

GUSTAVE MAHE,
Director of the French Savings Bank.

The Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener

3 MONTHS FREE.

THREE MONTHS to all who will pay the postage at office of Subscription. Only 25 cts. per year, to subscribe for our paper until May 1 to see what they are at 25 cts. It is worth $5 to them. The SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR is worth $1 in paper. The Fruit Recorder is worth $1 in paper, and how to grow fruits in a home garden for home use is worth $1. Price 25 cents. Specimens free.

A. M. PURDY, Palmyra, N. Y.

MENEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY,

WEST TROY, NEW YORK.

Established in 1826.

CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER BELLS, made of copper and tin, warranted satisfactory, and mounted with the Patent Rotary Hanging, the most recent and desirable Bell Hanger in use. For prices and catalogues apply to

E. A. & G. R. MENEELY,
6-28-1y-ow West Troy, N. Y.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.

Hiberala Savings and Loan Society.

☞ At a meeting of the Board of Directors of this Society, held this day, a dividend at the rate of eight per cent. per annum was declared on all deposits, for the six months ending with December 31st instant, the same being entirely free from Federal taxation.

EDWARD MARTIN, Secretary.

San Francisco, January 17, 1874. 3-11

THE MONITOR!

The Only Irish and Catholic Journal in California.

LYONS & BARRY, - - - Publishers.
JOHN LYONS. JOHN V. BARRY.

RICHARD O'SULLIVAN.....EDITOR.
CHARLES LYONS.....BUSINESS MANAGER.

OFFICE—522 CLAY STREET, between Montgomery and Kearny sts. (Rooms 8, 7 and 3, up-stairs.)

☞ All communications should be addressed to LYONS & BARRY.

TERMS (Payable in Advance):

Served by Carriers, per week..... 10c
Mail subscribers, per year..... $4 00
" six months..... 2 25
The Monitor and Catholic World, one year..... 7 50
" " Young Crusader, one year..... 5 00
" " Donahoe's Fashion Magazine..... 3 50
" " Peterson's Ladies' Magazine..... 3 50

ADVERTISING RATES:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Square, 1 time..... | $1 00 | 1 square, 1 months..... | $10 00 |
| " 1 month..... | 3 00 | " 3 months..... | 15 00 |
| " 3 months..... | 7 00 | " 6 months..... | 25 00 |
| " 6 months..... | 12 00 | " 1 year..... | 45 00 |
| " 12 months..... | 20 00 | | |

☞ The above rates will be strictly adhered to. ☜

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

The Monitor.

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1874. NO. 20.

Written for THE MONITOR.

THE DAYS ARE GONE.

AIR—"Greenacres."

The days are gone when Erin's harp
Swelled high in bower and hall—
When sacrificial hymns called on
The sword at Erin's call!

When kings and priests alike were loved
And both their rights were dear,
And Freedom's banner proudly waved
Throughout green Innisfail.

Hushed is the harp and silent now
The strains that once were poured,
In streams of gushing melody,
Around the festive board.

Sweet are the tears and sad
Sweet and long is death they fell
Who sang green Erin's music,
Her story and her wrongs.

The Norman's hand has clinch'd the fight
That once was Erin's own,
And hard and minstrel sing in vain
Of glories past and gone!

But hope still closes the darkest hour,
Though bound in slavery's chains,
And I wonder yet shall strike the harp
In Erin's isle again.

SAN FRANCISCO, 1874. WILLIAM GREEN.

PRESIDENTIAL THRIFT.—It is stated by the Troy (N. Y.) Times of a late date, that President Grant has purchased a lot in that town for $22,000. It is a spacious block, including $7,000 worth of buildings. The Times says that he is going to put up a palace on it for the Lord will not abandon his Church in the midst of her trials, and that, on the day appointed by His Providence, He will know how to restore to her peace and rest. Amen.

Yet the certainty of final triumph does not authorize us to fall into the sleep of inaction, or inspire us in the midst of the combat. The victory of truth is assured, doubtless; but notwithstanding this assurance God has ordered us to work out our salvation"(1 Phil. ii. 12).

The kingdom of God upon earth must always live; it will remain indestructible; it is certain; Jesus Christ has promised it. He who does not see that will belong to this kingdom? What will their number be? Who can tell? Is it large, is it small? Is it of great effect in many countries, or is it almost eclipsed? Is it very, very small? Is it firm and steadily fast in an all-powerful God and His infallible promises? Is it hanging by a thread? Are the efforts of their zeal in the defense of religion and of social order.

THE CHURCH AND THE ENEMY.

Do you see the enemies of the Church rushing with fury against her impregnable rock? Do you see them gathering in a band fond enough to arouse from sleep all those who are asleep until the present hour, and who have been lulled into security about their designs under a cloud of high-sounding words? Do you see them, with unexampled impudence, liberty, civilization, progress. They promised us all these fine things, and they have not given them. Disappointed, basely repeated to us sonorous but empty words, which have been successively and successful received in deceiving a numberless crowd. Now the fatal consequences of their deceptions have begun to manifest themselves fully, however, from that quarter are too near to interfere to any great extent with the fine words of the impudent, which will consequently be in demand for the next two months, by which time the bolt of the crop will have arrived.

Newspapers raised a cry a few years ago that a Governor's mansion, to be owned by the State, was an absolute necessity. The legislature made a provision for one accordingly; but when it had got a bill has actually passed the Senate to engrossment, when the deception came to light, and the other guilds than the lights of feeble reason, or other support than its powers of vision, no other end proposed to it than its own earthly pleasures.

But the Church Catholic Church rises up as "the pillar and the ground of truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15). She is he who watches over the interests of revelation; and will not allow the least word, not even a letter, an accent, to be taken away from it. That, then, is the reason why this Divine Church has become the victim of a general persecution, and why the enemies of the Cross are in conflict. At such a spectacle we may recko the cry of the royal prophet: "Why have the Gentiles raged, and the people devised vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the princes came together against the Lord and against His Christ" (Ps ii, 1). But let mortal man attempt to dethrone Him who is the Lord of Lords and the King of His Father?" (Col. iii. 1) let them flatter themselves with the most specious words, and embitter the Church against which "the gates of hell shall never prevail!" (Matt. xvi. 18). It not only is not in danger, but a folly! Nevertheless, to seduce the children of the Church, to draw them into Apostasy, to tear both in the bosom of their hearts (that is by no means impossible, it is even too frequently a reality, and it is with hearts penetrated with profound grief that we fix our eyes upon the terrific dangers to which incessantly exposed our very dear brethren, are unfortunately exposed), we shall reserve ourselves for a proper occasion to point out only one of these perils.

THE INFIDEL PRESS THEIR CHIEF AUXILIARY.

We wish to show you the frightful abyss which is being dug under your feet by the hands of the enemies of intelligence, Christian, and enemies to the Church.

In this war, declared against Christianity and the Church, the Church, the Church, and still hold a singularly threatening position, and it is an imperious duty with us, as your pastors, may not shirk from performing, to address you, very dear brethren, some words of very serious warning and instruction on this subject. With this object in view, we have no need to enter into the domain of modern politics; it will be sufficient for us to recall to your conscience the most elementary duties of a Christian, duties which even the Apostles impressed upon the hearts of the faithful of their time.

WHAT THE BELIEVED DISCIPLE TEACHES.

Do you know, very dear brethren, what the apostle St. John wrote to a mother and her children, a family distinguished for their Christian piety? Listen to the inspired word: "Whosoever revolted, and continueth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God, . . . If any man come to you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into the house, nor say to him, 'God speed you.' For he that sayeth unto him, 'God speed you,' communicateth with his wicked works" (2 John, 9, 11). Now this apostle of charity imposed a precept apparently so severe and so hard, it was certainly because in his eyes it was of great importance. Now the time has come to publish this edict anew, and to engrave it firmly in the minds of all the faithful, particularly on those of parents, masters, teachers, and all other superiors.

If the word of the apostle interdicts all relation with those who do not profess the doctrine of Jesus Christ, evidently it also aims a blow at those papers or writings which, very far from supporting it, attack with the utmost virulence this very doctrine of Jesus Christ and the Church that is charged with teaching it. It is, therefore, and especially to these latter, that for much more urgent reasons this warning of the apostle is addressed; "Receive him not into the house." Yes, you, fathers and mothers, teachers and masters, beware of ever receiving them among you.

It may appear strange to be obliged even now to give such a warning. But, in fact, when a contagious disease breaks out anywhere, is it great in our country, or solicitude, to keep its poisonous virus far from us? And in time of war, what efforts are made to close up every passage against the enemy, to prevent any access, to repulse every advance! And is it not by open force that the enemy is obliged on the battle-field to display his whole power?

Well, then, ought it not be the same when the question is to dispute the domain of minds? All those who adore Jesus Christ as the Son of God, who honor His Church as their mother, who regard her teachings as the rule of eternal life, ought they not to turn away with terror from the pernicious writings which are directed by power the enemies of J

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER LVII.

AFTER THE GREAT SORTIE.

"That's well done, I think," remarked Maloney to his companion, as, leaning on his smoking rifle, he looked around on the 1st of December, one of the capture of the village of Petit-Bicêtre.

"It is as well done as Le Bourget," responded Michel, "and I am not sure but that it will have the same end."

"How so?"

"We have already an armistice to bury the dead."

"Oh, surely that's right. I've no objection myself to kill a Prussian, but I'm not such a Turk as to deny him the pleasure of being buried, though, of course, we could not let him have much of a wake."

"It is right and desirable to bury the dead, but is it only for that purpose the Prussians will use the truce, think you?"

"Ha, they will be sending up reinforcements, you fancy!"

"They were puzzled by sorties from different sides of the city, but now that they have concentrated there our serious attack is they will mass up enormous forces here. Come, let us to our work."

The two men went towards the wall of the part of Villiers. During the preceding day it had been the scene of repeated struggles between the Germans and French, and had been taken and retaken, lost and won. Until about 4 it was in possession of the Germans, but throughout the night it was to be battered by the guns of the fort that it became perfectly useless as a means of defence. It is but a few steps from the wall to the end of the village in the park wall, but those steps were through masses calculated to startle the unaccustomed eye. Lying in street and on the road-way lay the bodies of Saxons and French side by side. In parts they lay in such a thick mass it was almost impossible to step without treading on a human form. The bodies had been riddled with shells, and even down in the cellars they had long ceased, there would come at times an avalanche of tiles from some shrieking or threatening serious injury to the living, and inflicting needless wounds on the dead. The wall on the park showed huge gaps, and here and there from out recumbent masses of human forms the rose of men ordered to death might be seen. At other side of it the ground was thrown up by the sinking of shells, which, one large tree had a great breach trailing on the ground; another was entirely stocking suit from the flame which the shell had kindled in its bough. The work of separating the dead from the living was a sad task, and it was a question whether the former were not the more to be pitied of the two. Wounds unattended, the most ghastly sleeps, exposure and thirst had added tortures that in many cases surpassed those caused by the deadly darts. There was a deep hole in some degree sheltered from the fire that terrible work. Some companions looked into it. In the center lay a dead charger, and across him the body of his rider, a thing grizzled. Around were fifteen wounded French and Germans who had crept into this miserable resting place during the night. At the edge, leaning over, was a German sentry on post. He had a flask in his hand, and was giving drink to the wretches within.

"Way, Michel, look there," said Mike.

"At who?"

"Don't you see that fellow? Look, he is giving drink to our men as well as to his own."

"Yes, sad for for him, poor boy, and for me; but for his mother—oh, heaven—" Here his voice was interrupted by something that sounded like a sob, but once again he mastered his emotion. "My good men," said he, "help me to carry him out of this ghastly heap."

They aided the officer to raise the sad burden, and bear it to a portion of the field less encumbered with dead.

"Thanks, friends," he said with dignity, as they softly laid down the fainting head; "I am grateful to your help. My own men will soon be here and I shall not trouble you further."

The men saluted him and they parted. They could not forbear a last look as they turned away. He stooped once to kiss the lips of his son; then, standing erect, but with both hands leaning lightly on his sword, he stood by the head of the corpse, waiting and watching. For the few minutes they were able to look him in sight he had not changed his attitude.

"Michel," said Mike after a long reverie. "Well."

"What do you think of faction fighting?"

"Think of it! I know nothing about it. What is it?"

"You see, the neighbors go to a fair, or a barrying, or a wake, or anything for an amusement, and they naturally take a sup, and when they do there rises up some little point of difference, such as the length of a man's nose, or the height of a donkey's ears, or the number of cross in a yard of a check, and then the words come to blows, and they beat each other for generations and the ranks of life many?"

"They do!"

"Aye, do they. Queer, isn't it?"

"Very extraordinary, indeed."

"So I say—bad, too, isn't it?"

"I think so."

"So do I. The newspapers write as if the priest denounces it, the peelers are always against it."

"So they ought to be."

"Certainly, amply, that's what I say. But, you see—"

"But what?"

"Well, you know, it is very bad, no doubt—"

"It is, indeed."

"But, after all, is it so much more ridiculous than what we see at now? Had the Archbishop Sibon boy much better reason to come and try to kill us, or the sailor who fired the shell from the fort that killed poor Bonnet, much more notice of the why or because than the people at Cappagh that have a fling at each other's skulls now and then?"

"Perhaps—"

"And less you see is it isn't often you'd see a faction fight such a mighty big funeral as there's going on in that field over there."

CHAPTER LVIII.

MADE CAPTIVE.

"What is that!" said Michel, starting up from the ground on which he was preparing some coffee.

"It's—it's—mummy like an old trick," responded Mike. "We capture a village, and then the enemy come and surprise us."

"Ten the trumpets began to sound and the drums to beat, and men were seen running wildly in all directions, sergeants canvassing sullen commands; fires were hardly put out, and the air was clear. It had been the last drop of rain for a long time, as then as if that was all that was needed, a furious storm of shell followed. The streets were blazing with the burning fragments as they exploded, the houses were being smashed in all directions, and the air was filled with smoke and the dust of tumbled buildings. The enemy was brave enough, but a restless disposition began to be exhibited.

"Our time is come," said Michel, as, lying his rifle to his cheek, he fired into the nearest rank of the Saxons which was about two hundred yards distant. His shout two hundred yards distant. His shout two hundred yards distant. His shout

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 14.
March
8—Sunday—Third Sunday in Lent
9—Monday—Feria of Rogation Week. Widow.
10—Tuesday—The Forty Martyrs.† Synods.
11—Wednesday—St. John of God, Confessor.
12—Thursday—St. Gregory I., Pope, Confessor and Doctor of the Church
13—Friday—The Five Wounds of our Lord.
14—Saturday—Feria.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MARCH 7, 1874.

SYMPATHIZING WITH CRIME.

The maudlin sentimentality which so many men at the present day mistake for philanthropy occasionally does considerable mischief. The worst form in which it presents itself is that of sympathy with notorious criminals. Because we are bound to do what we can towards alleviating human suffering, certain weak-minded individuals imagine themselves under an obligation to use all their influence to procure the rescue of wrong-doers from the punishment inflicted upon them in accordance with law. It is remarkable that persons who give this abnormal direction to their sympathies rarely exhibit any feeling of compassion for those whose miseries have been brought about by misfortune. Honest poverty they pass coldly by unheeded—its appeal for succor induces them to relax their purse-strings; but their hearts are wrung at the bare contemplation of an assassin having to face the gallows, or of a burglar having to spend half his life in prison. The sentimental philanthropists draw up petitions, besiege Legislatures and annoy Governors until they secure the release of their interesting protégés, who, as a rule, are the very ones to find themselves at liberty, return to their old trade of preying upon the community.

We have been induced to make these remarks by the perusal of a list of no less than twenty-four criminals whose names have been recently brought before Governor Booth for pardon. Among those for whom mercy is sought are three men who have been sentenced to imprisonment for life for murder in the first degree; nine are serving different terms for murder in the second degree, and eight are imprisoned for manslaughter. So the sentimental philanthropists are endeavoring to throw once more upon society no less than twenty individuals who have wickedly shed the blood of their fellow-creatures, some of those have not yet completed their term of penal servitude in the prisonmost, and it is actually proposed to set them off with that very inadequate amount of penalty. The crime of murder is supposed to be the gravest known to the law; but this pardoning business will soon reduce it to the level of petit larceny, inasmuch as there are now confined for longer terms in our jails and prisons for offenses which are considered far less grievous offenses. It must be borne in mind, too, when estimating the absurdity and impropriety of these petitions for pardon, that owing to the laxity of our juries the offense of which these individuals were convicted were in the lowest scale, misplaced compassion could attribute to them. It is so hard to secure a capital conviction in this State that when one does take place we may feel sure that the murder was done in a peculiarly atrocious manner. In some of the cases to which the Governor's attention has been called there may have been extenuating circumstances discovered, but the bulk of the cases are the only instances of action is that maudlin sentimentality of which we have been speaking. We trust Governor Boorn will show his usual firmness of mind, and not be led away by the special pleadings of the sham philanthropists.

STATE CHARITY AND RELIGIOUS CHARITY.

One of the things which the State cannot by any possibility do is to conduct a charitable or benevolent institution in a satisfactory manner. The great distress now prevailing in some of the Eastern cities, and the efforts which philanthropists are making to relieve it, have directed public attention to those institutions which are intrusted with the dispensing of the funds set apart for the relief of suffering and distress. The revelations already made show an amount of mismanagement which is positively disgraceful. Fifty or sixty, not infrequently as much as eighty, per cent. of the whole amount voted is swallowed up by salaries, at times when the officials are paid very little indeed remains for the poor inmates. In fact, from the way in which the money is spent one would imagine that the principal object aimed at was the providing of comfortable and lucrative situations for a number of third-rate political wire-pullers. The New York Herald has recently been engaged in the good work of exposing these scandals and crying out for their removal. Among the institutions the management of which it condemned were the Five Points House of Industry, in which $14,000 were spent for the support of the inmates and $8,000 in salaries; and the Children's Aid Society, in which $75,000 were spent in salaries for educating three thousand boys. In addition to this extravagance the latter benevolent institution charged the State for nine thousand inmates, whereas in reality it confined only one-third of that number.

In Illinois an equally bad showing is made. The Board of Public Charities have recently published a statement which shows that in the institutions under their control there are 1,826 patients and 331 officers. It is quite unnecessary to go into any proof of the correctness of the appreciable inference that here, too, the amount expended for salaries must exceed that disbursed for maintenance of the inmates.

Now if we contrast the shameful frauds and injustice which characterize the management of these institutions with the economy and conscientiousness which are manifested in the conducting of the charities under Catholic supervision, we cannot fail to perceive the great gain which would accrue to the public from an extension of the religious system. Nuns and religious have no families to support; their vows forbid the accumulation of wealth; they do not even look for salaries; consequently institutions under their management must be far cheaper and far more efficient than those under lay government. Practical Americans should carefully note these facts.

THE TICHBOURNE TRIAL.

The TICHBOURNE trial, which will long be remembered as one of the most intricate and mysterious cases ever submitted to the decision of a Court, has just concluded. The notorious "Claimant," as our readers are aware, was indicted for perjury. The counts alleged were three—first, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was Sir ROBERT TICHBOURNE; second, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was not ARTHUR ORTON; third, that he committed perjury in swearing that he seduced Miss DOUGHTY, a cousin of Sir ROGER TICHBOURNE. He was found guilty on each of these charges, and sentenced to seventy-four years' penal servitude. The sentence, though severe, is not disproportionate to the offense. It must be borne in mind that this vulgar impostor put a most respectable family to the expense of nearly half million of dollars in the effort to prove the utter groundlessness of his pretensions. He himself had not a cent to lose in any event, while, of course, if he won his suit he would have been made a rich man for life. His atrocious slander of Miss DOUGHTY, for which there was not the least imaginable foundation, and which twenty-four years' penal servitude, the own debased imagination, would of itself merit the punishment inflicted. In this country it would have been answered by a revolver in the hand of one of the young lady's relations; and if the "Claimant" were killed, a jury in America would find his slayer guilty of murder. Luckily for the sham Sir ROGER, in England such wrongs are settled by law and not by pistol.

Not the least remarkable feature in the trial has been the unanimity with which all the prominent bigots in Great Britain came to the assistance of the pretender. They eagerly bought his "bonds," which were to be redeemed when he got possession of the TICHBOURNE estates; they advocated his cause in the press, and treated him in every way as if he were the individual he claimed to be. The opposition was set down to "machinations of the Jesuits," though what interest the Jesuits could have in the matter we certainly not apparent. But, then, bigots of the WHALLEY stamp can discern the hand of a Jesuit in everything that transpires on the face of this lower region. In short, the contest was by some marvelous perversion of facts set down to be one of Protestantism against Popery." It must be exceedingly humiliating to the Evangelical speculators in TICHBOURNE bonds to know that "Popery" has carried the day, and that the chosen champion of Protestantism now languishes in jail, and there will languish, most probably, for the term of his natural life. To make the matter worse, this said champion has been achieved by the eloquence of Protestant lawyers and the impartiality of a Protestant judge.

THE CARLISTS.

The Carlists have gained several important advantages lately. The city of Bilbao has fallen into their hands, although General MORIONES was specially commissioned to rescue it at all hazards. For this purpose the troops under his command were reinforced until he had about twenty-five thousand men. Nevertheless, he could do nothing, and was compelled to witness the surrender of the place which he boasted DON CARLOS should never set foot in. MORIONES appears to be a most unfortunate commander. He commences operations with a tremendous flourish of trumpets, and telegrams announcing his wonderful victories are sent all over the world; but in the course of a little time the truth leaks out, and his complicity is found to be acknowledged. The Madrid Government officials would never permit the fetes to be published; but, unfortunately for them, there are newspaper correspondents with the army who have a weakness for stating things exactly as they happen. The capture of Bilbao, important as it was, has not been the only success achieved recently by the monarchists. They surprised five thousand republican troops near a town called Serromonto, and all but annihilated them. The Government account, which is of course not to be relied upon, acknowledges a loss of eight hundred in killed and wounded; but the Carlists allege that the whole band were either captured, killed or drowned while attempting to cross a river which impeded their flight. The situation is deemed by many the most favorable that has yet presented itself for the support of the insurgents and 30,000 in salaries; and the Children's Aid Society, in which $75,000 were spent in salaries for educating three thousand boys. In addition to this extravagance the last mentioned institution charged the State for nine thousand inmates, whereas in reality it confined only one-third of that number.

In Illinois an equally bad showing is made. The Board of Public Charities have recently published a statement which shows that in the institutions under their control there are 1,826 patients and 331 officers. It is quite unnecessary to go into any proof of the correctness of the appreciable inference that here, too, the amount expended for salaries must exceed that disbursed for maintenance of the inmates.

Now if we contrast the shameful frauds and injustice which characterize the management of these institutions with the economy and conscientiousness which are manifested in the conducting of the charities under Catholic supervision, we cannot fail to perceive the great gain which would accrue to the public from an extension of the religious system. Nuns and religious have no families to support; their vows forbid the accumulation of wealth; they do not even look for salaries; consequently institutions under their management must be far cheaper and far more efficient than those under lay government. Practical Americans should carefully note these facts.

THE TICHBOURNE TRIAL.

The TICHBOURNE trial, which will long be remembered as one of the most intricate and mysterious cases ever submitted to the decision of a Court, has just concluded. The notorious "Claimant," as our readers are aware, was indicted for perjury. The counts alleged were three—first, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was Sir ROBERT TICHBOURNE; second, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was not ARTHUR ORTON; third, that he committed perjury in swearing that he seduced Miss DOUGHTY, a cousin of Sir ROGER TICHBOURNE. He was found guilty on each of these charges, and sentenced to seventy-four years' penal servitude. The sentence, though severe, is not disproportionate to the offense. It must be borne in mind that this vulgar impostor put a most respectable family to the expense of nearly half million of dollars in the effort to prove the utter groundlessness of his pretensions. He himself had not a cent to lose in any event, while, of course, if he won his suit he would have been made a rich man for life. His atrocious slander of Miss DOUGHTY, for which there was not the least imaginable foundation, and which twenty-four years' penal servitude, the own debased imagination, would of itself merit the punishment inflicted. In this country it would have been answered by a revolver in the hand of one of the young lady's relations; and if the "Claimant" were killed, a jury in America would find his slayer guilty of murder. Luckily for the sham Sir ROGER, in England such wrongs are settled by law and not by pistol.

Not the least remarkable feature in the trial has been the unanimity with which all the prominent bigots in Great Britain came to the assistance of the pretender. They eagerly bought his "bonds," which were to be redeemed when he got possession of the TICHBOURNE estates; they advocated his cause in the press, and treated him in every way as if he were the individual he claimed to be. The opposition was set down to "machinations of the Jesuits," though what interest the Jesuits could have in the matter we certainly not apparent. But, then, bigots of the WHALLEY stamp can discern the hand of a Jesuit in everything that transpires on the face of this lower region. In short, the contest was by some marvelous perversion of facts set down to be one of Protestantism against "Popery." It must be exceedingly humiliating to the Evangelical speculators in TICHBOURNE bonds to know that "Popery" has carried the day, and that the chosen champion of Protestantism now languishes in jail, and there will languish, most probably, for the term of his natural life. To make the matter worse, this said champion has been achieved by the eloquence of Protestant lawyers and the impartiality of a Protestant judge.

THE CARLISTS.

The Carlists have gained several important advantages lately. The city of Bilbao has fallen into their hands, although General MORIONES was specially commissioned to rescue it at all hazards. For this purpose the troops under his command were reinforced until he had about twenty-five thousand men. Nevertheless, he could do nothing, and was compelled to witness the surrender of the place which he boasted DON CARLOS should never set foot in. MORIONES appears to be a most unfortunate commander. He commences operations with a tremendous flourish of trumpets, and telegrams announcing his wonderful victories are sent all over the world; but in the course of a little time the truth leaks out, and his complicity is found to be acknowledged. The Madrid Government officials would never permit the fetes to be published; but, unfortunately for them, there are newspaper correspondents with the army who have a weakness for stating things exactly as they happen. The capture of Bilbao, important as it was, has not been the only success achieved recently by the monarchists. They surprised five thousand republican troops near a town called Serromonto, and all but annihilated them. The Government account, which is of course not to be relied upon, acknowledges a loss of eight hundred in killed and wounded; but the Carlists allege that the whole band were either captured, killed or drowned while attempting to cross a river which impeded their flight. The situation is deemed by many the most favorable that has yet presented itself for the support of the insurgents and 30,000 in salaries; and the Children's Aid Society, in which $75,000 were spent in salaries for educating three thousand boys. In addition to this extravagance the last mentioned institution charged the State for nine thousand inmates, whereas in reality it confined only one-third of that number.

In Illinois an equally bad showing is made. The Board of Public Charities have recently published a statement which shows that in the institutions under their control there are 1,826 patients and 331 officers. It is quite unnecessary to go into any proof of the correctness of the appreciable inference that here, too, the amount expended for salaries must exceed that disbursed for maintenance of the inmates.

Now if we contrast the shameful frauds and injustice which characterize the management of these institutions with the economy and conscientiousness which are manifested in the conducting of the charities under Catholic supervision, we cannot fail to perceive the great gain which would accrue to the public from an extension of the religious system. Nuns and religious have no families to support; their vows forbid the accumulation of wealth; they do not even look for salaries; consequently institutions under their management must be far cheaper and far more efficient than those under lay government. Practical Americans should carefully note these facts.

THE TICHBOURNE TRIAL.

The TICHBOURNE trial, which will long be remembered as one of the most intricate and mysterious cases ever submitted to the decision of a Court, has just concluded. The notorious "Claimant," as our readers are aware, was indicted for perjury. The counts alleged were three—first, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was Sir ROBERT TICHBOURNE; second, that he committed perjury in swearing that he was not ARTHUR ORTON; third, that he committed perjury in swearing that he seduced Miss DOUGHTY, a cousin of Sir ROGER TICHBOURNE. He was found guilty on each of these charges, and sentenced to seventy-four years' penal servitude. The sentence, though severe, is not disproportionate to the offense. It must be borne in mind that this vulgar impostor put a most respectable family to the expense of nearly half million of dollars in the effort to prove the utter groundlessness of his pretensions. He himself had not a cent to lose in any event, while, of course, if he won his suit he would have been made a rich man for life. His atrocious slander of Miss DOUGHTY, for which there was not the least imaginable foundation, and which twenty-four years' penal servitude, the own debased imagination, would of itself merit the punishment inflicted. In this country it would have been answered by a revolver in the hand of one of the young lady's relations; and if the "Claimant" were killed, a jury in America would find his slayer guilty of murder. Luckily for the sham Sir ROGER, in England such wrongs are settled by law and not by pistol.

Not the least remarkable feature in the trial has been the unanimity with which all the prominent bigots in Great Britain came to the assistance of the pretender. They eagerly bought his "bonds," which were to be redeemed when he got possession of the TICHBOURNE estates; they advocated his cause in the press, and treated him in every way as if he were the individual he claimed to be. The opposition was set down to "machinations of the Jesuits," though what interest the Jesuits could have in the matter we certainly not apparent. But, then, bigots of the WHALLEY stamp can discern the hand of a Jesuit in everything that transpires on the face of this lower region. In short, the contest was by some marvelous perversion of facts set down to be one of Protestantism against "Popery." It must be exceedingly humiliating to the Evangelical speculators in TICHBOURNE bonds to know that "Popery" has carried the day, and that the chosen champion of Protestantism now languishes in jail, and there will languish, most probably, for the term of his natural life. To make the matter worse, this said champion has been achieved by the eloquence of Protestant lawyers and the impartiality of a Protestant judge.

THE CARLISTS.

The Carlists have gained several important advantages lately. The city of Bilbao has fallen into their hands, although General MORIONES was specially commissioned to rescue it at all hazards. For this purpose the troops under his command were reinforced until he had about twenty-five thousand men. Nevertheless, he could do nothing, and was compelled to witness the surrender of the place which he boasted DON CARLOS should never set foot in. MORIONES appears to be a most unfortunate commander. He commences operations with a tremendous flourish of trumpets, and telegrams announcing his wonderful victories are sent all over the world; but in the course of a little time the truth leaks out, and his complicity is found to be acknowledged. The Madrid Government officials would never permit the fetes to be published; but, unfortunately for them, there are newspaper correspondents with the army who have a weakness for stating things exactly as they happen. The capture of Bilbao, important as it was, has not been the only success achieved recently by the monarchists. They surprised five thousand republican troops near a town called Serromonto, and all but annihilated them. The Government account, which is of course not to be relied upon, acknowledges a loss of eight hundred in killed and wounded; but the Carlists allege that the whole band were either captured, killed or drowned while attempting to cross a river which impeded their flight. The situation is deemed by many the most favorable that has yet presented itself for the support of the insurgents and

THE IRISH IN AMERICA.

What Irishmen Have Done and What They are Doing.

W. E. Robinson, the veteran journalist, writes to the Brooklyn Argus in reply to Mrs. Hyatt, the Almoner of the Young Men's Christian Association, who declared she would resign rather than have anything to do with Irish:

Now who, she asks, are these horrible Irish? At-oms they have been known by many distinguished specimens. James Barry, the greatest English painter; Joseph Black, the greatest British chemist; Robert Boyle, the greatest British philosopher; Father Burke, the greatest pulpit orator; Edmund Burke, the greatest British statesman; Sir Philip Francis, the greatest British satirist; Sir Hans Sloane, the greatest British naturalist; Synnger Barry, the greatest British tragedian, and John Philpot Curran, the greatest British orator. Goldsmith, Sheridan, Steele, Canning, Carleton, Charlemont, Adam Clarke, Cobbe, Curran, Edgeworth, Emmet, Fitzgerald, Goldsmith, Grattan, Hogan, Lever, Lover, Maxwell, Maclise, Father Mathew, Thomas Moore, Lord O'Connell (whom the greatest living American orator pronounces equal to Webster, Clay and Calhoun rolled into one), Sheridan, Sterne, Swift, Usher and Wellington—and leave your readers to place them on their proper pedestals of fame.

I might also mention the Nugents of Maurice the O'Donoghue, Sir Algernon Lyall if she refuses to recognize the Irish and Catholics of this city and country. She might found a Protestant Orphan Asylum distinct from, for Irishmen introduced them to America. The names stand like sentinels around Washington. The American army was an army of Irishmen, whom the English left them, as we say, land and navigated Glory be around the graves of the Butlers, Clintons, Hands, Irvines, Knoxes, Montgomerys, Moultries, Mifflins, Sullivans, Thompsons and Waynes, whose Irish records flashed brightest in the moment of our American independence, and bright be the light around the solitary English ray of patriotism that glimmered on the Irish dishonor. The devil could not endure that's being, hitherto unknown, should be placed by us satisfactorily. He would be forced to alienate man from God, and in his infinite hate of the Irish would hesitate for those who follow him) he obtained his souls. to the utter detriment of the human race. Pride and self-righteousness he could put into his parents into air; but in order to confound the devil, God at this time solemnly promulgated the Assumption.

But, you will ask, what do you mean by all this, Father? Why, I mean to tell you that al. the terrible afflictions which weigh upon us, and which have fallen from heaven, have entered Rome since that fatal 20th of September. To be sure I have mentioned that the Irish were in Rome before that time. It had been its sin, but its sinners could wash the stain away in the blood of martyrdom; but the present infliction; hundreds of Bishops could assemble within its walls, could reach it with the greatest facility, and could appear in public, not to be insulted, but to be honored and respected. And the devil seeing that the Irish were not to be overthrown by entering Rome to destroy everything, and he came in by that door, he could not endure that the Irish should be allowed to enter. Hence the Irish were and are most of the writers, reporters and editors of the leading periodicals of Canada and the United States.

It is the statue of an Irishman, George Clinton, that has been sent to Washington, to represent forever in the capitol at Washington our own Empire State. It was an Irishman, Collins, that first planned the Erie Canal, and an Irishman's grandson, De Witt Clinton, that completed it. It was an Irishman, Kearney, that wrote the first history of the United States. Our first engineers, Irish and others, as England's also, McClure and others, were Irish. The ministers of the Gospel that Washington confided to us and trusted, in New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia and Baltimore, were John Hodgers, James Caldwell, Alexander McWhorter, George Duffield and Patrick Allison—all sons of Ireland. I was an Irish society, "Friendly Sons of St. Patrick," of Philadelphia, composed of Catholics and Protestants, that first projected the plan for the preservation of Valley Forge, through the gratitude of the United States Congress. Irishmen himself became a naturalized Irishman, that he might become a Son of St. Patrick. The head of our navy and our Vice-Admiral are Irish. The head of our army is no better than an Irishman, for his wife is a Catholic; and our Lieutenant-General is Catholic and Irish. A. T. Stewart, the richest merchant in the world, is from Tyndall, the greatest scientist living, are Irish; and Proctor, now charming our audiences here, is an Irish Catholic.

POOR MR. STATT.

Mr. Robinson concludes by saying: "Poor Mrs. Hyatt! She refuses to recognize the Irish and Catholics of this city and country. She would

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Death of Lord Howth.

We regret to announce the death of the Right Honorable Thomas St. Lawrence, Earl of Howth. The melancholy event occurred on the morning of the 5th of February, at Malahide, where his lordship had been sojourning, as invalid, for some time past. His lordship, who was the third earl, was born in 1803, and was consequently in his seventy first year at the time of his decease—the direct cause of which was disease of the heart. The House of St Lawrence is one of the most ancient and historic in the roll of the Anglo-Irish nobility.

An ancestor was among the adventurous heroes who rescued the downs of Hastings from the fangs of the Danes, and another sparred hard at William's side," and a St. Lawrence was among the De Burgoes, the De Lacys, the De Courcys, the Roches and Gracos, who formed the strength of Strongbow's invasion. Five years after that doughty Norman had set foot on Irish soil, St. Lawrence was created Baron of Howth, and from that date, 1177, to the present day, his descendants have held the estates their valiant sword by the sword. Few great families in Ireland, outside the direct branches of native lineage, can boast of a descent so old and uninterrupted as this unbroken succession of seven hundred years. The chronicles of the House of Howth are full of historic interest, and contain, moreover, episodes of singular romance, not of undoubted authenticity. We need only refer to the origin of a family usage observed, we believe, to this day, according to which the doors of Howth Castle are kept open during dinner. Readers of Irish history know that once, when the Irish chiefs, Grana Uile, was circulating around the coast, he landed at Howth, and was feasted in that spectacular, high-headed manner, which impressed even Queen Elizabeth with admiration of the Celtic. But the castellan refused entry, whereupon the exasperated Amazon swore by the solid head of the lordship, when she playing outside the drawbridge, and bore him away to sea. She restored him to his castle on the stringent condition that thereafter and for evermore the portals of Howth Castle should be wide at the time of meal of that meal which the hungry Pathfinder of Erin had invited herself to gain. The late head of Howth will be long remembered as a munificent and steady patron of the turf. He was a gentleman of the old school, and one whose manners were courteous and charming manners, which made him exceedingly popular, not only in the high circles in which he moved, but in society generally. In politics he was a Liberal, and as a landlord he had the reputation of kindness and consideration towards a tenantry, families of whom have held farms on the estate from time immemorial. His late lordship's title itself.—Dublin Express, February 6.

Meeting in Tralee.

TRALEE, February 5.—To the unanimity and utter annihilation of the National party in Tralee, their heroic effort to defeat, and The O'Donoghue is once more member for Tralee. His victory was first announced by Mr. Haggard, his conducting agent, and shortly after by the High Sheriff. It struck the people dumb with surprise and incredulity. The women in O'Donoghue's interest raised a falsetto chorus, as we travelled through the town it seemed to paralyse all utterance. It soon became known that the numbers were—for The O'Donoghue, 142; Mr. Daly, 139; majority for The O'Donoghue, 3.

There were many disputed votes. Everybody invaded against the treachery of the thirty-four who polled Daly, and many said he had lost their promises. After the high spirit culminated last night between a party of the O'Sullivane and some friends of Mr. Kelly; one man being shot dead while standing at his own door, and another sustaining a fracture of the skull, which leaves very little hope of his ultimate recovery. Last night about nine o'clock, a constable named John Walsh, who resides in Askeaton, was leaving in the neighborhood some friends. Walsh and his friends are strong supporters of Mr. O'Sullivan's candidature, and while they were speaking some men passed by on a car. Some recriminations were interchanged between the parties, which ultimately resulted in a dreadful riot between supporters of the rival candidates. Sticks and stones were freely used, and one man named O'Donohue had his skull opened by a blow of a stone. His life is despaired of. Several other parties also received severe fractures and contusions in different parts of the body. The constabulary appeared on the scene, and after considerable difficulty succeeded in quelling the riot. Shortly after Walsh was standing by his own door, when a man came up to him and deliberately discharged the contents of a musket into Walsh's stomach. The unfortunate man received forty-two grains of duckshot, and expired in few minutes after. Two men have been arrested by the constabulary.

The Policy of the Home Rulers.

The following letter from Mr. Mitchell Henry has been forwarded to the Dublin Freeman by telegraph from Mount Bellew Bridge:

SIR—The boroughs of Ireland have nobly done their duty. Victory after victory has been won all along the line, culminating in the return of a Home Ruler for Dublin, in place of the much trusted, conscientious, and honorable Whig, who by the constituency ever returned to Parliament—the universally respected Jonathan Pim—the unanimous choice, not of a single party or section of the people, but of a Home Ruler of that robust type who will be satisfied with nothing less than a Parliament in College Green. This week the counties will follow; and by the 15th instant we can count on the glorious addition among the newly-elected members must now be our policy. The situation is perfectly clear. Whatever the Tory be in power, the despised Home Rulers of Ireland will hold the key of the position, but if a single yet strong party be there to either side until the terms of allegiance have been clearly and formally stated. The veil will have been broken, and disaster will surely follow. Let, then, those who are true to Ireland in its reasonable claims of their country, in this crisis of her fate, hold a solemn conference in Dublin before the Parliament meets. Let that conference be open to the public as auditors, for we have nothing to conceal, and let a platform of action be agreed upon.

I need say no more, but, at the risk of being charged with presumption, I desire, by your leave, to say so less. There are reasons present to every one who has been actively mixed up with recent events, why the policy should be recommended in the calmly publicity in the face of day.

The Late Mr. Moore.

The patriot pastor of New Inn, Cahir, has thus referred to the late Charles Moore, M. P., Tipperary, after summerating his other grand deeds: "The tenant farmers of Tipperary can never forget how spiritedly he came to the rescue of Ballycohey, expending £20,000 in hard cash in saving the people from starvation. He has gone to receive his reward, but his memory will be long green in the land." John Healy the Archbishop of Cashel expressed himself in still stronger terms of eulogy. "John Bull and Sackville Street," Mr. Moore intimately during the time he sat in the House, and, although in very indifferent health for the last year, he was most assiduous in his attendance and most anxious for the welfare of his constituents. It would be positive presumption to speak of its worse—they spoke for themselves. He died on the battlefield of the Irish Church.

The Elections.

The elections for Mallow and Youghal were decided February 6th. In the former borough, Mr. John George McCarthy headed the poll with 85 votes; Mr. Johnson, the Government candidate, came next with 64; Mr. Creagh, the representative of the Conservatives, obtained 37 votes, and the Mayor (Mr. Nagle) 9. Mr. McCarthy was declared elected, and the usual waste-ful and wicked emphasis expressions of satisfaction by the National party. In Youghal, Sir Joseph McKenna, the Home Rule candidate, polled 124 votes against 106 recorded for Mr. Penrose Fitzgerald, and was declared elected. In Derry, Mr. Lewis, the Conservative, defeated Mr. M Cockrell, the Home Rule candidate by 1,108 votes to 1,000. Two men have been arrested by the constabulary.

ENGLAND.

The Persecution of German Catholics.

LONDON, February 8.—A monster meeting of Catholics was held in the Agricultural Hall, Islington, on Monday, for the purpose of offering their sympathy to their fellow-Catholics now suffering for the faith in Germany. Among those present on the platform were Lords Denbigh, Galmoye, Camoys, and Howard of Glossop, the Master of Lovat, the Countess of Denbigh, Miss La Touche and others. Prior to the commencement of the proceedings a telegram was received on behalf of the Duke of Norfolk, that in consequence of a large number being unable to gain admittance, there would be a subsidiary meeting held in the next room, for the like purpose. Lord Denbigh apologized for being read from Lord Granard, Baron Howard, Sir George Bowyer, Hon. Mr. Plunkett and others, telegrams were read from the various Catholic conferences in Germany, Switzerland, Ireland, Scotland, England, Rome, Florence and elsewhere, which were received with applause.

His Grace the Duke of Norfolk, on taking the chair, was received with tumultuous applause. He said it was his first duty to read to them a letter which he had received from his Grace the Archbishop of Westminster on the previous day, with respect to the present meeting. He Grace then read the letter, in which, after agreeing with the object of the meeting, the Archbishop had advised the meeting to help their fellow-Catholics in Germany by their prayers. His Grace then proceeded to address those present. He said he did not purpose to travel over the ground which would be trodden by those who would follow in his steps. He would, however, try to say a few words on the object for which they had met upon the present occasion. They had met here to-night to consider what steps should be taken to express their sympathy with their suffering co-religionists in Germany. It was the business of those present to consider what resolutions should be adopted in connection with the persecution of the German Catholics. They had assembled on the proper commiseration for the sufferings which was being endured in Germany at that moment. They had met for another reason, although he would not, if possible, have allluded to it—it was on account of an announcement, which had been made some six weeks since, that another meeting would be held to express its sympathy with the persecutors of the German Catholics. At this announcement it was the duty of metropolitan Catholics to meet and to protest against the holding of such a meeting. It was their duty to come forward to discuss the question at issue. He concluded by moving the following resolution: "That this meeting desires to express its deepest sympathy with its fellow-Catholics in Germany, who are suffering under the rigors of the new penal laws." The first was seconded by Lieutenant Colonel Vaughan, and carried unanimously.

Lord Howard of Glossop followed in a lengthened speech, and concluded by moving the following resolution: "That the ecclesiastical laws in Germany make it impossible for the Church to exercise her spiritual functions, and are contrary to the rights of conscience." Mr. Allis seconded the resolution.

The Marquis of Bute deplored the persecution which had been waged against the religious orders in Germany, and expressed a hope that those ousted might soon be restored to their sequestrated houses and colleges. The following resolution was then proposed by the Master of Lovat, and seconded by Mr. Plunkett, M.P.: "That the duke be requested to communicate to the Archbishop of Cologne and to the Archbishop of Fuses the foregoing resolutions." The resolution being carried unanimously, a vote of thanks to the noble chairman closed the proceedings.

FRANCE.

Alsace and Lorraine.

In France all parties are jubilant over the result of the elections in Alsace and Lorraine, where, notwithstanding the presence of a very formidable contingent of German troops, the people have elected men of anti-Bismarckian ideas. On Monday M. Dessolligny, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, delivered a speech at Nevers, in which, alluding to the prolongation of Marshal MacMahon's powers, he expressed his belief that a party truce of several years was necessary in the interest of labor and public tranquillity and for the future solution of pending questions. The Minister concluded by making an appeal to the concord and the appeasement of party passions, and urged his hearers to support the Government in its efforts to promote the national welfare. If the French people follow this advice, the day is not far distant when every town will be delivered from military government. An old man, aged 74, was recently arrested by the police at Angoulême; he had sought a night's lodging in an empty omnibus at the station of the company. On being taken to the police station, he turned out to be a nephew of the notorious Pastou, the tribune of the great Revolution.—London Universe, February 7.

Marshal MacMahon.

PARIS, February 4.—Marshal MacMahon, accompanied by the Prefect of the Seine, and the Prefect of the Police, visited the Hotel Dieu Hospital to-day, where he presided over the Tribunal of Commerce. The President of the Tribunal delivered an address to the Marshal, expressing his expectation that business would revive, now that the Parliamentary had received a stable Constitution. The Marshal, in reply, said the Government had at heart commercial interests, and had announced that important works were about to be commenced in and around Paris. He concluded: "You may justly that confidence in the stability of the Government is necessary for the revival of business." It does, however, understand how any sensible person can still exist on this head. Only a strong Executive power to maintain order for seven years, and a chief of the Executive power, who, for seven years, can count on present confidence, make the Assembly's decision respected." These words were warmly applauded by the members of the tribunal. The Marshal afterwards returned to Versailles.

GERMANY.

Speech from the Throne.

BERLIN, February 6.—The first session of the newly-elected Reichstag was opened by Commissioner to-day. Prince Bismarck read the speech from the throne, of which the following is a summary: The Emperor at the outset expresses deep regret at being prevented from personally opening the session. He dwells upon the fact that representatives appear, for the first time in the Reichstag, from provinces which, torn from the French Empire by former wars, were regained by the Frankfort Treaty of Peace. The Emperor next points out that the principal measure to be submitted to Parliament is a military bill, the object of which is to firmly define the military strength of Germany and the liability of her people in this respect. This measure, he says, is necessary, springing from the first duty incumbent upon every political commonwealth—that of protecting the independence of its territory, and assuring the peaceable development of the intellectual and economical forces. The speech proceeds to enumerate other bills to be brought forward by the Ministry, comprising measures for modifying and reducing military invalids, relative to the services to be rendered by each State of the Confederation in time of war, and the administration of the Imperial revenue and expenditure. The Government will also introduce a new press law and a supplementary bill respecting the trades, and adjusting disputes between masters and workmen by means of tribunals to be composed of members of both classes. The speech concludes as follows: "The good relations of the Empire strengthen the conviction that all foreign governments like our own are resolved, and see their endeavors, to preserve the benefits of peace, and will not be diverted from this. The repeated declarations of powerful peace-loving and personally intimate monarchs, and the cordial relations of Germany with peoples whose friendship with her is based upon historical tradition, render the Emperor firmly confident of the continuance of peace being assured."

Anti-Catholic Demonstration in Berlin.

BERLIN, February 7.—The meeting which had been announced to be held in this city as a response to the late anti-Catholic meeting at St. James' Hall, took place to-day. Invitations had been issued, and were responded to by members of the German Reichstag, both House of the Prussian Parliament, the municipal officials, the clergy, the members of the university and the academies, representatives of the press and of the arts and sciences. Professor Dr. Gueisk, the pro Rector of the Berlin University and a member of the Reichstag, was in the chair. In his opening speech he referred to that great Tuesday which had proved the love both of England and Germany for civil freedom—freedom of thought and freedom of conscience. He concluded his address amidst the loud cheers Old England, our surest ally in the battle for civil and religious freedom." The second speaker, Herr Lasker, said that the State must be master in his own house, and defined the limits of the right in the words of the great Elector, "Conscience belong to God." In conclusion, he dwelt upon the difference existing between Catholic Christianity and Ultramontanism. Herr Voelk showed that his address counted was solely the sequence of the lust of power of the Curia, and was attributable to the political system of the Catholic Church. The Reformation was the offspring of the German minds, and had placed England and Germany at the head of those nations who wrestled for freedom.

Thereupon a resolution was proposed, stating that members of the German Reichstag, representatives of the municipal administration, the citizens of Berlin, men of science, art and of all classes assembled in the Town Hall, Berlin, express their warmest thanks to those present at the meetings held on the 27th January, in St. James' Hall and Exeter Hall, for the resolution passed on that occasion, and for the warm expression of the sympathies of England with the Emperor and the German nation in their opposition to the policy of the Ultramontane party of the Catholic Church. These resolutions are a guarantee that in the future, likewise, both nations will firmly stand by each other in the brave contest now waging for the religious freedom of the nations. Von Forckenbeck was appointed to sign this resolution, among whom were Count Moltke, Dr. Simson, Baron Hilgard, Herr Lasker, and Herr Herr Voelk. The meeting closed with enthusiastic cheers for the Emperor William.

Harmony.

In one of the two electoral districts of Munich, the Catholic priest, Father Westermayer, being the Ultramontane candidate, and a prominent member of the Supreme Consistory (Ober Consistorium) of the Protestant Church in Bavaria, together with the united pastors of that Church in Munich, have actually been returned at the head of the poll. There is not the slightest doubt that the vote of these Christian ministers was given to Dr. Westermayer, in consequence of the strict obedience of Protestants to Liberalism in Germany, and to special consideration of the general Public Worship, which is aimed—not unbeingdoubly, we may be sure—at all the Christian bodies (Catholic without exception).—Manchester Guardian.

The Archbishop of Posen.

POSEN, February 7.—Herr Grandownitz announces that, previous to his arrest, Archbishop Ledochowski appointed the Archpriest as Administrative Councellor for the diocese, and empowered him during his imprisonment to represent the Archbishop. It is considered doubtful if this appointment will be sanctioned by the Government. Archbishop Ledochowski has by no communication with his diocese, having declined the visit permitted in the Imperial decree. The sacred perambulation to be daily visited by his domestic chaplain, and that a special mass for his release be read in the churches. The district Court have sent on his requests to the Prussian Government, and have also forwarded his answer to the charges brought against him. Our readers will have heard with the sincerest regret of the illness of Father Perraone, the great Jesuit theological professor. Marmora has written a letter to the President of the Conscience Parliament, deploring his resignation, and full of the bitterest complaints against Victor Emmanuel and his advisers for their ingratitude to such a faithful servant. Did General Menabrea accept anything but inexpressible thanks for his services? Talking of Victor Emmanuel, we see in the Paris journals that he has been the object of a most appropriate compliment. Among the men arrested for the Limoux murders is one Jean Pierre Emmanuel. The name is pretty well known by the subriquet of "the King of Italy," from its likeness to Victor Emmanuel. The nickname must be a good one, for the man is said to be of a Herculean strength. He is also spoken ugly, and a monster of guilt. The Savoyard to a T. "Poor William!" is the exclamation of the sympathizing Tory when the doctors he will be sent to Sorrentum, in hopes that the change may save his life. We hope that the change may save Napoleon Roman fever which so persistently attacks all persecutors.—London Universe, Feb. 7.

The Forged Papal Bull.

We learn from the Crusader, on the authority of its Roman correspondent, that public Holiness has been greatly amused at Sir Henry Bismarck's Bull, and at its phraseology. A great part of it is copied from the Bull of Pius VI., and the rest is purely imaginary. An authoritative denial will appear on the part of the Vatican. It is a day or two. The report that Austria had demanded an explanation of the Bull forged by Bismarck's agents, is perfectly false. Pius IX. is far too intelligent a diplomatist to fall into so clumsy a trap, even if he had not Mgr. Mardi, Auditor de Rota for Austria, to enlighten him. An article by Mgr. Nardi, in the Voce della Verita, points out the many absurd errors contained in the false document, that of the assertion that Clement XII. signed in 1737 the Bull "Apostolicæ officinæ." The above Pope died in 1742, and in 1737 Pius VI. was the reigning Pope.

Twelve mills and two thousand working people are idle at Kensington, near Philadelphia, in consequence of a strike for an additional fifteen per cent. on present wages. An extraordinary number of all classes of working people are idle, and fed at public soup kitchens in New York and Philadelphia.

Burial of a Political Prisoner.

The remains of George Moorehead, who had undergone a lengthened term of imprisonment for participation in the Manchester rescue, were borne in solemn procession to their last resting-place in Glasnevin Cemetery, Dublin, February 8. A numerous and enthusiastic, but most orderly concourse followed the hearse. The procession which, passing through Sackville street, reached from Carlisle bridge to the top of Cabra Row was composed of a large body of men, marching four-a-breast through the centre of the road and flanked and followed by vehicles of every class and description. On reaching the churchyard the crowd cheered as they passed round the cross that is erected to the memory of Allen, Larkin and O'Brien. Several advanced nationalists who had accompanied the procession addressed the crowd, bearing warm testimony to the worth and virtue of the deceased, and their remarks were heard in profound silence, broken only by occasional outbursts of applause. The remains were then solemnly committed to their last resting-place, and the crowd quietly dispersed, not a single unpleasant incident having occurred to mar the orderly and solemn character of the proceedings.

EDUCATIONAL.

COLLEGE OF NOTRE DAME,
MARYSVILLE.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS INCORPORATED according to the laws of the State, and empowered to confer degrees. It is conducted by the Sisters of Notre Dame, and has all the branches of a thorough education.

TERMS PER HALF SESSION.
(Payable in advance.)

Board, Tuition, Washing.....$125 00
Music, with use of instrument..... 15 00
Drawing and Painting..... 15 00

No charge for the French, Spanish and German languages, Plain Sewing and Fancy Needlework.

The first term of the eighteenth annual session will commence on August 1, 1874.

Pupils will find it much to their advantage to be present at the opening of the session.

Good references required. 489-12

ST. CATHERINE'S ACADEMY,
FOR YOUNG LADIES,
BENICIA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of Charity, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The course of instruction embraces the various branches of a thorough English education, with the French language, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, &c., &c.

TERMS.
Per session, payable half-yearly in advance:
Board and Tuition.....$125 00
Washing, Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee.....5 00

Pupils entering at the Academy during vacation will be charged $25.

Drawing, Painting and Music form extra charges. There is no extra charge for the French or Spanish languages, nor for Needlework.

All correspondence of the young ladies will be subject to the inspection of the Superioress.

Letters of inquiry may be addressed to
SISTER SUPERIOR.
1676

ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE,
Hohnerville, Humboldt County, Cala.

Conducted by the Priests of the Congregation of the Most Precious Blood.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR:
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

For board, lodging, tuition, washing and mending.....$175 00
For half boarders.....100 00
Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....10 00
Physician's Fee.....5 00
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00

Pupils will be received at any time, and charged from date of entrance.

No deduction will be made if the pupil is withdrawn before the expiration of the session.

Pupils will be received at any time, the fee to commence from date of entrance.

TERMS.
Per session, payable half-yearly in advance:
Board and Tuition.....$125 00
Washing, Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....5 00
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00
Use of Instrument.....10 00
Music lessons, same and drawing form extra charges.

The studies will be resumed on the 15th of August.
REV. R. JUSTIN, President.
1651

EDUCATIONAL.

SANTA CLARA COLLEGE,
SANTA CLARA.....CALIFORNIA.

Under the management of the Fathers of the Society of Jesus.

THE SANTA CLARA COLLEGE WAS FOUNDED in 1851, and in 1855 was incorporated, with privileges of a University. Its Faculty are given the Superintendence of the Public Schools.

The College buildings are large and commodious, and contain play-grounds, with two covered gymnasiums, a swimming pool, &c., afford every facility for healthful exercise.

The Library contains a very complete philosophical apparatus, and valuable collections of Mineralogy and Geology. It has also, practical schools of Surveying, Photography and Surveying. A meteorological observatory is connected with the establishment.

The Scholastic Year, which is divided into two sessions of five months each, commences in August, and closes towards the beginning of June.

TERMS:
(Payable semi-annually, in advance):

Matriculation Fee, to be paid but once.....$10
Board, Lodging, Tuition, Washing, and Mending of Linen, School Stationery, Medical Attendance, and Medicines, Baths, &c., per session.....$250

Light per year.....$10
Modern Languages, Drawing and Music form extra charges. For Clothing, Books, Pocket money, &c., a Bill will be rendered, to be settled at the end of each month.

For further particulars, apply to
REV. A. VERDI, S. J., President.
1676

CONVENT OF THE
IMMACULATE HEART OF MA
FOR THE
EDUCATION OF YOUNG LADI
GILROY, SANTA CLARA CO.

Conducted by the Sisters of the Most and Immaculate Heart of Mary.

TERMS FOR BOARDERS:

Board, tuition, washing and mending, per session.....$150
Entrance fee, to be paid but once.....10
Tuition on piano, per session.....20
" " harp.....30

No extra charge for French, Spanish and German languages, Needlework, nor for the use of the library.

DAY PUPILS.

Terms per session (payable in advance.)

Primary, per month.....$2 00
Intermediate and Senior, per month.....3 00
Tuition on Piano, " " .....4 00
" " Harp, " " .....5 00

No extra charge for Tapestry, Embroidery, Fancy Needlework, nor for the use of the library.

Music lessons, washing, with use of bedding, and medicines, are charged extra.

Parents will save much trouble and annoyance if they promptly pay their indebtedness to our establishment, as no pupil's name is put on the books of this office, at our expense. Many of them are largely in arrears, and we require and must have the money.

LUCIE BARAT,
Superioress.

A BEAUTIFUL PREMIUM.—We will furnish THE MONITOR and DOMINGO'S MAGAZINE for 1874 for $4.50. This will include the magnificent chromo, "Old Oaken Bucket," after Jerome Thompson, the original price of which is $3.00. It is 17x20 inches in size. The money must in each case accompany the order, else no book will be put to it.

1676

ST. JOSEPH'S ACADEMY, AND FREE SCHOOL,
CORNER OF SUTTER AND POWELL STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THIS INSTITUTION IS CONDUCTED BY THE Sisters of Charity, and is situated in the healthy and accessible town of Benicia. The course of instruction embraces the various branches of a thorough English education, with the French language, Plain and Ornamental Needlework, &c., &c.

TERMS.
(Invariably half yearly in advance):
Board, tuition, washing and mending of linen, per session.....$125 00
Use of instrument, per month.....1 00
Guitar, per month.....1 00
Drawing, Painting, Fancy Needlework, Plain Sewing, Wax-work, &c., form extra charges.

The scholastic year of ten months and a half commences August 16th, and terminates on the 30th of June.

For further particulars apply to
SISTER SUPERIOR.
SISTER MARY OF CHARITY,
Sister in charge.
1676

FRANCISCAN COLLEGE,
SANTA BARBARA.....CALIFORNIA.

THIS SEVENTH SESSION OF THIS INSTITUTION, conducted by the Fathers of the Order of St. Francis, will commence on the first Monday, August 3, 1874.

The object of the Institution is to give a good education to youth, and to prepare those who feel themselves called to the ecclesiastical state for the Seminary.

TERMS.
(Payable half yearly in advance.)

Entrance Fee (to be paid but once).....$10 00
Board, Tuition, Washing, per session, of ten months.....150 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....5 00
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00
Use of Instrument.....10 00
Modern languages, music and drawing form extra charges.

Pupils will be received at any time, and charged from date of entrance.

No deduction will be made for absence, except in case of protracted illness.

Clothing, Books, Pocket money, and all personal expenses, to be settled for at the end of each month.

For further particulars, apply to
REV. F. CASANOVA, President.
1676

DITSON & CO'S CELEBRATED
HOME MUSICAL LIBRARY
Unexcelled Collection of Bou
Music.

VOCAL.
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG!
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG!
GEMS OF SACRED SONG!
WREATH OF GEMS!
OPERATIC PEARLS!

SILVER CHORD!
SHOWER OF PEARLS!

MUSICAL TREASURE! Vocal and Instrumental.

INSTRUMENTAL.

For Pianoforte or Reed Organ.

GEMS OF STRAUSS!
GEMS AT HOME!
PIANISTS ALBUM!
PIANOFORTE GEMS!

HOME CIRCLE! Volumes I and II.
Price of each Book in Boards, $2.50; in cloth, $3.00; gilt, $4. The above episodical collections contain each from 50 to 75 of the best and most popular pieces ever published for the Piano-forte, and are handsomely bound, fair sheet music size, in boards, with cloth back, and are the cheapest books of music. In the whole List you get $75 worth in binding, $25, $37 or $50, for which you need send a PIPIT Dollars worth! Sent, postpaid, on receipt of retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., C. H. DITSON & Boston. 711 Broadway, New York.

EDWARD CASEY,
Merchant Tailo
70 Fourth Street, near Mission,
SAN FRANCISCO.

HAVING HAD A LARGE AND LONG EXperience in the London in the manufacture of civil clothing, and a thorough knowledge of the wants of the business, could respectfully solicit a trial from the gentlemen of this city and vicinity, feeling confident of giving entire satisfaction. All garments made to order in the newest manner. All orders promptly attended to, and to give entire satisfaction. Latest assortment of pants and vest patterns. Give me a call.

PIANOS $5 PER MONTH
TO $6 " $7 "
RENT. $8 "
$10 "
Gray's Music Store, 623 & 625 Cl 1673

SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Conducted by the Christian Brothers

Offers every facility for acquiring a thorough Education, whether Classical, Scientific or Commercial.

Those who complete the Classical Course receive the degree of A. B.; the Scientific, A. S.; the Commercial, that of Accountant.

The Commercial Course is so constructed that those who wish to acquire a good commercial education in as short a time as possible, can do so. A proper care is bestowed on every branch taught. Every delinquency or evil tendency receives prompt attention. The daily exercises of the Students in Grammar, Composition and Rhetoric are publicly examined and corrected in the class-room.

TERMS PER SCHOLASTIC YEAR.
(Payable half yearly in advance).

Board, Tuition and Washing.....$150 00
Entrance Fee.....10 00
Physician's Fee and Medicines.....5 00
Use of Bed and Bedding.....10 00
Use of Instrument.....10 00
Modern languages, music and drawing form extra charges.

Studies will be resumed on the 15th of August.
REV. B. JUSTIN, President.
1651

Catholic Statistics.

The Province of Cincinnati, over which Most Rev. John B. Purcell, D.D., presides, comprises the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio; Louisville and Covington, in the State of Kentucky; Indianapolis and Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana; Detroit and Marquette, in the State of Michigan.

The Archdiocese of Cincinnati has 194 churches, 18 chapels, 60 stations, 148 priests, 127 male and 19 female religious communities, 2 theological seminaries, 128 students at Mount St. Mary's Seminary of Cincinnati, and 68 in Carthage, Seminary of the West, 2 orphan asylums, 1 protectorate for boys, 2 hospitals, 10 charitable institutions, 122 parochial schools, and a Catholic population of 230,000.

The Diocese of Columbus, of which Right Rev. R. H. Rosecrans is Bishop, has 71 churches, 57 chapels and stations, 85 priests, 23 clerical students, 1 male and 4 female religious institutions, 2 female academies, 35 parochial schools, 1 hospital, and a Catholic population of 60,000.

The Diocese of Cleveland, of which Right Rev. Richard Gilmour, D. D., is Bishop, has 191 churches, 187 priests, 60 clerical students, 1 diocesan seminary, 1 college for boys, 6 academies for girls, 7 asylums with 600 orphans, 5 hospitals, 7 male and 3 female religious institutions, 100 parochial schools containing 16,000 pupils, and a Catholic population of 160,000.

The Diocese of Louisville, of which Right Rev. William McCloskey, D.D., is Bishop, has 64 secular and 42 regular priests, 99 churches, 21 chapels, 1 theological seminary, 46 ecclesiastical students, 7 male and 6 female religious institutions, 1 college, 2 academies, 2 asylums, and 25 female parochial schools, 5 hospitals, 1 infirmary, 250 orphans, and a Catholic population of about 98,000.

The Diocese of Covington, of which Right Rev. Augustus M. Toebbe, D. D., is Bishop has 48 churches, 50 chapels and stations, 49 priests, 16 clerical students, 3 male and 3 female religious institutions, 1 hospital, 1 infant founding asylum, 2 orphan asylums, and a Catholic population of about 38,000.

The Diocese of Vincennes, of which Right Rev. Jacques Maria de St. Palais is Bishop, has 91 secular and 26 regular priests, 140 churches, 18 chapels, 70 stations, 30 clerical students, 2 male and 2 female religious orders, 1 male and 1 female religious institutions, 2 male and 2 female academies, 1 medical schools at almost every church, school and station, and constant attendance of 6,000 children, and a Catholic population of about 60,000.

The Diocese of Fort Wayne, Right Rev. Joseph Dwenger, D. D., Bishop, has 52 secular and 23 regular priests, 1 theological seminary, 87 churches, 14 chapels, 1 hospital, 1 religious institutions, 1 college, 1 orphan asylum, 16 clerical students, 1 academy of parish schools, and a Catholic population of about 70,000.

Right Rev. J. H. Borgess, D. D., is Bishop of the Diocese of Detroit, embracing the lower peninsula of Michigan, and has 82 and 147 churches and chapels, 106 priests, 26 clerical students, 30 parochial schools, 1 male and 5 female religious, 1 male and 1 female academies, 1 hospital, 1 religious institutions, 1 college, 1 orphan asylum, 16 clerical students, 1 academy of parish schools, and a Catholic population of about 70,000.

Right Rev. Frederic Baraga, D. D., is Bishop of the Diocese of Marquette and Sault Ste. Marie comprises the northern peninsula of the State of Michigan, and has 27 churches, 19 priests, 3 female religious institutions, 2 female academies, 1 clerical student, 1 male and 2

CATHOLIC INTELLIGENCE.

There are seven Catholic religious journals in Paris.

Thomas Chrisholm Anstey, a leading Catholic writer of England, is dead.

Father Doherty, late of London, England, is now permanently located in St. Louis, Missouri.

The Catholic Review learns from Rome that Cardinal Capalti's restoration to health is not expected.

Augusta, Ga., has been divided into two parishes, and they are about to erect a church for the colored congregation.

Father O'Reilly, of Philadelphia, realized $5,000 for his new church by a recent tea festival and $5,000 more from a fair.

Miss Mary M. Mallon, daughter of Col. Mallon, the Catholic historian, is a fiction writer of great promise.

The Assemblee Nationale is to be sent to the subscribers of the Univers during the two months' suspension of the latter.

Father Vander Laaden is the new Chancellor of St. Louis, in place of Father Wappelhorst, resigned and gone to Milwaukee.

Very Rev. Father Boff, Vicar-General of Cleveland, Ohio, will soon depart for Europe to visit France, Rome and the Holy Land.

There are now eighty-five priests and one hundred and eighty-seven thousand Catholics in Ceylon, an island at the southern extremity of India.

Rev. Charles Wappelhorst, of St. Louis, has been appointed Rector of St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, in place of Rev. Dr. Salzman, deceased.

Archbishop Bede Vaughan, brother of Right Rev. Herbert Vaughan, has arrived in Australia, and was accorded a grand reception by the Catholics of Sydney.

A subscription has been started to build a German church in Des Moines, the seat of government of Iowa, and $5,000 were subscribed in a few days.

The Polish Princess Czartoryski, recently converted to the Catholic faith, has made over the whole of her immense fortune and estate to a Catholic convent in Posen.

Brother Peter, of St. Rose's Convent, Springfield, Ky., was bitten by a mad dog. A madstone was applied to the wound, and the patient extracted.

The members of St. John's parish, East Cambridge, Mass., presented Rev. Father Shinnick with a purse of $500 as a token of esteem.

Viscount St. Asaph, eldest son of the Earl of Ashborsham, has become a convert to the Catholic Church; so has Lady Bertill, daughter of the Earl of Abingdon.

The Toledo Review, an able Catholic paper, makes a review of the editorials of the daily press its specialty. It is their roughly independent, and punctures holes in their bubbles as soon as they are blown.

So extensive a Roman Catholic revival is under way in Holyoke, Mass., that several additional confessionals have been opened, and they are occupied through the the entire day. So says the daily paper of that town.

The Evangelical New York Nation says that the women, in their crusade against whisky, have triumphed over law, and "all hell is by charitonous and multitudinous.

The Catholic Union of New York have issued a circular to the hierarchy of the United States, informing them that the American Catholic Pilgrimage to Rome would sail about the middle of May next.

The Rev. Father Jaquet has gone to Europe to be consecrated Bishop of the new diocese of Sault Ste. Marie, Upper Canada. The Rev. Father Crinen will be consecrated Bishop of Hamilton after Easter.

The London Church Journal, an Episcopalian paper, says that Episcopalians have made too much of a gorgeous ceremonial. Catholics have been telling them that for the last three hundred years.

Mlle Lea Petit, sister of the celebrated Rachel, is performing in Paris a new play called "Joan of Arc." It is a very religious piece, and the great genius of the actress has made it exceedingly popular.

The Tablet is glad to learn that the Crown College, Worcester, Mass., is in a more prosperous condition than ever before. It has now 140 students in its philosophy, 18 in rhetoric and 27 in poetry. Rev. Father O'Hagan, S.J., is President.

Father Stephen Eyre, missionary located in the United States, has baptized over 4,000 converts with his own hands, during his missionary life of thirty-two years, and perhaps as many more were baptized by other priests as the result of his labors.

The London Tablet says that Father Secchi will remain in charge of the Roman College for the present, at an annual allowance of 5,000 lire, and has declined for the present the honorary professorship held by the Irish Catholic University.

Maurice N. Healy, late of Boston, left by will $500 in aid of the building fund of the new Cathedral in that city; $50 to St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum; $50 to the Little Sisters of the Poor; and $50 to the same object for the Protection of Destitute Children in Boston.

The Convent of the Evangelical Alliance in Rome have addressed a letter to their brethren of the American and British organizations, to set aside the 17th day of March as a day of special prayer! May the good God have mercy on the souls of these Protestants!

The Rev. William McGuire, an Episcopal minister of Washington City, has withdrawn from that Church and says that he will have membership in a Church which, as I believe, has departed from the faith, is in communion with the successor of the chair of the people and the professor of the true faith.

The eighth anniversary of the death of the Right Rev. Bishop Fitzpatrick was commemorated in Boston. Pontifical High Mass at the Pro-Cathedral, Boston, on Friday, February 13th. Right Rev. Bishop Williams was the celebrant. Many of the priests of Boston and other cities participated.

St. John's Catholic Church, of Providence, Rhode Island, which has been building for some time on Atwell Avenue, was dedicated on the same day for the first time on Sunday evening, February 15th, when a grand concert was held in aid of paying the building fund. The building is one of largest in the city, and the concert was a joyous occasion.

Holman's Hunt's great picture, "The Shadow of Death," portraying Christ as the carpenter's son, stretching his arms after a day's toil at cannot, and thereby casting a shadow upon the wall which has the appearance of one crucified, has been purchased by Messrs. Agnew, of London, for $35,000, while they hold it at a valuation of $75,000.

One of the apostate "Old Catholic" priests of Geneva has seen the evil of his sin and the abandonment of his church, and has formally belonged to the diocese of Rome. He has made an humble and sorrowful submission to his former ecclesiastical superior. His letter of repentance discloses facts that foreshadow the speedy rocking to pieces of the rotten boat of "Old Catholicism." The brothers of internal discord will not leave a shred behind.

The "Mrs. Hyatt" who had charge of the relief department of the Young Men's Christian Association of Brooklyn, N. Y., and who "would not do one farthing's worth for the Irish," has been forced to seek some other employment. The members petitioned the directors for her immediate removal, and she removed herself.

St. John's Catholic Church at Orange, New Jersey, was advertised for sale by the Sheriff on the 17th February, to satisfy the judgments of creditors to the amount of some $30,000. It is one of the handsomest and most substantially constructed churches in the State. This is the first Catholic church we ever heard of being in the hands of a Sheriff, and sincerely hope it will be the last.

The number of temperance societies now composing the "National Catholic Temperance Union," of which Mr. J. W. O'Brien, of New Jersey, is Secretary, is 276, representing thirty-eight States and Provinces. There are many Catholic societies not yet affiliated with the National Union, but they are rapidly uniting with it.

The Cincinnati Herald says: "Reports from New Lexington, Perry county, represent that the Roman Catholics there have entered into the temperance movement. Father Mercier, a Catholic priest, taking the lead, supported by the Sisters of Charity. In this place there have been fifteen liquor saloons—twelve managed by Catholics, three by Protestants. The Catholics have abandoned the traffic and sent their liquors back."

The London Times describes the Earl Russell "Pope's Puppet" meeting as a dismy affair. "Peers, Bishops and members of Parliament acknowledged leaders of intention when his holiness, in all such persons were conspicuously absent, and the platform was occupied by a motley assembly." The little Earl was conveniently indisposed, and the chair had to be filled by Sir John Murray, Bart.

The Dominican Fathers all over the world, are preparing by a solemn novena and triduum, for the coming festival of St. Thomas of Aquinas, At Toulouse, where he spent some years of his life as a student, as Paris and all over France and Italy, the fete will be celebrated to day, March 7th, with great religious ceremony. In honor of God and of the great confessor and doctor of the Church.

The London letter to New York says that the Queen wished the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh to take place in Lent, but the Archbishop of Canterbury, true to their Catholic traditions, could not be brought to countenance a Lenten marriage. The ceremony was performed on a Friday, although the sailor Duke protested that Friday was an unlucky day.

The Japanese Christians in actual connection with the Catholic missionaries number from 15,000 to 16,000. They are nearly all the descendants of the early Christians in that country. In the course of the persecutions from 1627 to 1873, 2,406 Christians were exiled and imprisoned, 699 died in prison or exile, and 1,961 were released in 1873. The persecution has now entirely ceased.

The official visitors and examiners of the Post Office Military Academy, projected forty-nine out of one hundred and thirty-four appointees for admission, on the ground "most of all, to the want of thorough-ness in the schools of the country with respect to the primary work." This is a hard hit at the public schools of the country, which, according to the Federal census, expend $70,961,981 82 for educational objects annually.

Little Earl Russell gives as the reason for sympathy with the Roman Catholics that "the Roman Catholic Church makes a mit mine there which was confiscated while Bacc was President. Bacc' ball was fixed at $25,000. This he refuses to give, and he is in charge of a Deputy Sheriff at his hotel.

Eastern freights will be carried at exceedingly low rates for some time. The combination entered into between the Pacific and Eastern railroads gives the former freights to such according to length per mile, and unites them all in an effort to break down the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Governor Shepherd, of the District of Columbia, has sent to Congress several large volumes of a reply to charges of extravagance. He says the old corporation left a debt of $5,621,000, and the funded debt of the present government is $5,828,100; of which he thinks the Government ought to pay $4,500,000 for improvements on public property, together with the expense of schools, Fire Department and lighting of streets.

Subscriptions Received.

Rio Vista—Joseph Breuning.....$1 00
P. O'Connor.....1 00
Timbuctoo—High Mercdyffry.....1 00
Laporte—James Cunningham.....1 00
Hazelwood—John O'Connell.....1 00
Dolaville—George O'Donnell.....1 00
Timothy Rodgers.....1 00
Byrnes Store—Anthony Cahill.....1 00
Cahill, T. J.....1 00
Weeks—Rev. Edward Kelly.....1 00
Rio Vista—Rev. Father Crinon.....1 00
Rio Vista—Rev. M. Scully.....1 00
Napa—T. J. McHugh.....75 00
Clayton—Miss Annie Collins.....1 00

A Wrong Custom Corrected.

It is quite generally the custom to take strong liver stimulants for the cure of liver complaint, and both the mineral and vegetable kingdoms have been ransacked and exhausted in search of the most powerful and poisonous purgatives, in order to produce a powerful effect upon the liver and arouse the lagging and enfeebled organ. This system of treatment is on the same principle as that of giving a weak and debilitated man large portions of brandy to enable him to perform the labor of a strong man. It has its effect, but withthrift, the organ, like the system, gradually renders more and more powerful agents necessary to produce the same effect that once it had been impressed by. Such treatment is wrong, and the right course is to use such remedies as will restore the natural vigor of the organ, and not stimulate it to unnatural action. Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters is the only preparation we know of that will do this. It is purely vegetable, and acts directly upon the liver, but does not overwork and then debilitate it, but will, when taken once or twice, leave the liver strengthened and healthy.

WORTH KNOWING.

RENNER, Osborne Co., N. Y., March 21, 1871.—Dr. R. V. Pierce, Sir:—Inclosed Your Lieutenant is my name has been quite successful and astonishing, and for which I desire to express my gratitude. I had been troubled with a disordered liver and catarrh and general weakness for about many years, and was failing every all the time; and last August I called on you in New York, and got Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and one of your Nasal Syringes, and after using but little I have been improving, and am now better than I have been for years. My wife has been using your Favorite Prescription, and has been by a friend of mine, who has used it, and is now well. I have ordered another box of you, and I recommend it to those similarly afflicted. Let me express my gratitude with this humble note of thanks.

Truly and gratefully yours,
WILLIAM F. CHITTENDEN.

The Great Antagonist of Disease.

What is the natural antagonist of disease? It is the vital principle. From the moment that disease is developed in the system, this champion fights the intruder until it either conquers or is conquered. In a case of chronic disease, where constitutional debility and death struggle? Should it depress and prostration against which the vital principle, through the digestive apparatus and secretive organs, at given periods, throws off the effete and poisonous matter, the powers of life finally, whose instinctive, in that effort is paralyzed, and death ensues.

Wholesale Market Report.

MONITOR OFFICE, SAN FRANCISCO,
TUESDAY, March 3, 1874.

FLOUR—The demand for local consumption has continued fair, while for export the inquiry has been moderate. We quote—Extra at $7 50@8 00, and superfine at $6 50@7 00 in sacks and $6 75@7 50 in bbls.

WHEAT—The market has ruled dull and unchanged since last report. We quote—41 cts from the mill, and in store at $1 37 1/2@1 37 1/2 for A.

BARLEY—The demand has been very good at 90 cts@$1 for Feed, and $1 05@1 10 for Brewing. No choice brewing at $1 15@1 25 @ 100 lbs.

OATS—There was a fair demand, at unchanged prices, during the past week. We quote—$1 70@1 75 @ 100 lbs.

RYE—Very little seems to have been light during the past week, with a good demand. Quotable at the close at $1 40@1 45 @ 100 lbs.

CORN—Quotable at $1 30@1 35 @ 100 lbs.

BRAN—Quotable at $16 @ 100 lbs. Feed mills.

MIDDLINGS—Quotable at $20@22 @ 100 lbs.

BUCKWHEAT—Quotable at 1½@1 2/3 @ 100 lbs.

BEANS—We quote Flat 4c 5c; Chunky, 6@6½c; Red, 3½@3½c; Limas, 7c; Pea, 4½@5c; Pinks, 4c.

HIDES—We quote California dry at 12@13½c, and salted at 8@9c.

TALLOW—Quotable at 6½@6½ @ lb.

OIL-CAKE MEAL—Quotable at $35 @ ton from mill.

WOOL—In the absence of transactions quotations are nominal.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

BUTTER—Choice to extra, 30@32½c; good to choice, 26@28c, 30@32½c; Eastern fresh, ordinary to good, 25@30c.

CHEESE—We quote at 15@16c.

EGGS—Quotable at 20@22½c per dozen.

CURED MEATS.

BACON—Quotable at 12 1/2@13c @ lb for Oregon, 10@11c for California.

RACON—Quotable at 11@12c @ lb; Eastern Sugar-cured Breakfast, 11½@12½c; do clear, 10@11c.

HAMS—Quotable at 12½@13½c @ lb; Oregon, none in the market; Eastern, in bbls, 11@12c; do in canvas, 11½@12c do in bags, 11½c.

FRESH MEATS.

Beef—For first quality, 7@8½c; second quality, 6@7c @ lb.

Veal—At 7@9c @ lb.

Mutton—At 6@7½c @ lb.

Lamb—10c @ lb.

Pork—For first-class, 7@8½c; do for, grain-fed, 7@8½c @ lb.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Poultry—Turkeys, large, 18 cents @ lb; Eastern, 16@17c; Oregon, 15@16c; Geese, $1 50@1 75 @ pair; Ducks, $1 50@1 75 @ pair; Chickens—Young, at $7@7 50 @ dozen; Mallard, $5 50@6 @ dozen; Canvas Back, $5; Sprig, $3; Teal, $2 50@3 @ dozen; Widgeon, $2 50@3 @ dozen; Quail, $1 50@1 75 @ dozen.

Rabbit Prices of Poultry and Game.
HENS—Large, 65c@$1 each.
CHICKENS—Large, 37½@75c each.
TURKEYS—Large, 50c@$1 each; small, 25@37½c each; young, per small brood, 37½c.
DUCKS—Tame, 50c@$1 each.
RABBITS—12½c each.
PIGEONS—Tame, 12½@25c @ doz.
GEESE—Tame, $1@$2 each.
TURKEYS—Tame, 25c @ lb.
QUAIL—$1 50@1 75 @ dozen.

NEW YORK STORE

110 SECOND STREET, SAN FRANCISCO,

THE CHEAPEST PLACE IN THE CITY TO BUY

HAIR GOODS

STATIONERY, ZEPHYR WOOL, HOSIERY, RIBBONS, ETC.

Human Hair Switches, short stems.....All prices
Human Hair Switches, long Hair, curled.....
.....$1 50 to $12
Human Hair Side Curls, double, one inch stem.....
.....$1, worth $1
Marie Switches, very fine.....75 cents
Lisse Switches, weight, 3 ounces.....2 cents

Top Braids, Long Braids, Chignons and Switches made of Pure Silk.
Zephyr Wool.....
Fabert's Pencils.....A set for 10 cts.
Colored Envelops, per pack.....
Ink, per bottle, 3 cents; Mucilage, per bottle, 10 cts.
Brooks' or Cheek Cotton, 4 spools for 25 cts.

ADVERTISING RATES:

| | 1 square. | 2 squares. | 3 squares. | 4 squares. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 week | $1 00 | $1 50 | $2 00 | $2 50 |
| 2 weeks | 1 50 | 2 00 | 2 50 | 3 00 |
| 1 month | 2 00 | 2 50 | 3 00 | 3 50 |
| 2 months | 2 50 | 3 00 | 3 50 | 4 00 |
| 3 months | 3 00 | 3 50 | 4 00 | 4 50 |

For the above rates will be strictly adhered to.

Job Printing Executed Neatly and Cheaply.

Written for THE MONITOR.

ST. PATRICK'S PRAYER.

With his holy hands uplifted,
And his glances raised on high,
While the clouds above him drifted
Darkly o'er the midnight sky,
Prayed the Saint till dawn of day
In an ardent silent way.

When the morn, in sunny splendor,
Journeyed to its golden prime—
When the dew-drops, soft and tender,
Brought the dewy vesper time,
Ever on the trembling air
Rose his soul in earnest prayer.

For the land his soul had gifted
With the gems of faith and love;
With, when hardy hands shifted,
And with glances raised above,
Still he prayed, by night and day,
In a mild silent way.

Ah! what sought these echoes, soaring
Upward to the "great white Throne?"
What the theme of fond imploring
Murmured in the midnight hour?
What the burden of that prayer
Rising on the morning air?

Sought he wealth of worldly glory
For the land he loved so well?
Prayed he that in song and story
Evermore her fame might dwell?
Sought he power and boundless power,
And he had it, Heaven decreed!

No—a boon more richly freighted
Would that votive for Erin gain—
Heavenly communion sought he,

Breathed but one sublime refrain:
"May she, even though worn and sore,
Ever cling to God the more!"

To the potent voice that pleaded
Hath high Heaven answered well!
Ever has that land succeeded!
Let the tale historic tell.
Through the worst that long centers
Has her faith been proved the best!

Answer, dark, entrenched pagan!
Answer, unbeliev'd's trailing feet!
Answer, Christ's truth of woe!
Has not Erin's faithfulness
Ever been a true and sure
Heritage to all nations?

Is there, O unholy voice spirited!
Is there one thing pleadings can—
O glances raised on high!
Is there one thing that can bring
Down the ray from Heaven's throne
But the pilgrim soul and deep love,

Which from your own fair isle,
Have been borne on the wings
Of the Saint's undimmed and ardent faith?
It have blessed in guiding ray.
Shared these by night and day!

Guard it still, in joy or sadness,
That surface the sounding main
It may link, as heretofore,
Erin's sweet, sublime refrain—
"Whatever our hearts endure,
Our faith is strong and pure."

MARIE.

Curious, if True.

The most powerful telescope presents the sun so far off that only the larger objects on its surface can be seen. But a photographer of Boston has succeeded in making pictures present all the minutest details, more than five magnified by a powerful microscope. The latter will magnify a million of times. Now, placing a microscope in front of the moon photograph of such a microscope, there appears no sign to our penetrating all the mysteries of the moon, which seem to the unaided eye, may be only a smoothest surface to the microscope reveals to us the existence of mountains, valleys, and cities also. Now, if we can so far advance in the science of telescope as to obliterate all photographic distance, we may, with the aid of must supply, or art be able to furnish surface that will remain smooth to the microscope. This, however, is a subject now to be found. A French scientist has obtained a picture of the silk-like of the common milk-weed, reduced chemical process to a pulp, and then converted into paper. It has resources every purpose, and a first copy taken of camera afforded undeniable proof that the fibre is included by the pulp. It is neither air nor water to preserve it but, according to the best that the moon has in the full, the inhabitants pre-to appearance like that of fine on a to that we can possibly conceive of the crowns of their heads.

It is, we suspect, another "Moon Hoax." While there is no doubt to be and learned on this globe of ours, we think it is a wanton waste of time to be bother ourselves about the affairs of the moon or any other planet. If there be men in the moon, if they wear hollows axles, never cast a thought, and are completely ignorant of the questions of the day" down here. Ignorance is bliss, and it would be folly on their part to attempt to get Webster, writing to a friend in ), "You speak very properly, my of the claims of science and religion minds of sober, intelligent men. nobody's religious feeling and re-nonvictions are the things which ences to be best seen. Nevertheless be baptised into Christianity, and we long and the more we know, e deeply we ought to feel the truth ese important declaration, that the ad is the beginning of wisdom."

Nathan Joseph & Co., 926 Market st also on 17th but. Customers are re-ms in and buy their teas, coffees, etc.

GREAT BARGAINS

IN

BOOTS AND SHOES,

AT THE

RED HOUSE,

848 MARKET STREET, (OPPOSITE FOURTH)

REDUCED FULLY FROM 25 TO 75 PER CENT.

The most complete assortment of BOOTS AND SHOES ever offered to the public is now at the RED HOUSE, and for sale at from 25 to 75 per cent. less than usually asked in the city. Read my List of Prices:

Twenty-five cases Children's Fancy Shoes, with Kids.....
Ladies' Kid Scalloped (hand) Gaiters.....$1 75
Ladies Kid Scalloped (full finish) Gaiter.....1 25
Ladies Kid Scalloped (plain) Gaiters.....1 50
Children's Buttoned Boots, hand-sewed, Scalloped.....75
Children's Extra quality, Scalloped.....1 00

In great variety; and all other goods in proportion, worth $1!!; 20 cases Men's Brogue Boots, $1 50 and upward, and

Now or Never will you buy so Cheap Shoes as will be Sold for the Next 30 Days at

HEALY'S RED HOUSE,

848 Market Street.

DRY GOODS, ETC. MISCELLANEOUS.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

WE HAVE NOW A FULL AND COMPLETE Assortment of Spring and Summer

DRESS GOODS

Which we offer the public at very

LOW PRICES,

Consisting, in part, of Black and Fancy

SILKS,

IRISH POPLINS, SHAWLS,

And a full supply of

Fancy Goods.

We invite special attention to our supply of

BLACK GOODS.

Table Linens & Housekeeping Goods

To Hotels and Boarding-houses at Wholesale Prices.

RIBBONS

A specialty, at importers' rates.

BRADFORD SERGES, in Black and White, manufactured expressly for the use of the Sisters and Patrons of this House.

IRISH TATTINO sold to the trade at a liberal discount.

Orders from the country promptly attended to at lowest prices.

WYNNE, LOWTH & CO.

706 MARKET STREET,

OPPOSITE THIRD.....SAN FRANCISCO.

m12

KENNEDY,

O'NEILL &

BRENNAN,

IMPORTERS OF

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

DRY GOODS,

Corner of Mission.....SAN FRANCISCO.

ONE PRICE ONLY.

m6-1y

IRISH FLAGS

FOR SALE.

THERE OWNDIER IRISH NATIONAL FLAGS For sale—one 8ft and two Bunting, 7½ x 9½ ft, which have been manufactured by Mr. Ryan himself; the Publisher—hardly necessary to say that the materials are here of the best, with gold fringe. The Bunting Flags are 6s per yard; the 8ft flag £3 3s; and the 7½ x 9½ ft flag £2 2s. Carriage paid. Apply immediately, post-paid to

C. J. BARRON,
315 Market street, San Francisco.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

PATRIOTIC BADGES FOR ST. PATRICK'S Day—can be retailed at TEN CENTS EACH. Just received from Ireland, and sold there to sell at that price. A full length figure of ST. PATRICK and ROBERT EMMET, in color and gold, mounted in a gold frame attached to a green silk ribbon—used in Ireland on St. Patrick's Day. All who have seen it pronounce it a work of art. Wholesale only by

NATHAN JOSEPH & CO.,
641 Clay street, San Francisco,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

Country orders supplied. IRISH.

INFORMATION WANTED—OF THOMAS DELANY, who left Chicago for San Francisco February 19, 1871. Any person who may know anything about him will confer a favor by directing a letter to St. Vincent's College, Los Angeles. Papers

CASH TEA STORE

GEO. T. HANLY & CO.,

DEALERS IN

TEAS

COFFEES AND SPICES.

928 MARKET STREET,

Between Stockton and Powell.....SAN FRANCISCO.
de20

BACON & COMPANY'S ART PRINTERY
SAN FRANCISCO

PRINTING

Paper Ruling and Book Binding.

Neatly, Promptly, Cheaply,

PERFORMED BY

Bacon & Company,

Corner Clay and Sansome Sts.

Country Orders will receive equal consideration as those from our city patrons.

MENEELY'S BELL FOUNDRY

WEST TROY, NEW YORK.

CHURCH, ACADEMY, FACTORY AND OTHER Bells, made of copper and tin, warranted satisfactory, and mounted with our New Patent Rotary Counter-balanced and Self-balanced Bell Stands. Our Patent Mountings can be applied to old bells.

E. A. & G. R. MENEELY,
West Troy, New York.

THE Fruit Recorder and Cottage Gardener

3 MONTHS FREE.

Will be sent FREE FOR THREE MONTHS to all who will post paid, their address and that of their nearest Post Office. We do not ask money now, but after the three months' trial the paper shall stop unless the subscriber sends us what they are in arrears, and pays for the current year at the rate of $2 per year. The SMALL FRUIT INSTRUCTOR is a work of 64 pages, that tells in simple language just how to grow fruits in abundance for home use or market. Price 25 cents, post-paid.

Address, PHELPS & WARREN, Rochester, N. Y.

MISS KENNEDY,

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY,

62 Third Street, Near Mission

INFORMS HER FRIENDS AND the public in general that she has received her Spring and Summer Stock, and is now ready to offer an UNUSUALLY ELEGANT AND LATEST STYLES IN

Ladies', Misses' and Children's

HATS AND BONNETS,

and always keeps on hand or good an assortment of Millinery Goods, Flowers, Feathers, etc.

As can be found at any store in the city.

Ladies cannot do better than patronize this establishment, where they can get everything they need in the Millinery line, without having to pay fancy prices for the same. m7-1m

The Monitor.

"FREE PAPER, UNITED CANVAS."

VOL. XVII. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1874. NO. 21.

France and Germany.

General Von Moltke read some days ago, in the Prussian Assembly, a circular note addressed to foreign powers which contained some extremely interesting details respecting the military strength of France and Germany. The object of the document was manifest. It was an excuse for the renewal of war, on the grounds that the huge armament of France was a standing menace to the peace of Prussia. The General's argument, grounded in innuendo more than assertion, was that it would be better for Germany to force the hostilities now than wait until France found herself strong enough to assume the offensive. Of course the General pretended that all his country wanted was to be let alone, and that the desire of France for revenge was the only cause of disturbance. The pleading was dexterous enough, but it can hardly deceive people endowed with much intelligence. The subjoined is a telegraphic summary of Von Moltke's document:

Months ago the real question brought before the House is, whether henceforth Germany shall bear the heavy cost necessarily incurred by keeping 414,000 men on a permanent peace footing. That question must be considered in the light of our home and foreign relations. The present generation would not hope to escape the onerous duties connected with the double service of large armaments. It was but too probable that Germany would be obliged to protect for fifty years to come what she had gained by five months. Germany by the last war has won the respect but certainly not the love of her neighbors. In whatever direction members turn their eyes they would find sentiment hostile to them. The united Germany was likely to become a dangerous neighbor to the world's peace. There was a strong French party in Belgium notwithstanding that Germany had repeatedly served the independence of that kingdom. Holland had begun to repair the works by which the country had been inundated, but since the Franco-German war Holland lived habitually afraid of German attack. There was not a man in Germany who would not rejoice, if action, yet it was but too well known with whom the Pope sympathized in the war of 1870. From Holland had received the publication of pamphlets containing attacks of the most violent kind, but of Germans landing in the country. Denmark increased her standing vessels, deeming it necessary to be prepared for a German descent. Nay, Germany was even charged with the intention of exciting the Baltic provinces of Russia and conquering with German subjects of Austria; and this when Germany was the whole world's model of German military organization, and by extending the duty of military service over twenty years, and giving her a large reserve force, already possesses an active army of 1,000,000 men and a territorial force of 1,000,000.

France had now 182 regiments of infantry instead of 110, as before the war, 233 batteries instead of 159, as formerly. Germany, after the war of 1870 with eight corps d'armée, had now nineteen; and while Germany hitherto spent less than 100,000,000 thalers on fortifications, Alsace does not hesitate to appropriate one hundred and seventy-one million thalers for a like purpose. The French army, magnificently organized, was, according to Von Moltke, assembly, the other day, actually forced an extra sum of two millions thalers on their Government, to enable it to drill the second portion of this year. French towns vied with each other in building barracks, and setting apart drill grounds, etc. To be sure, the great majority of intelligent Frenchmen bear their defeat with much dignity than would appear to be the case by the speeches of their orators, for not the French Government are considering the necessity of preserving peace for some years to come. This, however, is owing to the fact that a judicious General was at the head of the nation. Still, Germany remains under the sword and the experience of some years ago, when the French Government was carried away by its passions and hurried into an independent war, has enforce undeniable proof that the people is not inclined for war. It is neither air nor water to preserve it but, according to the best that the moon has in the full, the inhabitants pre-to appearance like that of fine on a to that we can possibly conceive of the crowns of their heads.

It is, we suspect, another "Moon Hoax." While there is no doubt to be and learned on this globe of ours, we think it is a wanton waste of time to be bother ourselves about the affairs of the moon or any other planet. If there be men in the moon, if they wear hollows axles, never cast a thought, and are completely ignorant of the questions of the day" down here. Ignorance is bliss, and it would be folly on their part to attempt to get Webster, writing to a friend in ), "You speak very properly, my of the claims of science and religion minds of sober, intelligent men. nobody's religious feeling and re-nonvictions are the things which ences to be best seen. Nevertheless be baptised into Christianity, and we long and the more we know, e deeply we ought to feel the truth ese important declaration, that the ad is the beginning of wisdom."

Nathan Joseph & Co., 926 Market also on 17th but. Customers are re-ms in and buy their teas, coffees, etc.

HOME FOR HOMELESS GIRLS.

A Quiet, Effective Charity — Comfort Without Ostentation.

[From the New York Sun.]

In East Thirty-first street, between Second and Third avenues, is a home for homeless girls, a charity so unpretending in its outward surroundings and interior work that it is not known to the public. Institutions; yet so well is it known all over the metropolis among the poor girls it is intended to aid that it is always full of transient inmates. It is known as Father McGlynn's Home, though on its shining door plate is seen only the words, "Home for the Homeless." Although it has been in existence for five years it has received hundreds of young women from a life of shame by offering them a refuge in the moment of their direst extremity. There are numerous similar houses of refuge in New York, but the peculiar features of this home are, first, that when a poor girl applies for aid either at the Home or at St. Stephen's parsonage, it is sufficient for her to say she is homeless and and unless the house is full she is taken in; second, she stays no longer than she is willing to remain. No time for her departure is fixed either by herself or the ladies who may have charge of the house. There are always from twenty-five to fifty inmates in the Home; but the number is very variable and none are permanent residents. Situations are found for them by the ladies in charge of the Home or by the priests of St. Stephen's parish as soon as possible; but when a girl leaves she is invited to return in case of loss of either health or employment.

NEEDS A SHELTER,

It is necessary, of course, to have rules and regular hours, and occupations for the inmates, but there is a complete absence of that air of restraint and harnessed rule noticeable in nearly all charitable institutions. No uniforms or badges are worn by either the beneficiaries or lady managers.

A BLIND GIRL.

Named Angela is the portress and only permanent inmate. She had been there over four years. She is neatly and prettily dressed, and with her sightless eyes looks so intelligently and cordially as she opens the door and leads the way to the neatly furnished Table receptions room that it is hard to realize that she is blind. She does not grope her way, goes about with ease and bustle and sorr.lore as conveniently as though she saw everything, and smiles when addressed, looking straight in your face with a startling seeming of vision.

Applications for help are received every week and clean. The pensioners do all the work, cooking, washing, ironing, scrubbing, and by very pleasing contrast undertaking in considerable machine and plain sewing, embroidery and

LACE WORK.

When this Home was opened, five years ago, there were only four or five girls in it; now there are usually about forty. One small three-story house in Thirtieth street affordad ample accommodation for all who applied for aid during the first few months. One small basement house, four stories high, do not give all the room required. One must be first could attend to the whole establishment; now, three ladies, religious of the Sacred Heart, have charge of a peculiar habit, are busy all the time in the conduct of the affairs of the institution.

Not a staircase, bannister or corridor in the house is carpeted. Every board is scrubbed until it is spotless and white. In some of the rooms small pieces of old carpet are placed before the beds. The work rooms are kept scrupulously clean, and there is a look of in the dormitories. The food is plain, but of good quality and carefully cooked. The girls looked contented and cheerful. Some are very neatly, and all are tidily and appropriately clothed. Applicants for aid at the social home look about the house, in spite of the humble furniture and unarrayed walls, with very pleasing surprise to the silence imposed; but the conversation among the girls is low and restrained. They do not look afraid to smile or even laugh aloud; yet it is not often so quiet-mannered a crowd of girls can be found. It is impossible to visit the house without feeling a desire for its enlargement.

CLEANLY COMFORT

Mr. McGlynn, the founder of the Home, is a brother of John A. McGlynn and Daniel C. McGlynn of San Francisco.

The Snow Blockade.—From voluminous dispatches published in the daily papers we learn that the severest storm, since the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad, raged in the Sierra Nevada range from Thursday evening of last week until Monday evening of this. A number of accidents have occurred, snow-plows and engines being covered in the drifts, and several employés more or less injured. Freight trains have been abandoned, and the passenger trains detained two or three days. Fortunately all the passengers, East and West-bound, were at stations where they had good hotel accommodations. This is the first year since its construction that trains on the Central have been detained by snow, while last winter there were many delays and much suffering on that road.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the aggregate amount of internal revenue collected, from September, 1862, when the Internal Revenue law went into effect, to the 28th of February, 1874, is $1,722,585,000. Of the amount there is due from the late Collectors $9,536,199, for the recovery of which suits have been commenced.

IRRIGATION.

One of the Wants of California—Official Report in Regard to the Matter.

The report of the Federal Commissioners on a system of irrigation for the State of Sacramento, San Joaquin and Tulare Valleys, will be transmitted to Congress soon.

The Commissioners say that the irrigation system on the eastern side of the great California valley should be made by many short canals, to avoid crossing rivers by aqueducts. Each river may have one or more canals in most, the higher the better. These will raise the water so as to enable it to be carried over or through the banks of the rivers and by the canals feeding irrigation, at the lowest possible expense. Each main river on the eastern side may these have two canals—one on the right and the other on the left bank. Those main canals may be carried along at the proper grade so as to intersect similar canals of adjacent rivers, and supply water also where wanted to smaller canals on the lower levels, which drain their supply.

INTO THE PLAINS

On the western side of the valley there should be, the canal already constructed from the great bend of the San Joaquin river to Los Banos Creek; secondly, a continual line of this canal, on a grade of six inches per mile, to the lower end of Tulare Lake; thirdly, a canal on the proposed canal from Sumner Lake, but actually to draw its water from Tulare Lake, extending to the lower San Joaquin river at Antioch, on a grade of six inches to the mile; fourthly, the proposed canal, on a grade of three inches per mile, from the last bank of Kern river, above Bakersfield, around southward of Kern Lake to Bosea Vista Lake. This canal would between it and Kern river and the lakes. The plain to the east and south of the canal, between it and the mountain foothills, seems incapable of continued irrigation, because it is higher than the lands. Some portions of these may be irrigated by storing water in the rainy season; but generally the supply is too scanty. It may be possible to irrigate them by hydraulic power from the waters of Kern river, high enough to flow over the lands, but in dry years the supply would be very great. The canal proper has a supply in the extensive marshes and northwest of Tulare Lake, between the line of canal leading to Antioch and

IRRIGATE THE COUNTRY

THE FOOTHILLS

Of the Coast Range. The fifth feature proposed for the western side of the great valley is the construction of a canal, both for irrigation and navigation, west of the Sacramento river, just below Red Bluff, keeping close to the foothills, so as to irrigate all the lands back and between it and the head of navigation in Cache Creek. The area irrigated by this canal would be 72,000 acres. The quantity of water necessary for both irrigation and navigation is estimated at 6,971 cubic feet per second. If designed for irrigation only, cheaper could be made in location and size, whereby its cost could be greatly reduced. A navigable line could also be effected by feeding from Stony, Cache and Putah Creeks. A branch canal is recommended to leave the

MAIN CANAL

On the right branch of Stony Creek, and go thence to the Sacramento river and down the right bank to Knight's Landing. The Commissioners favor the Clear Lake Water Works Company's project to take the waters of Cache Creek for the irrigation of the Sacramento and Yolo county plains. They discuss the influence of such works on the navigation of rivers, showing that it would be very slight in the Sacramento and San Joaquin.

The cost of a proper system for the Sacramento Valley and San Joaquin valleys is estimated at ten dollars per acre, and in the foothills at not much more.

The relation of the National Government with irrigation in California are merely indirect; but the United States owns much land there which can be made valuable by irrigation, and it is therefore a reasonable question whether the Government ought not in some way to encourage it.

The Parks of London.

The London Registrar-General gives the following statement of the area of the public parks in and about the English metropolis, as ascertained by the Ordnance Survey Department: Regent's Park, 466 acres; Hyde Park, 395; Kensington Gardens, 275; Victoria Park, 226; Greenwich Park, 190; Battersea Park, 198; South-wark Park, 63; The Green Park, 61; St. James Park, 58; Kennington Park, 18. These ten parks, containing 1,882 acres, are all within the registration division of the city of London, which comprises 78,980 acres, including 2,718 acres covered by the river Thames.

THE FRANC-TIREUR.

A Tale of the Franco-Prussian War.

CHAPTER LX.

THE CAPTIVITY.

As Michael was hurried off his heart was full of rage and grief, but sorrow for the misfortune of his friend swelled up even higher in his breast than the feelings produced by his own misfortune. He had, however, accustomed himself and his companions to a Spartan constancy under adversities, and his presence of mind soon returned. His intention had been to fight to the death rather than fall captive into the hands of the enemy. This was not merely that he feared the rigors of imprisonment, though to a man accustomed as he was to free range and the utmost enterprise, confinement had a peculiar terror. But there was a shame about the captivity, he thought, which he could ill endure; while furthermore he had many reasons for believing that he had been marked out by the foe, and that a distinct and special vengeance was intended for him. These latter matters, however, and the new position in which he found himself aroused the comparative spirit within him, and he rapidly resolved that he would meet the Prussians with that unbended revenge. These thoughts and resolutions had to be pondered and arrived at while he was being hurried at a rather swift rate over a hundred yards of ground, with shells bursting above his head and the whizzing of French rifle bullets always in his ear. His first though was to get rid of his papers. These not only contained the name and address of the authorization he had received to carry out an independent command, the discovery of either of which would have been fatal. They were in his breast pocket, and were small enough to be concealed in the hollow of the hand; but he knew that they should be small indeed, if an ass person, to escape the vigilant eye of his captors.

The ground over which they were passing was that in which he and his party had had such sorrowful experience of the power of the mitrailleuse—land partly furrowed by the plow, partly laden with vines and orchards. If he could get but a moment at which the eyes of some of his escort were was set on him it would have been a simple thing to fling the little packet into the thick herbage. But this was one of the questions. It seemed to him impossible that any action of his could be unnoticed by the sharp sleepless eyes that perused a small stream, the same into which, some hundred of his brave fellows, Mihe had seen the Christian Brother drop the obus. Here it moved upon a dead level, not having reached the slope which carried it down into the plain beneath, and its dull course had caused an accumulation of the rushes that beneath its bank. Michel's quick eye took in the fact like a flash. Upon the very edge of the bank he could see and feel, his right hand coming under him. The factor who was immediately in his rear, with a second oath, fell over him, but rose again nothing the worse save for the docking. Michel's right hand had reached the spot, and to estimate himself he was obliged to use his left. As he drew out the right hand it dropped into the water, and the left placed them over so that discovery was impossible.

"There is one trick galoed," he said to himself.

The angry Saxon, when Michel had got up struck him a blow, but he heeded it little. They were now almost completely out of range of the French fire, and they had come up with a large force of the Saxon army corps. Here encamped in the midst of small skirmish essex as if it had formed a part of the training of the German army. Michel, a habitually temperate and active man—in his respect a typical French peasant—had brought himself a watch, and perceived that by this time it was seven o'clock. These were gone in a twinkling, and, lest any one should be anxious about his fate, it may be stated here that he never saw them again. A piece of dry bread he had in his pocket was laid in like—that was all. The Saxons were well fed and did not want it—otherwise they would have taken it.

The retrograde movement was continued from this point for nearly two hours, when Michel found that they had reached the main body of the Saxon army, and here he saw, with a sense of deep satisfaction, a considerable number of his own countrymen prisoners. Their depressed look, especially that of the officers, touched him to the heart. Like him they had all been plundered to the minutest article before he joined them.

A hoarse voice gave orders that the prisoners should form, and Michel, who had taken more regular and less hurried than the retreat commenced, and no hall was made until they found themselves at the eastern entrance of Pariset from Paris. Here the prisoners were hurried into the church, where they found others taken in that day's fight in the number of two or three hundred in all. As Michel entered he heard a loud shout of joy. A dozen men out of the crowd, soldiers of various grades, were hurling epithets of mockery at one of those who sat with his hand buried in his hands, seemingly heeding their reproaches, as he would seem. Michel asked hastily what was the meaning of the uproar.

One of the crowd had heard the officer was the captain who had permitted himself to be surprised that morning, and "through whom," he added, "thirty men are all the prisoners."

A German sergeant among the escort seemed to look with amusement at the proceedings. "Der teufel" he exclaimed, and then added in good French, "If that occurred in our army the boy officer would be degraded and probably be shot, but the Saxons soldiers are easy and a man would probably be shot also."

Michel who had by this time approached the group, said in a quiet but firm tone, "This railing is making us contemptible in the eyes of the enemy."

The unfortunate officer looked up at Michel with a gratified glance; the Prussian sergeant observed him keenly. Michel allowed himself, as it were, to be effaced in a corner of the church, for he did not wish to attract too much observation. But he did not find peace where he sought it. The corner he had chosen was rather darker than the remainder of the building, and he did not at first notice a tall young officer who was walking up and down with an excited air. He wore the uniform of a lieutenant. At the end of his promenade were assembled two German soldiers, smoking and conversing, but they seemed to keep a special and watchful eye upon his movements. Presently there entered a German officer of superior rank, with a considerable following. There was a tremendous commotion. The German soldiers rose and stood in their attitude of self respect; the prisoners indulged in all the excitement of expectation of something, they knew not what. The officer marched straight up to where the Frenchman was keeping up his rapid pace to and fro, and with a harsh voice and with broken expressions, said, "What? I am you know with what you are charged?"

"I have heard it vaguely" said the young man, drawing himself up with a proud attitude.

"Well, you shall know it clearly. You are charged with having broken your parole at Sedan; you are charged with having shot German soldiers whom you had got as prisoners."

"But it is an infamous calumny," then cried out the young man.

"A calumny!"

"Yes, some of your people have brought a wretched boy of a cobarel, and induced him to tell lies."

"You had better not be insolent." Then turning to those about him, the German officer said, "bring forward this liar."

There was a movement and from the midst of the German soldiers there was produced a boy of eighteen, or small growth and with weasseed features. As he appeared he seemed to the stern eye of the German to be trembling, for his gait was feeble and tottering. "What do you fear?" he asked in his harshest tones.

The boy looked up and was unable to speak.

"Speak out," cried the German.

"Do you not see?" exclaimed the French officer. "The wretched boy has been made drunk, otherwise he would never have dreamed of inventing so sound ideas a lie."

The German officer gave a furious look at the boy, then at the French accused; finally, with a curse, he bade them bring that young fool to where he might sleep off his debauch, and dashed himself out of the church. Shortly after several of the prisoners were sent for one by one, and it was understood that they were examined with a view of discovering whether the accusation against the French lieutenant, made by the miserable boy, could be sustained; but each of them, as he returned, declared on their return that they had contradicted the accusation. The anxiety of the prisoners watched the event with great curiosity, but Michel with peculiar interest. He thought it not impossible that he might soon have the same peril impending over his own head that threatened the lieutenant.

By-and-by the German colonel returned, and again, in a harsh voice, addressed the young lieutenant. "I have examined some other of your countrymen," he said.

"Well?" returned the other, proudly, "They are not of a stage with the first"

"Of course they are not, for the wretched lad was lying."

"I do not know. The others are as likely to be lying."

The Frenchman made a gesture of disdain.

"I tell you," went on the colonel furiously, "that I strongly suspect the boy in telling the truth after all."

"And that I and the several soldiers you have called out to question are stating what is false?"

"Yes."

"Very well," said the young man coolly, "if I were not a prisoner in your world I would call you a liar to your teeth. As I am a prisoner, and you are at liberty to say what you choose, I will not reply. I will be forced back upon the colonel."

"Come hither," called the colonel in a roar.

Several German officers of different ranks came rushing forward.

"Observe," he cried, "that fellow is to give no parole, but him in closely watched and kept in safety. He must not escape, and to estimate himself he was obliged to ought to be shot."

The young man shrugged his shoulders with contempt.

"I never knew he does not evade again, or it shall be worse for whoever is neglectful." And with a few additional roars he bade him take off his accoutrements.

His injunctions were carefully heeded. The weapons within the line of sentinels with sentinels were posted at every corner outside. The prisoners for the most part looked spiritlessly and dejected, and of motions not being much disturbed by music. A bunch of black bread and some water was given to each. Those who had their watch costs with them were left them to sleep in the body of the church, while the bulk of them slept as best they could.

Buried in sad reflection, Michel said to himself, "Ah, how I miss my gay, light-hearted, brave comrade."

CHAPTER LXI.

A MELANCHOLY MARCH.

A bugle call awoke Michel from the uneasy slumber into which he had fallen upon his hard couch. For a moment, as he started up, he fancied that he was about to fall once again into the battle and bivouac of the previous day, but a glance around of a December morning he looked on the scene undeserved him. In the early light the strident figures of the prisoners, and there was no mistaking their condition. Their pale, haggard, perspiring was the most desperate sight, could not wear the down-trodden, woe-begone look of those who captives. The privations which their captors had inflicted upon them, added to the sense of imprisonment, formed a double load of misfortune that seemed, for the moment at least, to have crushed out of them all heart and spirit.

Shaking himself together, Michel went promptly to the spot where the captives were ordered to form. His knowledge of war must have enabled him to comprehend quickly the orders given, and so spared him many a painful humiliation.

When the prisoners were mustered, each was again furnished with a piece of black bread, and a brief provision for the day. Then they were formed into rank and marched out of the church. On emerging from the door they found the escort ready. In the front marched a strong detachment of Saxon infantry, and then the men were brought up by a similar force, while at each side rode a large guard of lancers. As they marched in the street through the long street of Pariset they were thrown up, and Michel saw that the whole line was about to pass through them might be easily and swiftly done full of pigs. But there was no room to the points to which a sentinel was posted. He looked out, but could see no help. Previously he had established during their halts a sort of intimacy with the sergeant of the escort, and he now addressed him. They had arrived at the point when they could understand each other's signals, at which a word of sign would be given. Michel was ch to escape his threatened doom. In a rather gloomy humor Michel satisfied himself that the prospects of his escape were small and

WEEKLY CALENDAR.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 21.
15—Sunday—Fourth Sunday in Lent.
16—Monday—St. Patrick.
17—Tuesday—St. Patrick, Bishop and Confessor.
18—Wednesday—St. Gabriel, Archang'l Patron of the Holy Name Society—St. Joseph, Confessor.
19—Thursday—St. B. V. M., and Patron Blessed of our Lord.
20—Friday—Most Precious Blood of our Lord.
21—Saturday—St. Benedict, Abbot.

THE MONITOR:
THE ONLY
Irish and Catholic Journal in California.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
SATURDAY.....MARCH 14, 1874.

THE EMPEROR'S LETTER.

Emperor WILLIAM'S letter to Earl RUSSELL, which we print elsewhere, is a document of far more than ordinary importance. It expresses in unmistakable terms the sentiments of that monarch respecting the laws against the independence and integrity of the Catholic Church which have recently been put into force within his dominions.

A careful perusal of this letter, brief as it is, will convince any impartial man that the Emperor completely misrepresents the character of these laws, and attributes to them both a cause and a result which are exactly their reverse. The reason of this is undoubtedly, an innate conviction that the enactments are in themselves so oppressive and unfair that some kind of apology must be made for them.

The first effort of the Emperor is to strengthen the impression previously created by the speeches and writings of his ministers, that the FALCK laws, as they are generally called, are simply defensive in their nature. They were framed, he tells us, as we have often been told before, to resist encroachments made upon his kingly dignity and authority by the ecclesiastical power. But, inasmuch as nobody has yet informed us when this encroachment began, or in what it consisted, or by what agency it was being effected, we are justified, according to all rules of argument, in concluding that the "encroachment" was wholly an imaginary one, conjured up by the Emperor's advisers for a special purpose. No person ever heard of the ecclesiastical power having dared to indorse the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope. The Minister formally declined to comply with the demand, whereupon the Bishop issued an order forbidding Catholic parents to allow their children to attend the instruction of WOLLMANN and TRIBSEE. Then the Minister of Public Instruction and the School Board insisted on the exclusion from the seminary of all Catholic children who obeyed the Bishop.

This is the Chronicle's version of the beginning of the ecclesiastical difficulties in France, and, for the sake of argument, we are willing to suppose it correct in all particulars. Our contemporary, though it does not say so in express terms, evidently regards the conduct of the Bishop as a piece of unwarrantable presumption, which was very properly ignored by the Minister of Public Instruction.

Let us examine the facts of the case for a moment, and see whether they justify such a view. Branneberg is a Catholic seminary, and the two gentlemen referred to were engaged to teach Catholic doctrine to Catholic children. When they refused to do so, as they did when they rejected a dogma of the Church, they became guilty of a breach of trust and were rendered incapable of fulfilling their duty. It was utterly impossible for the Bishop, if he had any idea at all of his responsibility before God for the souls of those intrusted to his charge, to permit Catholic boys to study Catholic theology under Professors who were elected as Catholics, but who had deliberately thrown off allegiance to the Church.

Clearly the Minister of Public Instruction was bound in justice to remove Messrs. WOLLMANN and TRIBSEE. With the right or wrong of the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope he had nothing whatever to do; but he was bound to see that it was Catholic theology which was taught in the pupils at Braunsberg, and not Protestant theology, or Mormon theology, or Mahomedan theology. When he refused to remove the offending Professor, the Bishop, of course, forbade the Catholic children to attend the lectures on religious matters in which false doctrines would be imparted to them. Then the Minister retorted by compelling the students to attend these lectures under pain of expulsion from the seminary.

We would confidently ask any fair-minded man which party was acting unjustly here, and have no fear of the decision. Supposing, for a moment, that Branneberg was a Protestant gymnasium, that Messrs. TRIBSEE and WOLLASTON were paid for teaching Protestant doctrines to Protestant pupils, and that a dignitary of the Protestant Church discovered them teaching Catholic theology and demanded their instant removal, would any one of the newspapers which now condemn the conduct of the Bishop find fault with him? We venture to assert that no such thing would occur. Moreover, we are certain that a refusal of the Minister to comply with the request would be denounced as despotism and tyranny of the most intolerable sort.

Why, then, is not equal justice meted out to the Catholic prelate? There is no use in attempting to disguise the fact that the Bishop was but doing what most of their liberality will sanction measures against the Catholic Church which they would stigmatize in the strongest manner if directed against any other Christian denomination.

It is easy, indeed, to manifest the sheerest fallacy of the Emperor's declaration that the hostile attitude of the Catholics towards the German Empire compelled him to frame and pass the repressive FALCK laws. The Prussian despot actually insists that these enactments are in no manner oppressive at all! They do not, he maintains, warrant any persecution of the Catholic Church, and only confer on him powers which have long been held by the sovereigns of France, Austria and Italy. The Chronicle says that candid men who have taken the pains to make themselves familiar with the history of the contest will acquit the Government of any attempt to infringe upon religious liberty or to control the Church in the management of ecclesiastical affairs.

This pronouncement is so enormously at variance with facts that we are forced to the conclusion that whoever wrote the foregoing sentence must be unacquainted with the FALCK laws and is utterly ignorant of their contents. They really take the control of the affairs of the Catholic Church in Germany out of the hands of the bishops and priests and lend it into the hands of those who, being Protestants, can know nothing of such business. The least harmful of these enactments dare not be proposed in this country, and no one dare to put it into execution should he immediately be followed by a civil war. The smallest and most insignificant act in the United States would not think of tolerating its action for a single day.

The writer in the Chronicle cannot have been aware that in the opening clause of the chapter of general provisions of the first law it is laid down that no ecclesiastical office in one of the Christian Churches can only be conferred on a German who has studied theology in a Government institution. We have shown before what kind of theology have shown before what kind of theology may be learned upon these students in such places. There is no possible guarantee given that downright infidelity may not be taught by Professors who are elected by the civil authorities. Nor, we think that every Church has a right to educate its own clergy as it pleases and where it pleases, and the infringement of such right is persecution.

Again, the 4 later ordains that appointment to ecclesiastical office must proceed from a Government Bureau. Only imagine the officials at Washington empowered to decide who shall occupy the pulpits of San Francisco, and what doctrines shall be expounded from them; and means less may be had of the nature of these FALCK statutes, which it is alleged do not interfere with religious liberty! Again, these laws provide for the establishment of a "Royal Tribunal of Ecclesiastical Affairs," which presumes to decide religious and church disputes, that are a special authority up to the present time dared take under its cognizance.

But if we were to do no more than enumerate all the different ways in which the enactments better the Church, subject it to civil control and destroy its independence, an entire issue of this paper would not afford us space enough. It is, therefore, ridiculous in the extreme to pretend that the treatment of the Catholic Church by the German Government does not amount to actual persecution and does not infringe upon liberty of conscience. Candid persons, we think, no matter what the Chronicle may say, will agree with the London Spectator, and declare that it would be more honorable and more consistent for Emperor WILLIAM to declare Catholicity illegal altogether within his dominions.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY CELEBRATION.

The SAINT PATRICK'S Day celebration of this year promises to be one of the most successful which ever assembled San Francisco has witnessed. While we are in favor of doing away with expensive parades and demonstrations which impose a heavy tax on people who can poorly afford it, we shall always advocate some recognition of the national festival which will show how deep is the affection that true Irishmen feel for their native land. One of the most appropriate as well as interesting features in the procession will be the appearance of the recently - formed society of "The American Celts," which chiefly consists of Americans born children of Irish parents. It is indeed highly gratifying to find these young men, by birthright citizens of this Great Republic, paying tribute to the land from whence they derive their blood, and proclaiming themselves part and parcel of the grand old Celtic race. It reflects credit on them, and shows that the are above the petty meanness, so common now a-days, of forgetting the nationality to which their forefathers belonged, and for which they suffered.

The meeting of the Convention of delegates held last Sunday was in every way satisfactory so far as results are concerned, as it was a good indication of the character and extent of the approaching celebration. There was only one circumstance that surprised when we were disposed to regret, and that was the offering by Mr. GILMORE, the Secretary, of the annexed resolution:

"Whereas, The proper observance of St. PATRICK'S Day is commanding that absorbed interest every patriotic person having Celtic blood in his veins; and whereas processions have been recognized from the earliest period hand-and-hand in honor of the day, and as a means of thanksgiving for some event, or commemoration of some misfortune; and whereas the proclamation on St. PATRICK'S Day being timely in the mind of every Hibernian that is in possession of the fact that the legendary Irishman banished the reptiles from the Emerald Isle, hoped alive that love of country that is hereby

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the delegates of this Convention representing various Irish societies, that it is the duty of every person of Irish birth or feeling to participate in the public celebration of St. PATRICK'S Day, and that members of societies who do not parade on that day, and have hitherto paraded, are unworthy the name of patriotic Irishmen."

At the suggestion of the President, the passage of the resolution was deferred until the first meeting after the celebration, and accordingly it was laid over until that occasion. We sincerely trust it will not pass either then or at any other time. No doubt Mr. GILMORE is a spirited Irishman and meant well; but his resolution would be productive only of mischief. It indicates a species of intolerance from which the cause of Irish nationality has suffered severely. We do not know by what law of justice or common sense Mr. GILMORE proposes to estimate the patriotism of any Irish society, or any Irish individual, by their attitude towards the St. PATRICK'S Day celebration. A very excellent nationalist may believe the whole thing a humbug and stop at home; while an equally excellent nationalist may believe it an admirable affair, and make it a point of honor to turn out.

The tendency to dogmatically lay down that the men who do thus and so are nationalists, and the men who are otherwise are not nationalists at all, has been the cause of deplorable dissensions among our Irish countrymen. It has had the effect of making many despair of ever seeing the Irish people united so as to be capable of making any serious effort to recover their independence, and it has enabled our enemies to perpetuate a well-known yet untruthful reproach against us. In our opinion, every man who believes in Ireland's right to self-government and is willing to render assistance to her in regaining it, is a true nationalist; and it is the very height of intolerance for any person to attempt to read him out of the national party because his views as to the means by which self-government can be won does not tally with that of his orthodoxer. The egotistical assumption, "We are nationalists because we say we are, and all who think that you are not nationalists because you say and do differently," is a decided nuisance, and should be discountenanced by all intelligent and refreshing Irishmen.

The Barber Commission.

It is amusing to notice the persistent opposition of the Sacramento Union and the Call and Bulletin of this city to the bill providing for the election of three Harbor Commissioners by the Legislature, and thereby depriving Governor BOOTH of three lucrative plums with which to reward his political henchmen. These journals affect to believe it to be a matured conspiracy and waste column after column daily in efforts to defeat it; when the true reason for their opposition is that it curtails in a slight degree the already too powerful patronage of Mr. BOOTH. Were the Governor a Democrat—no matter how well proven his integrity—those same journals would hound on the Legislature to do what they now shout it for doing. To make this assertion more manifest, it is only necessary to state that the most prominent exponents for the positions of Harbor Commissioners—John R. Woods, Charles Gildea and J. W. Mandeville—are men known anti-monopoly antecedents and of unquestioned integrity. The bill has gone to the Governor, and he will probably veto it; but we think there are enough friends of the bill in the Senate to pass it, notwithstanding.

Hon. Charles Sumner, United States Senator from Massachusetts, died of heart disease in Washington City, at three o'clock P. M., on Wednesday last. The delegation from this State in Congress are making arrangements for his obsequies.

WASHINGTON ON EDUCATION WITHOUT RELIGION.

In his Farewell Address to America Fellow-Citizens WASHINGTON said:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firm props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle. It is well, essentially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?"

These are the sentiments uttered on a most memorable occasion by General WASHINGTON. They are extremely unpopular to-day, because among the masses of Americans secularism has completely defiled all minds. For ourselves, we do not think as WASHINGTON thought, to believe like him in the necessity of Christian morality for the preservation of society, would be now regarded as a sign of weakness on the Christian theory. This astounding change is, we presume, to be attributed to progress and enlightment! There is not a half-educated and wholly self-sufficient newspaper scribble in the United States who does not believe that he knows more about the requirements of humanity and the principles of free government than over the Father of his Country did. Reposing upon me in the fulfillment of my allotted duties, and with firm reliance on God, in whose help we look for wisdom and right, in full respect for the creed of others, and the evangelic forbearance which has been enjoined by my profession, I am free and administration of my State. The latest measures of my Government do not infringe upon the rights of Church, or the free exercise of religion by her votaries. They only give to the Independent legislature of the country more of the gubernatorial long possessed by other countries, and which is exercised by them without being held by the Romish Church incompatible with the free exercise of her religion.

"I rejoice at the proof afforded me by your letter that the sympathy of the people of England would not fail me in this struggle—the people of England, in whom my people and their royal house are bound by the remembrance of many a past and honorable struggle maintained in common against the days of William of Orange.

"I beg you to communicate this letter, with my hearty thanks, to the gentlemen of the deputation, and remain yours sincerely,

WILHELM.

BERLIN, February 4, 1874.

JEREMIAH DENARIE, of Lake City, Nevada county, desires to return thanks through the columns of THE MONITOR, to Dr. Porter of this place, for the scientific and successful manner in which the latter set the broken leg. Dr. PORTER justly bears a high reputation where he is best known.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Laine's military bill was defeated in the Senate on Tuesday by the casting vote of the Lieutenant-Governor. On Wednesday it was reconsidered, on motion of Senator Hendricks, and passed by a vote of 22 to 18.

Edgerton's bill to give $25,000 to Haywood, Burch and Portsmith, the Code codifiers, in addition to the liberal salaries which they have already received, has passed the Senate. As Judge Lindley says, this is little less than public robbery, and by the Dolly Vardens, too.

Terrill has introduced Dr. Gates' pet scheme in the Assembly. It is entitled "A bill to open and establish a public street in the city and county of San Francisco, to be called Western avenue," and to take private lands therefor. Said street to run from the corner of Lyon and Sacramento streets to Market, between Ninth and Tenth streets, the opening of said street being to provide for sewerage for that portion of the Western Addition of San Francisco through which it is proposed said street shall run. Should this bill become law, it will virtually confiscate the lands of small property-owners on the proposed route, and necessitate an entire change of grades of some of the cottages on Mr. Fitzgerald, the tank clerk, at Castleber, and $50 for each witness in addition to "will lead to the same result.

At Nass, February 13th, an inquest was held on the body of a man named James Ward, a constabulary pensioner, who was found dead in his bed in Ballyhaise. A verdict in accordance with the facts was returned.

At the Wigan Police Court, February 9, John Flynn was committed for trial for the murder of Andrew Overend. Deceased was a chemist in Wigan, and Flynn, a lodger, knocked him down and kicked him to death.

Mr. Reardon, of Piccadilly, late member for Athlone, has issued an address to the electors of county King. The address is issued in the expectation that the petition threatened against the return of Mr. Reardon will be withdrawn.

The beautiful convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Mallow, was on the 10th February the scene of one of those touching and edifying religious ceremonials—the vow of each frequent occurrence in Ireland—a ceremony in which the young heroine, after a long probation, consecrates herself irrevocably to God, and, despising the transient joys of a vain and deceitful world, seeks the peace which that world cannot give, and finds in peace only in doing good to God's little ones and in the perfection of self. The young lady professed was Miss Kelly (in religion, Sister M. Columba Joseph), daughter of Mr. Kelly, Carlow. The Venerable Archdeacon Rogers, Vicar-Capitular, officiated on the occasion. Besides the immediate relatives of the young lady professed the Very Rev. Canon McCarthy, Mallow; Revs. P. Ahern and John Flynn, do.; Rev. T. Ryan, Ballyclough; Rev. D. Walsh, Mourne Abbey; Rev. J. Barry, Glountane; Rev. P. Kelly, Kilbarrington; Rev. J. Leary, Kilfinnichy; Rev. W. McCarthy, Ballyhooly; Rev. J. Walsh, Glountane, &c. At the close of the ceremony the Sisters with wonted hospitality entertained the clergy and friends of the professed to a sumptuous dejeuner.

Catholic Statistics.

The Province of Baltimore comprises the Archdiocese of Baltimore and the dioceses of Charleston, S. C., Wheeling, W. Virginia, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Scranton, Erie and Harrisburg in Penn., Richmond, Va., Savannah, Ga., Augustine, Fla., Wilmington, Del., and the Vicariate Apostolic of North Carolina.

The Archdiocese of Baltimore, of which is Most Rev. James Roosevelt Bayley is the eighth Archbishop, contains 137 churches, 53 chapels and stations, 201 priests, 7 houses recently ordained, 11 ecclesiastical institutions, 15 male and 17 female religious institutions, 10 literary institutions for young men, 14 female academies, 14 parochial and 11 orphan asylums. The aggregate number of parochial schools and academies stated in detail in the Directory, are omitted from the "summary," as in the number of Catholics in the Archdiocese, upon the statistics of any nature—even in respect of extending, widening and straightening streets, and although the Board of Supervisors shall not order what they propose, the Supervisors shall not order the performance of any work developed or reported against by the Board of Public Works. We are in favor of a Board of Public Works, but are opposed to giving them such extensive powers as this bill proposes. Besides, the number of the Board should either be reduced to three or increased to five.

The Assembly apportionment bill is amended in the Senate and passed.

A bill to create the county of Vallejo was introduced in the Senate on Friday.

The bill to provide for the construction of a railroad from Colfax to Nevada City passed both branches of the Legislature.

The New City Hall.

The Call is whining about the new City Hall. It says:

"If the inhabitants of San Francisco cannot be stop to the City Hall act, we pity their impotence. We have had Grand Juries, we have had Boards of Supervisors, we have had Mayors, but we have never had a Legislature that would do its duty, and we are not the members powerless to abate nuisances.

The reason why the Call seamed so anxious to get possession of the City Hall and the commissioners are: First, that the whole business connected with it may be managed, and that the public opinion is about evenly divided on the question: Were it right in constructing a mere county building that the law contemplated; third, that a good, and, despite the drawback of a vain and deceitful world, seeks the peace which that world cannot give, and finds in peace only in doing good to God's little ones and in the perfection of self. The young lady professed was Miss Kelly (in religion, Sister M. Columba Joseph), daughter of Mr. Kelly, Carlow. The Venerable Archdeacon Rogers, Vicar-Capitular, officiated on the occasion. Besides the immediate relatives of the young lady professed the Very Rev. Canon McCarthy, Mallow; Revs. P. Ahern and John Flynn, do.; Rev. T. Ryan, Ballyclough; Rev. D. Walsh, Mourne Abbey; Rev. J. Barry, Glountane; Rev. P. Kelly, Kilbarrington; Rev. J. Leary, Kilfinnichy; Rev. W. McCarthy, Ballyhooly; Rev. J. Walsh, Glountane, &c. At the close of the ceremony the Sisters with wonted hospitality entertained the clergy and friends of the professed to a sumptuous dejeuner.

Catholic Statistics.

The Province of Baltimore comprises the Archdioceses of Baltimore and the dioceses of Charleston, S. C., Wheeling, W. Virginia, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Scranton, Erie and Harrisburg in Penn., Richmond, Va., Savannah, Ga., Augustine, Fla., Wilmington, Del., and the Vicariate Apostolic of North Carolina.

The Archdiocese of Baltimore, of which is Most Rev. James Roosevelt Bayley is the eighth Archbishop, contains 137 churches, 53 chapels and stations, 201 priests, 7 houses recently ordained, 11 ecclesiastical institutions, 15 male and 17 female religious institutions, 10 literary institutions for young men, 14 female academies, 14 parochial and 11 orphan asylums. The aggregate number of parochial schools and academies stated in detail in the Directory, are omitted from the "summary," as in the number of Catholics in the Archdiocese, upon the statistics of any nature—even in respect of extending, widening and straightening streets, and although the Board of Supervisors shall not order what they propose, the Supervisors shall not order the performance of any work developed or reported against by the Board of Public Works. We are in favor of a Board of Public Works, but are opposed to giving them such extensive powers as this bill proposes. Besides, the number of the Board should either be reduced to three or increased to five.

The Assembly apportionment bill is amended in the Senate and passed.

A bill to create the county of Vallejo was introduced in the Senate on Friday.

The bill to provide for the construction of a railroad from Colfax to Nevada City passed both branches of the Legislature.

The New City Hall.

The Call is whining about the new City Hall. It says:

"If the inhabitants of San Francisco cannot be stop to the City Hall act, we pity their impotence. We have had Grand Juries, we have had Boards of Supervisors, we have had Mayors, but we have never had a Legislature that would do its duty, and we are not the members powerless to abate nuisances.

The reason why the Call seamed so anxious to get possession of the City Hall and the commissioners are: First, that the whole business connected with it may be managed, and that the public opinion is about evenly divided on the question: Were it right in constructing a mere county building that the law contemplated; third, that a good, and, despite the drawback of a vain and deceitful world, seeks the peace which that world cannot give, and finds in peace only in doing good to God's little ones and in the perfection of self. The young lady professed was Miss Kelly (in religion, Sister M. Columba Joseph), daughter of Mr. Kelly, Carlow. The Venerable Archdeacon Rogers, Vicar-Capitular, officiated on the occasion. Besides the immediate relatives of the young lady professed the Very Rev. Canon McCarthy, Mallow; Revs. P. Ahern and John Flynn, do.; Rev. T. Ryan, Ballyclough; Rev. D. Walsh, Mourne Abbey; Rev. J. Barry, Glountane; Rev. P. Kelly, Kilbarrington; Rev. J. Leary, Kilfinnichy; Rev. W. McCarthy, Ballyhooly; Rev. J. Walsh, Glountane, &c. At the close of the ceremony the Sisters with wonted hospitality entertained the clergy and friends of the professed to a sumptuous dejeuner.

LATE NEWS ITEMS.

The Government has offered a reward of £100 for information as to the man who murdered the butcher, Walsh, in Asketon, on the 4th February.

A young gentleman named Bennett was recently drowned whilst skating on a lake near Hull, England. Two ladies were rescued in a very exhausted condition.

Mr. Robertson, who recently contested Hastings in the Conservative interest, and stood in a fit on the London express at Hastings, February 13.

It was rumored in Oxford that Mr. Cardwell is about to be raised to the peerage. Should that statement be correct, the Conservatives will again contest the city.

The Conservatives of Strond, England, have determined to petition against the return of Dickinson and Stanton, on the grounds of bribery, treating and the employment of voters.

Constable John Condon, of the Reserve, and four sub-constables, left Dublin on the 13th February to form a special station, called the "Peace Preservation Act," near Athenry, in the county of Galway.

A meeting in favor of Home Rule for Ireland was held at Cardiff February 9th. Colonel Stuart, Liberal candidate, addressed the meeting, and a vote of confidence was accorded him.

A reward of £100 is offered by the Executive for the apprehension of the perpetrator of the outrage on Mr. Fitzgerald, the bank clerk, at Castlebar, and £50 for each of the informations as will lead to the same result.

At Nass, February 13th, an inquest was held on the body of a man named James Ward, a constabulary pensioner, who was found dead in his bed in Ballyhaise. A verdict in accordance with the facts was returned.

At the Wigan Police Court, February 9, John Flynn was committed for trial for the murder of Andrew Overend. Deceased was a chemist in Wigan, and Flynn, a lodger, knocked him down and kicked him to death.

Mr. Reardon, of Piccadilly, late member for Athlone, has issued an address to the electors of county King. The address is issued in the expectation that the petition threatened against the return of Mr. Reardon will be withdrawn.

The beautiful convent of the Sisters of Mercy, Mallow, was on the 10th February the scene of one of those touching and edifying religious ceremonials—the vow of each frequent occurrence in Ireland—a ceremony in which the young heroine, after a long probation, consecrates herself irrevocably to God, and, despising the transient joys of a vain and deceitful world, seeks the peace which that world cannot give, and finds in peace only in doing good to God's little ones and in the perfection of self. The young lady professed was Miss Kelly (in religion, Sister M. Columba Joseph), daughter of Mr. Kelly, Carlow. The Venerable Archdeacon Rogers, Vicar-Capitular, officiated on the occasion. Besides the immediate relatives of the young lady professed the Very Rev. Canon McCarthy, Mallow; Revs. P. Ahern and John Flynn, do.; Rev. T. Ryan, Ballyclough; Rev. D. Walsh, Mourne Abbey; Rev. J. Barry, Glountane; Rev. P. Kelly, Kilbarrington; Rev. J. Leary, Kilfinnichy; Rev. W. McCarthy, Ballyhooly; Rev. J. Walsh, Glountane, &c. At the close of the ceremony the Sisters with wonted hospitality entertained the clergy and friends of the professed to a sumptuous dejeuner.

BRIEF CITY ITEMS.

Last month Nicholas Luning released a $500,000 mortgage on property owned by Alta Judge Hoffman.

Col. Peter Donohue has gone East on a visit to his old brother, the Proprietor of a line foundry at Jersey City.

The receipts into the United States Treasury of this city for the months of January and February amount to $2,000,000.

Col. James Coey, ex-Postmaster of this city, has been nominated by the President as Consul to Leghorn, Italy.

The Board of Supervisors, on petition of a number of our best citizens, have prohibited the further burning of lime within the limits of Oakland harbor.

The "Granada," the second of the Pacific Mail Company's iron propellers, arrived in this city from New York on Monday last. She will be put on the China route.

The real estate sales in this city during the short month of February amounted to $1,611,697. This is the largest month's transactions since December, 1873.

The Board of Supervisors has granted the City Railroad Company the right to continue their road from the crossing of Clay and Leavenworth streets to First street, over the Hill Cemetery.

It is proposed to run a tunnel 32 feet wide and 20 feet high in the center through the hill on Sutter street, from Larkin to Larkinstreets. The estimated cost is $125,000.

The certificate of incorporation of the San Francisco Insurance Company was filed with the County Clerk on Monday last. It is capitalized at $500,000, and is fire and marine insurance business.

The expenditures of the city and county for the month of January were $500,000, being $1,400,000 less than corresponding months of last year. Last year the money was held back for an advance, but the prices were satisfactory and grain was therefore sold.

A California Fruit Preserving Company was incorporated in this city last week, with a capital stock of $100,000, and intend to do a heavy business in canning fruits, meat, fish, and all animal and vegetable substances and material, and the construction of a manufactory of packing-boxes."

A person who owns 26 fifty-vara lots at the terminus of the Presidio railroad intends to have them improved by small cottages, separately to persons who will erect large residences on them. They will be near the Presidio Park.

A new road has been opened through the sand-desert portion of the Potrero, and is now being used by the high rocky mound which stands about the center of the tract. The new road is a fine, hard, level, vegetation is springing up on each side of it.

It is said that the extension of New Montgomery street to the Bay is contemplated in the new England States. Worcester, Massachusetts, was the last place looked to for hope, but there, too, it is past hope. The chief cause of failure is attributed to the want of energy. It is meeting with no success in any large city.

The area of Boston is to be still further enlarged. There has been a bill passed to annex the cities of Chelsea, Cambridge and somerville, the towns of Winthrop and Revere, a portion of Brookline, and a small township in Newton.

The United States Supreme Court and Court of Claims adjourned on Monday in token of respect to the memory of the late ex-President Fillmore. The President has ordered that naval and military honors be also paid. He was buried on Tuesday.

Eastern merchants have represented to Congress that the customs and revenue laws are not enforced on the Pacific coast, and that the conduct of the Government officers and informers tender those laws a dead letter, and subjects to the moral sense of the mercantile community.

Congressman Clayton has delivered to the President a paper signed by all the bankers and about two hundred of the most prominent merchants of the city in favor of the reappointment of our present postmaster. The President's desire is to make a change, and he seldom yields to outside pressure.

The bill for the reorganization of the army, as prepared by the House Military Committee, makes a reduction of eight regiments, cutting down the infantry to sixty, the cavalry to eight and the artillery to four regiments. The rank and file will number 25,000 in place of 30,000, as at present.

We stated last week that ex-President Baez of San Domingo was arrested in New York, on complaint of a Connecticut man who was imprisoned under his administration. The bail of Baez was fixed at $20,000, but he refused to give it, and the order for his arrest was subsequently vacated.

A correspondent of the Daily News at St. Petersburg, writes under date of the 26th inst., that serious rioting occurred in Poland in consequence of the closing of churches by order of the Government. At one place the disorder was so great that the military were called out and fired on the rioters, killing and wounding several.

The new Parliament of England met on the 5th inst., informally, and on the 6th instant the House of Commons organized by the administration of the oath to members in groups of forty. Henry Brand, Speaker of the House under the late administration, was elected Speaker of the present. Gladstone has declined the leadership of the Liberal party, but it is thought he will be induce to change his mind; but if not, the Marquis of Hartington will be his successor.

The State election in New Hampshire bids fair to result in a Democratic victory. Dispatches to Saturday morning give McClintock, (Republican, 21,000; Weston, (D.) 676; Bleckner, (Anti-Prohibitionist, 1,614. Town heard from, 155, yet to be heard from, 52. The Senate will probably be a tie, the house is very close.

The engineers' estimate forthe improvement of San Antonio creek is $216,620, exclusive of bridges and land damages. This will give anchorage for forty-large ships, wharfage for forty, and for as many ferryboats as may be required. The engineers strongly recommend the work, and Rigby is confident of success.

Senator Hager has presented to the Senate the resolution of the California Legislature asking for a repeal of the law in regard to holding the Congressional election in that State in September, 1874, and asking that the time be fixed for September, 1875. Referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The following resolution, offered by Lastruell, was passed by the House on the 10th: That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to furnish this House with full information in regard to the necessity for a battleship pity of fresh water, and for the construction of improved roads at Mare Island Navy Yard.

Both Houses of the Iowa Legislature have passed the Railroad bill, which originated in the Senate, by a vote of ninety-two to ninety-four, and which fixes the rate of fares at two cents per mile, and prohibits discrimination. The bill now goes to the Governor.

Dan Carlos has announced that on his entrance into the city of Bilboa he will proceed to the Cathedral and be crowned King of Spain.

There is due to the Government from executors of revenue $2,325,195, which, if not destroyed it will not be because of peace-time action, but because of want of confidence in the ability of the Government to collect what will be a candidate subject in newspaper falsehoods and abuse.

William M. Lent, ex-commissioner, ten years ago against Colonel Steinberger on a land claim, and who was defeated by the decision given by the latter for the claimant, has been elected, having ever given a note, but when the case was called last week the case was dismissed, the surprise of the defendant's attorneys that they called and obtained a few days' continuance. The case has been pending since 1864, and the interest is $70,000.

The Fish Acclimatizing Society are quite successful in their efforts to stock Lake Merced in this county. The lake covers about 600 acres, and about 200,000 trout, of three varieties, have been planted in it from time to time during the last three years. A trout which weighed four pounds was exhibited in this city last Monday which was hatched three years ago.

A delegation of thirty-five ladies filed a petition with the Board of Supervisors last Monday evening against the sale of liquors in groceries. They say that many saloons is done to the poor and to the youth of the city by licensed establishments many other. They estimate the population of the city at 200,000, the dram shops at 2,000 and the daily sales at $50,000, or $1,500,000 a year, "paid for that which degrades the consumer, promotes poverty, pauperism, disease and death."

Joseph Middlemiss, an insurance solicitor, has filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. His statement indicates that he was principally a solicitor of personal loans. He has eighty-two creditors, distributed mainly at fractions from local population throughout this State and Oregon. His loans in sums ranging from $7 to $1,500 about $6,500. His assets amount to $.00. The Court officers are puzzled to know whence the fees are to come.

The Board of Supervisors have under consideration the propriety of abolishing the office of City and County Assessor. At their last meeting Mr. Lynch said he was convinced that the present Assessor is badly incompetent, and knows no more about his duties than a setter of cobble-stones knows about diamonds. In consequence of the ignorance of that official, the Board of Equalization was crowded with applications for reduction of assessments' and it would be impossible to get through within the time specified by law. His own property has been raised in valuation from $700 to $10,000.

TELEGRAPHIC JOTTINGS.

The sale of photographs of the Comte de Chambord is prohibited in France.

A furious snow storm prevailed in England on Monday last, accompanied, in some place, by lightning.

The Catholic Bishop of Treves, in Germany, has been arrested for violating Bismarck's new ecclesiastical law.

Cholera has been found in Washington for the town-site of Chinese Camp, Tuolumne county, in this State.

Eight hundred operatives are thrown out of employment by the burning of a cotton mill near Edinburgh, valued at $1,250,000.

Don Carlos has announced that on his entrance into the city of Bilboa he will proceed to the Cathedral and be crowned King of Spain.

There is due to the Government from executors of revenue $2,325,195, which, if not destroyed it will not be because of peace-time action, but because of want of confidence in the ability of the Government to collect what will be a candidate subject in newspaper falsehoods and abuse.

William M. Lent, ex-commissioner, ten years ago against Colonel Steinberger on a land claim, and who was defeated by the decision given by the latter for the claimant, has been elected, having ever given a note, but when the case was called last week the case was dismissed, the surprise of the defendant's attorneys that they called and obtained a few days' continuance. The case has been pending since 1864, and the interest is $70,000.

The Fish Acclimatizing Society are quite successful in their efforts to stock Lake Merced in this county. The lake covers about 600 acres, and about 200,000 trout, of three varieties, have been planted in it from time to time during the last three years. A trout which weighed four pounds was exhibited in this city last Monday which was hatched three years ago.

A delegation of thirty-five ladies filed a petition with the Board of Supervisors last Monday evening against the sale of liquors in groceries. They say that many saloons is done to the poor and to the youth of the city by licensed establishments many other. They estimate the population of the city at 200,000, the dram shops at 2,000 and the daily sales at $50,000, or $1,500,000 a year, "paid for that which degrades the consumer, promotes poverty, pauperism, disease and death."

Joseph Middlemiss, an insurance solicitor, has filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. His statement indicates that he was principally

Georgie—A Tribute of Affection.

Sweet gems our tender little blossom
Almost as life had begun.
And we are left our hearts breathing
The precious words—loved one!

We gave forever—only where
To blame a lover of riches—
A flower forever fresh, forever fragrant,
Another Spirit above.

Only the babe—dear little Georgie—
Only the babe—dear little Georgie—
How dear to us its little treasure
We never cannot be told.

Only the baby gone before us
To us and Heaven is dead,
But but the gentle little spirit
To the heavenly home has fled.

God save, and God has taken
The dear loved little one,
But even in our greatest sorrow
We ask—Thy will be done!

Oh, sorrow not, parents, for your darling!
In the Father's will resigned;
Another angel home in heaven
For those he left on land.

Even though a link of love is broken,
We see the Father's hand
Leading our hearts from earthly blessings
To heaven's happy land.

OAKLAND, March, 1874. F.

Oregon Items.

Thomas E. Whitfield, an Albany (Oregon) bar-leader, has fallen heir to a $40,000 fortune, by the death of his father in Ireland.

Sterling cut-eye are sailing, in Linn county, Oregon, for $4 50 each, and good ones have offered at $3 a head.

It is rumored that the headquarters of the Department of the Columbia have been ordered removed from Portland to Fort Vancouver.

Col. J. N. T. Miller, of Jacksonville, reports the birth of a baby horse "Brick Pomeroy" to G. W. Kellogg, of San Francisco. The price paid was $2,000.

The Democratic County Convention, at Portland, elected delegation to the State Convention, to meet at Albany on the 12th inst.

State and municipal tax collections in Oregon this year are made with more promptness than for several years. The delinquent list is comparatively small.

A Yamhill (Oregon) paper says: "Farmers in the more central parts of this county inform us that plowing is going on now to be followed immediately by sowing. The ground is in excellent condition."

It has snowed every day since the first of the month in the mountains. Cattle are reported as suffering severely from exposure, and may are dying. The Columbia and Willamette rivers are now at their highest mark of the season. There is a heavy fall of snow in the mountains.

New Advertisements.

CHOICE AND FASHIONABLE GOODS
FOR FAIR AND SQUARE DEALING GO TO JONES & WILKINSON'S, IMPORTERS OF FOR-EIGN AND DOMESTIC DRY GOODS,
158 THIRD STREET, 2d door south of Howard.

CATARRH, THROAT
—AND—
LUNG DISEASES.
BROKEN-DOWN CONSTITUTIONS.
Thousands Die Yearly for Want of Proper Treatment.
The Successful Modern System of Cure as Practiced by DR. ABORN,
210 Geary Street,
SAN FRANCISCO,
Has Proved Almost Universally Successful, even in the Most Desperate Cases.
DR. ABORN CAN SHOW TO HUNDREDS of well-known and influential citizens, not only in San Francisco, but throughout the State, whom he has restored to perfect health, after their cases had been pronounced incurable.
Where early chronic and lungs become diseased, and the system gets broken down, it is fatal necessary to experience with another, or to fail in procuring the services of a physician who is skilled in such cases. The importance of this fact cannot be too strongly impressed upon the afflicted. Those who are seriously afflicted may often have their lives saved by applying to one whose experience and ample time is devoted to the practice of the disease at once, and restore the vital organs to their natural functions. DR. ABORN does repair the lungs, and does cure Consumption, so that the whole system is in a manner made new and re-vitalized.
All who are afflicted are invited to call for a free consultation

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

IRELAND.

Clonmel and Home Rule.

The grasp taken by Home Rule on the electoral mind of Ireland has been nowhere more strikingly displayed than in the result of the election for Clonmel. Though not as remarkable as the Clare election of 1828, when Vesey Fitzgerald, a Catholic emancipator of great territorial influence, was beaten by O'Connell, it possessed some features not dissimilar, and certainly worthy of a passing record. Mr. Bagwell, of Marlfield, the late member, has long been, deservedly, a most popular man. He enjoys the large income of £12,000 per annum, a considerable part of which is generally spent in Clonmel. He voted for the Irish Church Bill, the Land Bill, and, universally supported all other Liberal measures. His famous democratic of Marlfield is situated close to Clonmel; and, being open and free, merits the appellation of "the Peoples Park." His woods are not down in winter, and the poor liberally supplied. His prestige stands so high with him as entitling him to the Irish representation, as well as with the Ministry, that, in a public speech of the late Mr. Moore, M.P., of Mooreforth, his election to the House of Lords was openly urged. For a long period he has represented Clonmel, and his ancestors sat in the Irish Parliament. To fight such a man in his own borough seemed a hitherto undreaming-of but he refused to declare for Denominational Education or Home Rule, and thus flung down the gauntlet. In this he was politically and religiously opposed to a large section of the electors, Mr. Moore, Esq., son of the late popular member for Tipperary, was selected to fight Mr. Bagwell on the Home Rule issue. The proud position for a young man to take, though thousands of miles away at the critical time, he telegraphed to an esteemed friend, placing his services at the disposal of the National party. His late father's sons in the county Tipperary, especially in the parishes of Ballyvoky, had endeared the name so much to the tenant-farmers of that great county that he esteemed upon had a greater difficulty in receiving the pledge from nominating him for the county. They came to Clonmel to do so, and yielded only to explanations and appeals. Finally, they picked up the glove and won. It was a great victory. The number of registered voters is 461, and out of these Mr. Moore polled 220, and Mr. Bagwell 149, thus leaving Mr. Moore a majority of 71. In the contest all the old interests broke down. The supporters of the Home Rule candidate carried their colors through victorious to the end.—Dublin Freeman, February 12.

New Orleanism. Wow.

The Cork Examiner, in commenting on the result of the Tralee election, says some things which must be borne in mind:

The Conservatives have been returned for Tralee. His victory has certainly been of the most indistinguished character, but we suppose it will do for him as well as any other. It must have been won by the bracking of promises universally made, but that cannot be thoroughly in character that, no doubt, The O'Donoghue regards it as a delicate compliment to be made a member of a House in which it would not be a victory to be proud of, but we fancy The O'Donoghue has got things done with pride. He has stooped to beg from the pity of the constituency, and they surely will not give on principle; and some of them have flung him a vote in order that he may get the chance of which he has been struggling so long a time. Of course, he will not confess this now. No doubt he will tell us, for he has done for years. Already he has called half the total voters of the borough of Tralee, and the leading bulk of the Liberal electors is in "hordes, animated with the evil spirit which has filled the continent with desolation." Now that with the aid of all the enemies of the National and Liberal cause, a minority of three has been made to him once more member for Tralee, he will swagger in the old lording style, and claim it as a great triumph. But he asked it, and we gives it, on the ground of pity. It was the only ground on which he could decently ask as a brother Kerryman, well known to all, one of yourselves, one entitled to claim his place in your friendship, and talk of old times in a way that would stir the blood to say true Irish Tralee." Here is a picture. Why, it is the language of a poor relation asking for a dinner. "Your vote! Do me faith of country or of honor! Do not talk of independence or of fidelity! Here am I, a Kerryman, that wants a place so badly, and you will postpone Home Rule for the present, and wait until I get something in the shape of a Government situation!" And the gallant Chieftain of the Glens has come down to this! Is something fatally wrong with the Irish Parliament, or degenerated into requiring upon some soft-hearted simpleton in the borough of Tralee, and persuading them with pitiful appeals until they have given a vote.

A Cantonese Libel.

In a Dublin Court, on 19th February, Mr. Justice Barry presiding, Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald said: In the case in which John S. Carroll is plaintiff and Michael Angelo Hayes defendant, I have, on the part of the defendant, to move for the purpose of my client's defence. The action is one of libel and of a very peculiar nature, and it is necessary, in order that your Lordship may understand the defence, that I should read the writ or statement and plaint, which are as follows:

The plaintiff, at the time of the publication hereinafter mentioned, held and enjoyed, and still holds and enjoys, the office of City Marshal by and of the City of Dublin, and discharged, and still discharges, the duties of said office with efficiency and decorum, and has the character for the purpose of the discharge of the plaintiff in the confidence of the Town Council and the Corporation of Dublin, by whom he was appointed to, and from whom and at whose pleasure he holds, the said office, and is not subject to public ridicule and contemptible legal proceedings, but is entitled to the protection of the law, and to hold him up to the public ridicule and contempt, falsely and maliciously printed published of and concerning the plaintiff a certain scandalous and defamatory libel in the form of a certain Civic Celebrities, No 5," representing the plaintiff dressed in the uniform of his office costume of his said office, with the lower bladder part of his body of exaggerated and ridiculous dimensions, and so covered by the skirt of his tunic, and representing him standing in a concealed and pompous attitude near a house, over the door of which are therein printed the words following—that is to say—John S. Carroll, licensed, and in the window of which house representing the said picture is printed in large letters the word 'spirits!' and immediately under which caricature, and forming a part of said print, are the false, scandalous, malicious and defamatory words following—that is to say—" Oh, Johnny, I hardly knew you," which latter words are printed as a quotation, and are a quotation from a vulgar street ballad, wherein they are applied to a contemptible soldier discharged from the rank and file of the Queen's army, whereby the plaintiff was made the subject of public and ridiculous observations, and was, in the discharge of his official duties, as such City Marshal, wrongfully arrested and insulted in the public streets of Dublin by divers jibes and cries of 'Johnny, I hardly knew you,' and was interrupted in the discharge of his said duties to the great disturbance of his peace of mind and to his great scandal and annoyance, to the damage of the plaintiff of £500." We propose to plead a traverse of the publication, a traverse of the defamatory sense, a plea of no libel, and a plea of fair comment.

Mr. Justice Barry—Fair comment on what?

Mr. Fitzgerald—On the plaintiff as a public man. We have the necessary affidavit. The pleas have been settled by senior counsel.

Mr. Justice Barry—Very well. You can have the order. Pleas allowed.

Religious Profession in Drogheda.

On Thursday morning, February 12, his Grace Most Rev. Dr. McGettigan, Archbishop of Armagh, Primate of All Ireland, received the profession of Miss Nano Kavanagh (in religion, Sister de Sales), in the Presentation Convent, Drogheda. The young lady is the second daughter of Professor Kavanagh, Catholic University, and is in a remarkable coincidence that a full namesake of hers, Nano Nagle, one of the first members of the Presentation Order at its foundation a century ago in York. The solemn and touching ceremony took place in the community chapel, which was filled by the leading priests being Rev. James Moonan and Rev. Thomas Murphy; and among the other clergymen in the sanctuary were Very Rev. Archdeacon Gosson, St. Peter's; Very Rev. Archdeacon Carey, Very Rev. Father Meadth, Prior, Dominican Convent, Drogheda; Very Rev. Father Cavanagh, O.S.F.; Very Rev. Father Coleman, O.S.F., and Rev. Father Coleman, O.S.A. The Drogheda Presentation Convent is one of the oldest and largest branches of the Order in Leinster, and has most extensive and efficient schools for the poor, as well as a branch in which a limited number of destitute children are supported, clothed and settled in life.

The Bishop of Cloyne on the Late Bishop of Cloyne.

The following letter of condolence has been received by Rev. William Fitzgerald, P.P., Co. Cork, from Dr. Furney, nephew of the Bishop of Cloyne:

ORLEANS, January 29, 1874.—Dear Sir: I deeply affected by the sad intelligence which announced to me, and I take a very lively part before God in your grief. The loss of a venerable Monsignor Keane, your uncle—the veteran of the Irish episcopate—did not astonish me. I knew his age—he is not only for you a calamity, but is one also for the whole of Ireland, of which he was the honor and the strength. I gladly unite with all my heart—offer my prayer for the repose of his soul. Receive the assurance with entire veneration; and I shall be delighted if the journey which you are making, in the month of April, opportunity of seeing you, and of talking with you about the memory of my well-beloved friend. Accept my sincere regards and receive the expression of my sympathy.

† FELIX, Bishop of Orleans.

The Poisoned Soldier.

The trial of Mrs. Marshall—the soldier's wife charged with poisoning of the gunner in the Portobello Barracks—occupied the Commission Court in Green street on Monday and Tuesday, and resulted in a verdict of acquittal. It was proved that the deceased died of drinking cyanide of potassium, and that the deceased bought the cyanide of potassium. But it was contended for the defence that no motive to commit the crime of murder had been proved, that the deceased had simply bought the poison at the request of the deceased, and that the latter committed suicide. Whatever may be thought of the decision of the jury, it is plain from the report of the trial that the English military barracks are by no means congenial abodes for the moral virtues.—Nation, February 14.

ENGLAND.

The Great Catholic Meetings.

That the Catholic meeting of the 6th was a very great success is inconvertible. Not only was it largely attended by the heads or representative of every Catholic family of any note in England and Scotland, but the great room which gives its name to St. James' Hall was filled long before the hour of meeting, and it overflowed —not metaphorically, but literally—for first a second room in the same building had to be taken; then the overflow of the second room was sent into the chairs in Warwick street, where a third was filled; and lastly, those who could not gain admission to any of the three meetings, in numbers variously estimated from 1,000 to 5,000—probably safely put down at 2,000—betook to Trafalgar square, held a fourth meeting and passed the same resolutions as those which had been carried at the foot of the Nelson Column. At the second meeting in St. James' Hall Sir Charles Clifford was in the chair, and the meeting was addressed by Mr. Wegg-Prosser, Mr. T. Galloo, Canon Browne of Stone, Mr. Bellasis, Q.C., and others; whilst Warwick street the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Talbot presided, and the Revisus and the Very Rev. Prior Wilfrid Porter, passed the resolutions with enthusiasm. Among the telegrams of sympathy and the Duke of Norfolk, and expressed its disapprobation of the persecutors in the name of the British faithful.

We have been compelled by the irresistible exigencies of space to withhold the greater portion of the telegraphic messages of cordial sympathy forwarded to the meeting. These telegrams, twenty in number, afford a striking proof of the importance attached to this demonstration, and to the question to which was the occasion of it, by our continental brethren. Telegrams were received from the Catholic Electoral Committee, Bonn, Rhalsbach; from the Vienna Catholic Club; from the Abgeordneten Catholic Club, Vienna; from the Landsstrasse Catholic Union, Vienna; from Count Ballestrom, President of the Catholic Union in Breslau; from the ten deputies of the Catholic party in Baden (Carlsruhe); from the Catholic electors in Bonn; from the Catholic Union in the Inner Stadt, Vienna; from the Catholic Union, Bonn; from Appellations-Rath Isbert and two hundred and fifty Catholic men, Limburg; from the Catholic Patriotic Union, Vienna; from the gentlemen who was struck was shot dead, and the other parties were acquitted. When Canon Moufang and the Catholics of Mainz from the President of the German Catholic Union, Mainz; from Professor Fr. Hirsch President of the Concordia Society, Aix-la-Chapelle; from Count Aroo Noberg and the Catholics of Munich; from the Catholic Association, Leeds; from the Catholic Union, Florence; from the Prince of Campagnano and the whole Italian Central Committee at Rome.—London Tablet, February 14.

Difficulty With Switzerland.

Something very like a small difficulty is likely to arise with the Federal Government in consequence of the execution, and among others one entitled an "Appeal to the Powers in Reference to the Treaty of Vienna, 1815," was addressed to Abbé Collet, who is a colleague of Mr. Harold Urquhart, the well-known and learned editor of the Diplomatic Review. The parcel was intercepted by the police, and the action taken thereon was roundly the arrest of the Abbé Collet, but of Mr. Urquhart also. The latter was liberated by the intercession of the British Minister, but was well further offended by the strange affair. We believe it is no secret that Mr. Urquhart is a warm sympathiser with the Carlists, and has been privy to Bismarckism.—Weekly Register, February 14.

FRANCE.

Death of Michelet.

PARIS, February 11.—One of the most highly gifted of the writers of the century has passed away. M. Michelet died at Hyeres of this month at Hyeres. He belonged to that class of writers who were the apologists of the worst men of the Revolution—Robespierre, Marat, &c.—and who, although they kept aloof from politics and revolutions, were, by their writings, the most dangerous enemies of society, and helped, by their praise of the worst men, to produce the antagonistic tendencies of the Republic, Farrue, etc.—in the Commune. Michelet, who remained during the siege of the Commune the disease which shortened his life, was one of the most brilliant writers of his time, and might have been one of the most useful had he not allowed himself to be carried away by his hatred of the ministers of religion and to every principle of justice and order. His "History of France and of the French Revolution" contains brilliant pages, and the style and manner in which they are written are only equaled by the false views of men and things which they contain. With much admirable talents and great eloquence he could have rendered the most important service to his country, and have written for himself an undying pages. As it is, he will be admired for his great powers, but his memory will be tarnished by the sad recollection that they were devoted to such vile purposes, and not to serve humanity, as they might have been. Some few months years ago, he was lecturing on the good and pious Vicente Pallotti, a member of the French Academy, and wrote to him to obtain an audience, but received for answer that he (Michelet) would not be allowed see him if he came without his clerical dress, because he could receive none but those robes noires in his house. He (Père Gratry) died in great poverty, and poor Michelet will probably have a civil interment, unless on his dying bed, which was not long, a reconciliation was effected with his anti-religious doctrines. Edgard Quinet was the only one of the extreme men that he confided to see, professing to make an attempt or abhorrence for the very men who were perhaps found in his employ, a sneering and encouragement to carry out their anti-religious and anti-social doctrines. He was not a member of the French Academy, and does not appear to have sought any kind of honor during his life, except that of his literary productions extend to some fifty or sixty volumes. Dublin Freeman.

The Recent Duel in France—Trial of the Parties.

The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes: Another trial, but which took place at Melun, attracted a good deal of attention. This was the affair of the recent duel at Fontainebleau, in which Prince Sulkowski killed Count Chotka. The latter was the President of the Court, Councilor Try, interrogated the Prince, and it appeared that the duel arose through the Chotkas having prevented Prince Soutzo, who is engaged to one of their daughters, carrying off his child and escaping with him to Roumania; also, because Nicholas Ghika said something disparaging of the Princess, who, meeting him in the street, struck him. Hence the duel. Prince Michel Sturdza acted as Ghika's friend, and fought a duel before at Bucharest, and had wounded his adversary in the Sagor. The Prince Sulkowski will pass for one who wounded him in the finger. That time you aimed too high, Prince. Why were you separated from your wife?

Accused—She would not follow her husband and listened to the advice of her sisters.

President—And your son, where was he?

Accused—He remained with his mother.

President (with severity)—And you decided to carry off the child from its mother?

Accused (solemnly)—Yes.

Prince Soutzo was then called upon to relate the circumstances of the duel, which he did in a very natural way. The President indignantly termed him a rogue, and through the rest of the trial addressed the Prince as "the cousin of his child." "Your wife must have been mad to leave you," he said. "Even that did not stop you."

The duel appears to have been conducted fairly enough. The seconds put a double charge of powder in the pistols to spoil their accuracy, but nevertheless Ghika fell mortally wounded. Prince Soutzo and the seconds fled the country, but returned to stand their trial, which is generally a formality. To the astonishment of Paris, however, the Prince has been sentenced to four years' imprisonment, his seconds to three years, and those of Nicholas Ghika to two years. The jury refused to find the Prince guilty of homicide, but merely of cutting and wounding! It used to be held that it was wrong to wound than to kill a man, because in the latter case the duelist was tried for murder before a court of assize and if he wounded, the affair is tried before the correctional police, and the parties fined and imprisoned. The Court of Melun, however, has distorted this illusion, but it is a pity that Greeks and Roumanians should be the first victims of this Draconian code. It is only about a year ago that one Prescott man stepped another's face in a profession for a trivial slight: a duel followed, the surrounded by her friends, and was accompanied to the police office by some ladies, among whom were several Englishwomen —namely, Mrs. Fullerton, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Venettars and Mrs. Sutcliffe. They were asked to drive in their carriages to the Quesiura, but refused, and went there on foot. At the Quesiura a process was drawn up, and signed by the Countess Steinlein and her son. The delegate informed the Countess that if she again was troublesome, she would be conducted to the frontier. As this lady had been guilty of no crime whatever, these proceedings against her seem arbitrary and tyrannical, and also illegal. The Catholic religion is that of the State, and it is no offense before the law in kneel down in the Colosseum and say prayers. But the present rulers of Italy are masters of the churches and of the Colosseum, and wish in show their mastery. They will dictate how prayers shall be offered up, and the freedom of the Church and liberty of worship are, in Rome, an illusion.—London Tablet, February 14.

SPAIN.

Extraordinary Confession of a Spanish Communist.

Some extraordinary confessions have just been made by Roque Barcia, the President of the Cartagena Revolutionary Junta, which have created a great sensation in Madrid, and have caused the arrest by the Spanish authorities. Barcia from hiding-place has issued a manifesto to his countrymen, in which he confesses that he has at length seen the errors of his ways. He says, "I am a man of conspiracy and of revolution, and I am a conspiracy have been attempting to erect a palace out of a pack of cards. "I declare and swear," he says, "that I will not accept the pardon. I will go abroad immediately. I am convalescent, and I can escape if life is given to me. My honor requires this, but the ashes of Cartagena are longed to my trust. Perhaps I shall tell the people is written in blood on the ruins of a beloved city. Yes, Federal Republicans, I have a political party! a public to govern, I commite a crime in raising against another party with arms. We are now in a war in our country, and if we do not first attempt this we shall do nought else but destroy ourselves. Spain is so long as we attempt to rule without men capable of being rulers, the Federal Republic will be nothing but a hope to be guarded in the sanctuary of the conscience or surrounded by the cards of martyrdom."

In a second letter Barcia sums up his picture of the happiness that reigned among the Federals of Cartagena very graphically by saying: "They talked much of republic, of federalism, of emancipation, of humanity," etc., but, he adds, "it is a fact that inside there reigned a tyranny more violent than the most violent oppression. It will be accounts for it on the natural principle that when free men imbibe exaggerated ideas," they become the most impious and arrogant enemies of liberty. Immature or ill-defined democracies are worse than traditional monarchies. The latter have something organized, the former nothing. He believes in Jurisdagnistic principles, but not in Intransigentic governments. He believed in federation, but not in the federative regimes, at least for the present. "I am not," he adds, "any way of founding a situation which will bring peace to Spain. I, the apostle of the liberty of conscience, industry, art and science, such a Government will receive the benedictions of the whole country."—Manchester Guardian, February 14.

ITALY.

Arrest at the Colosseum.

